

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE LAWYERS REPORTS ANNOTATED

BOOK XXIX.

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE WITH FULL ANNOTATION
BURDETT A. RICH, EDITOR, HENRY
P. FARNHAM, ASSISTANT

1895.

EXTRA ANNOTATED EDITION

WITH L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1905.

122091

JUL 29 1942

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year eighteen hundred ninety six, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred five, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE

OF ALL

CASES REPORTED IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK 29,

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED WHEN THIS BOOK WENT TO PRESS.

(To be "tipped in" in front of regular table, used as a book mark or as data for marking each case. Like tables will be furnished for subsequent volumes as fast as possible.)

Alpine Twp. Sch. Dist. No. 11 v. Batsche (106 Mich. 330) -	576	Dell Rapids v. Irving (7 S. D. 310) -	861
American Nat. Bank v. American Wood Paper Co. (19 R. I. 149) -	103	Dennis v. Caughlin (22 Nev. 447) -	731
Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Concord (66 N. H. 562) -	57	Denver City R. Co. v. Denver (21 Colo. 350) -	808
Anderson v. Bell (140 Ind. 375) -	541	Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. (65 Conn. 201) -	297
Armstrong v. Austin (45 S. C. 69) -	772	Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. (171 Pa. 193) -	808
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (55 Kan. 715) -	465	Duval County Comrs. v. Jacksonville (38 Fla. 196) -	416
Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. Nittany Valley R. Co. (171 Pa. 284) -	423	Eaton v. Robinson (19 R. I. 146) -	100
Bank of Newport v. Cook (60 Ark. 288) -	761	Edwards & W's Estate, Re (122 Mo. 426) -	681
Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Harrisburg (64 Fed. Rep. 283) 12 C. C. A. 100, 28 U. S. App. 108 -	401	Ellison v. Albright (41 Neb. 93) -	737
Barchard v. Kohn (157 Ill. 579) -	803	Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (95 Iowa, 98) -	173
Belford v. Woodward (158 Ill. 122) -	593	Eversmann v. Schmitt (53 Ohio St. 174) -	184
Bell v. Cassem (158 Ill. 45) -	571	Fairly v. Wappoo Mills (44 S. C. 227) -	215
Bibbins v. Clark (90 Iowa, 230) -	278	Farmers' Co-Operative Mfg. Co. v. Albe- marle & R. R. Co. (117 N. C. 579) -	700
Bickerdike v. Allen (157 Ill. 95) -	782	Farrell v. St. Paul (62 Minn. 271) -	778
Bills v. Hibernia Ins. Co. (87 Tex. 547) -	706	Ferchen v. Arndt (26 Or. 121) -	664
Bissell v. Davison (65 Conn. 183) -	251	Findlay v. Pertz (66 Fed. Rep. 427) 13 C. C. A. 559, 31 U. S. App. 340 -	188
Bloxham v. Consumers' Electric Light & Street R. Co. (36 Fla. 519) -	507	French v. State, Harley (141 Ind. 618) -	113
Erim v. Jones (11 Utah, 200) -	97	Fulton v. Fulton (52 Ohio St. 229) -	678
Brownell v. Old Colony R. Co. (164 Mass. 29) -	169	Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. (61 Minn. 435) -	208
Fuist v. Bryan (44 S. C. 121) -	127	Goddard-Peck Grocery Co. v. McCune (122 Mo. 426) -	681
Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (106 Mich. 582) -	468	Goodloe v. Memphis & C. R. Co. (107 Ala. 233) -	729
Cady v. Schultz (19 R. I. 193) -	524	Graybill v. Penn Twp. Mut. F. Ins. Asso. (170 Pa. 75) -	55
Capital City Water Co. v. State, Mc- Donald (105 Ala. 406) -	743	Hare v. Murphy (45 Neb. 809) -	851
Capital Gas Co. v. Young (109 Cal. 140) -	463	Hart v. Washington Park Club (157 Ill. 9) -	492
Carpenter's Appeal (170 Pa. 203) -	145	Hickman v. Green (123 Mo. 165) -	39
Central Trust Co. v. Moran (56 Minn. 188) -	212	Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Rosser (53 Ohio St. 12) -	386
Chessman's Appeal (14 Mont. 153) -	622	Hedges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (72 Miss. 910) -	770
Chicago v. Burcky (153 Ill. 103) -	568	Hooper v. Central Trust Co. (81 Md. 559) -	262
Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, Windmil- ler (153 Ill. 409) -	69	Ireland v. Globe Milling & R. Co. (19 R. I. 180) -	429
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (156 Ill. 255) -	485	Irvin v. Irvin (169 Pa. 529) -	292
Cole v. Tucker (164 Mass. 486) -	668	Jones v. Aspen Hardware Co. (21 Colo. 263) -	143
Commercial Nat. Bank v. Matherwell Iron & S. Co. (95 Tenn. 172) -	164	Judson v. Giant Powder Co. (107 Cal. 549) -	718
Com. v. Forrest (170 Pa. 40) -	365	Kernohan v. Manas (53 Ohio St. 118) -	317
Com. v. Henderson Bridge Co. (99 Ky. 623) -	73	King v. Southern Pac. Co. (109 Cal. 96) -	755
Com. v. McCance (164 Mass. 162) -	61
Com. v. Petty (96 Ky. 452) -	786
Davis v. Dodson (95 Ga. 718) -	496

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE OF CASES.

Kirkpatrick v. Brownfield (97 Ky. 558)	703	Ricker's Estate, Re (14 Mont. 153)	622
Kountze v. Kennedy (147 N. Y. 124)	360	Ritchie v. People (155 Ill. 98)	79
Krecker v. Shirey (163 Pa. 534)	476	Roberts v. Mitchell (94 Tenn. 277)	705
Kuhn v. Port Townsend (12 Wash. 605)	445	Robinson v. Clapp (65 Conn. 365)	582
Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey (53 Ohio St. 370)	757	Robinson v. Rockland, T. & C. Street R. Co. (87 Me. 387)	530
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids (102 Mich. 374)	195	St. Johns Mfg. Co. v. Munger (106 Mich. 90)	63
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Platt (52 Ohio St. 254)	52	San Bernardino v. Southern Pac. Co. (107 Cal. 524)	327
Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. (62 Minn. 175)	708	Sanders v. Pottlitzer Bros. Fruit Co. (144 N. Y. 209)	431
Laramie County Comrs. v. Foster (5 Wyo. 199)	226	San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. (108 Cal. 549)	839
Lebanon Light, H. & P. Co. v. Leap (139 Ind. 443)	342	Savannah v. Mulligan (95 Ga. 323)	303
Levy v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (105 Cal. 600)	811	Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (103 Mich. 213)	321
Lewis v. Daily News Co. (81 Md. 466)	59	Schufeldt v. Smith (131 Mo. 280)	830
Lynchburg Nat. Bank v. Scott (91 Va. 652)	827	Seabree Deposit Bank v. Moreland (96 Ky. 150)	305
McBurney v. Young (67 Vt. 574)	539	Shafer v. Loecek (168 Pa. 497)	254
McGahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. (140 Ind. 335)	355	Sherwood v. Powell (61 Minn. 479)	153
McTwiggan v. Hunter (19 R. I. 265)	526	Short v. State (80 Md. 302)	404
Mason v. Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co. (81 Md. 446)	273	Skinner v. Santa Rosa (107 Cal. 464)	512
Montgomery v. Lansing City Electric R. Co. (103 Mich. 46)	287	South Bend v. Martin (142 Ind. 31)	531
Moyer v. Van De Vanter (12 Wash. 377)	670	Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Anniston Loan & T. Co. (101 Ala. 582)	120
Muhlenberg v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. (26 Or. 132)	667	Spence v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (92 Va. 102)	578
Munzer v. Stern (105 Mich. 523)	859	State v. Barr (11 Wash. 481)	154
New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. (65 Conn. 410)	367	State v. Bishop (128 Mo. 373)	200
Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Wheeler (91 Va. 700)	825	State v. Crook (115 N. C. 760)	260
O'Connor v. Clark (170 Pa. 318)	607	State v. Foster (5 Wyo. 199)	226
Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews (50 Ohio St. 695)	337	State v. Haug (95 Iowa, 413)	390
Ottumwa v. Zekind (95 Iowa, 622)	734	State v. Julow (129 Mo. 163)	257
Parker v. Randolph (5 S. D. 549)	33	State v. Speyer (67 Vt. 502)	573
Pattillo v. Alexander (96 Ga. 60)	616	State v. Swett (87 Me. 99)	714
Paxton & H. Irrig. C. & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. (45 Neb. 884)	853	State, Kellogg, v. Missouri P. R. Co. (55 Kan. 708)	444
Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey (139 Ind. 430)	104	State, Little, v. Regents of University (55 Kan. 389)	378
People, Chandler, v. McDonald (5 Wyo. 526)	834	State, Realty Co., v. Cooley (62 Minn. 183)	777
People, Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Co., v. Barker (147 N. Y. 31)	393	State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Brinkley Stave & H. Co. (61 Ark. 1)	712
People's Home Sav. Bank v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (104 Cal. 649)	844	Stephens v. Southern Pac. Co. (109 Cal. 86)	751
Peterson v. Russell (62 Minn. 220)	612	Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (53 Ohio St. 151)	438
Philadelphia v. Public Schools (170 Pa. 257)	600	Taylor v. Downey (104 Mich. 532)	92
Price v. Price (91 Iowa, 693)	150	Tebbe v. Smith (108 Cal. 101)	673
Pryor, Re (55 Kan. 724)	398	Tillman v. Otter (93 Ky. 600)	110
Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Martin (95 Ga. 314)	498	Todd v. Election Comrs. (104 Mich. 474)	330
Randall v. National Bldg. L. & P. Union (42 Neb. 809)	133	Union P. R. Co. v. Erickson (41 Neb. 1)	137
Reyes v. Middleton (36 Fla. 99)	66	Ward v. Ward (40 W. Va. 611)	449
Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. (69 Fed. Rep. 808) 32 U. S. App 577, 10 C. C. A. 435	695	Washingtonian Home v. Chicago (157 Ill. 414)	798
		Waterloo Milling Co. v. Kuenster (158 Ill. 259)	794
		Whittenton Mfg. Co. v. Staples (164 Mass. 319)	500
		Williamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (26 Or. 224)	88
		Wohlford v. Citizens' Bldg., L. & S. Asso. (140 Ind. 662)	177
		Wood v. Auburn (87 Me. 287)	376

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED

IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK XXIX.

A.

Albemarle & R. R. Co., Farmers' Co-Operative Mfg. Co. v. (N. C.)	700
Albright, Ellison v. (Neb.)	737
Alexander, Pattillo v. (Ga.)	616
Allen, Bickerdike v. (Ill.)	782
Alpine Twp. School Dist. No. 11 v. Batsche (Mich.)	576
American Nat. Bank v. American Wood Paper Co. (R. I.)	108
American Wood Paper Co., American Nat. Bank v. (R. I.)	108
Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Concord (N. H.)	57
Anderson v. Bell (Ind.)	541
Andrews, Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. (Ohio)	387
Anniston Loan & T. Co., Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. (Ala.)	120
Armstrong v. Austin (S. C.)	772
Arndt, Ferchen v. (Or.)	664
Aspen Hardware Co., Jones v. (Colo.)	143
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (Kan.)	465
Auburn, Wood v. (Me.)	376
Austin, Armstrong v. (S. C.)	772

B.

Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. Nittany Valley R. Co. (Pa.)	423
Bank, American Nat. v. American Wood Paper Co. (R. I.)	108
Commercial Nat. v. Matherwell Iron & S. Co. (Tenn.)	164
Lynchburg Nat. v. Scott Bros. (Va.)	827
People's Home Sav. v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.)	844
Seebree Dep. v. Moreland (Ky.)	305
Bank of Newport v. Cook (Ark.)	761
Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. Harrisburg (C. O. App. 3d C.)	401
Barchard v. Kohn (Ill.)	808
Barker, People, Hecker-Jones-Jewell Mill. Co. v. (N. Y.)	393
Barr, State v. (Wash.)	154
Batsche, Alpine Twp. School Dist. No. 11 v. (Mich.)	576
Belford v. Woodward (Ill.)	598
Bell, Anderson v. (Ind.)	541
v. Cassem (Ill.)	571
Bibbins v. Clark (Iowa)	278
29 L. R. A.

Bickerdike v. Allen (Ill.)	782
Bills v. Hibernia Ins. Co. (Tex.)	706
Bishop, State v. (Mo.)	200
Bissell v. Davidson (Conn.)	251
Bloxham v. Consumer's Electric Light & Street R. Co. (Fla.)	507
Bridgeport Traction Co., New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. (Conn.)	367
Brim v. Jones (Utah)	97
Brinkley Stave & H. Co., State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. (Ark.)	712
Brownell v. Old Colony R. Co. (Mass.)	169
Brownfield, Kirkpatrick v. (Ky.)	708
Bryan, Buist v. (S. C.)	127
Buist v. Bryan (S. C.)	127
Burcky, Chicago v. (Ill.)	568
Burrows v. Delta Transp. Co. (Mich.)	468

C.

Cady v. Schultz (R. I.)	524
Capital City Water Co. v. State, Macdonald (Ala.)	748
Capital Gas Co. v. Young (Cal.)	463
Carpenter's Appeal (Pa.)	145
Cassem, Bell v. (Ill.)	571
Caughlin, Dennis v. (Nev.)	731
Central Trust Co., Hooper v. (Md.)	262
v. Moran (Minn.)	212
Chandler, People, ex rel. v. McDonald (Wyo.)	834
Chessman's Appeal (Mont.)	622
Chicago v. Burcky (Ill.)	568
Washingtonian Home v. (Ill.)	798
Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, Windmiller (Ill.)	69
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., Ellsworth v. (Iowa)	173
v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (Ill.)	485
Citizens' Bldg. L. & S. Asso., Wohlford v. (Ind.)	177
Clapp, Robinson v. (Conn.)	582
Clark, Bibbins v. (Iowa)	278
O'Connor v. (Pa.)	607
Cole v. Tucker (Mass.)	668
Commercial Nat. Bank v. Matherwell Iron & S. Co. (Tenn.)	164
Com. v. Forrest (Pa.)	365
v. Henderson Bridge Co. (Ky.)	73
v. McCance (Mass.)	61
v. Petty (Ky.)	786

Concord, Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. (N. H.)	57
Consumers' Electric Light & Street R. Co., Bloxham v. (Fla.)	507
Cook, Bank of Newport v. (Ark.)	761
Cooley, State, Realty Co., v. (Minn.)	777
Crook, State v. (N. C.)	260

D.

Daily News Co., Lewis v. (Md.)	59
Davis v. Dodson (Ga.)	496
Davison, Bissell v. (Conn.)	251
Dell Rapids v. Irving (S. Dak.)	861
Delta Transp. Co., Burrows v. (Mich.)	468
Dennis v. Caughlin (Nev.)	781
Denver, Denver City R. Co. v. (Colo.)	608
Denver City R. Co. v. Denver (Colo.)	608
Dodson, Davis v. (Ga.)	496
Donovan v. Hartford Street R. Co. (Conn.)	297
Downey, Taylor v. (Mich.)	92
Durkin v. Kingston Coal Co. (Pa.)	808
Duval County Comrs. v. Jacksonville (Fla.)	416

E.

Eaton v. Robinson (R. I.)	100
Edwards & W.'s Estate, Re (Mo.)	681
Election Comrs., Todd v. (Mich.)	880
Ellison v. Albright (Neb.)	787
Ellsworth v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Iowa)	178
Erickson, Union P. R. Co. v. (Neb.)	187
Eversmann v. Schmitt (Ohio)	184

F.

Fairly v. Wappoo Mills (S. C.)	215
Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co., Paxton & H. Irrig. Canal & L. Co. v. (Neb.)	858
Farmers' Co-Operative Mfg. Co. v. Albe-marle & R. R. Co. (N. C.)	700
Farrell v. St. Paul (Minn.)	778
Ferchen v. Arndt (Or.)	664
Findlay v. Pertz (C. C. App. 6th C.)	188
Flint & P. M. R. Co., Schroeder v. (Mich.)	821
Forrest, Com. v. (Pa.)	865
Foster, Laramie County Comrs. v. (Wyo.) State v. (Wyo.)	226
French v. State, Harley (Ind.)	118
Fulton v. Fulton (Ohio)	678
Funk v. St. Paul City R. Co. (Minn.)	208

G.

Giant Powder Co., Judson v. (Cal.)	718
Globe Milling & R. Co., Ireland v. (R. I.)	429
Goddard-Peck Grocery Co. v. McCune (Mo.)	681
Goodloe v. Memphis & C. R. Co. (Ala.)	729
Grand Rapids, Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. (Mich.)	195
Graybill v. Penn Twp. Mut. F. Ins. Asso. (Pa.)	55
Great Northern R. Co., Reynolds v. (C. C. App. 8th C.)	695
Green, Hickman v. (Mo.)	89
29 L. R. A.

H.

Hare v. Murphy (Neb.)	851
Harley, State, ex rel. French, v. (Ind.)	118
Harrisburg, Barber Asphalt Pav. Co. v. (C. C. App. 8d C.)	401
Hart v. Washington Park Club (Ill.)	493
Hartford Street R. Co., Donovan v. (Conn.)	297
Haug, State v. (Iowa)	390
Hecker-Jones-Jewell Mill. Co., People, ex rel. v. Barker (N. Y.)	393
Henderson Bridge Co., Com. v. (Ky.)	78
Henry, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. (Kan.)	465
Hibernia Ins. Co., Bills v. (Tex.)	706
Hickman v. Green (Mo.)	39
Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. Rosser (Ohio)	836
Hodges v. Western U. Teleg. Co. (Miss.)	770
Hooper v. Central Trust Co. (Md.)	262
Hunter, McTewigan v. (R. I.)	526

I.

Indianapolis Natural Gas Co., McGahan v. (Ind.)	855
Insurance Asso., Penn Twp. Mut. F., Graybill v. (Pa.)	55
Insurance Co., Hibernia, Bills v. (Tex.)	706
State Mut. F. v. Brinkley Stave & H. Co. (Ark.)	712
Ireland v. Globe Milling & R. Co. (R. I.)	429
Irvin v. Irvin (Pa.)	292
Irving, Dell Rapids v. (S. Dak.)	861

J.

Jacksonville, Duval County Comrs. v. (Fla.)	416
Jones v. Aspen Hardware Co. (Colo.)	143
Brim v. (Utah)	97
Judson v. Giant Powder Co. (Cal.)	718
Julow, State v. (Mo.)	257

K.

Kellogg, State, ex rel. v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Kan.)	444
Kennedy, Kountze v. (N. Y.)	360
Kernohan v. Manss (Ohio)	317
King v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal.)	755
Kingston Coal Co., Durkin v. (Pa.)	808
Kirkpatrick v. Brownfield (Ky.)	708
Kohn, Barchard v. (Ill.)	808
Kountze v. Kennedy (N. Y.)	360
Krecker v. Shirey (Pa.)	476
Kuenster, Waterloo Milling Co. v. (Ill.)	794
Kuhn v. Port Townsend (Wash.)	445

L.

Lacock, Shafer v. (Pa.)	254
Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mackey (Ohio)	757
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Grand Rapids (Mich.)	195
v. Platt (Ohio)	52
Lane v. Minnesota State Agri. Soc. (Minn.)	706
Lansing City Electric R. Co., Montgom-ery v. (Mich.)	237

Laramie County Comrs. v. Foster (Wyo.) 296
 Leap, Lebanon Light, H. & P. Co. v. (Ind.) 343
 Lebanon Light, H. & P. Co. v. Leap (Ind.) 343
 Levy v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.) 811
 Lewis v. Daily News Co. (Md.) 59
 Little, State, ex rel. v. Regents of University of Kansas (Kan.) 878
 Lynchburg Nat. Bank v. Scott Bros. (Va.) 837

M.

McBurney v. Young (Vt.) 539
 McCaffrey, Pennsylvania Co. v. (Ind.) 104
 McCance, Com. v. (Mass.) 61
 McCune, Goddard-Peck Grocery Co. v. (Mo.) 681
 McDonald, People, Chandler, v. (Wyo.) 884
 Macdonald, State, ex rel., Capital City Water Co. v. (Ala.) 743
 McGahan v. Indianapolis Natural Gas Co. (Ind.) 855
 Mackey, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. (Ohio) 757
 McTiggan v. Hunter (R. I.) 526
 Manss, Kernohan v. (Ohio) 817
 Martin, Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. (Ga.) 498
 South Bend v. (Ind.) 531
 Mason v. Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co. (Md.) 273
 Matherwell Iron & S. Co., Commercial Nat. Bank v. (Tenn.) 164
 Memphis & C. R. Co., Goodloe v. (Ala.) 729
 Middleton, Reyes v. (Fla.) 66
 Minnesota State Agri. Soc., Lane v. (Minn.) 708
 Missouri P. R. Co., State, Kellogg, v. (Kan.) 444
 Mitchell, Roberts v. (Tenn.) 705
 Montgomery v. Lansing City Electric R. Co. (Mich.) 287
 Moran, Central Trust Co. v. (Minn.) 212
 Moreland, Seabree Dep. Bank v. (Ky.) 305
 Moyer v. Van de Vanter (Wash.) 670
 Muhlenberg v. Northwest Loan & T. Co. (Or.) 667
 Mulligan, Savannah v. (Ga.) 303
 Munger, St. Johns Mfg. Co. v. (Mich.) 63
 Munzer v. Stern (Mich.) 859
 Murphy, Hare v. (Neb.) 851

N.

National Bldg. L. & P. Union, Randall v. (Neb.) 133
 New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. (Conn.) 367
 Nittany Valley R. Co., Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. (Pa.) 423 Norfolk & W. R. Co., Spence v. (Va.) 578
 v. Wheeler (Va.) 825
 Northwest Loan & T. Co., Muhlenberg v. (Or.) 667

O.

O'Connor v. Clark (Pa.) 607
 Ohio Gas Fuel Co. v. Andrews (Ohio) 337
 Old Colony R. Co., Brownell v. (Mass.) 169
 Oregon R. & Nav. Co., Willamette Iron Works v. (Or.) 88
 Otter, Tillman v. (Ky.) 110
 Ottumwa v. Zekind (Iowa) 734
 22 L. R. A.

P.

Parker v. Randolph (S. Dak.) 83
 Pattillo v. Alexander (Ga.) 616
 Paxton & H. Irrig. Canal & L. Co. v. Farmers' & M. Irrig. & L. Co. (Neb.) 853
 Pennsylvania Co. v. McCaffrey (Ind.) 104
 Penn Twp. Mut. F. Ins. Asso., Graybill v. (Pa.) 55
 People, Ritchie v. (Ill.) 79
 People, ex rel. Chandler, v. McDonald (Wyo.) 834
 Hecker-Jones-Jewell Mill. Co. v. Barker (N. Y.) 393
 Windmiller, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. (Ill.) 69
 People's Home Sav. Bank v. San Francisco Super. Ct. (Cal.) 844
 Pertz, Findlay v. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 188
 Peterson v. Russell (Minn.) 613
 Petty, Com. v. (Ky.) 796
 Philadelphia v. Public Schools (Pa.) 600
 Platt, Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. (Ohio) 53
 Port Townsend, Kuhn v. (Wash.) 445
 Pottlitzer Bros. Fruit Co. Sanders v. (N. Y.) 431
 Powell, Sherwood v. (Minn.) 153
 Price v. Price (Iowa) 150
 Pryor, Re (Kan.) 398
 Public Schools, Philadelphia v. (Pa.) 600
 Pullman's Palace Car Co. v. Martin (Ga.) 493

R.

Railroad Co., Albemarle & R. Farmers' Co Operative Mfg. Co. v. (N. C.) 700
 Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Henry (Kan.) 465
 Bald Eagle Valley v. Nittany Valley R. Co. (Pa.) 423
 Chicago & A. v. People, Windmiller (Ill.) 69
 Chicago, B. & Q., Ellsworth v. (Iowa) 173
 v. West Chicago Street R. Co. (Ill.) 485
 Flint & P. M., Schroeder v. (Mich.) 321
 Hartford Street, Donovan v. (Conn.) 297
 Lake Erie & W. v. Mackey (Ohio) 757
 Lake Shore & M. S. v. Grand Rapids (Mich.) 195
 v. Platt (Ohio) 52
 Lansing City Electric, Montgomery v. (Mich.) 287
 Memphis & C., Goodloe v. (Ala.) 729
 New York, N. H. & H. v. Bridgeport Traction Co. (Conn.) 367
 Nittany Valley, Bald Eagle Valley R. Co. v. (Pa.) 423 Norfolk & W., Spence v. (Va.) 578
 v. Wheeler (Va.) 825
 Old Colony, Brownell v. (Mass.) 169
 West Chicago Street, Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. (Ill.) 485
 Wheeling & L. E., Stewart v. (Ohio) 438
 Railway Co., Denver City v. Denver (Colo.) 608
 Great Northern, Reynolds v. (C. C. App. 8th C.) 695

Railway Co., Missouri P., State, Kellogg, v. (Kan.)	444	State v. Barr (Wash.)	154
Rockland, T. & C. Street, Robinson v. (Me.)	580	v. Bishop (Mo.)	200
St. Paul City, Funk v. (Minn.)	208	v. Crook (N. C.)	260
Union P. v. Erickson (Neb.)	187	v. Foster (Wyo.)	226
Randall v. National Bldg. L. & P. Union (Neb.)	188	v. Haug (Iowa)	390
Randolph, Parker v. (S. Dak.)	83	v. Julow (Mo.)	257
Realty Co., State, ex rel. v. Cooley (Minn.)	777	Short v. (Md.)	404
Re Edwards & W.'s Estate (Mo.)	681	v. Speyer (Vt.)	573
Regents of University of Kansas, State, Little, v. (Kan.)	878	v. Swett (Me.)	714
Re Pryor (Kan.)	898	ex rel. Harley, French v. (Ind.)	113
Re Ricker's Estate (Mont.)	622	Kellogg, v. Missouri P. R. Co. (Kan.)	444
Reyes v. Middleton (Fla.)	66	Little, v. Regents of University of Kansas (Kan.)	878
Reynolds v. Great Northern R. Co. (O. C. App. 8th C.)	695	Macdonald, Capital City Water Co. v. (Ala.)	743
Ricker's Estate, Re (Mont.)	622	Realty Co., v. Cooley (Minn.)	777
Ritchie v. People (Ill.)	79	State Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Brinkley Stave & H. Co. (Ark.)	712
Roberts v. Mitchell (Tenn.)	705	Stephens v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal.)	751
Robinson v. Clapp (Conn.)	582	Stern, Munzer v. (Mich.)	859
Eaton v. (R. I.)	100	Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio)	438
v. Rockland, T. & C. Street R. Co. (Me.)	580	Swett, State v. (Me.)	714
Rockland, T. & C. Street R. Co., Robinson v. (Me.)	580	T.
Rosser, Hocking Valley Coal Co. v. (Ohio)	886	Taylor v. Downey (Mich.)	92
Russell, Peterson v. (Minn.)	612	Tebbe v. Smith (Cal.)	673
S.		Tillman v. Otter (Ky.)	110
St. Johns Mfg. Co. v. Munger (Mich.)	63	Todd v. Election Comrs. (Mich.)	330
St. Paul, Farrell v. (Minn.)	778	Tucker, Cole v. (Mass.)	663
St. Paul City R. Co. Funk v. (Minn.)	208	U.
San Bernardino v. Southern Pac. Co. (Cal.)	827	Union Mills Paper Mfg. Co., Mason v. (Md.)	273
Sanders v. Pottlitzer Bros. Fruit Co. (N. Y.)	481	Union P. R. Co. v. Erickson (Neb.)	137
San Diego Flume Co., San Diego Water Co. v. (Cal.)	839	V.
San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. (Cal.)	839	Van de Vanter, Moyer v. (Wash.)	670
San Francisco Super. Ct., Levy v. (Cal.)	811	W.
People's Home Sav. Bank v. (Cal.)	844	Wappoo Mills, Fairly v. (S. C.)	215
Santa Rosa, Skinner v. (Cal.)	512	Ward v. Ward (W. Va.)	449
Savannah v. Mulligan (Ga.)	303	Washingtonian Home v. Chicago (Ill.)	798
Schmitt, Eversmann v. (Ohio)	184	Washington Park Club, Hart v. (Ill.)	492
School Dist. No. 11 v. Batsche (Mich.)	576	Waterloo Milling Co. v. Kuenster (Ill.)	794
Schroeder v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. (Mich.)	321	West Chicago Street R. Co., Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. (Ill.)	485
Schufeldt v. Smith (Mo.)	830	Western U. Teleg. Co., Hodges v. (Miss.)	770
Schultz, Cady v. (R. I.)	524	Wheeler, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. (Va.)	825
Scott Bros., Lynchburg Nat. Bank v. (Va.)	827	Wheeling & L. E. R. Co., Stewart v. (Ohio)	438
Sebree Dep. Bank v. Moreland (Ky.)	305	Whittenton Mfg. Co. v. Staples (Mass.)	500
Shafer v. Lacock (Pa.)	254	Willamette Iron Works v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.)	88
Sherwood v. Powell (Minn.)	153	Windmiller, People, ex rel., Chicago & A. R. Co. v. (Ill.)	69
Shirey, Kreckler v. (Pa.)	476	Wohlford v. Citizens' Bldg. L. & S. Asso. (Ind.)	177
Short v. State (Md.)	404	Wood v. Auburn (Me.)	376
Skinner v. Santa Rosa (Cal.)	512	Woodward, Belford v. (Ill.)	593
Smith, Schufeldt v. (Mo.)	830	Y.
Tebbe v. (Cal.)	673	Young, Capital Gas Co. v. (Cal.)	463
South Bend v. Martin (Ind.)	581	McBurney v. (Vt.)	539
Southern Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Anniston Loan & T. Co. (Ala.)	120	Z.
Southern Pac. Co., King v. (Cal.)	755	Zekind, Ottumwa v. (Iowa)	734
San Bernardino v. (Cal.)	327
Stephens v. (Cal.)	751
Spence v. Norfolk & W. R. Co. (Va.)	578
Speyer, State v. (Vt.)	573
Staples, Whittenton Mfg. Co. v. (Mass.)	500
29 L. R. A.

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK.

A.

Abbott v. Omaha Smelting & Ref. Co. 4 Neb. 416	145
Abeel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226	254
Adams v. Adams, 25 Minn. 72	781
v. Iron Cliffs Co. 78 Mich. 271	823
Adams Mtn. Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. 78	192
Aerkfets v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 418, 420, 86 L. ed. 758, 759	607
Atna Ins. Co. v. Alton City Bank, 26 Ill. 248, 79 Am. Dec. 328	707
Ah Lim v. Territory, 1 Wash. 156, 9 L. R. A. 396	84
Akers v. Rowan, 38 S. C. 451, 10 L. R. A. 706	223
Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 74 Ala. 582	126
Alberger v. National Bank of Commerce, 123 Mo. 313	833
Albright v. Brown, 23 Neb. 136	742
Aldrich v. Husband, 181 Mass. 480	460
v. Wright, 53 N. H. 398, 16 Am. Rep. 399	162
Aldridge v. Williams, 44 U. S. 8 How. 24, 11 L. ed. 476	210
Alleman v. Hawley, 117 Ind. 638	461
Allen v. First Nat. Bank of Xenia, 23 Ohio St. 97	820
v. Kinyon, 41 Mich. 281	290
v. Merchants' Bank, 22 Wend. 215	736
v. Pioneer Press Co. 40 Minn. 117, 8 L. R. A. 582	90
v. South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 200, 5 L. R. A. 716	44
American Union Exp. Co. v. St. Joseph, 66 Mo. 675, 27 Am. Rep. 382	611
Americus v. Mitchell, 79 Ga. 807	904
Ames v. Gilman, 10 Met. 248	218
Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 117 Ill. 28	71, 72
v. Norton, 15 Lea. 14, 54 Am. Rep. 400	687
v. Wellington, 40 Kan. 176, 2 L. R. A. 110	430
Anney v. DeSaussure, 12 S. C. 488	511
Anonymous, Lord, 556	506
Antwerp v. Dell Rapids Twp. 3 S. Dak. 306	904
Applegate v. Ernst, 3 Bush, 648, 96 Am. Dec. 272	199
Appleton v. Hopkins, 5 Gray, 580	417
Appropriation Bill, R. 14 Fla. 284	87
Arnold v. Slaughter, 36 W. Va. 590	461
v. Stock, 81 Ill. 407	805
Atchison & N. B. Co. v. Baty, 6 Neb. 37, 39 Am. Rep. 356	390
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R. Co. 110 U. S. 667, 28 L. ed. 291	858
v. Moore (Kan.) 1 Pac. Rep. 644	110
v. Wilson, 88 Kan. 223	448
Atkins v. Bordan, 2 Met. 487, 462, 37 Am. Dec. 100	504
v. Byrnes, 71 Ill. 323	806
v. Phillips, 26 Fla. 231, 10 L. R. A. 153	786
Atkinson v. Rochester Printing Co. 114 N. Y. 168	606
Atlanta & R. Air-Line R. Co. v. State, 68 Ga. 483	511
Atlantic Dock Co. v. Leavitt, 54 N. Y. 85, 13 Am. Rep. 556	504
Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Harris, 118 Mass. 147	44
Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 78 Mich. 545, 7 L. R. A. 90	384
v. McQuade, 94 Mich. 439	675
v. May, 90 Mich. 538, 25 L. R. A. 325	684, 669, 676, 677
v. Metropolitan R. Co. 125 Mass. 515, 28 Am. Rep. 204	490
Aull Sav. Bank v. Aull, 50 Mo. 199	46
Aultman v. Stout, 15 Neb. 586	742
Auriol v. Thomas, 2 T. R. 52	764
Austerberry v. Oldham, L. R. 29 Ch. Div. 750	503
Austin v. Coggeshall, 12 R. I. 329, 331, 84 Am. Rep. 648	529
v. Rutland R. Co. 45 Vt. 228	340
29 L. R. A.

Avirett v. State, 76 Md. 610

Ayars' Appeal, 123 Pa. 266, 3 L. R. A. 877

B.

Babbitt v. Bumpus, 78 Mich. 331	337
Bacchus v. Moreau, 7 Rob. (La.) 539	765
Bagby v. Atlantic, M. & O. R. Co. 86 Pa. 291	168
Bailey v. Lawrence County (S. Dak.) 59 N. W. Rep. 219	363, 364
Baily v. Merrell, 3 Buist, 66	362
Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Rowan, 104 Ind. 88-94	109
Bankhead v. Brown, 35 Iowa, 540	867
Bank of Columbia v. Oakley, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 235, 4 L. ed. 559	68
Lindsborg v. Ober, 51 Kan. 509	797
Louisville v. First Nat. Bank, 8 Baxt. 101, 35 Am. Rep. 691	797
Tennessee v. Smith, 9 B. Mon. 609	315
Banta v. Vreeland, 15 N. J. Eq. 108, 32 Am. Dec. 269	38
Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 32, 23 L. ed. 625	90
Barnard v. Campbell, 55 N. Y. 456, 58 N. Y. 73, 17 Am. Rep. 206	608
Barnes v. Canack, 1 Barb. 362	36
v. Mayo, 19 Fla. 548	68
Barnett v. Kinney, 147 U. S. 476, 481, 37 L. ed. 247, 249	167
v. Pratt, 37 Neb. 349	853
v. Wolf, 70 Ill. 76	786
Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224	91
v. Saunders, 37 U. S. 16 How. 543, 14 L. ed. 1061	661
Barry v. Merchants' Exchange Co. 1 Sandf. Ch. 207, 7 L. ed. 340	77
Bartlett v. Boston Gas Light Co. 117 Mass. 583, 19 Am. Rep. 451	390
Barton v. McKelway, 22 N. J. L. 165	223
Basset v. Nosworthy, 2 White & T. Lead. Bq. Cas. 34 Am. ed. 101	38
Bathholder v. Council Grove Water Co. 181 N. Y. 42	104
Bateman v. Blake, 81 Mich. 227	290
Bates v. Porter, 74 Cal. 224	429
v. Wilson, 14 Colo. 140	145
Battelle v. Northwestern Cement & Concrete Pav. Co. 37 Minn. 89	66
Baxter v. New England Marine Ins. Co. 6 Mass. 277, 4 Am. Dec. 125	780
Bay v. Williams, 112 Ill. 91, 54 Am. Rep. 209	853
Bayard v. Smith, 17 Wend. 83	818
Beach v. Derby, 19 Ill. 617	805
v. Leahy, 11 Kan. 23	368
Beardsley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 47 Am. Rep. 877	302
Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299	120
Beckman v. McKay, 14 Cal. 250	818
Beckwith v. Angell, 6 Conn. 315	614
Beesley v. F. W. Wheeler & Co. (Mich.) 27 L. R. A. 266	323
Bell v. Bell, 3 W. Va. 183	192
v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 72 Mo. 50, 58	699
v. McConnell, 87 Ohio St. 400, 41 Am. Rep. 528	193
Bellevue Trustees v. Hohn, 82 Ky. 1	408
Bellinger v. Griffith, 23 Ohio St. 619	578
Bennett v. American Exp. Co. 83 Me. 236, 13 L. R. A. 33	717
v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 524, 6 L. R. A. 563, 161	153
Berghaus v. Harrisburg, 122 Pa. 289	402
Berkshire Woolen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 424	97
Berry v. Hartzell, 91 Mo. 132	43
Berryhill's Appeal, 35 Pa. 245	103
Berthold v. O'Hara, 121 Mo. 88	46
Bill v. Denver, 29 Fed. Rep. 344	403
Bishop v. Schneider, 46 Mo. 472, 2 Am. Rep. 533	776
v. Travis, 51 Minn. 183	781
Birchard v. Booth, 4 Wis. 67	291
Blakely v. Grant, 6 Mass. 386	619
Blanchard v. Page, 8 Gray, 231, 301	560, 562

Chestnut v. Shane, 16 Ohio, 599, 47 Am. Dec. 387	510	Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp. 2 Gray, 58	171
Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. 52	509	44	611
v. People, 56 Ill. 327	408	v. Holmes, 17 Mass. 335	62, 63
v. Union Bldg. Assn. 103 Ill. 379, 40 Am. Rep. 586	571	v. Moore, 25 Gratt. 951	611
Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Chicago, 140 Ill. 309	490	v. Murray, 4 Minn. 437, 5 Am. Dec. 412	630
v. Davis, 3 C. C. A. 429, 63 Fed. Rep. 61, 10 U. S. App. 422	697	v. Ober, 12 Cush. 496	584
v. Moranda, 93 Ill. 302, 34 Am. Rep. 168	143	v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325, 42, 84, 259	63
Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Englewood Connecting R. Co. 115 Ill. 375	493	v. Tarbox, 1 Cush. 69	63
Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Boyd, 113 Ill. 75	490	v. Wright, 1 Cush. 49	63
v. Chicago, 149 Ill. 457	88	v. Wright, 130 Mass. 332	63
v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 24 L. R. A. 141	143	Comp. v. Carlisle Deposit Bank, 94 Pa. 499, 416	95, 96
Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 113 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 737	104	Conduitt v. Ross, 102 Ind. 183	504
Chicago Railway Equipment Co. v. Merchants' Nat. Bank of Chicago, 136 U. S. 238, 34 L. ed. 349	697	Conradt v. Clauve, 93 Ind. 476, 47 Am. Rep. 338	495
Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Houston, 65 U. S. 697, 102, 24 L. ed. 542, 543	176	Converse v. Foster, 32 Vt. 823	827
Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Holdridge, 113 Ind. 281	702	Couway v. Wilson, 44 N. J. Eq. 457	807
Chichester v. Lethbridge, Willes Rep. 70, 74, 701	481	Cook v. Flisko, 12 Gray, 493	219
Child v. Hudson's Bay Co. 2 P. Wms. 207	442	v. Jenkins, 30 Iowa, 452	738
Childs v. Childs, 10 Ohio St. 539, 75 Am. Dec. 512	613	v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 36 Wis. 45	699
Chivers v. People, 11 Mich. 43	458	v. Tullis, 35 U. S. 18 Wall, 338, 21 L. ed. 966	195
Chinn v. Murray, 4 Gratt. 343	47	v. United States, 139 U. S. 157-158, 34 L. ed. 906, 913	838, 839
Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290	481	v. Walling, 117 Ind. 9, 3 L. R. A. 769	45
Chouteau Spring Co. v. Harris, 20 Mo. 332	176	Cook County v. Chicago Industrial School, 125 Ill. 540, 1 L. R. A. 437	808
Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Consham, 40 Minn. 243, 3 L. R. A. 125	205	Cope v. Cope, 137 U. S. 682, 34 L. ed. 832	543
Cincinnati v. Buckenham, 10 Ohio, 237	612	v. Rowlands, 2 Mees. & W. 149	238
Citizens' Bank v. Howell, 8 Md. 530, 63 Am. Dec. 714	797	Coppins v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 122 N. Y. 557	108
City Savings Bank v. North Alabama Lumber & Mfr. Co. 21 Tenn. 12	168	Corning v. Lowerre, 6 Johns. Ch. 439, 3 L. ed. 175	91
Clark v. Davenport, 14 Iowa, 494	735	Costello v. Crowell, 127 Mass. 293, 34 Am. Rep. 367, 134 Mass. 280	104
v. Freeman, 11 Beav. 112	60	Coater v. Tide Water Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 54	856, 867
v. Missouri P. R. Co. 35 Kan. 360	690	Cosulich v. Standard Oil Co. 123 N. Y. 118	726, 728
v. Sprague, 5 Blackf. 412, 413	549	Cotten v. Leon County Comrs. 6 Fla. 610	430
Clark's Estate, 53 Cal. 355	690, 661	Coulter v. Richmond, 59 N. Y. 479	614
Clarkson v. De Peyster, Hopk. Ch. 426	600, 661	Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 35 L. ed. 1113, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 816, 819, 821, 824	824
Cleveland v. Stewart, 3 Ga. 283	801	Cox v. Kealey, 36 Ala. 340, 76 Am. Dec. 325	730
Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assn. [1892] 1 Q. B. 147	149	Craig v. Van Hebbler, 100 Mo. 549	49
Cleaves v. Herbert, 61 Ill. 126	805	Crane v. Wheeler, 43 Minn. 207	614
Clegg v. Hands, L. R. 44 Ch. Div. 504	503	Crauson v. Smith, 37 Mich. 369, 36 Am. Rep. 516	791
Clement v. Everest, 29 Mich. 19	443	Crawford v. Rohrer, 59 Md. 364	268
Cleveland Rolling Mill Co. v. Corrigan, 46 Ohio St. 263, 3 L. R. A. 385	780	Creamer v. West End Street R. Co. 156 Mass. 320, 16 L. R. A. 490	300
Clinton v. Cedar Rapids & M. R. R. Co. 24 Iowa, 469	771	Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521	325
Cloyd v. Trotter, 118 Ill. 391	734	Criswell's Appeal, 100 Pa. 438	184
Cocheco Mfg. Co. v. Stratford, 51 N. H. 455, 472, 473	58	Croft v. Day, 7 Beav. 84	525
Coe v. Columbus, P. & L. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 373, 75 Am. Dec. 518	442	Cromwell v. Hewitt, 40 N. Y. 491, 100 Am. Dec. 527	614
Coffin v. Day, 34 Fed. Rep. 687	697	v. Sac County, 94 U. S. 356, 24 L. ed. 199	781
Cogg v. Bernard, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. p. 416	96	Crooke v. Watt, 2 Vern. 124	551
Cohn v. People, 149 Ill. 495, 23 L. R. A. 331	207, 208	Crouch v. Credit Foncier of England (1873) L. R. 8 Q. B. 374	103
Cole v. Cunningham, 128 U. S. 107, 129, 33 L. ed. 533, 547	167, 168	Croudson v. Leonard, 8 U. S. 4 Cranch, 434, 2 L. ed. 670	780
v. Grant, 2 Cal. 105	706	Cruce v. Cruce, 81 Mo. 676	690, 698
v. Lockhart, 2 Ind. 631	704, 705	Crump v. United States Min. Co. 7 Gratt. 352, 56 Am. Dec. 116	65
Coleman v. Meade, 13 Bush, 353	223, 224	Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649	329
Collins v. Alabama G. S. R. Co. (Ala.) 16 So. Rep. 143	730	Cuff v. Newark & N. Y. R. Co. 35 N. J. L. 17, 10 Am. Rep. 205	380
v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 490	95	Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. 4 Wall, 325, 18 L. ed. 393	837
v. Blantern, 2 Wils. 641	295, 297	v. National Furnace Co. 60 Wis. 603	724
v. Prentice, 15 Conn. 59, 43, 38 Am. Dec. 61	588	Curran v. Clayton, 35 Me. 42	723
Coloma v. Hayes, 92 U. S. 484, 23 L. ed. 579	523	Currier v. Boston & M. R. Co. 37 N. H. 223	703
Columbia Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Bollinger, 12 Rich. Eq. 124, 125, 78 Am. Dec. 43	121, 122	v. Boston Music Hall Assn. 135 Mass. 414	494
Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 507, 3 L. ed. 512	755	Curry, Re, 25 Hun, 321	581
Columbian Bank's Estate, 147 Pa. 422	696	D.
Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Witherow, 32 Ala. 190	52	Dale v. Hall (1750) 1 Wils. 281	529
Comfort v. McTeer, 7 Len. 669	163	Dallas v. Redman, 10 Colo. 297	144
Commercial Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 64 Ill. 265, 16 Am. Rep. 537	707	Daly v. Butchers & D. Bank, 56 Mo. 94, 7 Am. Rep. 693	797
Commissioners on Inland Fisheries v. Holyoke Water Power Co. 104 Mass. 446, 5 Am. Rep. 247	171	Dansey v. Richardson, 3 El. & Bl. 144	95
Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 67	540	Danville Store & Mfg. Co. v. Adsett, 33 Mich. 244	338
v. Corlath, 13 Pa. 238	481	Dartmouth College Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat, 683, 4 L. ed. 667	801
v. Denard, 120 Mass. 46, 30 Am. Rep. 653	62	Davenport v. Mississippi & M. R. Co. 12 Iowa, 539	735
v. Dowdenn's Bail, 115 Mass. 136	261	Davenport Flow Co. v. Lamp, 80 Iowa, 723	606
v. Eastern R. Co. 103 Mass. 254, 4 Am. Rep. 555	171	Davidson v. Berthoud, 1 A. K. Marsh. 261	743
v. Fitchburg R. Co. 13 Gray, 180	171	v. Segar, 15 Fla. 671	68
v. Hall, 97 Mass. 370	686	Davis v. Central Cong. Soc. of Jamaica Plain, 129 Mass. 367, 37 Am. Rep. 868	494
v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 130 Mass. 335	96	v. Green, 102 Mo. 170, 11 L. R. A. 90	46
		v. Hampshire County Comrs. 153 Mass. 218, 11 L. R. A. 750	570
		v. Macon, 64 Ga. 123, 37 Am. Rep. 80	611
		v. Memphis City R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 883	102
		v. Providence & W. R. Co. 121 Mass. 134	172
		Dawson v. Kuttner, 48 Ga. 123	304

Dayton, X. & B. R. Co. v. Lewton, 20 Ohio St. 401.	271, 442
Dean v. O'Meara, 47 Ill. 120.	460
v. Wade, 1 Rep. in Ch. 48, 49.	457
v. Walker, 107 Ill. 540, 47 Am. Rep. 437.	853
Deck v. Works, 18 Hun, 236.	630
Decorah v. Dunstan, 38 Iowa, 96.	736
Dedham v. Natick, 16 Mass. 140.	680
Deem v. Millikin, 6 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 367.	148
De Hass v. Roberts, 39 Fed. Rep. 363.	104
Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Carroll, 89 Pa. 374.	809
Deile v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Wis. 400.	291
Demaree v. Seates (1895) 50 Kan. 275, 20 L. R. A. 97.	705
Deming v. Carrington, 13 Conn. 5, 30 Am. Dec. 591.	596
Denver v. Knowles, 17 Colo. 204, 17 L. R. A. 126.	611
Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 122 U. S. 597, 30 L. ed. 1146.	291
Denver, T. & G. R. Co. v. De Graff, 2 Colo. App. 42.	476
De Peyster v. Clarkson, 2 Wend. 73.	661
Derby v. Modesto, 104 Cal. 515.	524
Derringer v. Platte, 29 Cal. 232, 37 Am. Dec. 170.	207
Derry v. Peck, 14 App. Cas. 337.	864
Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 76 Mich. 421.	189
v. Rush, 83 Mich. 532, 10 L. R. A. 171.	684
Devoy v. Boyer, 3 Johns. 247.	706
De Walt v. Bartley, 146 Pa. 539, 15 L. E. A. 771.	699
Dewar's Estate, 110 Mont. 426.	654
Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. L. Co. 97 Mich. 529, 22 L. R. A. 292.	825
Dewing v. Sears, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 379, 20 L. ed. 189.	600
Dickey v. Polk County, 58 Iowa, 289.	286
Dickinson v. Philadelphia, 14 W. N. C. 397.	403
Dillaway v. Butler, 135 Mass. 479.	44
Dillingham v. Snow, 5 Mass. 547, 558, 559.	530
Dixon v. Pluma, 98 Cal. 385, 20 L. R. A. 698.	724
Drabe v. Badger, 12 Mass. 45.	505
Ducker v. Sones, 2 Myl. & K. 693.	660
Dodson v. Hays, 29 W. Va. 577.	455
Dodsworth v. Hercules Iron Works, 36 Fed. Rep. 483.	195
Doer, Roe, & Me. 503, 3 L. R. A. 833.	151
v. Roe, 13 Fla. 602.	68
Doggett v. Walter, 15 Fla. 387.	509
Doll v. Crume, 41 Neb. 655.	853
v. State, 45 Ohio St. 445.	193
Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 376, 61 Am. Dec. 266.	263
Donaldson v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 21 Minn. 293.	697
Donnager v. State, 8 Smedes & M. 649.	771, 772
Donnelly v. Ryan, 41 Pa. 306.	689
Dorsey v. Whipples, 8 Gill, 462.	60
Dougherty v. Henarie, 47 Cal. 9.	731
Dow v. Whitney, 147 Mass. 1.	37, 38
Dowling v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 670.	761
v. State, 5 Smedes & M. 664.	888
Downer v. Miller, 15 Wis. 612.	36
Downs v. High Point, 115 N. C. 132.	701
Doyle v. Lord, 64 N. Y. 432, 21 Am. Rep. 629, 590.	591
Drovers' Nat. Bank v. Anglo-American Pkg. & P. Co. 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855.	797
Drury v. Drury, 1 Rep. in Ch. 48, 49.	457
DuBois Traction Pass. R. Co. v. Buffalo, R. & P. R. Co. 149 Pa. 1.	490, 491
Ducte v. Ford, 138 U. S. 587, 34 L. ed. 1091.	652
Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678.	223
Dudley v. Kennedy, 63 Me. 435.	701, 702
Duffield v. Williamsport School Dist. 162 Pa. 473, 25 L. R. A. 152.	254
Duffies v. Duffies, 76 Wis. 374, 3 L. R. A. 420.	151
Duggan v. Colorado Mortg. & Invest. Co. 11 Colo. 113.	145
Dunbar v. Augusta, 90 Ga. 390.	804
Duncan v. Missouri, 153 U. S. 377, 38 L. ed. 485.	888
v. Richardson, 34 Ala. 117.	746
Dunkin v. Vandenberg, 1 Paige, 624, 2 L. ed. 776.	706
Dunlith & D. Bridge Co. v. Dubuque County, 55 Iowa, 558.	392, 393
Dunn v. Stone, 1 Taylor Repos. 241.	701, 702
Dupuy v. Gibson, 36 Ill. 197.	805
Durfee v. Grinnell, 69 Ill. 871.	805
Durkee v. Janesville, 36 Wis. 464, 9 Am. Rep. 500.	390
Dwinelle v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 120 N. Y. 122, 3 L. R. A. 224.	467
Dyckman v. Sevastson, 39 Minn. 123.	806
Dyer v. Sanford, 9 Met. 305, 406, 43 Am. Dec. 399.	504
Dyson v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 57 Conn. 921.	302, 372, 374

E.

Early v. Friend, 16 Gratt. 21, 78 Am. Dec. 662.	454, 455
v. State, 35 Miss. 210.	261
Eastman v. Meredith, 36 N. H. 234, 73 Am. Dec. 302.	898
East St. Louis v. O'Flynn, 119 Ill. 200, 59 Am. Rep. 736.	379
East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. Feathers, 10 Lea, 103, 105.	699
Eaton v. Boston & L. R. Co. 11 Allen, 500, 87 Am. Dec. 730.	239
v. Manitowoc County Suprs. 44 Wis. 489.	584
Ebersole v. Rankin, 102 Mo. 488.	45
Economy Hldg. Assn. v. Hungerbuehler, 98 Pa. 258.	137
Edwards v. Darby, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 206, 6 L. ed. 603.	510
v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 13 Colo. 59.	144
Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 195.	100
Eggeman v. Eggeman, 37 Mich. 486.	26
Ehrenfeldt's Appeal, 101 Pa. 186.	421
Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 45 Am. Rep. 622.	361
Elkins v. McKean, 73 Pa. 498.	226
Elliot v. Barnes, 31 Kan. 170.	261
Elliot v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 32 Conn. 579.	373
v. Van Buren, 33 Mich. 51, 20 Am. Rep. 663.	271
Elmer v. Locke, 135 Mass. 575.	108
Elrod v. Keller, 39 Ind. 332.	461
Elwood v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 4 Hun, 383.	699
Emdin v. Darrey, 1 Bos. & P. N. R. 22.	705
Emert v. Mansour, 156 U. S. 293, 309, 39 L. ed. 430.	534, 536-538
Emmel v. Hayes, 102 Mo. 136, 11 L. R. A. 323.	49
Empire Mills v. Alston Grocery Co. (Tex.) 13 L. R. A. 366.	145
Enfield v. Jordan, 119 U. S. 680, 30 L. ed. 525.	521
Englar v. Offutt, 70 Md. 78.	698
English v. Smock, 34 Ind. 116, 7 Am. Rep. 215.	765
Episcopal City Mission v. Appleton, 117 Mass. 326.	172
Epps v. Epps, 17 Ill. App. 196.	663
Equitable L. Ins. Co. v. Haslewood, 75 Tex. 347, 17 L. R. A. 217.	707
Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 33 Mich. 231, 93 Mich. 414.	323-325
Ervine's Appeal, 75 Pa. 265, 55 Am. Dec. 499.	809
Eschrich's Estate, 24, 55 Cal. 98.	660, 661
Espin v. Pemberton, 3 DeG. & J. 547.	50
European Bank, Re, L. R. 5 Ch. 358.	44
Evans v. Atlantic & P. R. Co. 62 Mo. 49, 57, 58.	699
v. Dravo, 24 Pa. 62, 63 Am. Dec. 359.	295, 296
v. Edmonds, 13 C. B. 777.	263
v. Warren, 123 Mass. 308.	806
Evansville v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93.	115
Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Irwin, 84 Ind. 457.	598
Everham v. Oriental Sav. & L. Assn. 47 Pa. 362.	124
Evitt v. Price, 181m. 433.	214
Exchange Bank of Columbus v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1.	590
Express Cases, 117 U. S. 1, 29 L. ed. 791.	563

F.

Fabens v. Mercantile Bank, 23 Pick. 332, 34 Am. Dec. 59.	797
Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, 75 Md. 604.	276
Fannin v. Anderson, 7 Q. B. 811.	276
Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Grape Creek Coal Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 431, 16 L. R. A. 608.	273
Farnsworth v. Pawtucket, 13 R. I. 82, 88.	529
Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 239, 255.	300, 302
Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 48, 38 Am. Dec. 539.	141
v. St. Paul Trust Co. 45 Minn. 496.	614
Ferohen v. Arndt, 26 Or. 121, ante, 664.	667, 668
Fernstler v. Seibert, 114 Pa. 196.	431
Ferrill v. Brewis, 25 Gratt. 765, 768.	562
Fidelity Ins. Trust & Safe-Deposit Co. v. Roanoke Iron Co. 68 Fed. Rep. 623.	272
Fiefield v. Marinette County, 62 Wis. 532, 541.	580
Finch v. Riverside & A. R. Co. 87 Cal. 597.	464
Finley v. Simpson, 22 N. J. L. 311, 58 Am. Dec. 252.	504
Finn v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 63.	853
Finn v. Western R. Corp. 112 Mass. 524, 538, 539.	530, 539
17 Am. Rep. 128.

First Nat. Bank v. Brenneisen, 97 Mo. 148.	686	Gayler v. Wilder, 51 U. S. 10 How. 494, 13 L. ed.	790
v. Sprague, 34 Neb. 318, 15 L. R. A. 498.	797	Getzer Mfg. Co. v. Jones, 90 Ga. 507.	620
First Nat. Bank of Deadwood v. Gustin Min-		George v. Wamsley, 64 Iowa, 175.	199
erva Conso. Minn. Co. 49 Minn. 327, 6	269	Georgia v. Atlantic & G. R. Co. 3 Woods, C. C.	687
L. R. A. 571.	563	434.
Johet v. Adam, 128 Ill. 486.	83	Georgia v. B. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 86 Ga. 744.	178
Sturges v. Peck, 8 Kan. 630.	104	Georgia Railroad v. Olds, 74 Ga. 673.	176
Fish v. Glover, 154 Ill. 85.	806	Georgia Southern R. Co. v. Reeves, 64 Ga. 492.	504
Fisher v. St. Louis, 44 Mo. 482.	408	German Nat Bank v. Burns, 12 Colo. 539.	797
Fitch v. Johnson, 104 Ill. 111.	508	German Reformed Church v. Com. 3 Pa. 282.	481
Fitchburg R. Co. v. Gage, 12 Gray, 399.	428	Gerrish v. Union Wharf Props. 28 Me. 384, 46	540
v. Grand Junction Railroad & Depot Co.		Am. Dec. 563.
4 Allen, 198.	171	Gest v. Packwood, 34 Fed. Rep. 868.	540
Fithian v. Corwin, 17 Ohio St. 113.	320	Gibbons v. Ogden, 23 U. S. 9 Wheat. 1, 6 L. ed.	585
Fitzgerald v. Connecticut River Paper Co. 155	360	28.
Mass. 155.		Gibson v. State, 68 Miss. 241.	261
Meckner v. Bank of United States, 21 U. S. 8		Gilbert v. People, 1 Denio, 41, 43 Am. Dec. 646.	154
Wheat, 338, 339, 5 L. ed. 631.	766, 768	Giles v. Grover, 9 Bing. 123.	245
Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1.	45, 48	Gill v. Read, 5 R. I. 343, 73 Am. Dec. 73.	781
Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87, 3 L. ed.	99	Gilliam v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 70 Ala. 268.	729
162.		Gillingham v. Ohio River R. Co. 35 W. Va. 568.	467
v. Phelps, 28 Vt. 257.	540	14 L. R. A. 798.
Fluke v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am.	325	Glavin v. Rhode Island Hospital, 12 R. I. 411, 84	807
Rep. 545.	109	Am. Rep. 675.
Flint & P. M. R. Co. v. Willey, 47 Mich. 88.	699	Glenn v. Farmers' Bank, 70 N. C. 191.	729
Floyer v. Edwards, 1 Cowp. 112.	764	Globe Mill Co. v. Minneapolis Elevator Co. 44	218
Folger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267, 96	168	Minn. 153.	221
Am. Dec. 747.		Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431.	82, 250
Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 1, 6 L. R. A. 829.	151, 152	Goddard v. Donah, 42 Kan. 754.	809
Forbes v. Smith, 11 Exch. 161.	275	v. East Texas F. Ins. Co. 67 Tex. 71.	707
Ford v. Tirrell, 9 Gray, 401, 69 Am. Dec. 297.	222	v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 57 Me.	531
Forest v. Tinkham, 29 Ill. 141.	806	302, 2 Am. Rep. 39.
Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 235, 25 L. ed. 339.	272	Godillot v. Harris, 81 N. Y. 203.	206
Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec.	96	Goetz v. Voelinger, 99 Mass. 504.	277
168.		Golden Canal Co. v. Bright, 8 Colo. 144.	144
v. Mullanphy Planing Mill Co. 92 Mo. 87	834	Goli v. Manhattan R. Co. 25 Jones & S. 74.	725
v. Park Cars, 133 Mass. 321.	857	Good v. Martin, 95 U. S. 90, 24 L. ed. 341.	614
Fougeray v. Cord, 60 N. J. Eq. 185.	102	Goodell v. Buck, 67 Me. 514.	696
Fourth School Dist. v. Wood, 13 Mass. 198.	863	Goodman v. Jewett, 24 Conn. 589.	374
Fox v. Allenaville C. S. & V. Turnp. Co. 46 Ind.	36	Goodnow v. Stryker, 61 Iowa, 261.	268
36.	65	Goodrich Transp. Co. v. Gagnon, 36 Fed. Rep.	123
v. Hall, 74 Mo. 315, 41 Am. Rep. 316.	37, 45	123.
v. Spring Lake Iron Co. 89 Mich. 387.	325	Goodwin v. Roberts (1875) 14 R. 10 Exch. 337.	173
Francis v. Evans, 69 Va. 115.	686	Gorris v. Scott, 14 R. 9 Exch. 125.	699
Francis v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 37 Minn. 409	108	Gould v. Carr, 38 Fla. 523, 24 L. R. A. 130.	68
Franklin v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 37		Gowen v. Harley, 6 C. C. A. 190, 56 Fed. Rep.	697
Mich. 342, 26 Am. Rep. 581.	175	978, 980.
Freeman v. Atlanta, 66 Ga. 617.	511	Graf v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 Mich. 579.	289
v. Biorb, 1 Nev. & M. 420.	580, 581	Graft v. Middleton, 43 Cal. 341.	37
v. Moffit, 119 Mo. 280.	51	Graffy v. Bushville, 107 Ind. 502, 57 Am. Rep.	532-536
Frelinghuysen v. Nugent, 85 Fed. Rep. 238.	665	123.
Frenkel v. Hudson, 82 Ala. 158, 60 Am. Rep. 736	44	Graham v. Graham, 6 T. B. Mon. 562, 17 Am.	458
Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 395.	57	Dec. 193.
v. Kirk, 4 Gil & J. 521, 28 Am. Dec. 581.	275, 277	v. Greenville, 67 Tex. 62.	448
Frink v. Lawrence, 30 Conn. 120, 50 Am. Dec.	274	v. Pierce, 19 Grant, 28, 100 Am. Dec. 608.	480
274.	370	Grand Rapids v. Burlingame, 93 Mich. 472.	478
Frisbie v. United States, 187 U. S. 160, 39 L. ed.	260	Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Cummings,	105
657.		130 U. S. 700, 37 L. ed. 266.	222
Frische v. Kramer, 16 Ohio, 126, 139, 47 Am.	442	Graves v. Weeks, 15 Vt. 181.	277
Dec. 386.		Gray v. Durand, 50 Barb. 100.	680
Fritts v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 62 Conn. 503	300	v. State, 72 Ind. 678.	118
Fritz v. Hobson, L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 542.	571	Grenaly v. Codling, 2 Bing. 263.	701, 702
Frobock v. Pattee, 38 Me. 103.	318	Great North of England, C. & H. Junction R.
Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492.	82	Co. v. Clarence R. Co. 1 Colly. Ch. Rep.	507
Frost v. St. Paul Bkg. & Invest. Co. 57 Minn.	781
325.		Greatrex v. Greatrex, 1 De G. & S. 682.	214
v. Shaw, 3 Ohio St. 270.	847	Grealey v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 33 Minn. 187	619
v. Winston, 32 Mo. 489.	660	Green v. Burrows, 47 Mich. 70.	620
Fry v. Payne, 62 Va. 759.	459	Greenebaum v. Wheeler, 90 Ill. 266.	805
Fuller v. Jackson, 92 Mich. 197.	290, 291	Gregg v. Sanford, 24 Ill. 17, 76 Am. Dec. 719.	805
v. Missouri, 35 S. C. 314, 331.	774, 776	Gregory v. Morris, 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. ed. 740.	598
v. People, 62 Ill. 182.	62	Griffin v. Griffin, 20 S. C. 488.	776
Furman v. Haskin, 2 Cal. 399.	617	Grimsley v. Hanks, 46 Fed. Rep. 400.	724
v. Van Sise, 58 N. Y. 435, 15 Am. Rep. 441	680	Griswold v. Illinois C. R. Co. (Iowa) 24 L. R. A.
		647.	754
G.		Grover v. Huckins, 26 Mich. 478.	475
Gaar v. Hurd, 92 Ill. 315.	805	Guelich v. National State Bank, 56 Iowa, 434.	797
Gallaher v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 57 Conn.		41 Am. Rep. 110.
445, 5 L. R. A. 737.	802	Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Washington, 49 Fed.	780
Gardner v. Collins, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 58, 7 L. ed.	557	Rep. 347, 4 U. S. App. 121.
847.	554	Gut v. Minnesota, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 35-38, 19 L.	839
3 Mason, 398.		ed. 573, 574.
Garland, Petitioner, Ex parte , 71 U. S. 4 Wall.	887
390, 18 L. ed. 374.		H.
Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co. 25	142	Hackley v. Mack, 60 Mich. 591.	199
Fed. Rep. 258.	286	Hadley v. Baxendale, 9 Exch. 341.	742
Garrison v. Knight, 47 Iowa, 527.	561	v. Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. 2 Tenn. Ch. 122	168
Garrigus v. Parke County Conns. 39 Ind. 73.	99	Hagan v. Hendry, 18 Md. 191.	60
Garside v. East St. Louis, 43 Ill. 47.		Hagar v. Reclamation Dist. No. 108, 111 U. S.	867
Gates v. Boston & N. Y. Air Line R. Co. 53	370	701, 28 L. ed. 569.
Conn. 333, 341, 343.	54	Haggerty v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 50 Mich. 386.
Garit v. Chambers, 3 Ohio, 496.	454	60 Am. Rep. 301.
Gayle v. Johnston, 80 Ala. 395.
3 L. R. A.

Hahn's Appeal (Pa.) 5 Cent. Rep. 187.....	268	Hitchcock v. Galveston, 36 U. S. 841, 24 L. ed. 659.....	402
Haines v. Campbell, 74 Md. 153.....	60	v. Griffin & Co. 99 Mich. 451.....	403
Hall v. Burlingame, 58 Mich. 498, 440.....	475	Hoar v. Merritt, 62 Mich. 386.....	323
v. Callahan, 66 Mo. 816.....	45, 48	v. Wood, 3 Met. 193.....	154
v. Ody, 2 Bos. & P. 28.....	705	Hodgkins v. Bond, 1 N. H. 294.....	615
Hallett's Estate, Re, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 606.....	686	Hogan v. Hensley, 22 Ark. 413.....	768
Halsey v. People, 84 Ill. 89.....	420	Holden v. Minnesota, 137 U. S. 483, 34 L. ed. 724.....	838
v. Rapid Transit Street R. Co. 47 N. J. Eq. 388.....	490-492	Holder v. Soubly, 8 C. B. N. S. 293.....	16
Hamel v. Brooklyn & N. Y. Ferry Co. 1 Silv. Sup. Ct. 584.....	487	Hollida v. Hunt, 7 Ill. 109, 22 Am. Rep. 66.....	790
Hamilton v. Armstrong, 120 Mo. 597.....	58	Holliger v. Bates, 48 Ohio St. 487.....	442
v. Doolittle, 37 Ill. 473.....	87	Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 343.....	194
Hamilton County Comrs. v. Mighela, 7 Ohio St. 109.....	420, 668	Holmes v. Gardner, 50 Ohio St. 167, 20 L. R. A. 329.....	320
Hammond v. Corbett, 50 N. H. 501, 9 Am. Rep. 288.....	680	v. Gilman, 188 N. Y. 369, 20 L. R. A. 566.....	666
Hancock v. Day, McMull. Eq. 60, 86 Am. Dec. 298.....	460	v. Holmes, 133 Ind. 886.....	152
v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, 46 Am. Rep. 112.....	97	Holt v. Green, 73 Pa. 198, 13 Am. Rep. 737.....	225
Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 237.....	268	v. State, 2 Tex. 868.....	688
Hanford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 43 Minn. 104, 7 L. R. A. 722.....	55	Hood v. Hood, 110 Mass. 463.....	781
Hanlon v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 104 Mo. 388.....	289	Hoover v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 156 Pa. 280, 22 L. R. A. 283.....	423
Hannan v. Osborn, 4 Paige, 343, 3 L. ed. 468.....	480	Hope v. Blair, 105 Mo. 90.....	45
Hanness v. Bonnell, 23 N. J. L. 159.....	807	Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, 589, 28 L. ed. 282, 298.....	337, 680
Hannon v. St. Louis County, 62 Mo. 313.....	709	Hord v. Taubman, 79 Mo. 101.....	45, 48
Hanover R. Co. v. Coyle, 55 Pa. 396.....	256	Horter v. Philadelphia, 13 W. N. C. 40.....	408
Hansley v. Jamesville & W. R. Co. 115 N. C. 609.....	702	Hoskins v. Mechanics' Bldg. & Loan Assn. 84 N. C. 338.....	124
Harding v. Waters, 6 Lea. 324.....	614	Houston v. McCluney, 8 W. Va. 126.....	466
Harkrader v. Leiby, 4 Ohio St. 602.....	320	Hovey v. Riley, 119 Ind. 396.....	114
Harrigan v. Connecticut River Lumber Co. 129 Mass. 580, 37 Am. Rep. 347.....	472	Howard v. Parks, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 606.....	808
Harrington v. Victoria Graving Dock Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 549.....	192, 194	Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 116 Ind. 451.....	110
Harris v. Lester, 80 Ill. 307.....	736	Howe Mach. Co. v. Gage, 100 U. S. 676, 25 L. ed. 754.....	533
v. Runnels, 53 U. S. 12 How. 79, 84, 18 L. ed. 901, 903.....	217, 218, 225	Howey v. Goings, 18 Ill. 95, 54 Am. Dec. 497.....	460
Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. E. Co. 79 Mich. 409, 7 L. R. A. 623.....	323, 325, 326	Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. 80 Md. 146, 27 L. R. A. 154.....	724
v. Smith, 88 Mo. 210, 58 Am. Rep. 571.....	666	Hoyt v. Jeffers, 80 Mich. 181.....	476
Hart v. Flynn, 8 Dana, 191.....	600	v. Pawtucket Inst. for Savings, 110 Ill. 390.....	765
v. Leete, 104 Mo. 388.....	883	Huff v. Austin, 46 Ohio St. 366.....	725
Hartford County Comrs. v. Hamilton, 60 Md. 840, 45 Am. Rep. 739.....	680	Hufford v. Grand Rapids & L. R. Co. 58 Mich. 118.....	175
Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Raymond, 70 Mich. 499.....	475	Hughes v. Chatham Overseers, 5 Mann. & G. 54.....	177
Hartley v. Crawford, 12 Neb. 471.....	277	v. Heiser, 1 Blinn. 463, 2 Am. Dec. 459, 462.....	701
Harvey v. Thomas, 10 Watts, 66, 36 Am. Dec. 141.....	809	Huiskamp v. Moline Wagon Co. 121 U. S. 310, 30 L. ed. 971.....	687
Haasard-Short v. Hardison, 114 N. C. 487.....	702	Hull v. Sacramento Valley R. Co. 14 Cal. 387, 73 Am. Dec. 666.....	727
Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 305, 25 L. ed. 885.....	266	Hundley v. Farris, 103 Mo. 73, 12 L. R. A. 254.....	636
Hatfield v. Huntington City Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. 132 Ind. 149.....	188	Hungerford v. O'Brien, 37 Minn. 306.....	614
Hatt v. Evening News Assn. 94 Mich. 119.....	280	Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 78 Mich. 513, 7 L. R. A. 500.....	323-326
Haverstick v. Sipe, 36 Pa. 368.....	580	Hunter's Appeal (Pa.) 22 W. N. C. 861.....	636
Hay v. Ayling, 16 Q. B. 428.....	527	Huntington v. Cheesbro, 57 Ind. 74.....	593
Hayden v. Allyn, 66 Conn. 293.....	301	Husband v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 317.....	480
Haynes v. Nowlin, 129 Ind. 551, 14 L. R. A. 787.....	152	Huse v. Glover, 119 U. S. 543, 30 L. ed. 487.....	472
Hayward v. Elliot Nat. Bank, 96 U. S. 611, 24 L. ed. 855.....	448	Hussey v. Ryan, 64 Md. 426.....	291
v. National Ins. Co. 59 Mo. 181, 14 Am. Rep. 400.....	43, 47	v. Sibley, 66 Me. 192, 22 Am. Rep. 557.....	403
Haywood v. Brunswick Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 403.....	508	Hyde v. McCabe, 100 Mo. 412.....	154
v. Miller, 3 Hill, 90.....	577	v. Planters' Bank, 17 La. Ann. 560, 36 Am. Dec. 621.....	797
Haslett v. Sinclair, 76 Ind. 489.....	508	Hysinger v. Baltzell, 2 Gill & J. 158.....	275, 277
Heard v. Dubuque County Bank, 8 Neb. 10, 30 Am. Rep. 811.....	621	L
Hedderich v. State, 101 Ind. 564, 51 Am. Rep. 768.....	120	Ier v. Colson, 8 Neb. 581.....	511
Heflin v. Rock Mills Mfg. & L. Co. 58 Ala. 618.....	746	Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, Re, L. R. 11 Eq. 478.....	108
Heineman v. Schloss, 63 Mich. 158.....	868	Improvement of Nassau Street, Re, 11 Johns. 77.....	196
Heiser v. Loomis, 47 Mich. 18.....	291	Indianapolis, B. & W. R. Co. v. Fountain County Comrs. 39 Ind. 215.....	561
Heller v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. 28 Kan. 625.....	570	v. Hartley, 67 Ill. 459, 16 Am. Rep. 624.....	489
v. Stremmel, 52 Mo. 309.....	863	Information v. Jager, 29 S. C. 444, 445.....	218
Henderson v. Hunter, 59 Pa. 835.....	481	v. Oliver, 21 S. C. 325.....	218
Hennington v. State, 90 Ga. 396, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 413.....	478	Ingraham v. Hutchinson, 2 Conn. 596.....	569
Henry v. Chester, 15 Vt. 460, 467.....	580	Innerarity v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 139 Mass. 332, 52 Am. Rep. 710.....	44
v. Sneed, 99 Mo. 407.....	45, 48	Insurance Oil Tank Co. v. Scott, 33 La. Ann. 646, 39 Am. Rep. 236.....	207
v. Southern P. R. Co. 50 Cal. 176.....	727	Iowa v. Illinois, 147 U. S. 1, 37 L. ed. 55.....	392
Hepburn v. Griswold, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 608, 19 L. ed. 513.....	507, 508	Iowa Homestead Co. v. Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 633.....	228
Hersh v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 74 Pa. 181.....	428	Iowa Railroad Land Co. v. Soper, 39 Iowa, 112.....	776
Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 367, 36 Am. Rep. 518.....	167	Irvine v. Irwin, 142 Pa. 271.....	324
Hicks v. Citizens' R. Co. 124 Mo. 115, 25 L. R. A. 508.....	290	Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 99 Mich. 416.....	325
v. Person, 19 Ohio, 426.....	759	Isaacs v. Decker, 41 Ind. 410.....	611
Higgins v. Moore, 84 N. Y. 417, 424, 425.....	219, 222	Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668.....	223
Hill v. Rich Hill Coal Min. Co. 119 Mo. 19.....	833	J
v. Scott, 38 Mo. App. 370.....	495	Jackson, Ex parte, 1 Ves. Jr. 151.....	669
Hills v. Chicago, 60 Ill. 86.....	802	Jackson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Iowa, 176, 7 Am. Rep. 120.....	47
Hinton v. Locke, 5 Hill, 437.....	223

Jackson v. Hardin, 68 Mo. 175	46
v. Newman, 99 Miss. 385, 42 Am. Rep. 307	786
Jacobs, He, 98 N. Y. 93, 50 Am. R. p. 630, 82, 84-86,	239
Jaffray v. Anderson, 96 Iowa, 719	282
v. Krauss, 79 Ill. 449	621
Jahn v. Nolting, 98 Cal. 407	817-819
Jakeway v. Bangert, 87 Vt. 516	540
James v. Jenkins, 34 Md. 1 & 4 Am. Rep. 300	580
Jeffords v. Crump, 12 Phila. 600	97
Jenal v. Green Island Draining Co., 12 Neb. 168	585
Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308	298
Johnson v. Ballard, 4 Ind. 270	708
v. Ballou, 28 Mich. 379	510
v. Chambers, 12 Ind. 103	616
v. Chicago & P. Elevator Co., 119 U. S. 838,
399, 400, 80 L. ed. 447, 451	472
v. Hudson, 11 East, 180	225
v. Hullings, 108 Pa. 498, 49 Am. Rep. 131	225
v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471	290-292
v. Meeler, 1 Wis. 436	327
v. People, 63 Ill. 481	87
v. Reynolds, 8 Kan. 251, 267	95, 97
v. Way, 27 Ohio St. 374	320
Johnston v. Shortridge, 98 Mo. 237	44
Jones v. Bamford, 21 Iowa, 217	86
v. Com. 88 Va. 661	838
v. Kearney, 1 Dru. & W. 134	50
v. Lusik, 2 Met. (Ky.) 858	687
v. Scott, 10 Kan. 83	807
Jordan v. Cheney, 74 Me. 350	320
Joy v. St. Louis, 138 U. S. 1, 34, 34 L. ed. 843, 868	508
Judson v. Bessemer, 87 Ala. 240, 4 L. R. A. 742	520
June v. Purcell, 36 Ohio St. 306	64
K.
Kahley, Re, 2 Biss. 388	687
Kallahan v. Osborne, 67 Conn. 490	374
Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 165,
11 L. R. A. 840	91
Kansas City & O. R. Co. v. Frey, 30 Neb. 790	366
Kearney v. London, R. & S. C. R. Co. L. R. 6 Q. B. 411	484, 724
Keat v. Hugo, 115 Mass. 204, 15 Am. Rep. 80	589-591
Keedle v. Flack, 27 Neb. 536	568
Kellogg v. Larkin, 3 Pinney, 126, 56 Am. Dec. 164
v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 270, 27 Am. Dec. 550	758
Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 Mich. 365	504
Kempe v. Eader, 36 Tenn. 139	239
Kennebec & P. R. Co. v. Kendall, 51 Me. 470	277
Kennedy v. Green, 6 Myl. & K. 699	451
v. National Union Bank, 23 Hun, 494	44
v. New York C. & H. R. R. Co. 35 Hun, 138	687
v. Owen, 185 Mass. 199	690
Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 37 Fed. Rep. 507, 21 L. R. A. 330, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 351	504
Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517	358
Kern v. Von Phul, 7 Minn. 430 (Gil. 841), 38 Am. Dec. 105	427
Kernohan v. Durham, 43 Ohio St. 1, 12 L. R. A. 41	614
Kerr v. Trego, 47 Pa. 232	320
Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 221	481
Kester v. Lyon, 40 W. Va.	577
Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 66 Mich. 400	461
Kiersted v. State, 1 Gill & J. 231	510
Kilhorn v. Field, 78 Pa. 194	206
Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 512	223
Kimmel v. Dickson (S. Dak.) 25 L. R. A. 309	251
King v. American Transp. Co. 1 Flipp. 1	472
v. Chechnut, 1 Barn. & Ald. 473	577
v. Emden, 9 East, 437	786
v. Watson, 3 Price, 6	247
v. Wright, 155 Mass. 444	508
Kinneen v. Wells, 144 Mass. 497, 59 Am. Dec. 105	600
Kirby v. Schoonmaker, 3 Barb. Ch. 46, 49 Am. Dec. 160	687
Kirst v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 46 Wis. 489	724
Kitchen v. Loudensack, 48 Ohio St. 177	320
Klein v. New York L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 88, 26 L. ed. 632	125
Knapp v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 41	108
Knatchbull v. Halleft, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 606	251
Knese's Appeal, 31 Pa. 87	809
Kneland v. American Loan & T. Co. 136 U. S. 89, 34 L. ed. 879	272
v. Lawrence, 140 U. S. 209, 35 L. ed. 492	104
v. Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 455	120
Knoblauch v. Foglesong, 35 Minn. 352	614
Knowles v. Yates, 31 Cal. 82	677
Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 34 Ind. 185	130
Lafont v. Ruddock, 13 C. B. 813	275
Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 298	90, 93
Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Fix, 38 Ind. 381, 45 Am. Rep. 404	176
Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bodemer, 189 Ill. 506	494
v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 222, 223	108
Lake Superior Land Co. v. Emerson, 38 Minn. 406	55
Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 23 Am. Rep. 71	34, 86
Lampkin v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ala.) 17 So. Rep. 448	739
Lampman v. Milks, 21 N. Y. 505, 512	500
Landis's Appeal, 102 Pa. 457	451
Landrum v. Trowbridge, 3 Met. (Ky.) 381	516
Lane v. Baughman, 17 Ohio St. 643, 33 Am. Dec. 633	443
v. Morton, 51 N. C. 38	391
v. Newdgate, 10 Ves. Jr. 132	214
Lang, Ex parte, 85 U. S. 13 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872	261
Lanman v. McGregor, 34 Ind. 801	538
Larned v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 436, 3 Am. Rep. 346	218
Larson v. Aultman & T. Co. 86 Wis. 281	277
Laurel Run Bldg. Assn. v. Sperring, 106 Pa. 384	184
Lawrence v. Howard, 1 Utah, 148	97
v. Kasten, 8 Bibb, 104	314
v. Stonington Bank, 6 Conn. 521	797
Lay v. Parsons, 104 Cal. 661	676
Leach's Petition, Re, 124 Ind. 605, 21 L. R. A. 701	45, 51
Leavitt v. La Force, 71 Mo. 353	82, 83

Lloyd v. Lynch , 28 Pa. 419, 70 Am. Dec. 137.....	743	Maine Bank v. Butts , 9 Mass. 49.....	764
v. Preston , 148 U. S. 680, 36 L. ed. 1111.....	288	Majors v. Cowell , 51 Cal. 478.....	441
v. Williams , 2 W. Bl. 732.....	764	Mallory v. West Shore Hudson River R. Co. 3
Logan County Suprs. v. Lincoln , 81 Ill. 156.....	806	Jones & S. 174.....	104
Long v. Clapp , 15 Neb. 417.....	742	Malony v. Mahar , 1 Mich. 26.....	510
Loose v. Buchanan , 51 N. Y. 476, 10 Am. Rep. 623.....	723	Mandlebaum v. Gregovich , 17 Nev. 97, 45 Am. Rep. 433.....	213, 225
Louisville v. Hyatt , 5 B. Mon. 200.....	408	Mankato v. Fowler , 32 Minn. 384.....	738
v. Louisville University Trustees , 15 B. Mon. 642.....	801	Manning v. Wells , 9 Humph. 748, 51 Am. Dec. 688.....	97
Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reese , 35 Ala. 497.....	726	Marion v. State , 20 Neb. 236, 37 Am. Rep. 825.....	339
v. Whitman , 79 Ala. 325.....	729	Marmet v. State , 45 Ohio St. 63.....	611
Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City R. Co. 2 Duv. 175.....	209	Marsh v. Martindale , 3 Bos. & P. 154, 158.....	764
Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Berkey , 136 Ind. 181.....	108	Marshalltown v. Blum , 58 Iowa, 184.....	736
Louvalle v. Menard , 41 Am. Dec. 161, and note	480	Martin v. Drinan , 128 Mass. 516.....	504
Love v. Miller , 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 182.....	219, 224	v. Hazzard Powder Co. 3 Colo. 596.....	616
Low v. Connecticut & P. R. Co. 45 N. H. 870.....	66	v. Jones , 72 Mo. 28.....	48
v. Rees Printing Co. 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 702.....	84	v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 62 Conn. 381.....	478
Luce v. Carley , 24 Wend. 451, 35 Am. Dec. 637.....	54	Maryland Ice Co. v. Arctic Ice Machine Mfg. Co. 79 Md. 103.....	268
Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern Railway's Trustees , 78 Ky. 357.....	54	Massachusetts Cent. R. Co. v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 121 Mass. 124.....	373
Lux v. Haggin , 69 Cal. 304.....	198	Massey v. Fisher , 62 Fed. Rep. 953.....	251
Luxton v. North River Bridge Co. 153 U. S. 525, 38 L. ed. 908.....	857	Mathewson v. Hawkins , Index QQ. 15.....	529
Lybarger v. State , 2 Wash. 552.....	74	Mathis v. State , 31 Fla. 311.....	536
Lyman v. Hale , 11 Conn. 177, 27 Am. Dec. 728.....	537, 838	Mathewson v. Perry , 37 Conn. 435, 9 Am. Rep. 359.....	680
Lynch v. Henry , 25 W. Va. 423, 424.....	585	Mauger v. Diok , 55 How. Pr. 133.....	49
v. Murphy , 119 Mo. 163.....	461	Maupin v. Evans , 47 Mo. 304.....	277
Lyng v. Michigan , 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143.....	208	Maurice v. Worden , 52 Md. 231.....	578
Lynn v. Turner , Corp. 38 Ind. 143.....	329	Maxon v. Lane , 102 Ind. 384.....	504
Lyons v. Martin , 3 Ad. & El. 512.....	505	Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co. 46 Mich. 278.....	568
Lytle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 84 Mich. 289.....	96	v. Haunibal & St. J. R. Co. 35 Mo. 95.....	33
	325, 326	May v. Borel , 12 Cal. 91.....
		Mayall v. Boston & M. Railroad , 19 N. H. 125, 49 Am. Dec. 149.....	561
		Maynard v. Moore , 78 N. C. 153.....	504
		Mechanics' & F. Bldg. & L. Asso. v. Dorsey , 131 S. C. 462.....	121
		Mechanics' Bank v. Schaumburg , 38 Mo. 223.....	43
		Medley, Ex parte , 184 U. S. 171, 33 L. ed. 640.....	838
		Meier v. Blume , 80 Mo. 184.....	47
		v. Thieman , 90 Mo. 433.....	49
		Memphis & L. R. Co. v. Berry , 112 U. S. 609, 23 L. ed. 837.....	197
		v. Dow , 120 U. S. 287, 30 L. ed. 505.....	239
		Mercer County v. Hackett (1863) 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 83, 17 L. ed. 543.....	108
		Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Goodman , 109 Pa. 422, 58 Am. Rep. 723.....	797
		of Kansas City v. Lovitt , 114 Mo. 519.....	44
		Savannah v. Guilmarin , 83 Ga. 797, 17 L. R. A. 322.....	96
		Meriwether v. Garrett , 102 U. S. 472, 26 L. ed. 197.....	71
		Merrifield v. Longmire , 66 Cal. 180.....	660
		Merriman v. Moore , 90 Pa. 78.....	553
		Mersey Docks & Harbor Board Trustees v. Gibbs , 11 H. L. Cas. 637.....	709
		Meaker v. Koch , 76 Ind. 68.....	510
		Mesmer v. Jenkins , 61 Cal. 151.....	818
		Metropolitan R. Co. v. Highland Street R. Co. 118 Mass. 230.....	373
		Metzgar v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 76 Iowa, 387.....	476
		Meyer v. Krohn , 114 Ill. 574.....	764
		Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Campau , 35 Mich. 468.....	239
		Middlefield v. Church Mills Knitting Co. 160 Mass. 267.....	605, 506
		Middlesex County Board of Chosen Freeholders v. State Bank at New Brunswick , 30 N. J. Eq. 311.....	249
		Milford v. Milford Water Co. 124 Pa. 610, 3 L. R. A. 122.....	194
		Miller v. Ammon , 145 U. S. 421, 36 L. ed. 759.....	225
		v. Anderson , 1 S. Dak. 539, 11 L. R. A. 317.....	284
		v. English , 21 N. J. L. 317.....	111
		v. Miller , 97 Mich. 151.....	327
		v. Milwaukee , 14 Wis. 700.....	408
		v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co. 57 Ind. 244.....	65
		Miller's Appeal , 10 W. N. C. 168.....	606
		Millet v. People , 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869.....	82, 269, 380
		Millon v. Salisbury , 18 Johns. 211.....	95
		Miner v. Olin , 159 Mass. 437.....	660, 670
		Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beekwith , 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 586.....	99
		Minnesota v. Barber , 136 U. S. 813, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185.....	575
		Minor v. Happersett , 38 U. S. 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627.....	84
		Mirande, Ex parte , 73 Cal. 365.....	611
		Misch v. Russell , 136 Ill. 22, 12 L. R. A. 125.....	383
		Missouri, K. & T. R. Co. v. Long , 27 Kan. 684.....	689
		Missouri P. R. Co. v. Moseley , 6 C. C. A. 641, 645, 57 Fed. Rep. 921.....	697
		v. Pierce , 33 Kan. 61, 64.....	699
M.
McAnally v. O'Neal , 55 Ala. 299.....	616
McAuley's Appeal , 77 Pa. 397.....	481
McAunich v. Mississippi & M. E. Co. 20 Iowa, 336.....	736
McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 38 S. C. 108, 13 L. R. A. 440.....	476
McCann v. Randall , 147 Mass. 81.....	277
McCauley v. Rogers , 104 Ill. 573.....	805
McClelland v. Bishop , 42 Ohio St. 113.....	104
McClenaghan v. Brock , 5 Rich. L. 17.....	730
McClure v. La Plata County Comrs. 19 Colo. 122.....	250
McClurg v. Kingsland , 42 U. S. 1 How. 206, 11 L. ed. 103.....	789
McConnel v. Reed , 5 Ill. 117, 38 Am. Dec. 124.....	37
McConnell v. Kitchens , 20 S. C. 430, 436, 439, 47 Am. Rep. 845.....	225
McCoy v. Southern P. Co. 84 Cal. 563.....	756
McCulloch v. Maryland , 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 423, 4 L. ed. 606.....	798
McDermald v. Russell , 41 Ill. 439.....	785
McDole v. Purdy , 23 Iowa. 273.....	271
McDonald v. Smith , 57 Vt. 503.....	706
McDowell v. Stewart , 33 Ill. 538.....	805
McElroy v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 4 Cush. 400, 50 Am. Dec. 794.....	299
McGavock v. Woodlief , 61 U. S. 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 384.....	223
McGee v. Consolidated Street R. Co. 102 Mich. 107, 26 L. R. A. 300.....	239
McGill v. Ware , 5 Ill. 21, 29.....	765
McGinnis v. Watson , 4 Pa. 9.....	481
McGoon v. Shirk , 54 Ill. 408, 5 Am. Rep. 122.....	593, 597, 599
McGrath v. Hamilton Sav. & Loan Asso. 44 Pa. 333.....	184
v. New York C. & H. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 469, 17 Am. Rep. 359.....	697
McIntyre v. Parks , 3 Met. 207.....	718
McKenzie v. McLeod , 10 Bing. 385.....	730
McLaughlin v. Citizens' Bldg. Loan & Sav. Asso. 62 Ind. 234.....	188
v. Cowley , 127 Mass. 516.....	154
v. Wheeler , 1 S. Dak. 497.....	223
McLeod v. Evans , 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287.....	261, 666
McNair v. People , 30 Ill. 441.....	62
McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237.....	90
MoVey v. Brendel , 144 Pa. 235, 13 L. R. A. 377.....	205
Madera Irrigation Dist. Bonds , 32 Cal. 309, 14 L. R. A. 755.....	387
Maher v. Chicago , 38 Ill. 273.....	403
v. Swift , 14 Nev. 324.....	781
Maine v. Cumston , 96 Mass. 317.....	504
20 L. R. A.

Mitchel v. Reynolds, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. 417.....	843	New York & H. R. Co. v. Morrisania Trustees, 7 Hun, 653.....	190
Mitchell v. Lyman, 77 Ill. 525.....	785	New York & N. R. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 554, 38 L. ed. 299.....	373
Mix v. Nettleton, 29 Ill. 245.....	600	v. Waterbury, 80 Conn. 1.....	373
Mobile v. Balava, 9 Port. (Ala.) 577, 38 Am. Dec. 325.....	540	New York & N. R. R. Co.'s Appeal from Railroad Comrs. 68 Conn. 527, 540.....	373
Mobile County v. Kimball, 102 U. S. 601, 26 L. ed. 238.....	473	New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Ketchum, 27 Conn. 170.....	66
Mobley v. Cureton, 6 S. C. N. S. 69.....	217	New York Firemen Ins. Co. v. Ely, 2 Cow, 673, 708.....	704
Monroe v. Douglass, 5 N. Y. 447.....	616	New York, L. R. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 80, 36 L. ed. 71.....	176
Montclair Twp. v. New York & G. L. R. Co. 45 N. J. Eq. 436.....	171	New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. ed. 739.....	126
Montgomery v. McGee, 7 Humph. 234.....	169	New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New Britain, 49 Conn. 40.....	198
v. Pickering, 116 Mass. 227.....	861	Nichols & S. Co. v. Dedrick (Minn.) 63 N. W. Rep. 1110.....	614
Moor v. Folsom, 14 Minn. 340 (Gil. 260) 100 Am. Dec. 227.....	614-616	Niemeyer v. Wright, 75 Va. 239, 40 Am. Rep. 720.....	226
Moore v. Hunter, 6 Ill. 517.....	785	Nitro-Glycerine Case, 32 U. S. 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. ed. 206.....	717
v. Mandelbaum, 8 Mich. 433.....	122	Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 53 Conn. 461.....	302
v. Thorp, 16 R. I. 655, 7 L. R. A. 731.....	461	Nolan v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 23 Mo. App. 855.....	756
v. Walla Walla, 60 Fed. Rep. 361.....	530	Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237.....	250, 261, 606
v. Williamson, 10 Rich. Eq. 323, 73 Am. Dec. 93.....	461	Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 499, 56 Am. Rep. 643.....	54
Mordecai v. Jacobl, 12 Rich. L. 547, 548.....	219, 221	Nordleet v. Cromwell, 64 N. C. 1.....	536
Moreau v. Swift, 15 Nev. 215.....	731	Norris v. Langley, 19 N. H. 429.....	536
Morgan v. Kendall, 124 Ind. 400, 9 L. R. A. 445.....	291	v. State, 25 Ohio St. 217, 18 Am. Rep. 291.....	536
v. Mason, 20 Ohio, 402, 55 Am. Dec. 464.....	55	North American Bldg. Asso. v. Sutton, 35 Pa. 463, 73 Am. Dec. 549.....	124
Morgan's L. & T. R. & S. Co. v. Louisville Board of Health, 115 U. S. 455, 30 L. ed. 297.....	473	Northampton's Petition, 12, 153 Mass. 290, 301.....	137
Morrison v. Marquardt, 24 Iowa, 35, 54, 53 Am. Dec. 444.....	559-591	North Chicago Street R. Co. v. Cotton, 140 Ill. 436.....	486
Morrow v. Rainey, 53 Ill. 357.....	598	Northern Traction Co. of Ohio v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336.....	90
v. Weed, 4 Iowa, 77, 60 Am. Dec. 122.....	443	Norton v. Peck, 3 Wis. 714.....	364
Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 31 Mich. 423.....	326	v. Pettibone, 7 Conn. 323, 19 Am. Dec. 116.....	568
Moseby v. Williamson, 5 Heisk. 278.....	168	Norwich v. Story, 25 Conn. 47.....	374
Moseby v. Norman, 74 Ala. 423.....	706
Moses v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. 31 Ill. 533.....	422
Moulton v. Scarborough, 71 Me. 307, 30 Am. Rep. 308.....	709
Mount Pleasant v. Clutch, 6 Iowa, 543.....	735
Mowbray v. Mowbray, 64 Ill. 353.....	630
Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 247, 6 Am. Dec. 63.....	863
Muddell Min. Co., Limited v. Watrous, 9 C. C. A. 415, 61 Fed. Rep. 163.....	196
Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 305, 34, 575.....	724
Mulcairne v. Jancerville, 67 Wis. 24.....	724
Mullen v. St. John, 57 N. Y. 537, 15 Am. Rep. 580.....	494, 725
v. Stricker, 19 Ohio St. 135, 2 Am. Rep. 379.....	590
Muller v. Buyok, 13 Mont. 354.....	652
Mullikin v. Bloomington, 73 Ind. 161.....	448
Mumford v. Brown, 8 Cow. 475, 16 Am. Dec. 440.....	460
Munhall v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 93 Pa. 150.....	423
Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77.....	601
Munro v. Collins, 35 Mo. 33.....	402
Munson v. Ensor, 94 Mo. 504.....	45
Murdoch v. Boston & A. R. Co. 137 Mass. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 307.....	176
Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. 563, 1 L. ed. 247.....	440
Mutual L. Ins. Co. of New York v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997.....	149
Myers v. Gemmel, 10 Barb. 537.....	500
v. Hewitt, 16 Ohio, 499.....	442
v. Stafford, 114 N. C. 234.....	261
Mynning v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 59 Mich. 257.....	698
Myrick v. Hasey, 27 Me. 9, 46 Am. Dec. 563.....	619
N.
Nagle v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 33 Pa. 35, 39, 33 Am. Rep. 413.....	761
Nashville v. Towns, 5 Sneed, 136.....	419
Nashville, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 33 L. ed. 352, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 238.....	473
Natchez, J. & C. R. Co. v. Cook, 63 Miss. 38.....	680
National Exch. Bank v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 375, 5 Am. Rep. 532.....	104
National L. Ins. Co. of United States v. Minoh, 53 N. Y. 145.....	44
Neal v. Wilcox, 49 N. C. 143, 67 Am. Dec. 266.....	97
Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith, 54.....	96
Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 715.....	80
Nelson v. Clay, 7 J. J. Marsh. 133, 23 Am. Dec. 387.....	460
v. Dunn, 15 Ala. 501.....	297
Nesbitt v. Chisholm, 16 Nev. 40.....	731
Newell v. National Bank, 12 Bush, 57.....	759
New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young, 81 Iowa, 732, 10 L. R. A. 473.....	232-236
Newman v. Sylvester, 42 Ind. 106.....	404
Newton v. Atchison, 31 Kan. 151, 47 Am. Rep. 493.....	611
v. Cooke, 10 Ark. 169.....	616
New York v. Minn, 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 103, 9 L. ed. 643, 13 Curt. Dec. 337.....	473
O.
Oates v. First Nat. Bank, 100 U. S. 239, 249, 250, 25 L. ed. 580, 584, 585.....	367
O'Bannon v. Roberts, 2 Dana, 54.....	458
O'Donnell v. Providence & W. R. Co. 6 R. I. 211, 216.....	609
v. Sweeney, 5 Ala. 463, 39 Am. Dec. 383.....	224
O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477.....	481
Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collard, 73 Ind. 293, 38 Am. Rep. 134.....	109
v. Hecht, 115 Ind. 443.....	291
v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 363, 74 Am. Dec. 259.....	680
v. Trowbridge, 126 Ind. 391.....	350
Oil Creek & A. R. R. Co. v. Keighron, 74 Pa. 320.....	380
Oleott v. Tioga R. Co. 20 N. Y. 210, 75 Am. Dec. 363.....	277
Oliver v. Platt, 44 U. S. 8 How. 333, 11 L. ed. 623.....	36
v. Worcester, 102 Mass. 499, 3 Am. Rep. 436.....	709
O'Neill v. East Windsor, 63 Conn. 154.....	303
Osborne v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 147 U. S. 243, 37 L. ed. 155.....	91
Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U. S. 274, 25 L. ed. 545.....	193
Osterberg v. Union Trust Co. of New York, 93 U. S. 424, 23 L. ed. 964.....	511
Oury v. Goodwin (Ariz.) 26 Pac. Rep. 376.....	367
Overby v. Fayetteville Bldg. & L. Asso. 31 N. C. 56.....	124
Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 243.....	143
P.
Pacific Junction v. Dyer, 64 Iowa, 38.....	736, 736
Page v. Cole, 120 Mass. 37.....	221
Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 314.....	275-277
Palmer v. Way, 6 Colo. 106.....	611
v. Wetmore, 2 Sandf. 316.....	590
Palmer v. Manhattan R. Co. 133 N. Y. 261, 16 L. R. A. 136.....	467
Panama & S. P. Teleg. Co. v. India Rubber Gutta Percha & Teleg. Works Co. L. R. 10 Ch. 523.....	123
Pancoast v. Addison, 1 Harr. & J. 350, 2 Am. Dec. 520.....	273
Parish v. Whitney, 3 Gray, 516.....	504
Parker v. Catholic Bishop of Chicago, 143 Ill. 158.....	492, 570
v. Cousins, 2 Gratt. 373, 44 Am. Dec. 388.....	764
v. Foote, 19 Wend. 315.....	590
20 L. R. A.

Rhines v. Phelps, 8 Ill. 455	805	Sangamon County Supra. v. Springfield, 68 Ill. 66	439
Rhodes, Ex parte , 15 Ves. Jr. 541	706	San José v. San José & S. C. R. Co. 53 Cal. 475	631
Rhodes v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. 84 Ga. 320	781	San Luis Land, C. & I. Co. v. Kenilworth Canal Co. 3 Colo. App. 244	688
Rice v. Coolidge, 121 Mass. 368, 23 Am. Rep. 379	154	Sather v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 40 Minn. 91	699
v. Walker, 44 Iowa, 458	422	Sauer v. Nevada, 14 Colo. 54	503
Richards v. Wapello County, 48 Iowa, 510	286	Savage v. Mason, 3 Cush. 500	250
v. Warring, 1 Keyes. 576	614	Savannah v. Jesup, 108 U. S. 563, 27 L. ed. 378	611
Richardson v. Green, 133 U. S. 30, 33 L. ed. 516	268	Sawyer v. Alton, 4 Ill. 129	611
v. Tobey, 121 Mass. 457, 23 Am. Rep. 283	508	Saxton v. St. Joseph, 60 Mo. 153	406
Richmond v. Dubuque & S. C. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 191	753	Scanlan v. Childs, 63 Wis. 663	510
Richter v. Harper, 95 Mich. 221	289	Schaeffer v. Fithian, 17 Ind. 463	687
Ricker v. American Loan & T. Co. 140 Mass. 346	868	Schieffelin v. Stewart, 1 Johns. Ch. 630, 7 Am. Dec. 507	660, 451
Riddle v. Proprietor of Locks & Canals, 7 Mass. 169, 5 Am. Dec. 35	868	Schlichter v. Keiter, 156 Pa. 119, 23 L. R. A. 161	451
Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 503, 5 L. R. A. 340	149	Schmidt v. Currie, 53 Miss. 507, 30 Am. Rep. 639	680
Riker v. Sprague Mfg. Co. 14 R. L. 402, 51 Am. Rep. 418	104	Schmidt v. Prell, 24 Wis. 454	281
Riley v. Vaughan, 116 Mo. 176	883	Schofield v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 615, 19 L. ed. 224	697
Rindard v. Nordyke, 78 Ind. 130	511	Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Wis. 616, 58 Am. Rep. 681	140
Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, 29 L. R. A. 79	259	Schwarz v. Stein, 29 Md. 112	371
Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 180 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 684	587, 588	Schwoerer v. Boylston Market Asso. 99 Mass. 285, 287, 288	504
Roberts v. Yarboro, 41 Tex. 450	859	Scofield v. Council Bluffs, 65 Iowa, 686	458
Robertson v. American Homestead Asso. 66 Am. Dec. 145, 150, 153, note 124, 135, 184	566	Scott v. London & St. K. Docks Co. 3 Hurst. & C. 553	734
v. Burrell, 40 Ind. 328	590	Scudder v. Trenton Delaware Falls Co. 1 N. J. Eq. 694, 23 Am. Dec. 756	687
Robeson v. Pittenger, 2 N. J. Eq. 57, 32 Am. Dec. 412	611	Seaborn v. Henry, 30 Ark. 469	616
Robinson, Ex parte , 12 Nev. 208, 28 Am. Rep. 794	614	Seaman v. Smith, 24 Ill. 321	540
v. Bartlett, 11 Minn. 410 (Gil. 302)	620	Seaver v. Adams, 65 N. H. 142	182
v. Lair, 31 Iowa, 9	102	Seay v. Bank of Rome, 66 Ga. 615	243
v. Post (note) 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 550, 570, 600	130	Seeley v. Bishop, 19 Conn. 128	586
v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 307	838	v. Fisher, 11 Sim. 581	60
v. State, 84 Ind. 452	475	Seger's Sons v. Thomas Bros. 107 Mo. 635	687
Robison v. Miner, 68 Mich. 549	65	Sego v. Stoddard, 136 Ind. 297, 22 L. R. A. 468	689
Rockford, R. L. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sage, 65 Ill. 323, 15 Am. Rep. 587	698	Sell v. Rietz & Bros. Lumber Co. 70 Mich. 479	325
Rodrian v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 126 N. Y. 523	116	Sellers v. Phoenix Iron Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 20	60
Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 476	133	Sergeant v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. 340, 15 Pa. 343	108
v. Harro, 92 Tenn. 85	108	Sexton v. Anderson (1888) 95 Mo. 973, 380	688, 687, 695
v. Leyden, 127 Ind. 52, 53	699	Shadock v. Alpine Pl. Road Co. 79 Mich. 7	200, 202
Robbuck v. Pacific R. Co. 43 Mo. 187	701, 702	Shakespeare v. Smith, 77 Cal. 638	464
Boe v. Miles, 4 Maule & S. 101	723	Shamp v. Meyer, 39 Neb. 223	853
v. Stephens & C. Transp. Co. 11 Fed. Rep. 453	481	Shapley v. Bellows, 4 N. H. 347	708
Boeh's Appeal, 69 Pa. 462, 8 Am. Rep. 275	476	Sharp v. Cropsey, 11 Barb. 224	680
Boss v. Boston & W. H. Co. 6 Allen, 87	810	Sharpe v. Hartman, 28 Or. 131	687, 688
v. Walker, 139 Pa. 42	325	Shaw v. Boston & A. R. Co. 159 Mass. 397	570
Boux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co. 35 Mich. 519, 13 L. R. A. 728	137	v. Hoffman, 21 Mich. 151	280
Bowland v. Old Dominion Bldg. & Loan Asso. 115 N. C. 825	137	Sheboygan Lumber Co. v. Delta Transp. Co. 190 Mich. 16	471-473, 475
Boxbury v. Boston & F. R. Corp. 6 Cush. 424	171	Shelfield v. Lovering, 12 Mass. 490	571
Ruffners v. Lewis, 7 Leigh. 720, 743, 30 Am. Dec. 513	460	Shelbyville R. Co. v. Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. 58 Ky. 541	659
Buggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. 234, 3 Am. Dec. 482	277	Shellenberger v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 631, 25 L. R. A. 564, 31 Neb. 61, 10 L. R. A. 510	149
Bushville v. Adams, 107 Ind. 475, 57 Am. Rep. 124	760	Shelley's Case, 1 Coke, 106	437
v. Rushville Natural Gas Co. 132 Ind. 576, 15 L. R. A. 321	400	Shelton v. Mobile, 30 Ala. 540, 68 Am. Dec. 148	612
Russell v. McDowell, 83 Cal. 70	677	Shepard v. New Haven & Northampton Co. 46 Conn. 54	300
Rust v. Rust, 17 W. Va. 901	455	Sherlock v. Alling, 44 Ind. 169	110
Rutherglen v. Wolf, 1 Hughes, C. C. 78	441	98 U. S. 99, 23 L. ed. 819	472
Rutledge v. Crawford, 91 Cal. 523, 13 L. R. A. 761	678	Sherrill v. Hopkins, 1 Cow. 108	616
Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 35	323-325	Sherwood v. Barlow, 19 Conn. 476	587
		v. Milford State Bank, 94 Mich. 78	666
		Shields v. Thomas, 71 Miss. 260	666
		Shippey v. Eastwood, 9 Ala. 290	225
		Shoecraft v. Bailey, 25 Iowa, 558	97
		Shoemaker v. Harrisburg, 122 Pa. 286	402
		Shumway v. Walworth & N. Mfg. Co. 98 Mich. 411	323-325
		Sice v. Cunningham, 1 Cow. 397	617
		Siegel v. Chidsey, 28 Pa. 279, 70 Am. Dec. 121	602, 603, 605
		Sigerson v. Mathews, 61 U. S. 20 How. 493, 15 L. ed. 989	811
		Silver v. Barnes, 6 Bing. N. C. 150	132
		Simmons v. Jenkins, 75 Ill. 479	805
		Simpson v. Lamb, 40 Eng. L. & Eq. 59	705
		Singer Mfg. Co. v. Domestic Sewing-Mach. Co. 49 Ga. 17, 15 Am. Rep. 674	69
		Sipe v. Murphy, 49 Ohio St. 536, 17 L. R. A. 184	732
		Skinner v. Henderson, 26 Fla. 121, 8 L. R. A. 55	419, 420
		Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. 352	250, 260, 267
		Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394	84, 418
		Slavens v. John R. Cook Drug Co. (Mo.) 30 S. W. Rep. 1025	833
		Slaymaker v. Phillips (Wyo.) 40 Pac. Rep. 971	699
		Slight v. Kane, 1 Johns. Cas. 76	277
		Slide & Spur Gold Mines v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 509, 38 L. ed. 802	371

S.

St. Clair County v. Livingston, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 46, 23 L. ed. 59	54, 55
St. Joseph v. Levin (Mo.) 31 S. W. Rep. 101	260
St. Louis v. Bell Teleph. Co. 96 Mo. 623, 2 L. R. A. 278	400
v. Green, 7 Mo. App. 468	611
v. Sternberg, 60 Mo. 239	612
v. Western U. Teleph. Co. 148 U. S. 92, 37 L. ed. 380, 149 U. S. 465, 37 L. ed. 810	770
St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Payne, 29 Kan. 166	699
v. Williams, 53 Ark. 58	72
Sample v. Hale, 84 Neb. 220	853
San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Wilson (Tex.) 19 S. W. Rep. 910	390
Sanders v. Jacob, 30 Mo. App. 98	526
v. Utz, 16 Mo. App. 222	526
San Diego v. San Diego & L. A. R. Co. 44 Cal. 106	464
San Diego Water Co. v. San Diego Flume Co. 100 Cal. 43	842
Sands v. Manistee River Imp. Co. 123 U. S. 288, 31 L. ed. 149	472
39 L. R. A.	2

Sloan v. Biemiller, 84 Ohio St. 498.....	540	State v. Herrmann, 75 Mo. 340, 353.....	308, 359
v. Edwards, 61 Md. 98.....	291	v. Hocker, 35 Fla. 19.....	420
v. Sloan, 25 Fla. 53.....	68	v. Hope, 100 Mo. 347, 8 L. R. A. 608.....	43, 49
Sloane v. Shiffer, 156 Pa. 59-65.....	861	v. Hornbacher, 42 N. J. L. 685.....	124
Smith v. Agricultural Ins. Co. 118 N. Y. 526.....	708	v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 20.....	115
v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 475, 31 L. ed. 508, 511, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 804.....	472, 473	120 Ind. 298, 13 L. R. A. 79.....	118
v. Boston, 7 Cush. 254.....	570	v. Iowa Cent. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 720.....	171
v. Combs, 49 N. J. Eq. 420.....	666	v. Jacksonville Street R. Co. 29 Fla. 590.....	421
v. Gatewood, 8 S. C. N. S. 383.....	511	v. Jersey City, 53 N. J. L. 65.....	91
v. Martin, 17 Conn. 400.....	586	v. Kansas Cent. R. Co. 47 Kan. 497.....	445
v. Mawhood, 14 Mees. & W. 452.....	226	v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 546.....	117
v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 26 Minn. 419.....	697	v. Leffingwell, 54 Mo. 458.....	863
v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294.....	705	v. Leland, 83 Mo. 290.....	46
v. Parsons, 55 Minn. 520.....	769	v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 307, 21 L. R. A. 789.....	82, 83, 259, 300
v. Pinch, 80 Mich. 332.....	333	v. McPettridge, 84 Wis. 473, 20 L. R. A. 223.....	250
v. Read, 52 How. Pr. 14, 6 Daly, 88.....	95, 97	v. McMillan, 105 Mo. 153.....	699
v. Salomon, 7 Daly, 216.....	861	v. McMillen, 23 Neb. 385.....	705
v. Sorby, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 552.....	192	v. Manning, 14 Tex. 402.....	838
v. Stevens, 133 Ill. 183.....	785	v. Marion County Comrs. 27 Fla. 438.....	423
v. Townsend, 148 U. S. 490, 37 L. ed. 538.....	210	v. Miller, 6 Baxt. 513.....	781
v. Wilson, 3 Barn. & Ad. 728.....	222	v. Mississippi River Bridge Co. 109 Mo. 253.....	261
Smder v. St. Paul, 51 Minn. 496, 18 L. R. A. 151.....	60	v. Montgomery County Comrs. 26 Ind. 622.....	421
Snyder v. Fulton, 34 Md. 123, 6 Am. Rep. 314.....	172	v. Mooney, 74 N. C. 99, 21 Am. Rep. 437.....	251
Sohier v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 1, 19.....	510	v. Moore, 42 N. J. L. 208.....	838
Solomon v. Cartersville Comrs. 41 Ga. 157.....	60	v. Murray, 28 Wis. 93, 9 Am. Rep. 459.....	705
v. Lawson, 3 Q. B. 823.....	282	v. Newark, 27 N. J. L. 185.....	196
Son v. People, 12 Wend. 344.....	827	v. New Orleans, 34 La. Ann. 459.....	423
Sondheim v. Gilbert, 117 Ind. 71, 5 L. R. A. 432.....	390	v. Palmes, 23 Fla. 620.....	421
South & North Ala. R. Co. v. Morris, 65 Ala. 193.....	137	v. Parsons, 115 N. C. 730.....	261, 262
Southern Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Anniston Loan & T. Co. 101 Ala. 582.....	582	v. Peele, 121 Ind. 495.....	115
Southern Exp. Co. v. McVeigh, 20 Gratt. 264, 284.....	582	v. Pennington, 6 Lea. 508.....	63
South Omaha v. Taxpayers League, 48 Neb. 671.....	856	v. Platt, 24 N. J. L. 106, 120, 121.....	530
Sparkman v. Gove, 44 N. J. L. 252.....	504	v. Putnam County Comrs. 23 Fla. 632.....	419
Spaulding v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 90 Wis. 110, 121, 11 Am. Rep. 550.....	476, 726	v. Ray, 50 Iowa, 520.....	261
Spear v. Bratree, 24 Vt. 414, 418.....	580	v. Roe, 26 N. J. L. 215.....	746
v. Cummings, 23 Pick. 224, 34 Am. Dec. 53.....	46	v. Ryan, 13 Minn. 370 (Gil. 843).....	838
Speck v. Riggin, 40 Mo. 405.....	66	v. Sibley, 25 Minn. 387.....	711
Spicer v. Honker, 45 Mich. 630.....	861	v. Smith, 81 Iowa, 493.....	117
Springfield Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Hull, 25 L. R. A. 37, 62 Ohio St. 756.....	843	44 Ohio St. 248.....	63
Spring Valley Water Works v. San Francisco City & County, 82 Cal. 236, 6 L. R. A. 756.....	797	17 L. R. 371.....	838
Stacy v. Dane County Bank, 12 Wis. 620.....	448	v. Sorenson, 84 Wis. 27.....	373
Stafford County School Dist. No. 23 v. State, 29 Kan. 57.....	370	v. Stoll, 44 U. S. 17 Wall. 425, 436, 21 L. ed. 654, 655.....	561
Stamford v. Stamford Horse R. Co. 56 Conn. 381, 395, 1 L. R. A. 375.....	65	v. Swope, 7 Ind. 91.....	239
Stanton v. New York & E. R. Co. 59 Conn. 272.....	281	v. Tolle, 71 Mo. 645.....	208
State v. Acuff, 6 Mo. 55.....	858	v. Topeka, 31 Kan. 452.....	423
v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 113, 39 Am. Rep. 547.....	261	v. Varnardale, 42 N. J. L. 586.....	447
v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 24 Md. 84, 37 Am. Dec. 600.....	680	v. Warner, 4 Wash. 773, 17 L. R. A. 253.....	261
v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 228, 26 Am. Dec. 561.....	247	v. Warren, 32 N. C. 825.....	261
v. Beasley, 5 Mo. 91.....	558	v. Watson, 95 Mo. 411.....	746
v. Berdette, 73 Ind. 185, 38 Am. Rep. 117.....	92	v. Webb, 97 Ala. 111.....	838
v. Berlinsheimer, 62 Mo. App. 163.....	207	v. Welch, 65 Vt. 50.....	736
v. Black, 54 N. J. L. 443, 16 L. R. A. 769.....	609	State Center v. Barenstein, 66 Iowa, 249.....	197
v. Brin, 30 Minn. 622.....	211	State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 43 Mich. 224.....	17
v. Brown, 27 Vt. 619.....	62	Steele v. Sioux Valley Bank, 79 Iowa, 839, 7 L. R. A. 524.....	35
v. Burton, 113 N. C. 650, 662.....	261, 262	v. Southwick, 9 Johns. 214.....	60
v. Buttles, 3 Ohio St. 300, 322, 323.....	194	Steinweg v. Erie Railway, 43 N. Y. 126, 8 Am. Rep. 673.....	476
v. Capital City Water Co. (Ala.) 14 So. Rep. 632.....	749	Stephens v. Cady, 55 U. S. 14 How. 523, 14 L. ed. 523.....	789
v. Carter, 53 La. Ann. 1214.....	838	v. Southern P. Co. (Cal.) 20 L. R. A. 751 755.....	256
v. Clarke, 31 Nev. 570.....	705	Stephenson v. Hall, 14 Barb. 222.....	703
v. Columbia, 6 S. C. N. S. 1.....	218	Statson v. Chicago & E. R. Co. 75 Ill. 74.....	492
v. Cooley (Minn.) 90 N. W. Rep. 388.....	781	Stevens v. Gladding, 58 U. S. 17 How. 447, 15 L. ed. 155.....	789
v. Covington, 29 Ohio St. 102.....	117	v. Woodward, 50 L. J. C. P. 231.....	98
v. Curtis, 20 N. C. 222.....	577	v. Wyatt, 16 B. Mon. 542.....	704
v. Denny, 118 Ind. 382, 449, 4 L. R. A. 79, 65.....	115, 117	Stewart v. Brooklyn & C. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 598, 43 Am. Rep. 185.....	457
v. Dillon, 32 Fla. 545, 22 L. R. A. 124.....	669	v. Johnson, 30 Ohio St. 24.....	442
v. Fire Creek Coal & Coke Co. 33 W. Va. 188, 6 L. R. A. 359.....	390	Stier v. Harma, 154 Ill. 478.....	806
v. Gibbs, 56 Mo. 133.....	207	Stier v. Caterline, 89 Mich. 239.....	333
v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621.....	82, 258, 259	Stoek's Case, 2 Leach. 1015.....	577
v. Gorby, 122 Ind. 17.....	115	Stoekle v. Salsbee, 41 Mich. 615.....	443
v. Goss, 59 Vt. 236, 59 Am. Rep. 706.....	717	Stockton v. Powell, 29 Fla. 1, 15 L. R. A. 42, 419, 420.....	510
v. Green, 36 Fla. 53.....	421	Stokes v. State, 46 Ga. 412, 12 Am. Rep. 588.....	510
v. Griffin, 43 Tex. 588.....	62	Stoller v. Coates, 88 Mo. 514.....	666
v. Guernsey, 48 N. Y. 106.....	490	Stone v. Yeovil, L. R. 1 C. P. Div. 701.....	853
v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341 (Gil. 315).....	338	Stoner v. Weiser, 24 Iowa, 434.....	192
v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167.....	207	Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 436, 4 Am. Dec. 155.....	540
v. Harris, 3 Ark. 570, 36 Am. Dec. 460.....	111	Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 170, 43 Am. Rep. 146.....	90-93
v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 538.....	171	Stover v. Jack, 60 Pa. 339, 100 Am. Dec. 566.....	540
v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 403.....	218	Stratton v. Husey, 62 Me. 288.....	706
v. Herod, 29 Iowa, 123.....	735, 736	Straus v. Ross, 25 Ind. 300.....	538
		Street v. Augusta Ins. & Bkg. Co. 12 Rich. L. 13, 75 Am. Dec. 714.....	780
		Strithorst v. Graeme, 2 W. B. 723.....	276
		Strohen v. Franklin Sav. Fund & Loan Asso. 115 Pa. 273.....	123, 194
		Strosser v. Fort Wayne, 100 Ind. 443.....	443
		Strup v. Edens, 22 Wis. 432.....	496
		Suffolk Bank v. Worcester Bank, 5 Pick. 106.....	818

Sumner v. McKee, 86 Ill. 127
 Susquehanna Canal Co. v. Bonham, 9 Watts &
 S. 27, 42 Am. Dec. 315
 Sutherland v. Ingalls, 63 Mich. 320
 Sutherland v. Therkelson, 38 N. J. Eq. 318
 Sutter v. First Reformed Dutch Church Trusttees, 42 Pa. 503
 Swan v. Scott, 11 Serg. & R. 155
 Swann v. Swann, 21 Fed. Rep. 299
 Swarts v. Swartz, 4 Watts, 77
 Swartz v. Leist, 13 Ohio St. 419
 Sycamore Marsh Harvester Mfg. Co. v. Sturm, 13 Neb. 219

T.

Taft v. Mills, 5 R. I. 303
 Taggart v. Newport Street R. Co. 16 R. I. 699, 7
 L. R. A. 205
 Taussig v. Hart, 63 N. Y. 425
 Taylor v. Merchants' F. Ins. Co. of Baltimore,
 60 U. S. 9 How. 390, 13 L. ed. 187
 Taylor v. Badoux, 92 Tenn. 249
 v. Bleakley (Kan.) 23 L. R. A. 638
 v. Popham, 15 Ves. Jr. 79
 v. State, 31 Ala. 383
 Tennessee Coal & R. Co. v. Reddy, 85 Tenn. 400
 Tenney v. Prince, 4 Pick. 385, 16 Am. Dec. 347
 Terre Haute v. Beach, 96 Ind. 145
 Texas v. R. Co. v. Boesdale Street R. Co. 64
 Tex. 50, 53 Am. Rep. 739
 Thiel College v. Mercer County, 101 Pa. 530
 Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Iowa. 639
 Third Nat. Bank v. Vicksburg Bank, 61 Miss.
 112, 48 Am. Rep. 73
 Tholen v. Duffy, 7 Kan. 408
 Thomas v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 82 Mo. 638
 v. Western U. Telegraph Co. 100 Mass. 156
 Thompson v. Corrie, 57 Md. 200
 v. Gillison, 23 S. C. 542
 Thompson's Appeal, 22 Pa. 16
 Thurber v. Harlem Bridge, M. & F. R. Co. 60
 N. Y. 326
 Thurman v. State, 54 Ark. 120
 Thurston v. Thurston (Minn.) 59 N. W. Rep.
 1017
 Tiffany v. Stewart, 60 Iowa. 207
 Tillet v. Lynchburg & D. R. Co. 115 N. C. 606
 Tindal v. Brown, 1 T. R. 167
 Toledo, P. & W. R. Co. v. Pindar, 63 Ill. 447, 5
 Am. Rep. 57
 Toledo Tie & Lumber Co. v. Thomas, 38 W. Va.
 568
 Tompkins v. Saltmarsh, 14 Serg. & R. 275
 Towle v. American Bldg. Loan & Invest. Soc.
 61 Fed. Rep. 446
 Towns v. Mead, 16 C. B. 123
 Townsend v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 56
 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419
 Township 36, Range 2 East, Board of Education
 v. Boyd, 58 Mo. 276
 Tracy v. Smith, 2 Lev. 173
 Trebilcock v. Wilson, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 687, 20
 L. ed. 460
 Trentman v. Swartzell, 85 Ind. 443
 Trenton Bkg. Co. v. Woodruff, 2 N. J. Eq. 117
 Trumble v. Trumble, 37 Neb. 340
 Tuckahoe Canal Co. v. Tuckahoe & J. R. R. Co.
 11 Leigh, 76, 36 Am. Dec. 374
 Tuesley v. Robinson, 103 Mass. 553, 4 Am. Rep.
 575
 Tuigg v. Treacy, 104 Pa. 493
 Tulik v. Moxhay, 2 Phil. Ch. 774
 Turley v. Taylor, 3 Lea, 173
 Turner v. Thompson, 58 Ga. 238, 24 Am. Rep.
 497
 Tusculum Scientific & Art. Asso. v. State, 58
 Ala. 54
 Tuttle v. Bartholomew, 12 Met. 432
 Twombly v. Central Park, N. & E. R. Co. 69 N.
 Y. 158, 25 Am. Rep. 162
 Tayne's Case, 3 Coke, 60
 Tyer, Petitioner, Ex parte, 149 U. S. 164, 37 L.
 ed. 689
 Tyson v. Booth, 109 Mass. 253
 v. Weber, 51 Ala. 470

U.

Ulen v. Kittredge, 7 Mass. 233
 Umatilla Irrigation Co. v. Barnhart, 23 Or. 389
 Underhill v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. 365,
 1 L. ed. 407
 Unger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 61 N. Y. 497
 39 L. R. A.

Union Ins. Co. v. Hoge, 62 U. S. 21 How. 53, 16
 L. ed. 61
 Union Nat. Bank v. Goetz, 138 Ill. 127
 Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Rusk, 12 Colo. 394, 3 L.
 R. A. 350
 v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. ed. 423
 United States v. Appleton, 1 Sumn. 492-503
 v. Arredondo, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 601, 3 L. ed.
 547
 v. Bennett, 16 Blatchf. 388
 v. Dickson, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 165, 10 L. ed.
 698
 v. Gilmore, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 330, 19 L. ed.
 396
 v. Hall, 2 Wash. C. C. 333, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 171, 3 L. ed. 189
 v. James, 60 Fed. Rep. 267, 26 L. R. A.
 418
 v. Lytle, 5 McLean, 9
 v. Morris, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 464, 10 L. ed. 543
 v. Stern, 6 Blatchf. 512
 v. Union Pac. R. Co. 91 U. S. 72, 23 L. ed.
 224
 United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Atlantic &
 G. W. R. Co. 34 Ohio St. 450-460, 33
 Am. Rep. 380
 Universal Church v. Columbia Twp. Section
 29, Trustees, 5 Ohio, 443, 27 Am. Dec.
 267
 University of Alabama Trustees v. Moody, 63
 Ala. 339
 Upham v. Prince, 12 Mass. 14
 Utica Ins. Co. v. Bloodgood, 4 Wend. 653

V.

Vahlberg v. Keaton, 51 Ark. 639, 541, 4 L. R. A.
 462
 Vallett v. Parker, 6 Wend. 615
 Vanatta v. Delaware & B. R. Co. 88 N. J.
 L. 223
 Van Baalen v. People, 40 Mich. 258
 Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush, 41, 96 Am.
 Dec. 327
 Vanderkemp v. Shelton, 11 Paige, 23, 5 L. ed. 45
 Van Deventer v. Long Island City, 139 N. Y.
 183, 138
 Vandine, Petitioner, 6 Pick. 187, 17 Am. Dec.
 361
 Van Doran v. Marden, 48 Iowa, 188
 Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492
 Van Hoesen v. Van Alstyne, 3 Wend. 75
 Van Hook v. Selma, 70 Ala. 361, 45 Am. Rep. 86
 Van Husan v. Heames, 96 Mich. 504
 Vanzant v. Arnold, 61 Ga. 210
 v. Waddell, 2 Yerg. 230
 Vassar v. Camp, 11 N. Y. 441
 Vaughn v. Schnaible, 10 Mont. 186, 10 L. R. A. 411
 v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 415, 417, 25 Mo. 513, 69 Am.
 Dec. 471
 Venables v. Baring Bros. & Co. (1892) 3 Ch.
 527
 Vinton v. Baldwin, 32 Ind. 102, 104, 45 Am. Rep.
 447, 443
 Volkmar v. Manhattan R. Co. 134 N. Y. 418, 723
 Voss v. Union School Dist. No. 11, 18 Kan. 467
 Vote Marks, Re, 17 R. I. 312

W.

Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L.
 ed. 805
 Waddell v. Simson, 112 Pa. 507
 Waggoner-Gates Mill Co. v. Ziegler-Zaiss
 Commission Co. (Mo.) 31 S. W. Rep. 23
 Waite's Case, 99 N. Y. 443
 Walcott v. People, 17 Mich. 68
 Wales v. Muscine, 4 Iowa, 394
 Walker v. Ohio Board of Public Works, 16
 Ohio, 543
 v. Osgood, 93 Am. Dec. 177, note
 v. Schreiber, 47 Iowa, 529
 Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 10 Am. Rep. 407
 v. Walker, 99 Am. Dec. 236
 Wallwork v. Derby, 40 Ill. 327
 Wally v. Kennedy, 2 Yerg. 554, 24 Am. Dec. 511
 Walston v. Conn. 16 B. Mon. 16, 40
 Wangerden v. Aspell, 47 Ohio St. 250, 261
 Ward v. Ward, 21 W. Va. 292
 Ware v. Hayward Rubber Co. 3 Allen, 64, 55, 319, Warren v. Farmer, 100 Ind. 503
 v. Warren, 59 Mich. 123, 14 L. R. A. 545
 Washington & G. H. Co. v. Gladmon, 39 U. S.
 15 Wall. 403, 21 L. ed. 116

Waters v. Merchants' Louisville Ins. Co. 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 213, 9 L. ed. 691	755	Wilder v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 70 Mich. 332.	289
Watkins v. Workmen's Bldg. & Loan Assn. 97 Pa. 511	187	Willey v. Crane, 69 Mich. 17	327
Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508.	54, 55	Wilkins v. State, 118 Ind. 514, 516.	120
v. San Francisco & H. B. R. Co. 50 Cal. 523	599	Wilkinson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Works, 73 Mich. 405.	220
Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 314, 26 L. ed. 565.	789	Will County Suprs. v. People, 110 Ill. 511	421
Weber v. Fickey, 47 Md. 196, 52 Md. 500.	238	Willenborg v. Murphy, 36 Ill. 344	735
Webster v. Cobb, 17 Ill. 459	614	William Branfoot, The, 48 Fed. Rep. 914	495
v. Reid, 52 U. S. 11 How. 437, 13 L. ed. 761	784	William Deering & Co. v. Washburn, 141 Ill. 153	805
Weeks v. Millwaukee, 10 Wis. 186, 264.	198, 529	Williams, Ex parte , 26 Fla. 310	261
v. Napier, 33 Ala. 568.	746	Williams v. City Electric Street R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 556	509
Weener v. Brayton, 152 Mass. 101, 3 L. R. A. 640	205	v. Waldo, 4 Ill. 234	650
Welch v. Ware, 22 Mich. 77	291	v. Western U. Tele. Co. 93 N. Y. 162	17
Wells v. Martin, 1 Ohio St. 386	759	v. Williams, 63 Wis. 58, 58 Am. Rep. 253	781
Welton v. Dickson, 38 Neb. 797, 23 L. R. A. 496	858	Willingham v. Hardin, 75 Mo. 429	37, 45
v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 275, 278, 23 L. ed. 847, 348	535, 537	Willits v. Waite, 25 N. Y. 586	168
Westbrook v. Miller, 56 Mich. 148	509, 510	Wilson v. Chilcott, 12 Colo. 600	611
Western U. Tele. Co. v. Tyler, 90 Va. 297, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 481	473	v. Hefflin, 81 Ind. 36	441
Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 621, 32 Am. Rep. 397	151, 152	v. Kings County Elev. R. Co. 114 N. Y. 488	65
Westmoreland v. Bragg, 2 Hill. L. pt. 2, p. 414	225	v. Wheeler, 55 Vt. 446, 458, 454	530
Wetmore v. Scovell, 3 Edw. Ch. 523, 6 L. ed. 748	69	Winebrenner v. Colder, 43 Pa. 244	431
v. State, 55 Ala. 196	510	Winnipeg Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Gilford, 64 N. H. 337, 348	58
Whitaker v. Morrison, 1 Fla. 29, 44 Am. Dec. 627	617, 656	Winslow v. Fletcher, 55 Conn. 394, 55 Am. Rep. 122	481
White, Re, 33 Neb. 813	591	Wiser v. Chesley, 53 Mo. 547	95
White v. Bradley, 66 Me. 254	104	Woburn v. Henshaw, 101 Mass. 193, 3 Am. Rep. 333	504
v. Miller, 52 Minn. 367	154	Wodock v. Robinson, 148 Pa. 508	238
v. Nicholls, 44 U. S. 3 How. 266, 11 L. ed. 591	403	Wolford v. Morgenthal, 91 Pa. 80	809
v. Snell, 5 Pick. 425	104	Wood v. Detroit City Street R. Co. 52 Mich. 402, 50 Am. Rep. 239	229
v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 62 U. S. 21 How. 575, 16 L. ed. 221	277, 278	v. Guarantee Trust & Safe Deposit Co. 128 U. S. 421, 32 L. ed. 473	273
v. White, 1 Md. Ch. 57	214	Woodruff v. Catlin, 54 Conn. 277, 295	372
Whiteman v. Payette Fuel Gas Co. 189 Pa. 492	707	v. Saul, 70 Ga. 271	616
Whitmarsh v. Conway F. Ins. Co. 16 Gray, 359, 77 Am. Dec. 414	154	Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala. 150	225
Whitney v. Allen, 62 Ill. 472	261	Woodworth v. Raymond, 61 Conn. 70	598
v. State, 3 Lea, 247	504	Woolfolk v. Graniteville Mfg. Co. 22 S. C. 332	176
v. Union R. Co. 11 Gray, 359, 71 Am. Dec. 715	508	Worcester v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 109 Mass. 103	771
v. Wheeler Cotton Mills, 151 Mass. 396, 7 L. R. A. 618	65	Worthe v. Griffith, 59 Ark. 562	834
v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. ed. 1050	108	Wright, Re, 3 Wyo. 478, 13 L. R. A. 748	837
Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 126 N. Y. 544	732	Wright v. Forrestal, 65 Wis. 341	510
Whittam v. Zaborik (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 57, 670, 676, 731	502	Wurts v. Hoagland, 114 U. S. 606, 29 L. ed. 229	837
Whittenton Mills v. Upton, 10 Gray, 582	484	Wynehamer v. People, 18 N. Y. 373	259
Wickersham v. Crittenden, 92 Cal. 29	581
Wiggins v. Kelzer, 6 Ind. 252	87
Wilcox v. People, 90 Ill. 188	45, 48
v. Todd, 64 Mo. 888, 390.	222
v. Wood, 9 Wend. 343	689
Wild v. Erath, 27 La. Ann. 171

Y.

Yates v. Milwaukee, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984	54
Yeoman v. Lasley, 40 Ohio St. 190	192
Yesler v. Seattle, 1 Wash. 308	518, 520
Young v. Branstord, 12 Lea, 222	725
v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176, 193	734
v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372	192

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS-CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

Statutes.

9 Hen. III. stat. 1, § 18. Process against king's debtor.	246
26 Edw. III. chap. 19. Process against king's debtor.	246
33 Hen. VIII. chap. 30. Process against king's debtor.	246
37 Hen. VIII. chap. 9. Usury	245
12 Eliz. chap. 8. Usury	244
43 Eliz. chap. 6, § 2. For avoiding trifling suits	214
21 Jac. I. chap. 16. Limitation of actions.	274
3 & 4 Anne. Account between joint tenants.	458
4 Anne. chap. 18, § 19. Limitation of actions.	274
9 Anne. chap. 14, § 1. Gaming securities.	829
12 Anne. Usury	764
5 & 6 Wm. IV. chap. 41, § 1. Gaming securities	829

United States.

Constitution.

Art. 1, § 8, cl. 3. Commerce
cl. 7. Postoffices and post-roads	328
cl. 8. Writings and inventions	788
§ 10. Ex post facto law	836
Amend. 4. Criminal procedure	820
5. Self-crimination	820
Due process of law	258
14, § 1. Due process of law, etc.	84, 98, 258, 412, 782

29 L. R. A.

Ordinances.

1797, July 13. Northwest territory	546
Statutes.
1792. Legal tender	598
1863, Feb. 25. Legal tender	598
July 11. Legal tender	598
1874. Fraud on revenue laws	820

Alabama.

Code, 1852.

§ 2160. Commencement of action	745
Revised Code.
§ 2558. Commencement of action	745
Code, 1876.
§ 2924. Commencement of action	745
Code, 1886.
§ 1556. Powers of building associations	125
2651. Commencement of action	745
2652. Issuance of summons	745
3167. Dissolution of corporation	744

Arkansas.

Constitution.

Art. 19, § 13. Usury	798
----------------------	-----

Statutes.		Practice Act.
1875, Feb. 8. Interest in advance.....	768	PP. 57-59. Forms for action against carriers..	208
1887, No. 84. Foreign insurance companies....	718	Dakota.
Mansfield's Digest.		Compiled Statutes, 1887.
§ 3832. Tax on foreign corporation.....	718	§ 1261. Public highways.....	698
§ 3833. Duty of foreign insurance company.....	718	1262. Road properly laid out.....	698
§ 3834. Duty of foreign insurance company.....	718	1264. Care of roads.....	698
Sandels & Hill's Digest.		1266. Repair of roads.....	698
§ 4187-39. Foreign insurance companies.....	718	1271. Road tax.....	698
California.		1272. Assessment of tax.....	698
Constitution.		1277. Road overseers.....	698
Art. 1, § 11. Uniform laws.....	828	3014. Signs at railroad crossings.....	698
§ 13. Self-crimination.....	828	3016. Signals at crossings.....	698
§ 19. Security from searches and seizures.....	828	3017. Private railroad crossing.....	698
4, § 25. Special law.....	828	Florida.
Statutes.		Constitution.
1899, p. 299. Indebtedness for waterworks.....	514	Art. 9, § 5. Purposes of taxation.....	419
1891, p. 94. Indebtedness for waterworks.....	514	Statutes.
1893, p. 473. Misdemeanor to start fire.....	755	1899, chap. 1718. Taxation of railroads.....	509
1898, p. 61. Indebtedness for waterworks.....	514	1891, chap. 4014, § 17. Road taxes.....	416
Civil Code.		1898, chap. 4115, § 48. Return of railroad for taxation.....	508
§ 208. Scope of by-laws.....	850	§ 49. Procedure on default of payment.....	509
312. Proxies at corporate elections.....	848	Revised Statutes.
354. Power of corporation officers.....	848	§ 584. Drawing money from treasury.....	422
623. Duty to furnish gas.....	454	585. What warrant must specify.....	423
828. Interest as damages.....	755	586. Keeping county funds.....	423
Code of Civil Procedure.		Georgia.
§ 1112. Mandatory and directory provisions of statute.....	677	Code.
1128. Agreed case.....	514	§ 1493. Assignment by bank for creditors.....	243
1453. Embezzlement of decedent's assets.....	817	2223. Destruction of property for public good.....	304
1456. Discovery of property of decedent.....	814	Illinois.
1490. Refusal to disclose property.....	815	Constitution, 1870.
Political Code.		Art. 2, § 1. Objects of government.....	88
§ 1160. Time for polls to be open.....	677	§ 2. Due process of law.....	88, 738
1162. Ballot boxes not to be removed from polling places.....	677	4, § 12. Act not to embrace more than one subject.....	86
1197. Manner of voting.....	676	§ 16. Appropriations.....	86
1205. Preparation of ballot.....	676	5, § 24. Office.....	87
1207. Replacing spoiled ballots.....	676	8, § 3. Appropriation of public funds to sectarian institutions.....	808
1208. Assistance in marking ballot.....	677	Statutes.
1211. Marking ballots.....	675	1897. Length of working day.....	84
1215. Effect of distinguishing marks.....	675	Feb. 16. Washingtonian Home.....	799
Colorado.		1872, March 22. No person debarred from employment because of sex.....	85
Constitution.		1873, May 1. Taxation of bridges.....	71
Art. 10, § 2. Uniform taxation.....	610	1874. Married woman's act.....	85
Statutes.		1879, May 23. Industrial school for girls.....	808
1887, p. 406. Filing certificate of incorporation.....	148	1898, June 17, p. 99. Regulation of manufactures.....	81
Connecticut.		Revised Statutes, 1893.
Public Statutes.		Chap. 22, § 12, § 12. Notice in chancery cases..	788
1892, p. 215. Crossing of railroads.....	374	§ 20, § 20. Effect of answer without oath.....	785
1899, chap. 29. Taking effect of act.....	371	24, art. 5, §§ 9, 24, 25. Chicago charter; regulation of streets.....	490
chap. 168. Crossing of railroads.....	371	63, §§ 1, 6, 7. Married woman's act.....	85
1893, June 1, p. 307. Street railway in city.....	371	110, § 27, § 26. Review of judgment.....	788
p. 308. Control over tracks in street.....	373	120, § 1 (2 Starr & C. Stat. p. 2124). Taxation of bridges.....	71
June 14, chap. 208, p. 361. Crossing of railroads.....	371	Starr & Curtis' Annotated Statutes.
June 30. Taking effect of act.....	371	Vol. 1, p. 973, § 10. Dramshop act; lien of judgment.....	573
Special Statutes.		p. 1056. No person debarred from employment because of sex.....	85
Vol. 5, pp. 206, 492. Judicial notice.....	800	2, p. 1689. Chattel mortgages.....	805
1893, June 23, p. 846. State Street Horse Railway Company.....	373	p. 1789, § 27. Reviver of judgment.....	788
June 28. East End Railway Company.....	370	Indiana.
p. 877, § 19. Consolidation of street railway companies.....	370	Constitution, 1816.
General Statutes.		Art. 4, § 8. Filing offices.....	116
§ 328. Permission to construct railway crossings.....	371	Constitution.
§ 322, 368. Notice of application for right to construct crossing.....	371	Art. 1, § 23. Privileges and immunities.....	533
1087. Judicial notice.....	800	2, § 1. Departments of government.....	114
1204. Partition.....	586	4, § 30. Member of assembly ineligible to other office.....	115
1207. Sale for partition.....	586
2127. Vaccination of school children.....	253
2197. Vaccination of school children.....	253
2370. Prescription.....	587

Art. 5, § 1. Executive powers.....	114
§ 15. Duty to see that laws are enforced.....	118
§ 18. Vacancy in office during vacation.....	115
15, § 1. Choosing officers.....	114

Statutes.

1817, Jan. 2. Descents.....	546
1831, Jan. 20. Descents.....	546
1838, Feb. 17, § 2. Descent to half blood.....	546
1846, p. 85. Prison warden.....	117
1875, March 2. General incorporation law.....	74
1881, Apr. 8. General incorporation law.....	74
1885, p. 81. Loan association assessments.....	182
1887, p. 80. Monument commissioners.....	119
March 7. Regulations for safe distribution of gas.....	400
1891, p. 89. Jurisdiction of appellate court.....	583
1893, March 7. Prison directors.....	114
p. 185. Regents of monument.....	119

Laws, 1818.

P. 188. Descents.....	546
-----------------------	-----

Revised Laws, 1824.

P. 154. Descents.....	546
-----------------------	-----

Revised Statutes, 1831.

P. 207. Descents.....	550
208, § 2. Descents.....	546
512. Management of state's prison.....	116

Revised Statutes, 1835.

P. 236, § 2. Descent to half blood.....	547
572. Management of state's prison.....	116

Revised Statutes, 1845.

P. 20. No distinction between whole and half blood.....	546
100. Officers to be chosen by legislature.....	116
436, § 114. Inheritance by half blood.....	547

Revised Statutes, 1881.

§ 2470. Descent to brothers and sisters.....	548
2472. Inheritance by half blood.....	547
3006. Winding up of loan association.....	180
3106, subd. 23. Regulation of peddling.....	583
3408. Management of loan association business.....	182
3410. Lien on loan association stock.....	183
3412. Security for loans.....	183
3413. Payment of loans.....	183
3419. Loan association assessments.....	182
4420. State board of education.....	119
4577. University visiting board.....	119
4727. Canvass of election returns.....	119
5643. Board to examine treasury.....	119
6163. Auditors of female reformatory.....	119

Revised Statutes, 1894.

1286. Jurisdiction of appellate court.....	580
2625. Descent to brothers and sisters.....	548
2627. Inheritance by half blood.....	547
2638. Bank examiner.....	119
3193. Board of charities.....	119
3420. Winding up of loan association.....	180
3641. Regulation of peddling.....	583
4445. Management of loan association business.....	182
4455. Loan association assessments.....	183
4458. Loan association assessments.....	182
4461. Loan association assessments.....	183
5849. State board of education.....	119
5853. Schoolbook commissioners.....	119
6076. University visiting board.....	119
6176. Trustees of Purdue university.....	119
6213. Board of election commissioners.....	119
6232. Canvass of election returns.....	119
6711. State board of health.....	119
7564. Commissioners of public printing.....	119
7670. Board to examine treasury.....	119
8256. Auditors of female reformatory.....	119
§ 7783, 7789. Council for purchase of supplies.....	119
§ 8585. Board of tax commissioners.....	119

Elliott's Supplement.

P. 841. Management of loan association business.....	182
--	-----

Iowa.Statutes.

16th Gen. Assem. chap. 100. Giving lien priority over existing liens.....	233
264 Gen. Assem. chap. 34. Preservation of fish.....	391
20 L. R. A.

Code.

§ 462. Licensing transient merchants.....	733
463. License tax.....	736
565. Lien of taxes.....	231
570. Refund of tax.....	236
1553. Giving lien priority over existing liens.....	233
2302. Liability of wife for civil injuries.....	151
2304. Liability of husband for wife's torts.....	151
2305. Joint liability of husband and wife.....	151
2311. Wife's wages.....	151
2312. Exemption of property of husband and wife for other's debts.....	151
2313. Wife's contracts.....	151
2342. Suits by and against married woman.....	151
2310. Presentation of claim for refund of tax.....	236
2339. Judgment liens.....	233
4717. Lien in bastardy proceedings.....	233

McClain's Digest.

§ 621. Licensing transient merchants.....	735
---	-----

Kansas.Constitution.

Art. 6, § 7. State university.....	333
12, § 1. Special act conferring corporate powers.....	333

Statutes.

1861, Jan. 20. Lawrence university.....	333
1839, chap. 233, § 6. Board of regents.....	334
1896, chap. 238. Payment for breakage in state university.....	336

Code.

§ 658. Quo warranto.....	331
--------------------------	-----

General Statutes, 1839.

§ 968. Authority to enact ordinance for good government.....	400
964. Lighting streets.....	400
991. Authority to enact ordinance for welfare.....	400
§ 1828, § 5. Requiring proper operation of railroad.....	445
§ 1401. Powers of gas and water companies.....	400

Kentucky.Constitution.

§ 172. Taxation.....	77
174. Manner of taxation.....	77

General Statutes.

§ 1591, suba. 3. New election.....	705
4030. Taxation of corporations.....	77
4077. Franchise tax.....	77
4078. Valuation of franchise.....	77
4079. Taxation of capital stock of corporation.....	76

Maine.Statutes.

1839, chap. 261. Arrest by car conductor.....	531
chap. 252, § 2. Short lobsters.....	716
102, § 24. Marking ballots.....	733

Revised Statutes.

Chap. 46, § 6. What by-laws may provide for.....	431
48, § 16-19. Organization of corporations.....	431
51, § 73. Arrest by car conductor.....	531

Maryland.Constitution, 1867.

Art. 1, § 15. Poll taxes.....	407
-------------------------------	-----

Statutes.

1702, chap. 1. Established church.....	409
1704, chap. 21. Road work.....	410
1715. Limitation of actions.....	277
1765. Limitation of actions.....	277
1795, chap. 37. Road work.....	411
1813, chap. 216. Limitation of actions.....	274

Code.

Art. 16, § 161. Effect of improvident joinder of subject-matter upon jurisdiction to give relief.....	269
§ 5, § 5. Limitation statute does not run in favor of absent defendant.....	274

Code of Public Local Laws.		General Statutes, 1894.
Art. 10, §§ 282-70. Road work.....	407	§ 1512. Tax exemptions.....	777
Massachusetts.		2794. Corporations.....	777
Declaration of Rights.		Mississippi.
Art. 2. Freedom of elections.....	609	Statutes.
Constitution.		1874, April 9. Telegraph charter.....	771
Art. 4, § 1. Power to enact laws.....	86	1886, p. 98. Right to construct telegraph line.....	770
Amend. 2. Town meetings.....	670	Code, 1892.
Statutes.		§§ 3880-5. Taxation of telegraph companies..	771
1864, chap. 124. Transfer of charter of New Bedford & Fairhaven Ferry.....	170	Missouri.
1862, chap. 80. Franchises of Fairhaven Branch Railroad.....	171	Constitution.
1890, chap. 70. Obscene literature.....	62	Art. 2, § 4. Natural rights.....	256
1896, chap. 417. Official ballots.....	668	§ 80. Due process of law.....	258
1894, chap. 362. Old Colony Railroad Ferry....	171	4, § 53. Exclusive privileges.....	208, 258
Revised Statutes.		Statutes.
Chap. 4, § 12. Elections in Boston.....	670	1893, p. 290. Trade-marks.....	208
15, § 24. Election of town officers.....	670	Revised Statutes, 1859.
120, § 10. Obscene literature.....	68	§ 2419. Notice by record.....	50
Public Statutes.		5126. Agent's contract for sale of land.....	44
Chap. 27, § 80. Election of town officers.....	670	Montana.
217, § 2. Prosecution for fine.....	178	Compiled Statutes.
Michigan.		§ 1237. Interest.....	690
Constitution.		Probate Practice Act.
Art. 4, § 20. Acts to embrace single object....	474	§§ 254-70. Executor's account.....	637
7, § 6. Purity of elections.....	853	Nebraska.
Public Laws.		Constitution.
1864, p. 170. Michigan Southern Railroad charter.....	197	Art. 1, § 21. Compensation for property taken	856
1885, p. 300. Consolidation of railroads.....	197	2, § 11. Subject of statutes.....	856
1861, No. 183. Fire screens on steam vessels....	469	Statutes.
1897, No. 813. Definition of penalty.....	475	1890, March 27, art. 1, § 3. Irrigation law.....	856
1891, No. 190. Printing ballots.....	832	Consolidated Statutes.
1893, No. 206. Taxation.....	474	§ 2084. Irrigation law.....	856
1896, March 14. Printing ballots.....	833	Compiled Statutes, 1889.
Local Laws.		Chap. 16, § 145. Building associations.....	136
1893, title 6, § 10. Grand Rapids charter; warrant for collection of taxes	199	§§ 158, 159. Corporations.....	856
Howell's Statutes.		Nevada.
§§ 2033, 2034. Fire screens on steam vessels....	469	Statutes.
§ 3300. Railroad tax.....	198	1891. Australian ballot law.....	781
Minnesota.		New Hampshire.
Constitution.		Statutes.
Art. 2, § 3. Taxation.....	778	1891, chap. 217. Time does not run in favor of absent defendant.....	276
Statutes.		General Laws.
1890, chap. 17. Agricultural societies.....	710	Chap. 1, § 20. Definition of "lands".....	58
1897, chap. 29. Agricultural societies.....	710	53, § 2. Taxation of real estate.....	58
55. Recording of railroad mortgages.....	214	54, § 11. Taxation of real estate.....	58
1893, chap. 19. Appropriation to agricultural societies.....	710	New York.
55, §§ 1-3. Railroad mortgages.....	218	Statutes.
1876, chap. 29. Minnesota State Agricultural Society.....	710	1855, chap. 37. Tax on capital.....	394
1893, chap. 60, § 1. Execution sale subject to mortgage lien.....	215	1864, chap. 277. Powers of township trustees....	199
143. State Agricultural Society.....	710	1880, chap. 269. Certiorari to review tax.....	394
1895, chap. 174. Conveyance of land by Ramsey County.....	711	North Carolina.
1897, chap. 13. Liability for injuries by fellow servant.....	209	Code.
181. State Agricultural Society.....	711	§ 1211. Payment of costs.....	261
1891, chap. 168. Appropriation to State Agricultural Society.....	711	North Dakota.
Public Statutes, 1849-1858.		Political Code.
Chap. 17, §§ 384-388. Agricultural societies....	710	Art. 2, chap. 12. Public highways.....	698
General Statutes, 1866.		Ohio.
Chap. 121, § 4. Effect of repeal of agricultural societies' act.....	710	Constitution.
123. Agricultural societies.....	710	Art. 1, § 1. Property rights.....	839
General Statutes, 1878.		§ 16. Open courts.....	839
Chap. 24, §§ 71-73. Railroad mortgages.....	213
65, title 11. Injunction.....	214
76. Remedy for enforcing railroad mortgage.....	218
30 L. R. A.

Statutes.		Chap. 32, p. 422. Record of real estate mortgage.....	770
Vol. 30, p. 50, § 6563a. Costs in actions for wages.....	838	120, pp. 542-9. Recording chattel mortgage.....	770
Revised Statutes.		South Dakota.
§ 3108-10. Father entitled to services of minor children.....	690	Constitution.
§ 3112. Liability of father for support of children.....	690	Art. 5, § 23. Police magistrates.....	864
3171. Negotiable paper.....	320	6, § 18. Compensation for property taken.....	863
3172. Indorsee of note may maintain suit.....	320	17, § 18. Compensation for property taken.....	863
3281. Railroad appropriation of land.....	443	Statutes.
3282. Power over railroad land.....	443	1891, chap. 94. Compensation for property taken.....	863
3299. Lien on railroad property.....	443	Compiled Statutes.
3398. Lien of judgment for labor.....	443	§ 773. Townships.....	864
4743. Penalty for obstructing highway.....	700	§ 1022-1138. Incorporation of towns.....	864
5022. Actions concerning land in another county.....	441	§ 1302. Assessing damages.....	862
5055. When action is pending.....	441	1324. Appeal to court for assessment of damages.....	863
5056. Judgment against land in another county.....	441	1612. Lien of personal property tax.....	324
5375. Judgment lien.....	443	Tennessee.
5561. Assignment by corporation after petition for dissolution.....	166	Statutes.
5996. Lien on railroad property.....	443	1823. Disposal of public land.....	771
6449. Lien on railroad property.....	443	Milliken & Vertrees' Code.
6939. Public officer's interest in contract.....	136	§ 3685. Set-off of judgments.....	705
6960. Permitting car to obstruct highway.....	700	5040. Satisfaction of foreign judgment.....	106
§ 6516-35. Enforcing and preserving judgment lien.....	443	Utah.
Oregon.		Compiled Statutes, 1822.
Statutes.		§ 2087. Driving cattle upon highway.....	96
1867, p. 252. Bridge over Willamette river.....	90	Vermont.
Bill's Code.		Statutes.
Vol. 1, § 501. Alteration of municipal boundaries.....	447	1896, No. 93. Regulations against contagious diseases.....	575
Pennsylvania.		1892, No. 82. Regulations against contagious diseases.....	575
Constitution.		Virginia.
Art. 1, § 17. Obligation of contracts.....	809	Statutes.
§ 18. Attain of treason.....	148	1874, March 24. Usury.....	626
19. Corruption of blood.....	148	Code.
17, § 1. Carriers to carry each other's traffic.....	428	§ 231A. Usury.....	626
3. Rights of transportation.....	428	Washington.
4. Consolidation of railroads.....	428	Constitution.
Statutes.		Art. 6, § 1. Electors.....	672
1815. Suit for divorce.....	226	§ 6. Mode of election.....	672
1820, § 75. Penalty for murder.....	148	Statutes.
1831, Apr. 23. Consolidation of railroads.....	428	1891, Nov. 22. Port Townsend charter.....	447
1867, May 24. Assessments for street improvements.....	403	1890, March 27. Alteration of municipal boundaries.....	447
1880, May 7. Sidewalk act.....	866	General Statutes.
1891, p. 176. To protect miners.....	809	§ 382. Endorsement of official ballots.....	672
Rhode Island.		384. Endorsement by inspectors.....	672
Constitution.		389. Disposition of unendorsed ballot.....	673
Art. 1, § 2. Distribution of public burdens.....	529	391. Unendorsed ballot void.....	673
Statutes.		West Virginia.
1890, chap. 781. Ballots.....	676	Code.
1892, May 21, chap. 1068. Tax exemption.....	523	Chap. 100, § 14. Account between joint tenants.....	454
Revised Laws, 1822.		120, § 7. Exceptions to commissioner's report.....	451
P. 222. Descents.....	555	Wisconsin.
Public Statutes.		Statutes.
Chap. 43, § 6. Notice of tax.....	527	1897, chap. 112, § 1. Municipal corporations.....	864
§ 7. Account for taxation.....	527	Wyoming.
8. Tax list.....	527	Constitution.
18. Assessment roll.....	527	Art. 2, § 40. Extinction of debt by legislature.....	229
142, § 6, 7. Negotiable paper.....	104	Statutes.
Judiciary Act.		1890, chap. 17. Change of venue.....	336
Chap. 33, § 20. Attachment of corporate shares.....	491	chap. 51. Voluntary assignments.....	242
South Carolina.		1890-91, chap. 35. Adopting territorial laws.....	249
Statutes.		1895, chap. 64. Change of venue.....	336
1870. Occupation tax.....	226	Revised Statutes.
Statutes at Large.		§ 493. Adopting common law.....	244
Vol. 17, p. 532. Occupation tax.....	224	1823. Delivery of books of deceased official.....	250
p. 1063. Record of mortgages.....	776	3441. Change of venue.....	336
Revised Statutes, 1872.
Chap. 22, p. 120. Affidavit sufficient to entitle mortgage to record.....	776
23, p. 128. Papers entitled to record.....	776
29 L. R. A.

LAWYERS' REPORTS,

ANNOTATED.

SOUTH DAKOTA SUPREME COURT.

J. E. PARKER, Appt.,

v.

William J. RANDOLPH et al., I. Remsen
LANE, Resp't.

(...19...S. Dak...131...)

1. Respondent became the purchaser of notes and mortgages through defendant Emery, under general instructions to reinvest certain money then in Emery's hands. There was a prior mortgage on the same premises, given by defendant Randolph to Emery, which Emery sold to appellant, and discharged before record of assignment. He subsequently procured a quitclaim deed of the mortgaged premises, and by quitclaim deed conveyed the same to respondent, who, in consideration therefor, surrendered the mortgages. Held, in an action by appellant to foreclose his mortgage, that respondent's quitclaim deed did not make him a bona fide holder of the title to the mortgaged premises.

2. The transfer of a note secured by a mortgage carries with it the mortgage also, and when the original mortgagee and payee sells such note without assigning the mortgage to the purchaser of the same, and then takes subsequent mortgages upon the same property, and fraudulently discharges the prior mortgage, he can gain no advantage thereby, either for himself or for one for whom he is acting as agent, in any of the transactions directly involving the property mortgaged.

(Corson, P. J., dissents from proposition 1.)

(July 18, 1894.)

*Headnotes by FULLER, J.

NOTE.—The effect of a quitclaim deed in an otherwise perfect record title.

This subject presents the question of the conflict between the old equity rule that one who takes a quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser, and the rule established by the recording acts that an unrecorded deed is without effect against a subsequent purchaser without notice.

While there is some conflict in the decisions there is not so much as would appear from a cursory examination of them. Many of the cases in which the question of bona fide purchaser is discussed have no reference whatever to the rights of purchasers under the recording acts, while others contain mere dicta upon that question having been ruled by other principles entirely.

A disposal of the irrelevant cases first will leave the others in better condition to determine the location of the weight of authority.

29 L. R. A.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Spink County in favor of defendant Lane in a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage upon property in which Lane was alleged to have some interest. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. R. B. Hassell and John J. Myers for appellant.

Mr. Horace Comfort for respondent.

Fuller, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to foreclose a mortgage on the premises in controversy, executed by the defendant William J. Randolph and his wife to C. F. Emery on the 27th day of December, 1884, to secure their promissory note of $1,200, of even date therewith. The complaint is in the usual form, and alleges on information and belief that the defendants George A. Poe, C. F. Emery, and I. Remsen Lane have or claim to have an interest in the premises, which interest is alleged to be subsequent to plaintiff's mortgage, and subject thereto. Upon the complaint and answer of defendant Lane the cause was tried to the court without a jury. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Briefly stated, the facts are as follows, and undisputed: At the time the mortgage described in the complaint was executed, the mortgagor, William J. Randolph, was the owner of the premises. This mortgage was dated December 27, 1884, and recorded December 31, 1884, and on the 4th day of February, 1885, Emery sold the same, together with the note for $1,200, secured thereby, to the plaintiff. The note was in-Quitclaim purchasers not protected against latent equities.

There is a class of cases in which a purchase by quitclaim has been held not bona fide so as to be entitled to protection, in which the question was solely as to protection in equity against outstanding or latent equities. These cases are frequently cited as authority in cases arising under the recording acts. But they are now quite generally distinguished from such cases.

In considering the question of good faith under the betterment act, the court in Griswold v. Bragg, 19 Blatchf. 94, said it is true that in a class of cases in equity no person deriving title merely by a quitclaim deed is considered a bona fide purchaser.

The purchaser does not take free from the right of a judgment creditor of the grantor to have the record amended so as to show jurisdiction over dorsed as follows: "Pay to the order of J. E. Parker. C. F. Emery." On October 15, 1887, the defendant Randolph and his wife transferred the premises by quitclaim deed to the defendant George A. Poe, which deed was recorded May 19, 1888. Before recording his deed, and on the 1st day of May, 1888, the defendant Poe mortgaged the premises to the defendant Emery, the consideration mentioned in the mortgage being $1,000; and on the following day Poe gave Emery another mortgage on the same premises, and the consideration mentioned therein was $800. The $1,000 mortgage was recorded May 19, 1888, and the $800 mortgage on July 25th of that year. Without the knowledge or consent of the plaintiff, and on the 22d day of June, 1888, the defendant Emery executed a discharge of the mortgage securing the $1,200 note, which he had previously sold to plaintiff, and on the 17th day of July following caused the same to be recorded, and said mortgage was thereby satisfied of record. The plaintiff, J. E. Parker testified upon the trial that he bought the note and mortgage described in the complaint and offered in evidence from the defendant Emery, and paid him $1,200 therefor, and that said note and mortgage are still in his hands, unpaid and unsatisfied, and owned by him; that he had no knowledge of the execution of the discharge of the mortgage, and had never authorized Emery or any one else to make and execute or record a satisfaction of the mortgage. The defendant Lane testified that he bought the $1,000 and $800 mortgages from the defendant Emery some time during the year 1888, and that afterwards, and on the 29th day of January, 1889, said Emery, to satisfy said Poe's mortgages, amounting to $1,800, conveyed the premises to him by quitclaim deed; and that he had no notice of plaintiff's mortgage; and that the title to said land, so far as he could see from an abstract, appeared clear, and was vested in the defendant Poe at the time he gave the $1,000 and $800 mortgages to the defendant Emery. "Q. You purchased the mortgages in July, 1888, and took a deed in January, 1889?" A. Yes. Q. Did you, at the time the deed was given, make any payment in addition to the previous advances on the mortgages? A. None whatever. Q. How did the deed come into your possession? A. It was sent to me by Mr. Emery. Q. Had it been recorded before you received it? A. Yes. Q. What was the consideration you paid for the mortgages? A. In the month in which these mortgages were purchased I had a loan of $2,500 paid off, and under general instructions to Mr. Emery the amount so paid off was reinvested. Q. Then this was a part of the $2,500? A. Yes." It is conceded that no part of the amount for which plaintiff seeks to foreclose the mortgage has ever been paid, and that he never authorized the defendant Emery to discharge the mortgage securing the same. If plaintiff took an assignment of the mortgage from Randolph to Emery at the time he purchased the same, together with the note in suit, such assignment was never recorded. The interest of Randolph was conveyed to Poe by quitclaim deed, subject to plaintiff's mortgage; and at the time Poe executed mortgages amounting to $1,800 in favor of the defendant C. F. Emery, plaintiff's mortgage for $1,200 was of record, and the lien thereof was paramount to such subsequent mortgages. It appears from the evidence that the defendant Emery was the agent of the defendant Lane in the month of July, 1888, with full authority, under general instructions, to collect and reinvest his principal's money; and that during said month he became the owner of the above-described mortgages, amounting to $1,800, through his said agent, C. F. Emery, although the same were not assigned to him until late in the month of November following. It also appears that after said Emery purchased the $1,000 and $800 mortgages from the defendant Poe, and before the $800 mortgage had been recorded, and in the month of July, 1888, and the grantor and make the judgment a lien on the land. Allison v. Thomas, 72 Cal. 562.

A purchaser by quitclaim from the grantees in a sheriff's deed is not protected from the defense that the sheriff's sale was not founded on a valid judgment. Leland v. Isenbeck, 1 Idaho, 469.

The recording act does not apply to equities arising out of a breach of a trust relation, and as to such equities a purchaser by quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser entitled to protection in equity. Roff v. Irvine, 108 Mo. 378.

A quitclaim deed is not good against an adverse possession. Ridgeway v. Holliday, 59 Mo. 444.

A holder of a quitclaim deed is not entitled to protection against outstanding or latent equities. Hastings v. Nissen, 31 Fed. Rep. 597; Gest v. Packwood, 34 Fed. Rep. 368; McClung v. Steen, 32 Fed. Rep. 373; Wood v. Holly Mfg. Co. 100 Ala. 326; Smith v. Perry, 56 Ala. 268; Derrick v. Brown, 66 Ala. 162; McMillan v. Rushing, 80 Ala. 402; O'Neal v. Seixas, 85 Ala. 80; Bragg v. Paulk, 42 Me. 502; Stoffel v. Schroeder, 62 Mo. 147; Stivers v. Horne, 62 Mo. 473; Mann v. Best, 62 Mo. 491; Hope v. Blair, 105 Mo. 90; Bowman v. Griffith, 35 Neb. 361; Richards v. Snyder, 11 Or. 511; Baker v. Woodward, 12 Or. 8; Woodfolk v. Blount, 3 Hayw. (Tenn.) 147, 9 Am. Dec. 736; Carter v. Wise, 39 Tex. 273; Hamman 39 L. R. A.

v. Kelgwin, 39 Tex. 84; Harrison v. Boring, 44 Tex. 255; Martin v. Morris, 62 Wis. 428; Woodward v. Jewell, 25 Fed. Rep. 691.

A few cases seem inclined to take issue with the above, for it has been held that taking a quitclaim deed is not of itself sufficient to charge the grantee with notice that his grantor's title was procured by fraud. Mansfield v. Dyer, 181 Mass. 200.

And in Nidever v. Ayers, 33 Cal. 39, it was held that a purchaser by a quitclaim deed was entitled to protection against an unrecorded decree of distribution showing an equity against the property and incidentally that he was entitled to be protected against a resulting trust arising from the payment of the purchase money by one person and the taking of the title in the name of another person who made the quitclaim deed.

Purchaser with notice.

There are several cases in which although the court expressed an opinion upon the effect of taking a quitclaim deed the facts showed that the purchaser had actual notice of the outstanding title itself or was negligent in making inquiry after receiving notice of suspicious circumstances, of course such purchasers could not rely alone on the records.

apparently while said Emery was acting as the agent of defendant Lane, he fraudulently discharged plaintiff's mortgage for $1,200, and satisfied the same of record, and turned the Poe mortgages over to his principal, with an abstract of title to the premises, from which it appeared that the mortgagor, Poe, at the time of the execution of the mortgages, held the property under a quitclaim deed from Randolph, the original mortgagor. Emery subsequently took from Poe a quitclaim deed, and by quitclaim deed transferred the premises to the defendant Lane, in satisfaction of the mortgages for $1,800. Defendant Lane examined the abstract before he purchased the property, and observed that all prior conveyances were by quitclaim deeds, and it also appeared therefrom that his agent had taken the two mortgages, amounting to $1,800, and soon afterwards discharged plaintiff's mortgage for $1,200, and took a quitclaim deed from Poe to himself; and the record was therefore sufficient to put the defendant Lane on inquiry, as a grantee in a quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser. Such deed simply conveys all the interest, if any, which the grantor has in equity at the time of its execution; and in this case defendant's mortgages were taken by his agent, subject to plaintiff's lien, which should not be defeated by the fraudulent acts of such agent.

In Steele v. Sioux Valley Bank, 79 Iowa, 339, 7 L. R. A. 524, it is said that "one who takes a mere quitclaim deed for real estate is conclusively presumed to have notice of prior equities, and takes subject thereto; and so an unrecorded bond for a deed takes precedence of a subsequent quitclaim deed, though the deed is based upon a valuable consideration, and is taken without actual notice of the bond." In Peters v. Cartier, 80 Mich. 124, the court says: "Under the cloak of quitclaim deeds, schemers and speculators close their eyes to honest and reasonable inquiries, and traffic in apparent imperfections in titles. The usual method of conveying a good title—one in which the grantor has confidence—is by warranty deed. The usual method of conveying a defective title is by quitclaim deed. The rule is wise and wholesome which holds that those who take by quitclaim deed are not bona fide purchasers, and take only the interest which their grantor had. It is therefore immaterial whether or not Cartier had notice or knowledge of complainant's title. He must be held to have purchased at his own risk, and, Douville having no title, conveyed none to him." A quitclaim deed is sufficient to put a person on inquiry. Goddard v. Donah, 42 Kan. 754. In Gest v. Packwood, 84 Fed. Rep. 368, it is held that "one who takes a mere conveyance of another's interest in real property, or a quitclaim deed thereto, is not a purchaser for a valuable consideration, within the rule in equity which protects such a purchaser against prior conveyances or rights of which he had no notice; for by the very terms of his conveyance he has notice that he is purchasing nothing more than the interest or right his vendor then had, . . . and the assignment of a mortgage thereon for an antecedent debt does not make the vendee or assignee a purchaser for a valuable consideration, so as to protect him against a prior conveyance of, or right in or to, such property." Notice sufficient to prevent the purchase from being bona fide is said to inhere in the very form of this kind of conveyance. 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 758.

It is conceded by counsel for respondent that the quitclaim deed alone would give the defendant no standing in court, but he contends that his title rests upon the two mortgages from Poe to Emery, of $1,000 and $800, respectively, which were assigned to him by said Emery. The defendant Lane testified that Emery had general authority to invest and reinvest at least $2,500 of his money, and that all the business transacted in purchasing these mortgages was done through said Emery, and that he took the quitclaim deed to the premises in satisfaction of these mort-

The quitclaim grantee cannot claim title if he had notice of the prior unrecorded deed. Stanley v. Schwalby, 85 Tex. 348.

One who takes a quitclaim deed cannot rely on the records if he has actual notice of outstanding titles. Logan v. Neill, 123 Pa. 457.

If the grantee in the quitclaim deed has sufficient notice to put him on inquiry he will not be entitled to the protection of the registry acts. Stetson v. Cook, 30 Mich. 753.

One who receives a quitclaim deed with notice that the land has been sold acquires no title as against a prior unrecorded deed in the hands of a bona fide purchaser in good faith. Wines v. Woods, 109 Ind. 291.

In Battershall v. Stephens, 84 Mich. 74, where a quitclaim deed was taken, the court seems to assume that it might under some circumstances be entitled to priority over prior unrecorded deeds but holds that under the circumstances of that case it was not so entitled because not taken in good faith.

In Peters v. Cartier, 80 Mich. 124, the court after deciding that the circumstances of the case were sufficient to put the intending purchaser on inquiry says the rule is wise and wholesome that those who take by quitclaim deed are not bona fide purchasers and take only the interest which their grantors have.

In Martin v. Brown, 4 Minn. 291, it is stated that when a person relies upon a mere quitclaim deed of the interest which another person may have in the property he does so at his peril and must see to it that there is an interest to convey. But in that case the evidence showed circumstances which should have given the purchaser notice of the outstanding interest.

The ruling in Martin v. Brown was followed in Everest v. Ferris, 16 Minn. 26.

The grantee in a quitclaim deed will obtain no title if he had sufficient information to put him on inquiry which would have led to the discovery of the prior unrecorded deed. Cummins v. Finnegan, 42 Minn. 524; Wolf v. Zabel, 44 Minn. 90.

In Pleasants v. Bldgett, 32 Neb. 427, the court after finding that the evidence showed notice, says the purchaser bought an interest which had previously been conveyed to another and the grantee under the quitclaim therefore took nothing.

A grantee under a mere quitclaim deed receiving a nominal consideration where no possession of the property is given under the deed acquires no right gages; and it therefore clearly appears that the defendant Lane intended to extinguish the mortgages, and that the same thereby became merged to the extent of his interest in the premises. Plaintiff's mortgage directly affected the premises in controversy at the time Emery, as the agent of Lane, was acting in relation thereto; and the fact that it was a valid and subsisting lien, paramount to the Poe mortgages, was well known to the said agent; and the defendant Lane is charged with a knowledge of that fact, as the same was directly involved in matters within the scope of Emery's authority. At the time defendant's mortgages were executed, and for nearly three months thereafter, plaintiff's mortgage was of record, and remained so until the same was fraudulently released. Emery, who was acting for the defendant Lane, had at the time actual notice and knowledge of its existence, which in law became the notice and knowledge of his principal, the defendant Lane, who is presumed to have taken his mortgages and quitclaim deed subject to plaintiff's lien for $1,200. Jones v. Bamford, 31 Iowa, 217; May v. Borel, 12 Cal. 91; Boone, Mortg. 69. The transfer of a note secured by mortgage carries with it the mortgage also, and when the original mortgagee and payee sells such note without assigning the mortgage to the purchaser of the same, and then takes subsequent mortgages upon the same property, and fraudulently discharges the prior mortgage, he can gain no advantage thereby, either for himself or for one for whom he is acting as agent, in any of the transactions directly involving the property mortgaged. Walker v. Schreiber, 47 Iowa, 529. In Downer v. Miller, 15 Wis. 612. Paine, J., speaking for the court, said: "Where a prior mortgage or judgment has by wrong or fraud been discharged of record, a subsequent mortgagee, whose rights existed at the time of such discharge, cannot claim to be injured by allowing it to be set aside and the prior mortgagee to be restored to his rights." From Trenton Bkg. Co. v. Woodruff,

2 N. J. Eq. 117, we quote without comment the following: "The cancellation of a mortgage on the record is only prima facie evidence of its discharge, and leaves it open to the party making such allegation to prove that it was made by accident, mistake, or fraud. On such proof being made, the mortgage will be established, even against subsequent mortgagees without notice." A court of equity will grant relief in cases like the present by considering a mortgage fraudulently discharged of record in full force, as the interests of justice are thereby best subserved. Barnes v. Camack, 1 Barb. 392; Eggenman v. Eggenman, 87 Mich. 436; Banta v. Freeland, 15 N. J. Eq. 103, 83 Am. Dec. 269. All the business transacted in procuring these mortgages and the quitclaim deed was done through Emery, as the agent of the defendant Lane; and under the doctrine of principal and agent he is charged with a knowledge of the act of Emery with reference to the matters over which his authority extended, and which directly affected the premises in controversy; and, under all the circumstances of this case, the defendant Lane is not a bona fide owner of the premises discharged of plaintiff's mortgage, and the judgment of the Trial Court is therefore reversed, and a new trial is ordered.

Kellam, J., concurring:

I think appellant is entitled to a reversal of this judgment on the ground that respondent, upon the evidence presented by the record, was not an innocent purchaser of the note and mortgage which he turned over in payment of the land, and that, under the circumstances of this case, his quitclaim deed did not make him an innocent purchaser of the mortgaged premises. As particularly noticed in Judge Fuller's opinion, respondent, Lane, became the purchaser of the note and mortgage through Emery, under general authority to him to reinvest his money,—that is, Emery acted for him. Emery knew all about the facts, and that the mortgage which to take as against a prior grantee whether the deed of such grantee is recorded or not. American Mortg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 19 Or. 334.

The registration act will not protect one who for a nominal consideration takes a quitclaim deed from one who appears by the record to be the owner of the property but who states that he is not in fact such. Kearney v. Vaughan, 50 Mo. 284.

In Bradford v. Carpenter, 13 Colo. 30, it was held that the fact that a trust deed was on record, coupled with the fact that a subsequent grantee from its maker took a quitclaim deed, were sufficient to charge the grantee with notice of rights which had been acquired under a purchase at the trustee's sale, the evidence of which had not been recorded.

Where one who took a quitclaim deed to property in possession of a third person had his deed recorded before that under which the third person claimed, it was held that his title was subordinate to that of the third person which was a prior deed from the common grantor. African M. E. Church Trustees v. Hewitt, 37 Kan. 107.

In United States v. Sliney, 21 Fed. Rep. 594, a purchaser from one holding a quitclaim deed was denied the position of a bona fide holder because of the fact that a third person was in possession, 39 L. R. A.

inquiry of whom would have shown the true state of the title, but the judge takes occasion to state that it is authoritatively decided that a purchaser by deed of quitclaim simply is not to be considered as a bona fide purchaser without notice.

A person who takes a quitclaim of a tax title while the taxpayer is still in possession will take with notice of the taxpayer's equities. Merrett v. Poulter, 96 Mo. 237.

Other rulings.

A quitclaim deed from heirs will not affect a prior unrecorded deed from the ancestor. Rodgers v. Burchard, 84 Tex. 441, 7 Am. Rep. 283.

In Flagg v. Mann, 3 Sumn. 435, a deed of quitclaim was construed as a bargain and sale for the purpose of giving the grantee the rights of a bona fide purchaser.

In Ripley v. Seligman, 88 Mich. 177, the court held that the holder of the quitclaim deed was within the section of the statute which provided that no implied or resulting trust should be alleged or established to defeat or prejudice the title of a purchaser for a valuable consideration and without notice of the trust.

In Hockenhull v. Oliver, 80 Ga. 89, the court refuses to decide the question.

he assumed to discharge was not paid. Lane must be charged with his agent's knowledge. He was not, therefore, a bona fide owner of the note and mortgage. He turned over this note and mortgage, of which he was not a bona fide holder as against appellant, and took a quitclaim deed from Emery, who had by quitclaim become the apparent holder of the legal title. While there is an absolute conflict of authorities as to the legal effect of a quitclaim deed, I am well satisfied that under the circumstances of this case, as exhibited by the evidence before us, respondent, Lane, ought not to be held an innocent and bona fide holder either of the note and mortgage or of the title to the mortgaged premises as against appellant, Parker, whose mortgage was apparently fraudulently discharged by respondent's agent and grantor. It is well known that deeds denominated quitclaim have in practical use taken a variety of forms, in some of which it is difficult to determine whether they were intended as active, specific grants, or simply releases or discharges of some possible or contingent interest in the grantor. None of the deeds are set out in the abstract, and I assume that they were simply releases. Further facts may be developed on a retrial. For these reasons I concur in the reversal.

Corson, P. J., dissenting

I am unable to concur with my associates in the reversal of the judgment in this case, placed, as I understand the opinion, mainly upon the ground that the defendant Lane acquired his title to the property through a "quitclaim deed," and therefore had constructive notice of the equities of Parker in the property. Judge Fuller, in the majority opinion, says: "Defendant Lane examined the abstract before he purchased the property, and observed that all prior conveyances were of quitclaim deeds, and took a quitclaim deed from Poe to himself; and the record was therefore sufficient to put defendant on inquiry, as a grantee in a quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser." It seems to me that such a doctrine unnecessarily introduces into our system of conveyances a rule as to real-estate titles based upon the form of the deed that can only result in uncertainty and doubt in titles which, in my opinion, should be determined by the records alone, except in the well-recognized cases of actual notice or want of consideration. Our registry laws were established for the express purpose of enabling one by an examination of the records to ascertain the true title to property therefrom. But by the decision in this case a new element is introduced. If there is in the chain of title a quitclaim deed, then no reliance can be placed upon the records, and the party purchasing is charged with notice of all outstanding equities and conveyances not recorded. Such a doctrine is very far-reaching, and renders titles in this state very uncertain, as there are probably but few titles in which there are not more or less quitclaim conveyances.

While there are some authorities that seem to sustain the position of the opinion of the court, I am of the opinion that the better-considered and later cases are opposed to the views therein expressed. I shall not undertake to do more at this time than to call attention to a few of the cases bearing upon this question: Dow v. Whitney, 147 Mass. 1; Chapman v. Sims, 58 Miss. 154; Willingham v. Hardin, 75 Mo. 429; Poe v. Hall, 74 Mo. 815, 41 Am. Rep. 816; Graff v. Middleton, 43 Cal. 841; Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 385; Hamilton v. Doolittle, 87 Ill. 478; Brown v. Banner Coal & Coal Oil Co. 97 Ill. 214, 87 Am. Rep. 105. In the latter case the supreme court of Illinois quotes with approval from McConnel v. Reed, 5 Ill. 117, 88 Am. Dec. 124, the following: "A deed of release and quitclaim is as effectual for the purpose of transferring title to land as a deed of bargain and sale; and the prior recording of such deed will give it a preference over one previously executed, but which was subsequently recorded. In this respect, there is no distinc-

Distinction between conveyance of land and of mere interest.

A distinction should be and is made between cases where the quitclaim is intended to operate as a conveyance of the land itself and those where a mere transfer of the grantor's interest is intended. In the latter case of course a person who purchases merely another's interest in certain land will get nothing if there is not such interest. This distinction may perhaps reconcile all the cases, but it is difficult to determine from the reports of some of them whether the courts had in mind this distinction or not, and in view of the fact that the decisions of some states are uniformly one way the inference is that there was no intention to base the decisions upon this distinction. The decisions in which the distinction has been clearly drawn are as follows:

One who takes a quitclaim, deed of the land itself, and not merely of the right, title, and interest of the grantor, is not within the rule that a person acquiring title by quitclaim deed is not entitled to the protection of the recording acts. Prentice v. Duluth Storage & Forwarding Co. 58 Fed. Rep. 437.

A conveyance of land will entitle the holder to the protection of the recording acts. Baylor v. Scottish-American Mortg. Co. 66 Fed. Rep. 631.

29 L. R. A.

One who has in good faith purchased the absolute right to land in contradistinction to that of the title or claim of title of the grantor and by outside proof has shown that he has paid a valuable consideration therefor may claim as an innocent purchaser against adverse title or equities of which he has no notice. Richardson v. Levi, 87 Tex. 350.

If the deed purports to convey the land itself the grantee will be protected against a prior unrecorded conveyance. Dycus v. Hart, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 354.

If the deed purports to convey the land it will be protected by the registry acts. Taylor v. Harrison, 47 Tex. 454, 28 Am. Rep. 304.

In Miller v. Fraley, 23 Ark. 735, it is said it is no doubt the law that where a person bargains for and takes a mere quitclaim deed or deed without warranty it is a circumstance if unexplained to show that he had notice of imperfections in the vendor's title and only purchased such interest as the vendor might have in the property and that he is not entitled to protection in equity as an innocent purchaser without notice.

If it appears that the intention was not to pass the land formerly conveyed the later deed will not take preference of the prior one. Hamilton v. Doolittle, 87 Ill. 473.

tion between different forms of conveyance. As a general rule, the one first recorded must prevail over one of older execution, when made in good faith, and when it appears to have been the intention of the parties to convey again the same lands which had been previously conveyed. But where the terms of the second deed do not necessarily embrace the lands previously conveyed, and, on the contrary, are such as to show that it was not the intention of the grantor to include them, the court will give it such construction as not to embrace them," etc. The same view seems to be taken by the supreme court of Massachusetts in Dow v. Whitney, supra. That court says: "A deed of 'all the right, title, and interest,' or of 'all the interest,' of the grantor in a lot of land, conveys the same title as a deed of the land. It is the policy of our laws that a purchaser of land, by examining the registry of deeds, may ascertain the title of his grantor. If there is no recorded deed, he has the right to assume that the record title is the true title. The law has established the rule for the protection of creditors and purchasers that an unrecorded deed, if unknown to them, is, as to them, a mere nullity. The reasons for the rule apply with equal force in the case of a deed of the grantee's right, title, and interest as in that of a deed of the land. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the deed of Stephen Dow conveyed to his grantee a title which is good against any prior deed, if unrecorded. To hold otherwise would defeat the purpose of the registration laws, and create confusion in the titles to land." After referring to a number of prior cases, the court says: "In each of these cases the question was not as to the effect of a prior unrecorded deed of the same land, but it was whether the land previously sold was included within the description of the latter deed. In other words, it was a question of the construction of the deed relied upon. No such question can arise in the case at bar, as the description of the land intended to be conveyed is specific and exact. The same considerations apply to the deed from Alfred A. Dow to the plaintiff." These quotations I think will explain many of the cases apparently sustaining the opinion of the court. The question was not, in those cases, as to the character of the deed, but what did the grantor intend to convey by his deed? In the case of Chapman v. Sims, supra, the supreme court of Mississippi very fully reviews the cases seeming to hold that the grantee in a quitclaim deed is not a bona fide purchaser, and concludes as follows: "We conclude that there is no authority for the proposition that a quitclaim deed in the chain of title deprives him who claims under it of the character of a bona fide purchaser. There are dicta and suggestions and inferences to that effect; but we deny and repudiate the proposition as unsound, and insupportable on authority, principle, or policy." The court further says: "There is no reference to the subject of a distinction between quitclaim deeds or deeds with special covenants and those with general covenants of warranty as a protection to bona fide purchasers, or as a significant circumstance to put one on inquiry, in the full and learned discussion of bona fide purchasers by the English and American editors of Leading Cases in Equity, in connection with the case of Basset v. Neworthy, 3 White & T. Lead. Eq. Cas. 8d Am. ed. 101, except to remark: 'But there is some difficulty in assenting to a dictum in Oliver v. Platt, 44 U. S. 8 How. 333, 11 L. ed. 622, that taking a deed with a covenant of special warranty is sufficient to show a doubt of the warrantor's title,' etc. The case of Le Neve v. Le Neve, 3 White & T. Lead. Eq. Cas. 127 et seq., presents an exhaustive discussion of the subject of notice, as considered by the English and American adjudications, and nowhere among them is a distinction between a quitclaim and a warranty deed adverted to as affecting a holder with notice, or putting him on inquiry. Nor is there any reason for such a

A conveyance of the right, title, and interest will convey only what the grantor has to convey. Coe v. Persons Unknown, 43 Me. 436.

A release of all right, title, and interest will not take precedence of a prior unrecorded conveyance. Nash v. Bean, 74 Me. 340.

A deed of the grantor's "now remaining" interest in the tract of land will not take precedence over a prior unrecorded deed of the tract. Eaton v. Trowbridge, 38 Mich. 454.

A conveyance of the right, title, and interest will not pass the property if it has been previously conveyed to another. Hope v. Stone, 10 Minn. 152.

One who takes a mere release of the interest of his grantor will not be protected. Tate v. Kramer, 1 Tex. Civ. App. 427.

One who takes merely a conveyance of interest is not a bona fide purchaser. Tram Lumber Co. v. Hancock, 70 Tex. 812; Lumpkin v. Adams, 74 Tex. 96.

The purchase of the chance of title will not constitute the purchaser a bona fide one. Carleton v. Lombardi, 81 Tex. 355.

While non-registered deeds are declared void by statute as to subsequent purchasers for value and without notice still the doctrine is well settled that a subsequent purchaser although for value and without actual notice who takes under a strictly quitclaim deed, that is one by which the chance of title and not the land itself is conveyed, will not be accorded the protection of the statute for the obvious reason that he contracted for the interest only that his vendor then had in land. Thorn v. Newson, 64 Tex. 161, 53 Am. Rep. 747.

Doctrine of the United States Supreme Court.

The distinction between the equity rule and that under the recording acts is well illustrated by the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. That court has uniformly refused to recognize the right of a purchaser by quitclaim deed to protection against latent equities, but as soon as the question of his right to protection under the recording acts was presented he was held to be entitled to such protection.

In Oliver v. Platt, 44 U. S. 8 How. 333, 11 L. ed. 626, in which the question was whether or not certain trusts attached to lands in the hands of defendants, the court said the deeds taken were quitclaim deeds without covenants of warranty, except against persons claiming under the grantor, "in legal effect therefore the deed conveyed no more than his right, title, and interest in the property, and under such circumstances it is difficult to conceive how distinction. A covenant of warranty does not convey title. It cannot enlarge a title conveyed by the deed in which it is inserted. It is no more than a covenant to indemnify against failure of title by eviction, actual or constructive. A quitclaim deed is as effectual to convey title as one with general warranty. . . . Such a doctrine as that a quitclaim conveyance in the chain of title affects the party who claims under it with notice of infirmities in the title would be as impolitic as it is unsupported by reason or authority." It seems to me, as stated by Judge Campbell in the above opinion, the wiser and safer course is to give full effect to our registration laws, except when parties have taken conveyances with actual notice of outstanding equities or prior conveyances, or have taken conveyances without consideration. Of course, when a party has actual notice, or has paid no consideration, it would be a fraud upon the party holding the equity or prior title to permit such a conveyance to prevail over the equity or prior conveyance. But where one is a purchaser in good faith for value, without actual notice, he ought not to be deprived of his property because of the form of the deed or deeds in his chain of title under which he claims.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (In Banc).

D. C. HICKMAN et al., Appts.,
v.

Lucy J. GREEN et al., Respts.

(123 Mo. 165.)

1. The testimony of a witness admitted without objection cannot be excluded because the other party to the transaction was dead.
2. Notice to a special agent employed to make a certain exchange of property without any authority to pass upon the title or matters connected with the title to the property obtained in the exchange is not imputed to the principal—especially when the agent was acting for the other party also, and his concealment of the facts was a fraud on his principal.
3. The principal is not chargeable with the knowledge of the agent in relation to a fraud which he perpetrates in collusion with the other party.
4. Possession of premises by a woman who furnishes to her vendee as evidence of her title a quitclaim deed to herself with an abstract showing a perfect record title in her grantor, does not charge her vendee with notice of a prior unrecorded warranty deed from the same grantor to her and the heirs of her body.

5. A quitclaim deed to a vendor who is in possession of the premises from one who has the record title is sufficient to give his vendee the right to claim the protection of the recording laws against a prior unrecorded deed, by which such vendor was given a life estate only.
6. A decision will not be reversed merely because a seemingly pertinent question was excluded, if it is not shown what the party proposed to prove.

(Sherwood, Brace, and Burgess, JJ., dissent.)

(June 18, 1894.)

APPEAL by complainants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Audrain County in favor of defendants in a proceeding brought to have reinstated a deed which was alleged to have been destroyed in fraud of complainant's rights. Affirmed.

Statement by Gantt, J.:

This is a suit in equity to restore a dethe grantee can claim protection as a bona fide purchaser for a valuable consideration without notice against any title prior to that of the grantor which attached itself as an unextinguished trust to the land."

In May v. Le Claire, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 232, 20 L. ed. 53, the court says the evidence "satisfies us" that the grantee had full notice of the frauds and the infirmities of the grantor's title. Whether this was so or not, having acquired his title by a quitclaim deed, he cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser without notice. In such cases the conveyance passes the title as the grantor held it, and the grantee takes only what the grantor could lawfully convey.

In Alexander v. Rodriguez, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 323, 20 L. ed. 406, the court says that a purchaser by quitclaim deed cannot have the immunities which the position of bona fide purchaser without notice gives to those entitled to its protection, as against the right of a grantor by a deed absolute to have the same declared a mortgage.

A purchaser by quitclaim deed will be bound by an estoppel which prevents his grantor from asserting his title to the premises. Dickerson v. Colgrove, 100 U. S. 578, 25 L. ed. 618.

In Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 494, 25 L. ed. 1065, where one in whom the record title stood had es-topped himself to set it up as against subsequent purchasers from one shown by the records to be a mortgagee, quitclaimed to the representative of an attorney who discovered the defect in the title while examining the title for a client, the court in holding that such title could not prevail over that of the client says no one taking a quitclaim deed can stand in the relation of bona fide purchaser to the property.

In Mansfield v. Excelsior Refinery Co., 135 U. S. 326, 34 L. ed. 162, the court recognizes the Illinois doctrine as declared in McConnel v. Reed, 5 Ill. 117, 38 Am. Dec. 124.

Where the title may be conveyed by a quitclaim deed and a deed of that description is accepted after payment of full value for the land the purchaser is entitled to rely upon the records so far as outstanding claims of third persons are concerned. McDonald v. Belding, 145 U. S. 492, 36 L. ed. 788.

A purchaser by quitclaim is entitled to protection under a statute providing that all instruments shall take effect from the time of recording as to "all subsequent purchasers in good faith, without notice." Moelle v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 21, 37 L. ed. 850.

In the latter case the court said: "The doctrine expressed in many cases that the grantee in a quitclaim deed cannot be treated as a bona fide purstroyed deed from J. G. Lakenan and wife to Mrs. Francis D. Hickman for her life, remainder to the natural heirs of her body, conveying to them a parcel of land in the city of Mexico, Audrain county, Mo., 90 feet front by 270 feet deep, being the north part of and taken off of the north side of lot No. 85 of Mrs. Sparks' Southern addition to said city of Mexico. It was alleged in the amended petition, and sustained by the proofs, that in 1886 Lakenan and wife, by warranty deed, conveyed said land to Mrs. Hickman and her bodily heirs, and that said deed was never recorded. In May, 1889, Mrs. Hickman and her children were in the possession of this lot occupying it as a residence. At the same time Mrs. Green, the defendant, was the owner in fee of a small farm of 40 acres near Mexico, on which she was residing with her husband and codefendant herein. Mrs. Hickman was desirous of moving to the country, and Mrs. Green preferred a residence in the city, and, thereupon, each of them employed the real-estate firm of Moore & Nelson to effect the exchange of these two properties. Their contracts with Moore & Nelson were in writing. Mrs. Hickman's contract with them was executed May 14, 1889, and Mrs. Green's on May 16th. In Mrs. Green's contract the land was placed with Moore & Nelson to exchange for Mrs. Hickman's lot. Mrs. Green asserted that she was the owner in fee of the 40 acres, and she agreed to take Mrs. Hickman's lot therefor, and give possession November 1, 1889, the agency to continue for one month from its date. Moore & Nelson were "authorized to sell and contract under seal with purchaser for said premises according to the price and term of payment above written, or any price or term which we may agree to accept, other than the above." Their commission was fixed at $50 if the exchange was effected, whether by them or another. Mrs. Hickman's contract was in all respects, except dates, exactly like Mrs. Green's. She represented that she was the owner in fee of her lot, and authorized the agents to exchange it for Mrs. Green's 40 acres, and for the same commission and upon the same stipulation, and give possession at "any time." Each owner valued her property at the time at $2,000, and there is no evidence that one was not as valuable as the other. Mrs. Hickman caused an abstract of her title to the lot to be made, and as by the abstract the title would appear in Lakenan, whose deed to her she had not recorded, and which, if recorded, would show she only had a life estate, she obtained from Lakenan and wife another deed,—a quitclaim deed and special warranty,—on May 23, 1889, conveying the title in the lot to herself without the words of limitation to her bodily heirs. Mrs. Green's title to the 40 acres has not been disputed. Mrs. Hickman, through her agents, Messrs. Moore & Nelson, gave Mrs. Green the abstract to the lot, and Lakenan's quitclaim deed, and Mrs. Green submitted the abstract and deed to M. Y. Duncan, Esq., for his opinion on the title as shown by the abstract and deed. He advised her that Mrs. Hickman could make her a good title, and accordingly Mrs. Hickman made Mrs. Green a warranty deed to the lot in town, and Mrs. Green and husband made Mrs. Hickman a warranty deed to the 40 acres, conveying a life estate to Mrs. Hickman, remainder in fee to her bodily heirs. Soon after the deeds were exchanged, Mrs. Hickman, with her children, the plaintiffs, moved out of her town house and took possession of the 40 acres, and lived on it until she died, and Mrs. Green took possession of and moved into the house in town. After the deeds were exchanged, Mrs. Hickman, her adult son, Thomas Hickman, J. G. Lakenan, and Nelson, of the firm of Moore & Nelson, in Mexico, and Nelson, in their presence, and at Mrs. Hickman's request, destroyed the unrecorded warranty deed from Lakenan and wife to Mrs. Hickman and her bodily heirs. The plaintiffs in this cause are D. C. Hickman, Mary L. Hickman, and Mariah Hickman, chaser does not seem to rest upon any sound principle. It is asserted upon the assumption that the form of the instrument, that the grantor merely releases to the grantee his claim, whatever it may be, without any warranty of its value, or only passes whatever interest he may have at the time, indicates that there may be other and outstanding claims or interests which may possibly affect the title of the property, and, therefore, it is said that the grantee, in accepting a conveyance of that kind, cannot be a bona fide purchaser and entitled to protection as such; and that he is in fact thus notified by his grantor that there may be some defect in his title and he must take it at his risk. This assumption we do not think justified by the language of such deeds or the general opinion of conveyancers. There may be many reasons why the holder of property may refuse to accompany his conveyance of it with an express warranty of the soundness of its title or its freedom from the claims of others, or to execute a conveyance in such form as to imply a warranty of any kind even when the title is known to be perfect. . . . It would be unreasonable to hold that, for his inability to secure any other form of conveyance, he should be denied the position and character of a bona fide purchaser, however free, in fact, his conduct in the purchase may have been from any imputation of the want of good faith. . . . There is in this country no difference in their efficacy and operative force between conveyances in the form of release and quitclaim and those in the form of grant, bargain, and sale. . . . If in either case the grantee takes the deed with notice of an outstanding conveyance of the premises from the grantor, or of the execution by him of obligations to make such conveyance of the premises, or to create a lien thereon, he takes the property subject to the operation of such outstanding conveyance and obligation, and cannot claim protection against them as a bona fide purchaser. But in either case if the grantee takes the deed without notice of such outstanding conveyance or obligation respecting the property, or notice of facts which, if followed up, would lead to a knowledge of such outstanding conveyance or equity, he is entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser upon showing that the consideration stipulated has been paid, and that such consideration was a fair price for the claim or interest designated. The mere fact that in either case the conveyance is unaccompanied by any warranty of title and against incumbrances or liens, does not raise a presumption of the want of bona fides on the part of the purchaser in the transaction."

adult children and heirs of Mrs. Frances Hickman, who died April 2, 1890, and prior to the institution of this suit. The defendants are Mrs. Green and her husband, Lakenan and wife, and J. T. Hickman and James L. Hickman, adult sons of Mrs. Hickman, who refused to become plaintiffs, and Mrs. Josie Hickman, the widow of a deceased son, William T. Hickman, and his two minor children, William T. and Sadie Hickman. At the request of plaintiff, the circuit court made its finding of facts, upon certain points in the case, as follows: "I find that the witness Nelson was the agent of both Mrs. Hickman and Mrs. Green at the time and before the transfer of the deeds was made between Mrs. Hickman and Mrs. Green; that he was agent only for the purpose of effecting an exchange of the lands between the parties, and was not authorized by Mrs. Green to judge of the goodness of the title she was getting from Mrs. Hickman, nor did he presume to act for her in that capacity; that Mrs. Green had in her employ an attorney, M. Y. Duncan, Esq., for the purpose of passing upon the title to the land she was getting; that Duncan, before the trade, did pass upon the title of Mrs. Hickman to the land traded Mrs. Green, and pronounced it good. I further find that Lakenan and Nelson destroyed the deed from Lakenan and wife to Mrs. Hickman [the deed that provided for a life estate in Mrs. Hickman, and remainder to her children], that this was done after the delivery of the quitclaim deed; that Nelson, before the consummation of the trade, knew, or had an opportunity of knowing, the contents of the destroyed deed. I further find Mrs. Green, before the trade, knew that Mrs. Hickman, deceased, was living on, and had possession of, the 90x270 feet lot traded Mrs. Green, and also knew that Mrs. Hickman claimed to be the owner of it, and, further, that the destroyed deed was never on record; that Mrs. Green, upon inquiry as to the title of Mrs. Hickman to the lot mentioned, had delivered to her by Mrs.

Hickman [was furnished] an abstract of the title to said lot, taken from the records in the recorder's office of Audrain county, together with the quitclaim deed from Lakenan and wife to Mrs. Hickman, which showed an absolute estate in Mrs. Hickman to the said lot, which abstract and quitclaim deed Mrs. Green caused to be examined by a competent attorney, Duncan, who pronounced the title good. These are the only facts the plaintiffs desire me to find in writing, and the conclusion of law I draw from the facts as above found, together with others, is, Mrs. Green, being without notice of the existence, contents, or destruction of the first unrecorded deed from Lakenan and wife to Mrs. Hickman, and having exercised proper care and diligence in the examination of the title to said lot, is not affected by its fraudulent destruction, but takes a good title to said lot." To this finding plaintiffs duly excepted. The circuit court thereupon found the issues for defendants, and rendered judgment accordingly. A motion for new trial was made and overruled, and plaintiffs have appealed to this court. The errors assigned in this court are, briefly, that the circuit court erred in excluding the evidence of Frank R. Jesse, Esq., offered by plaintiffs, and in admitting the evidence of Mrs. Green herself, and in its finding of facts.

Mr. John M. Barker, for appellant:

The communications of Mrs. Green to Mr. Jesse were not privileged, because she was contemplating wrongdoing.

Mo. Stat. 1889, §§ 8648, 8660, 8661; State v. McOheaney, 16 Mo. App. 359, and cases cited; Charlton v. Coombes, 33 L. J. Ch. 284, cited on page 108 of 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law.

And the court ought to have excluded her evidence because the other party was dead.

Meier v. Thieman, 90 Mo. 488.

Notice to her attorney, Mr. Duncan, was notice to her. Her agent Mr. Nelson, also knew it.

Livermore v. Blood, 40 Mo. 48; Bank of Com-

Where not protected.

In the following decisions the grantee has been held not to be entitled to protection:

In Runyon v. Smith, 18 Fed. Rep. 579, the rule in the United States Supreme Court in equity proceedings was applied to deprive the grantee of the benefit of the recording acts, and the judge who delivered the opinion expressed his preference for that rule, although the conveyance in the case was simply of the right, title, and interest of the grantor.

In Dodge v. Briggs, 27 Fed. Rep. 161, the court, upon the authority of Oliver v. Platt, decides that a quitclaim grantee is not entitled to the protection of the recording acts.

Prior to 1876 a quitclaim deed gave the holder no right to rely on the recording acts in Minnesota. Dunn v. Barnum, 10 U. S. App. 83, 51 Fed. Rep. 355.

The purchaser by quitclaim deed is not protected by a statute which provides that every conveyance not recorded shall be void as against any subsequent purchaser in good faith and for valuable consideration of the same real estate or any portion thereof whose conveyance shall be first duly recorded. The court says: "It is only the purchaser of the same real estate or any portion thereof who by his priority of record cuts out the title 29 L. R. A.

of a prior purchaser. For when the second purchaser obtains by quitclaim deed only what his grantor had at the time when such deed was made he is not a purchaser of the same real estate which his grantor had previously conveyed away and therefore no longer has," and besides the grantee in a quitclaim deed is not a purchaser in good faith. Marshall v. Roberts, 18 Minn. 405, 10 Am. Rep. 201.

But the rule was subsequently changed there by statute. See cases cited under next subdivision of note.

A quitclaim grantee acquires no title as against prior unrecorded deeds. Shepherd v. Hunsacker, 1 Tex. Unreported Cas. 578.

McAdow v. Black, 6 Mont. 601, applies the doctrine of the United States Supreme Court cases in favor of an unrecorded mortgage.

In Utley v. Fee, 38 Kan. 683, it is stated that there is much reason for holding that one who procures a title by virtue of a quitclaim deed cannot be considered as an innocent or bona fide purchaser.

But the present doctrine in Kansas is otherwise.

A purchaser by quitclaim deed is not entitled to protection against unrecorded deeds. Fries v. Griffin (Fla.) 17 So. Rep. 64.

A grantee under a recorded quitclaim deed is submerce v. Hoeder, 88 Mo. 37, 57 Am. Rep. 359.

The burden of showing that the defendant was an innocent purchaser rested upon her, and she did not show it. On the contrary, the facts and circumstances showed conclusively that she had notice, at least of sufficient facts, to put her on inquiry of Mr. Lakenan, if she had any wish to know.

Davis v. Ownsby, 14 Mo. 170, 55 Am. Dec. 105; Maupin v. Emmons, 47 Mo. 304; 3 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. 317; Drey v. Doyle, 99 Mo. 459.

This case of all cases is one where this court should intervene with its authority to correct the erroneous finding of the trial court.

See Whitsett v. Ransom, 79 Mo. 259; Spohn v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 87 Mo. 74; Garrett v. Greenwell, 92 Mo. 120.

Mr. George S. Grover also for appellants.

Mr. George Robertson, for respondents:

The evidence of Mr. Jesse, the attorney to whom Mrs. Green carried the abstract title to the lands, was inadmissible.

Rev. Stat. 1889, § 8924; Cross v. Riggins, 50 Mo. 335.

Mrs. Green had no knowledge of the unrecorded deed from Lakenan to Mrs. Hickman and bodily heirs. She was therefore an innocent purchaser and took good title as against the whole world.

Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2420.

The deed from Lakenan to Mrs. Hickman conveys a good title to those unaffected with actual notice.

Munson v. Ensor, 94 Mo. 504; Ebersole v. Rankin, 102 Mo. 488.

If the authority of the agent is confined to obtaining the execution of the deed the notice of the agent is not imputable to the principal.

Devlin, Deeds, § 779; Wyllie v. Pollen, 82 L. J. Ch. 782.

If he thought by communicating this fact to Mrs. Green that the exchange would not be consummated and he withheld it from her in order that he would be able to collect the two $50 fees provided for in these contracts with Mrs. Green and Mrs. Hickman, then he committed the fraud for his own benefit and the principal, Mrs. Green, would not be affected with any notice that he had.

Devlin, Deeds, § 781.

Notice to an agent to bind the principal must be within the scope of the agent's employment and notice to him of any fact outside the scope of his agency will not affect his principal.

Trentor v. Pothan, 46 Minn. 298; Roach v. Karr, 18 Kan. 529, 26 Am. Rep. 788; Smith v. Board of Water Comrs. of Norwich, 33 Conn. 208; Congar v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 24 Wis. 157, 1 Am. Rep. 164; Innerness v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 139 Mass. 332, 52 Am. Rep. 710; Dillaway v. Butler, 135 Mass. 479; Atlantic Cotton Mills v. Indian Orchard Mills, 147 Mass. 268; Allen v. South Boston R. Co. 5 L. R. A. 716, 150 Mass. 200.

Mrs. Lucy J. Green was a competent witness.

Coughlin v. Haeussler, 50 Mo. 126; Orr v. Rode, 101 Mo. 887.

By some of the heirs conveying away their interest and all of the others retaining theirs they have not brought themselves within the rule that "he who seeks equity must do equity," and are not entitled to any relief in a court of conscience.

Kline v. Vogel, 90 Mo. 239; Deichmann v. Deichmann, 49 Mo. 108; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 388.

Notice to the agent is not notice to the principal when the agent acts for himself, in his own interest and adversely to that of his principal.

Frenkel v. Hudson, 82 Ala. 158, 60 Am. Rep. 736; Wickersham v. Chicago Zinc Co. 18 Kan. 481, 26 Am. Rep. 784; Reid v. Bank of Mobile, 70 Ala. 199.

Where the agent is in collusion with a third person to defraud the principal, the latter will not be responsible for the knowledge of the agent in relation to such fraud.

ordinate to a prior unrecorded mortgage by his grantor. The grantee is no more entitled to plead the registry act against the mortgage than is the mortgagor himself. Snow v. Lake, 20 Fla. 656, 51 Am. Rep. 625.

The holder of a mere quitclaim deed cannot be regarded as a bona fide purchaser for value without notice, and "we see no reason why such purchaser should be allowed the aid of the registry statute to avoid a prior mortgage which has not been recorded, any more than the aid of the chancery court for his protection." Smith v. Branch Bank at Mobile, 21 Ala. 125.

But in Barclift v. Lillie, 82 Ala. 319, the court in holding that the holder of the quitclaim deed was not subject to a remote vendor's lien on the property because the vendor had placed himself in such a position that it was more equitable that he should lose the money than that the purchaser should, refuses to answer the question whether the fact of taking a quitclaim deed deprives a person of the character of bona fide purchaser, and states that there are authorities both ways.

Where entitled to protection.

In the following cases the grantee is held to be entitled to protection:

The holder of a quitclaim deed has a right to rely 29 L. R. A.

on the records. White v. McGarry, 2 Flipp. 572. In that case the court in considering the effect of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States said: "We are of opinion that in neither of them did the court intend to lay down the broad doctrine asserted by complainant's counsel. The question of the effect produced by the recording laws is not touched by either of the decisions. In transactions where no question of recorded titles is involved the rule to which reference has been made would apply, but in our opinion it does not apply when there are recording laws."

A quitclaim deed received in good faith and for valuable consideration which is first recorded will prevail over a deed of older execution which is subsequently recorded. Graff v. Middleton, 43 Cal. 341; Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 385.

One accepting a quitclaim deed without notice of prior rights will be as fully protected as if it had contained full covenants of warranty, except where it appears from the conveyance itself that it was not the intention of the grantor to convey the land itself. Bradbury v. Davis, 5 Colo. 265.

In McConnell v. Reed, 5 Ill. 117, 38 Am. Dec. 124, the court says that the prior record of the quitclaim deed will give it preference over one previously executed but which is subsequently recorded, but it decided that in that case the terms of

United States Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Minch, 53 N. Y. 144; De Kay v. Hackensack Water Co. 38 N. J. Eq. 158; Barnes v. Trenton Gas Light Co. 27 N. J. Eq. 83.

Gantt, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. No objection was made as to the competency of Mrs. Green when she was sworn. She was examined in her own behalf by her counsel, and cross-examined by plaintiffs' counsel at length, without a suggestion that she was incompetent to testify because of Mrs. Hickman's death. After all the evidence was closed, the plaintiffs moved the court to strike out or disregard all the evidence of Mrs. Green, because the other party to the trade was dead, which motion the court overruled. It is apparent at a glance that, if Mrs. Green was incompetent for the reason assigned, plaintiffs were as well aware of it before she testified as afterwards. They cannot then urge that they had no opportunity to interpose an objection. Having permitted her to testify without objection the subsequent motion to exclude came entirely too late. Such a practice is not tolerated in our courts. Maxwell v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 85 Mo. 95; State v. Hope, 100 Mo. 347, 8 L. R. A. 608; 1 Rice, Ev. §§ 258, 259; Quin v. Lloyd, 41 N. Y. 349; People v. Chacon, 102 N. Y. 669; Berry v. Hartzell, 91 Mo. 132.

2. The important question in this case is that of notice to Mrs. Green of the execution and delivery of the warranty deed from Lakenan and wife to Mrs. Hickman for life, remainder to her bodily heirs. It is asserted by plaintiffs that she had direct actual notice, and, if not, she is bound by the knowledge which Nelson confessedly had of the existence of that deed prior to the exchange of the deeds of Mrs. Green and Mrs. Hickman. As to the direct evidence tending to show that Mrs. Green knew of the prior deed, Lakenan alone testifies. His story is that some days, perhaps a week, before the trade between Mrs. Hickman and Mrs. Green was consummated, Mr. and Mrs. Green passed him on the square in Mexico, and one of them,—he don't remember which,—asked him what kind of deed he had made Mrs. Hickman. He says: "I told them my best impression was I had deeded it to Dr. Hickman and wife and her bodily heirs." Mrs. Green, in her evidence, denied that she ever met Lakenan as he stated, or talked with him, and emphatically denies that she ever heard, or knew, of the prior deed when she traded for the lot. This made a clear and distinct issue for the trier of facts. The trial judge had these two witnesses before him. He observed their manner and bearing, and he chose to believe Mrs. Green in preference to Lakenan. Upon an issue so sharp and distinct, and evidence so contradictory, we defer to the finding of the circuit court. But it is said that Mrs. Green is bound by the notice imparted to her agent, Nelson. By the terms of Mrs. Green's contract with Moore & Nelson, she simply employed them to effect an exchange with Mrs. Hickman. The agency was in no sense a general one. They were not employed to sell or convey the land to any one but Mrs. Hickman, or upon any terms except those specifically named in the instrument, or such as she might afterwards agree to. She did not employ them to examine Mrs. Hickman's title. On the contrary, she consulted Mr. Duncan, her attorney, on the title. Nor is there any evidence in the record that Moore & Nelson prepared the abstract or passed on the title. The duty of furnishing the abstract devolved upon Mrs. Hickman. It does not appear, then, that it was within the scope of the agency of Moore & Nelson to pass upon Mrs. Hickman's title, or that they did so, and it is firmly settled that notice to the agent, to bind the principal, must be within the scope of the agent's employment. Mechanics Bank v. Schaumburg, 58 Mo. 228; Hayward v. National Ins. Co. 52 Mo. 181, 14 Am. Rep. 400. By the Statute of Frauds in this state, section 5186, the second deed did not necessarily embrace the land previously conveyed, and therefore it did not operate to the prejudice of the first purchaser, and the dictum in that case was recognized in Butterfield v. Smith, 11 Ill. 485.

In Harpham v. Little, 59 Ill. 500, the prior Illinois cases are explained as holding that a prior unrecorded deed containing the usual covenants of warranty will hold against a subsequent quitclaim deed to the same land and recorded, and which contains express limitations against a second grant of the same land, or which must be construed as not embracing the land previously conveyed.

A recorded unrestricted quitclaim deed takes precedence of a prior unrecorded warranty deed of the same premises by the same grantor. Brown v. Banner Coal & Coal Oil Co. 97 Ill. 214, 37 Am. Rep. 105; Stokes v. Riley (Ill.) 6 West. Rep. 784.

A recorded quitclaim deed taken by a purchaser in good faith for value will prevail over a prior unrecorded deed where the subsequent purchaser had no notice of the prior deed and could not have discovered its existence by an investigation of the public records or by the exercise of reasonable diligence, in making proper examinations and inquiries. Merrill v. Hutchinson, 45 Kan. 59.

29 L. R. A.

A quitclaim deed is only a circumstance bearing on the question of the bona fides of the purchase. Kuapp v. Bailey, 70 Me. 195.

Where a mortgagee of land has the legal title such title may be conveyed by a deed of release duly executed and recorded to one who has no notice of the prior unrecorded assignment of the mortgage. Welch v. Priest, 8 Allen, 165.

A deed of all the grantor's right, title, and interest in certain lands will prevail over an unrecorded prior deed of the same premises. Dow v. Whitney, 147 Mass. 1.

By statute in Minnesota the holder of a quitclaim deed is entitled to the same protection from the recording acts as the holder of other kinds of deeds. Strong v. Lynn, 38 Minn. 315.

The quitclaim grantee is entitled to protection. Sharp v. Cheatham, 88 Mo. 496, 57 Am. Rep. 433.

A purchaser for value by a quitclaim deed is as much within the protection of the registry act as one who becomes a purchaser by warranty deed. Munson v. Ensor, 94 Mo. 504. In that case the court says: "Cases of this and other courts are often cited as showing a different result, but from a careful consideration it will be seen that most of them have to do with equities which arise from transac-

"no contract for the sale of lands made by an agent shall be binding upon the principal unless such agent is authorized in writing to make such contract." This contract, then, must be the measure of the authority conferred, and by its terms it is limited to the special matter of the exchange of Mrs. Green's 40 acres for Mrs. Hickman's lot. Whatever difficulty may arise in determining, in some cases, whether the agency is general or special, we think it obvious that this was a special agency, if Mrs. Green was competent to appoint an agent for any purpose. Mechem, Agency, §§ 284, 285. In fact, so far as Moore & Nelson were concerned, it was taken for granted that Mrs. Hickman had a good title in fee, as she had represented to them when she employed them. The examination of her title was not a part of the duty imposed upon them by their contract with Mrs. Green, and any information they obtained, outside of her contract with them, is not to be imputed to her. But there are other considerations which forbid that their knowledge of this deed should be imputed to Mrs. Green. Moore & Nelson were also the agents of Mrs. Hickman. They had assumed a position antagonistic to Mrs. Green. They obtained their knowledge of this deed while serving the opposite party, and not in her employment, and it must be remembered that upon the consummation of this exchange they were to receive $100 commission, otherwise nothing. If they concealed from Mrs. Green what they and Mrs. Hickman knew, the exchange would be made; if they disclosed the existence of that deed, and the infirmity of Mrs. Hickman's title, the presumption was that Mrs. Green, as an ordinarily sensible woman, would not transfer her property, in which she had a perfect title in fee, for a mere life estate in property no more valuable. Their obligation to Mrs. Hickman might prevent their disclosing the weakness of her title, and the infirmity they had discovered in serving her and themselves, not Mrs. Green. Johnston v. Shortridge, 93 Mo. 227.

If this concealment was a fraud, it was committed in the interest of Mrs. Hickman and themselves. In the late case of Merchants' Nat. Bank of Kansas City v. Lovitt, 114 Mo. 519, it was held that, while it was a general rule that notice of a fact acquired by an agent while transacting the business of his principal is notice to his principal, and this rule was alike applicable to corporations and individuals, and that the agent was presumed to communicate said fact to his principal, the reason of the rule ceased when the agent acquired such knowledge while acting for himself, and not his principal, and in such a case the rule ought not to apply. In that case the court cited and approved the case of Innerarity v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 189 Mass. 382, 53 Am. Rep. 710, in which it was said: "While the knowledge of an agent is ordinarily to be imputed to the principal, it would appear now to be well established that there is an exception to the construction or imputation of notice from the agent to the principal in case of such a contract by the agent as raises a clear presumption that he would not communicate the fact in controversy, as where the communication of the fact would necessarily prevent the consummation of a fraudulent scheme which the agent was engaged in perpetrating." See also to the same effect, Frenkel v. Hudson, 83 Ala. 158, 60 Am. Rep. 786; Kennedy v. Green, 8 Myl. & K. 699; Cave v. Cave, L. R. 15 Ch. Div. 689; Re European Bank, L. R. 5 Ch. 358; Atlantic Nat. Bank v. Harris, 118 Mass. 147; Dillaway v. Butler, 135 Mass. 479; Allen v. South Boston R. Co. 150 Mass. 200, 5 L. R. A. 716. When the agent is in collusion with a third-party person to defraud the principal, the latter will not be responsible for the knowledge of the agent in relation to such fraud. National L. Ins. Co. of United States v. Minch, 53 N. Y. 145. The conduct of Nelson in destroying the deed with his hands, by the direction of Mrs. Hickman, in the absence of Mrs. Green, brings this case peculiarly within the principle of tions or a state of facts not required to be spread upon the records, or from some peculiar expression in the quitclaim deed.

A quitclaim deed takes priority over a former unrecorded deed to the same property. Fox v. Hall, 74 Mo. 815, 41 Am. Rep. 316; Boogher v. Neece, 75 Mo. 388; Willingham v. Hardin, 75 Mo. 429; Ebersole v. Rankin, 102 Mo. 483.

There is an exception to the rule where the equities are of such a character as the registry acts will apply to. Campbell v. Laclede Gas-Light Co. 84 Mo. 352.

A quitclaim is within the provisions of the recording acts. Wilhelm v. Wilken, 75 Hun. 532.

A bona fide purchaser without notice under a quitclaim deed is protected by the registration act. Morris v. Daniels, 35 Ohio St. 406.

A recorded quitclaim deed takes precedence. Cutler v. James, 64 Wis. 173, 54 Am. Rep. 603.

In Chapman v. Sims, 53 Miss. 163, it is said if the vendor has a good title a covenant of warranty is useless to the grantee, but if the mortgagee doubts it or does not know of it he quite naturally exacts a covenant of warranty for his indemnity and there is force in the suggestion of Mr. Rawle that requiring a covenant of warranty if any presumption arises from it is rather calculated to suggest 29 L. R. A.

either a doubt of the title or carelessness and indifference about it, and a looking to the covenant of warranty for indemnity against possible failure of title.

From the above cases it will be seen that aside from the courts which have followed and which may perhaps have considered themselves bound to follow the inapplicable doctrine of Oliver v. Platt, the only court which is definitely committed to the doctrine that a quitclaim purchaser cannot rely on the records is Florida. To that must now be added South Dakota because of the decision in PARKER v. RANDOLPH, and probably also Iowa. But the condition of the law in that state is so anomalous as to require a statement of it alone.

The Iowa doctrine.

It was first held that a purchaser by quitclaim is protected by a statute that no instrument affecting real estate is of any validity against subsequent purchasers for a valuable consideration without notice unless recorded. Pettingill v. Devin, 35 Iowa, 344.

Then the court held that the holder of a quitclaim deed is not protected against outstanding equities. Watson v. Phelps, 40 Iowa, 432. And the same ruling was made in Postel v. Palmer, 71 Iowa, 157.

these cases and it would be unjust and unreasonable to impute Nelson's notice to Mrs. Green, by mere construction, under the facts of this case. So that, laying out of view altogether the fact that Mrs. Green was during all these transactions a married woman, and incapable of appointing an agent in respect to property not her separate estate, we do not think she was bound by Nelson's knowledge of the existence of Lakenan's prior deed. But it was held in Henry v. Sneed, 99 Mo. 407, in an opinion by Sherwood, J., that it would be assumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the wife was seised of a legal estate in fee, and not of a separate estate; and it was held in Wilcox v. Todd, 64 Mo. 888, and subsequently followed in Hall v. Callahan, 66 Mo. 316; Hord v. Taubman, 79 Mo. 101, and Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1, that a "married woman could not have an agent as to real estate which was not her separate estate." If incapable of having an agent, it would seem utterly illogical to bind her by notice to one who was not permitted by the law, as announced in these decisions, to bear that relation to her. Cook v. Walling, 117 Ind. 9, 2 L. R. A. 769. Much stress is laid upon the fact that when Mrs. Hickman and Mrs. Green began to trade the title of record was in Lakenan, with Mrs. Hickman in possession. This is true, but there is absolutely no evidence that Mrs. Green knew anything whatever about this title of record. Conceding that Mrs. Hickman's possession was evidence of notice of her title, how does that affect Mrs. Green? When the negotiations advanced far enough, Mrs. Hickman asserted in writing that she was the owner in fee, and furnished the abstract of title which showed a perfect title in Lakenan, and along with it she furnished a quitclaim deed from him to herself, with a special warranty. If Mrs. Green had her suspicions aroused by the quitclaim deed, she very sensibly and naturally submitted the abstract and deed to her counsel, and desired to know if Mrs. Hickman could convey her a good title. As the title was perfect in Lakenan he advised Mrs. Green that Lakenan's quitclaim conveyed to Mrs. Hickman a perfect title, and she could convey a good title, according to the decisions of this court in Fox v. Hall, 74 Mo. 815, 41 Am. Rep. 816; Boogher v. Neece, 75 Mo. 888; Willingham v. Hardin, Id. 429; Munson v. Ensor, 94 Mo. 504; Ebereols v. Rankin, 103 Mo. 488, and Hope v. Blair, 105 Mo. 90. He advised and required the Lakenan deed to be recorded and put on the abstract, and that was done, and Mrs. Hickman warranted the title to Mrs. Green. Her information, then, after examining in the usual and proper way, to wit, by requiring an abstract, and seeking the advice of competent counsel, disclosed that Mrs. Hickman was the owner in fee of the lot, and her possession was consistent with her paper title, and, having purchased it for value, she is as much within the protection of the statute for recording deeds as one who purchased from one having a warranty deed, and she acquired the title against the prior unrecorded deed of which she had no notice. Ebereols v. Rankin, supra. We attach no importance to the fact that Mrs. Green's deed to Mrs. Hickman conveyed a life estate to her, with remainder to her bodily heirs, as it was, no doubt, drawn in this manner at Mrs. Hickman's suggestion, as she had a right to have it conveyed in any way she preferred. When it is considered that one of these heirs, J. T. Hickman, an adult son, stood by and saw the prior deed destroyed without protest, that all the grown children moved to the Green property, and that two of them have since mortgaged their shares in it, with full knowledge of all these facts, and that not one of them gave Mrs. Green notice until after the deeds had passed and possession given, there is little to commend in this action, so far as the adults are concerned.

3. It remains only to notice the complaint that the circuit court refused to let Mr. Jesse, an attorney, answer two questions, put

In Smith v. Dunton, 42 Iowa, 48, the principle of the Watson Case, was applied to a case of defective record because the name of the grantor was indexed in the wrong place.

In Besore v. Dosh, 43 Iowa, 211, the same principle was applied to a quitclaim purchaser of land held under a tax deed which was void because of absence of a valid sale.

In Springer v. Bartle, 46 Iowa, 888, the question was as to the validity of the tax title held under a quitclaim deed, the evidence showing that it was originally acquired by fraud, and the court said that it was claimed that a ruling contrary to the Watson Case was made in the Pettingill Case, but continued: "This is a grievous mistake; no such point was presented in that case. The principle decided was that under the recording act a person holding under a quitclaim deed acquired a prior right to one claiming under a bond for a deed of which he did not have notice. In that case the person executing a quitclaim deed had the legal title, but in the case at bar (the title quitclaimed) was tainted with fraud against which the quitclaim deed did not protect the plaintiff. Besides which the statute expressly provides that such purchaser as Devin in the Pettingill Case is protected against the prior unrecorded conveyance."

39 L. R. A.

Then various decisions were made as follows:

The holder of a quitclaim deed is not protected against outstanding equities. Wightman v. Spofford, 56 Iowa, 145.

In Kaiser v. Waggoner, 59 Iowa, 41, where it was sought to reach certain land which was alleged to have been transferred in fraud of a judgment, the court said the grantee is not a bona fide purchaser and under the circumstances it was incumbent on her in order to cut off the equity of the plaintiff to establish that she had paid value for the land without notice.

In Raymond v. Morrison, 59 Iowa, 371, the court after stating that it was inclined to think that there was sufficient notice to prevent the purchase from being bona fide, said that "he is not entitled to protection for the reason that he held under a quitclaim deed only," but as the question of his right was not involved, while that of his grantee was, such statement is not of controlling force.

In Laraway v. Larue, 68 Iowa, 412, the question was as to the validity of a quitclaim against one in possession of the property claiming to hold adversely to his grantor; and the court after intimating that the evidence showed that he had knowledge of the claim of the one in possession says: "A conclusive answer is" that he held under a quit-to him by plaintiffs. He was first asked to state "what, if anything, Mrs. Green had ever said to him about the lost or destroyed deed;" and, without waiting for an answer, he was immediately asked "if she didn't come to him and ask him to destroy the deed, and supply it with another deed." Before these questions, or either of them, were answered, counsel for defendant, by permission, made inquiry, and developed that Mr. Jesse, at that time, was engaged with Mr. Duncan in defending a case in the circuit court for defendant, and afterwards in this court, reported as Davis v. Green, 102 Mo. 170, 11 L. R. A. 90, and that, if she came to him at all, she came to him as her attorney; and thereupon the court sustained the objection to the question as one of privilege. The question was not pressed. No offer was made to show that Mr. Jesse would, if permitted, testify to any material fact. It has been ruled again and again that this court will not reverse a case merely because a seemingly pertinent question is excluded, but the party must go further, and state what he proposes to prove, so that the court can judge of its materiality and relevancy, otherwise it is said the cause might be reversed, and upon retrial the matter elicited by the question may be immaterial and incompetent. Aull Sav. Bank v. Aull, 80 Mo. 199; Jackson v. Hardin, 83 Mo. 175; State v. Leland, 82 Mo. 260; Krazberger v. Roiter, 91 Mo. 404, 60 Am. Rep. 262; Berthold v. O'Hara, 121 Mo. 88. The mere denial of this question is not sufficient ground to reverse a cause otherwise well tried.

The judgment is affirmed.

Black, Ch. J., and Barclay and Macfarlane, JJ., concur.

Sherwood, J., dissenting:

"This is an equitable proceeding to obtain a decree restoring a destroyed deed which gave to the bodily heirs of Frances D. Hickman a remainder in fee in a certain lot in Mexico after the expiration of their mother's life estate in said lot. The petition also asked for other and further relief. In 1886, Lakenan and wife, for a consideration of $2,000, conveyed to Frances D. Hickman, for her life, with remainder to the natural heirs of her body, the lot in litigation; being a lot 90 feet by 270 feet, to wit, the north part of lot 35, Sparks addition, in the city of Mexico. This deed—a general warranty deed—was never put to record, but was retained by Mrs. Hickman, the life tenant, who thereupon with her family, took possession of the premises. About three years thereafter, to wit, in 1889, Lucy J. Green and her husband became desirous of exchanging a 40-acre tract in the county, owned by Mrs. Green, for the litigated lot, on which Mrs. Hickman and her family then lived. So they engaged the services of Moore & Nelson, real-estate agents in Mexico, to effect the exchange, and this was by the following contract: 'Contract between Principal and Agent for the Sale of Real Estate. This writing made on the 16th day of May, A. D. 1889, witnesseth that Lucy Green and J. R. Green, of the county of Audrain, in the state of Mo., have this day placed with Moore & Nelson the following described property, of which they are the owners in fee, situate in township 50, of range 9, county of Audrain, and state of Mo., to wit, all that certain farm or tract of land containing 40 acres, N. E. S. W. Sec. 12, Tp. 50, Range 9, for which the said Lucy J. Green and J. R. Green hereby agree to take in exchange lot No. 35, Sparks' addition to Mexico, Mo., belonging to Francis D. Hickman; price, $2,000. Terms of payment as above. Amount of mortgage of property?—

How soon after sale can give possession? November 1st, 1889. The said Moore & Nelson shall have the agency of sale for the above property for one month from the date hereof; and we hereby authorize them to sell and contract under seal with purchaser for said premises according to the price and terms of payment above written, or any price or terms claim deed from the alleged cotenants of the one in possession, and he "occupied no better position than they did."

The grantee by a mere quitclaim deed cannot be regarded as an innocent purchaser without notice of the rights of a prior purchaser from the same grantor by a deed defectively acknowledged. Fogg v. Holcomb, 64 Iowa, 627.

In Butler v. Barkley, 67 Iowa, 493, the plaintiff claimed that a deed executed to a third person was for his use and benefit and asked that the title be transferred to him. The grantor answered claiming that the deed was procured by fraud and the court said that being a quitclaim deed the plaintiff was charged with notice of all equities existing adversely to the title he derived under the deed and a decree in favor of the defendant was affirmed.

Bradley v. Cole, 67 Iowa, 653, was a suit for taxes paid and the court says defendant acquired the land by quitclaim deed and is charged with notice of plaintiff's equities and the law regards his purchase as subject thereto.

Finally the question again arose as to the rights of a quitclaim purchaser under the recording acts, and the court held that the holder of a quitclaim deed is not protected by a statute providing that unless recorded no instrument affecting real estate is of any validity as against subsequent purchasers without notice. Steele v. Sioux Valley State Bank, 7 L. R. A. 624, 79 Iowa, 839; Wickham v. Henthorn (Iowa) 59 N. W. Rep. 276.

The court said that the Pettingill Case had been in effect overruled. It would seem that in this ruling the court lost sight of the distinction between latent equities and rights under the recording act, and thus unwittingly placed itself upon the side of the question which the other courts were hastening to abandon.

Care must be used.

A person who holds real estate by virtue of a quitclaim deed only from his immediate grantor whether he is a purchaser or not, is not a bona fide purchaser with respect to outstanding and adverse equities and interests shown by the records or which are discoverable by the exercise of reasonable diligence in making proper examinations and inquiries. Johnson v. Williams, 37 Kan. 179; Godard v. Donaha, 42 Kan. 754; Cook v. Dinsmore, 5 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 385.

A person receiving a quitclaim deed is presumed to take with notice of all outstanding interests and claims of which he can obtain knowledge by the exercise of a reasonable degree of diligence in which we may agree to accept other than the above; and if the said property to be sold or exchanged during the period above stated, no matter by whom, or after above period on information obtained through their agency, we agree to pay them a commission of fifty dollars on gross amount of such sale or exchange.

Lucy J. Green. [Seal.] J. R. ^{his} × Green.
mark

'[Seal.] Signed in presence of J. T. Nelson.' Two days later a similar contract was entered into between this firm and Mrs. Hickman. In order to effect this exchange, it became necessary to destroy the deed from Lakenan to Mrs. Hickman, and to substitute in lieu thereof a deed from Lakenan to Mrs. Hickman alone, which would convey merely a fee-simple title. So such new deed was executed by the complainant Lakenan to Mrs. Hickman alone; but this deed was but a quitclaim deed, through it recited the same consideration as the former one. On the other hand, the deed executed by Mrs. Hickman to Mrs. Green, which conveyed to her the lot in controversy, to her sole and separate use, was a general warranty deed. But, when Mrs. Green and her husband came to execute the deed for the 40-acre farm, they executed a general warranty deed to Mrs. Hickman, for life, with remainder to her bodily heirs, in similar form to her original deed from Lakenan. The parties then exchanged deeds, and moved, respectively, to the farm and lot thus mutually exchanged, after which the original deed to Mrs. Hickman by Lakenan was destroyed by Nelson, the agent of both parties, in the presence of Mrs. Hickman, Thomas Hickman, and Lakenan. Mrs. Hickman died before this proceeding was instituted. The answer of Mrs. Green was a general denial; admitted the exchange of the different pieces of property, as already stated, and that the deed of Mrs. Green to Mrs. Hickman and her heirs was as heretofore alleged; and denied what is not expressly admitted, etc. Reply filed. In addition to Mrs. Green and her husband, there are other defendants, either the children, or else grandchildren, of Mrs. Hickman, for whom a guardian ad litem was appointed. Lakenan was also made a defendant. The court below found for Mrs. Green, and that she was a purchaser without notice, and plaintiffs appeal. Other facts than heretofore recited will appear in the following opinion:

"The dominant issue in this cause is the question of notice to Mrs. Green. After discussing this question, others, of less importance, but yet bearing on the main issue, will be passed upon.

"1. No reason is perceived why in this case the general rule should not prevail, that notice to the agent is notice to the principal. Meier v. Blume, 80 Mo. 184; Hayward v. National Ins. Co. 52 Mo. 181; Chouteau v. Allen, 70 Mo. 290; Story, Agency, § 140; Wade, Notice, §§ 81-88; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 258. In this case the agency of Moore & Nelson was a general one. By the written authority and contracts entered into by and between them and Mrs. Green and Mrs. Hickman, respectively, they were empowered to make the exchange of properties, 'to sell and contract under seal with the purchaser for said premises according to the price and terms of payment above written, or any price or terms which we may agree to accept, other than the above.' If such language did not make Moore & Nelson general agents, it is hard to say what words would be sufficient. Notwithstanding Nelson's evasive manner of answering the question as to whether the original deed from Lakenan to Mrs. Hickman and her heirs was 'in his hands' before its destruction, he was forced to admit that he knew of its existence before that time, and knew that it was not destroyed till after the other deeds were delivered; and he further states that 'Mrs. Hickman requested it,' i. e. the destruction of the deed. This single circumstance was amply sufficient to fix Mrs. Green with notice of the unrecorded deed, the examination of all the public records affecting the title to the property included in such deed and from inquiries which he might make of persons who, the records show, had redeemed the property from tax sales and had paid subsequent taxes thereon, or were otherwise ostensibly interested in the property. Smith v. Rudd, 48 Kan. 266.

The holder of the quitclaim deed must make a clear case of bona fide purchase before his deed will be sustained. Eoyt v. Schuyler, 19 Neb. 662.

Remote quitclaim in chain of title.

HICKMAN v. GREEN is in accord with the current of authority upon the branch of the subject. The greater number of cases as well as sound principle hold that if a grantee receives a warranty deed he will not be affected by the fact that his grantor or some more remote person in the chain of title received merely a quitclaim deed.

The rule that the holder of a quitclaim deed cannot be a bona fide holder, even if applicable elsewhere, will not be applied where the deed is a remote link in the chain of title of one who receives a regular warranty deed to the property. United States v. California & O. Land Co. 148 U. S. 31, 37 L. ed. 354.

The presence of a quitclaim deed in a chain of 29 L. R. A.

title will not deprive of the benefit of the recording acts one who takes by warranty deed from a grantor who in turn received a warranty deed. Sherwood v. Moelle, 1 L. R. A. 797, 36 Fed. Rep. 473.

One who takes a warranty deed is not affected by the fact that his grantor held by a quitclaim deed only. Meikel v. Borders, 129 Ind. 629.

The holder of a warranty deed is not deprived of the position of bona fide purchaser by the fact that there is a quitclaim deed in the chain of title. Winkler v. Miller, 54 Iowa, 476; Huber v. Bossart, 70 Iowa, 78; Chapman v. Sims, 63 Miss. 163.

A person who finds a complete chain of conveyances from the original grantee to his grantor upon the proper records of the county may rely thereon although there is a quitclaim deed among them provided he has no notice either actual or constructive of equities affecting the title and is a purchaser for a sufficient consideration. Snowden v. Tyler, 21 Neb. 199.

In Hume v. Franzen, 78 Iowa, 35, in which a remote quitclaim deed appeared in the chain of title, the court said the burden is upon the present claimant to prove that he is an innocent purchaser for value and upon that point there does not appear to be any evidence. And for that reason a decree was rendered against him.

and to inform her of it as fully as her agent was informed. And it does not matter that it does not appear of what kind of estate Mrs. Green was seised in the 40-acre farm. Grant that she was seised simply in fee, and therefore, under our rulings, could not have an agent who could bind her by a contract in writing with a third person (Wilcox v. Todd, 64 Mo. 390; Hall v. Callahan, 66 Mo. 316; Hord v. Taubman, 79 Mo. 101; Henry v. Sneed, 99 Mo. 407), still it does not thence follow that notice to Nelson would not be notice to her. Under a recent ruling of this court (Flesh v. Lindsay, 115 Mo. 1), a married woman is not to be regarded as a very impersonal person, after all. Mrs. Green had eyes to see, and ears to hear; and doubtless Nelson communicated to her what he knew regarding the prior deed, and he will be presumed to have done so. In the case cited, Burgess, J., applied to a married woman, in the use of her property, the maxim, 'sic utere tuo,' etc.; and I can discover no reason why another maxim, equally familiar, is not applicable here. In a word, Mrs. Green cannot be permitted to flaunt her disability in the face of a court of equity; assert she had no notice, because she could have no agent; and still, at the same time, claim and hold under the questionable services of the very person whom she employed in that fiduciary capacity. Such conduct will not be tolerated by a court of conscience. 'Qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus.' Broome, Legal Maxims, 8th ed. *706; Burrill, Law Dict. 869; Story, Agency, 9th ed. § 389; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 18th ed. § 469.

2. But there are other facts and principles of law which tend to the same conclusion: Thus, when Mrs. Green began her negotiations with Mrs. Hickman, the record of deeds of the county showed that Lakenan was the owner of the legal title to the lot. This gave Mrs. Green constructive notice that he was the real owner. 8 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed.

835, and cases cited. And this, too, when Mrs. Hickman was then in the actual, notorious, open, exclusive, unequivocal, and visible possession of the lot, and had been thus in possession for some three years previously; and this was known to Mrs. Green, who resided on her 40-acre farm, some three miles from there. Under the authorities in this state, such a possession is evidence of actual notice, sufficient, in ordinary circumstances, to satisfy a jury that a party purchased with knowledge of a prior deed. Actual notice, under our registry acts, is not certain knowledge, but such information as men generally act upon in the transactions of life. Vaughn v. Tracy, 22 Mo. 415, 25 Mo. 318, 69 Am. Dec. 471. In Speck v. Riggins, 40 Mo. 405, the court holds that 'notice is actual when the purchaser either knows of the existence of the adverse claim, or is conscious of having the means of knowing, although he may not use them.' See also, Maupin v. Emmons, 47 Mo. 304; Martin v. Jones, 72 Mo. 28; 8 Washb. Real Prop. 386; Tiedeman, Real Prop. Enlarged ed. § 819. A recent author says upon this subject that 'if facts are brought to the knowledge of a party which would put him, as a man of common sagacity, upon inquiry, he is bound to inquire; and if he fail to do so, or to do properly, whether fraudulently, or only negligently, he will be charged with notice of what he might have learned upon reasonable examination.' Bigelow, Frauds, 386. In another work of merit, touching the point in hand, it is said: 'The reason of the rule is this: That it is the duty of a person who proposes to deal respecting the title to a particular tract of land to ascertain in advance who is in possession of it, and by what right he claims to hold it; and if he neglects this duty it is only just that he should be charged with the knowledge that he would have obtained, had he performed it.' 2 White & T. Lead. Cas. Eq. 180. See also, Leavitt v.

In DeVeaux v. Fosbender, 67 Mich. 579, the court divided evenly upon the question whether or not the holder of a warranty deed was entitled to rely on the record which showed a quitclaim to his remote grantor of the owner's rights, title, and interest in and to certain real estate in a certain county.

There are some courts, however, which refuse to permit the registry acts to apply in favor of any chain of title which contains a quitclaim deed.

Thus in Texas it has been said that a quitclaim deed in a chain of title is fatal. Garrett v. Christopher, 74 Tex. 453; Cain v. Woodward, Id. 549.

But on rehearing in Finch v. Trent, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 572, the court holds that since one of the deeds in the chain of title was a mere quitclaim of the interest of the grantor it would not support a title depending alone upon a bona fide purchase, and that therefore the chain of title was insufficient.

In a later Texas case, however, it was held that the mere fact that there are quitclaim deeds in the chain of title will not prevent one taking under a warranty deed from being a bona fide purchaser. Finch v. Trent, 3 Tex. Civ. App. 568.

So in Runyon v. Smith, 18 Fed. Rep. 579, the rule of Oliver v. Platt was applied to a case where the quitclaim deed was a remote link in the chain of title although the decision was placed upon the ground that the purchaser did not pay value for the land.

29 L. R. A.

The fact that the immediate grantor of the purchaser holds under a quitclaim deed is a circumstance well calculated to excite inquiry which if not prosecuted properly will affect the purchaser with notice of every fact which such inquiry prosecuted with due diligence would disclose. Aultman v. Utsey, 34 S. C. 559.

The fact that a grantee holds only under a deed of quitclaim is sufficient notice to the vendee to put him on inquiry as to the true state of the title. Baker v. Woodward, 12 Or. 3.

In American Mortg. Co. v. Hutchinson, 19 Or. 334, the court held that a series of quitclaim deeds did not constitute a chain of title upon the record of which the holder of a warranty deed from the last quitclaim grantee could rely.

In Raymond v. Morrison, 59 Iowa, 371, it was claimed that the holder of the quitclaim deed had sufficient notice to prevent his becoming a bona fide purchaser, and the court says: "We are inclined to think this is so, but it is really immaterial whether he had or not" because he is not entitled to protection for the reason that he held under a quitclaim deed only and cannot be regarded as a good-faith purchaser. But the question being as to the rights of his grantee by warranty deed the court held that if he purchased without noticed he was entitled to protection.

H. P. F.

La Force, 71 Mo. 353, and cases cited. Besides all that, the very written contract or memorandum—call it what you will—which Mrs. Green signed, and gave to Moore & Nelson, for the exchange of the properties, recognized and admitted that the title to the lot was in Mrs. Hickman, though the county records showed the legal title to be in Lakenan. This, of itself, charged her with notice, and compelled her to institute the most diligent inquiry as to the true nature, scope, and extent of Mrs. Hickman's title.

"3. But this is not all. Lakenan says that some days—perhaps a week—before the quitclaim deed was executed by him to Mrs. Hickman he met Mrs. Green and her husband, and one of them asked him what kind of a deed he had made to Mrs. Hickman, whereupon he told them he had deeded the lot to Mrs. Hickman and her bodily heirs. It is true that Mrs. Green denies this conversation with herself, but does not deny but what it occurred with her husband; and then it must be borne in mind that Mrs. Green is an interested witness, while Lakenan is wholly disinterested. Nor should it be forgotten in what a singular manner this whole business was transacted. Not satisfied with employing real-estate agents, whose usual occupation was to prepare abstracts of titles, Mrs. Green employs Duncan, not to examine the title, and to pronounce upon its validity, as is usual for a lawyer to do in such cases; but the only question asked him, as he testifies, 'was whether Lakenan's deed, in that form, would pass the title,' and he told them it would. It certainly seems odd that a quitclaim deed, only, should be required of Lakenan, who appears to be a man of means, while a conveyance with full covenants of warranty is exacted from Mrs. Hickman for the same property, she being described in that deed as a 'widow lady,' and not possessed, it would seem, of any other property to make her warranty good. And then look at another point. Though Mrs. Hickman had been living on that lot for some three years, exercising all the visible and outward indicia of absolute ownership, yet this quitclaim deed to her in 1889 recited a consideration of $2,000, as if the property had just been bought. Furthermore, it would seem that, before possession was obtained by Mrs. Green, she was informed by one of these plaintiffs that Mrs. Hickman only had a life interest in the property. Moreover, the deed executed by Mrs. Green was drawn, in all respects, like the destroyed deed,—that it conveyed the forty-acre farm to Mrs. Hickman and 'her bodily heirs.' Taking all these circumstances into consideration, it is difficult to see how the lower court could find Mrs. Green was a purchaser without notice.

"4. Mrs. Green was not a competent witness, because the other contracting party was dead, and therefore she could not testify in her own favor. Rev. Stat. 1889, § 8918; Chapman v. Dougherty, 87 Mo. 617, 56 Am. Rep. 469; Meier v. Thimman, 90 Mo. 483; Emmel v. Hayes, 102 Mo. 186, 11 L. R. A. 323. But these remarks are not to be understood as denying to her the right to combat by her testimony what others had testified she had done and said in their presence.

"5. But the motion to exclude her testimony came too late. The general rule is that where a party fails to object to incompetent evidence, and it has been received absolutely and unconditionally, and not upon an unperformed promise to show its relevancy, it cannot afterwards be stricken out. 1 Rice, Ev. §§ 258, 259, and cases cited; State v. Hope, 100 Mo. 347, 8 L. R. A. 608.

"6. The relation of attorney and client is not established until a proposal is made by the would-be client to engage the services of the attorney, and his acceptance of the employment; but this proposal, and its acceptance, may arise either from express contract, or from clear implication. But until these two things concur, the relation of attorney and client does not exist, and, of consequence, communications made to the attorney in such circumstances are not privileged. Weeks, Attorneys at Law, §§ 183, 185. Under this view, if Mrs. Green went to Mr. Jesse, and, without engaging his services as an attorney, asked him to destroy the original deed from Lakenan to Mrs. Hickman and her children, and to supply its place by writing another, such a communication would not be privileged.

"7. But it would not be privileged for a far weightier reason: The privilege does not extend to, nor shelter, advice concerning, nor assistance in, proposed infractions of the law. 1 Whart. Ev. 3d ed. § 590, and cases cited; 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 108, and cases cited. If, therefore, Mr. Jesse was thus approached by Mrs. Green, any communication of the sort not being privileged, he would be compelled to testify in regard to it.

"8. If the plaintiffs who are adults, after being made fully aware of their rights in the premises, have ratified the transaction already mentioned by dealing with the property for which the exchange was made, as their own, of course they would be estopped to proceed further; but in order to estop them the evidence should be clear of their being fully aware of their rights. It is scarcely necessary to add that the doctrine of estoppel would not apply to the infant minors; and they, not having taken any part in the transaction, are not required to make any conveyance of their interest in the 40-acre farm. Indeed, being minors, it is out of their power to do so. And under the ruling in Oraig v. Van Bebber, 100 Mo. loc. cit. 589, even if the 40 acres had been sold, and the proceeds squandered, they could repudiate the affair without tendering back the purchase price. All these matters, however, can be appropriately settled when this cause is returned to the lower court, and full and complete justice done between the parties litigant; and of course a decree can be made, divesting the title in the 40 acres out of the infant, and out of the adults, where the latter are not estopped.

"9. As to the improvements made by Mrs. Green on the lot in Mexico, if she made them after engaging in the questionable transactions charged in the petition, she could not hope to have such improvements considered in the adjustment of the equities of this cause. The judgment will be reversed and the cause remanded, with directions to proceed in conformity with this opinion."

The foregoing opinion was filed in division No 2, and met with the full concurrence of Judge Burgess, and is reported in 123 Mo. 180, but was transferred to court in banc because of the dissent of Gantt, J. Owing to the importance of the principles involved in this case, I have deemed it not improper to add to what I have already said a few additional observations.

1. I understand the rule of law to be that where one purchases an equitable interest in land, with notice of the fact that the legal title is outstanding in one other than his purchasee, that alone suffices to put the purchaser on inquiry and charge him with notice of all that to which such inquiry, if properly pressed, would lead. Wade says: "Where one purchases with notice of the fact that the legal title to the property is in some one else than his grantor, he is thereby put upon inquiry as to the nature and extent of his grantor's title, and, if such inquiries would lead to knowledge of circumstances affecting the title, he would be bound as by actual notice of such facts." Wade, Notice, 2d ed. § 18. In this case that was just the situation, for the legal title was outstanding in Lakenan, though Mrs. Green, in the paper signed by her, admitted Mrs. Hickman to be the owner of the town property. On this point, the learned spokesman of the majority gives utterance to these remarks: "Much stress is laid upon the fact that, when Mrs. Hickman and Mrs. Green began to trade, the title of record was in Lakenan, with Mrs. Hickman in possession. This is true, but there is absolutely no evidence that Mrs. Green knew anything whatever about this title of record." Before these words were given forth which fix the limits and set the bounds to our registry acts, I had supposed, as stated by all the authorities I had previously examined, that a deed placed on record was "constructive notice to all the world," and that in this respect there was "no difference in legal effect between actual and constructive notice." 8 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. 335. Wade says: "Where an instrument by which the title to real estate is affected is properly recorded, the record thereof is constructive notice to subsequent purchasers or incumbancers under the same grantor. . . . Any instrument affecting the title, which is properly recorded, is absolute notice to every one subsequently dealing with the title, irrespective of whether such person has examined the records, or even had an opportunity to make an examination." Wade, Notice, 2d ed. § 97. And the same author states this "presumption of knowledge is conclusive." Ibid. And before the authoritative ruling aforesaid I had also supposed that a married woman was not exempt from the operation of our registry acts, and that the effect on a married woman of the recording of a deed would be precisely the same in imparting notice to her as it would be upon any other person whomsoever. The statute seems to sanction this hitherto entertained view, for it says that "every such instrument . . . shall import notice to all persons of the contents thereof." Rev. Stat. 1889, § 2419. In Jones v. Kearney, 1 Drury & W. 134, the lord chancellor of Ireland held that "a feme covert or an infant is just as much bound by notice as an adult."

If the authorities I have cited are to be deemed the safer guides on the point mentioned, and are in consequence to be followed, rather than the majority opinion, then we have presented a clear case of a married woman chargeable and charged with notice of an outstanding legal title in a person other than her proposed grantor, and therefore she was put on inquiry as to the nature and extent of that grantor's title. This being true, a prima facie case was made out against her, demanding that she exonerate herself from the attitude in which she was placed, by making all proper and legitimate inquiries as to the nature and extent of Mrs. Hickman's title. In such a case, when you prove that a person is put on inquiry, then the burden is shifted, and it belongs to him to shift the burden, thus cast upon him, off his own shoulders; to exonerate himself, by rebutting the presumption thus raised against him, by showing that he pushed all reasonable inquiries to their legitimate conclusion, but gained no information. If, on the other hand, he fail to make inquiry, or to prosecute it with due diligence, the presumption remains operative, and the conclusion of notice becomes absolute. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 2d ed. § 607. And it is the duty of a purchaser who has been put on inquiry to seek information from his grantor, and a failure to do this generally shows lack of due care and diligence in making inquiry. Id., p. 840, note 2. And there are cases which hold that such a purchaser, who neglects questioning his grantor, will be charged with notice of all he could have learned. Sergeant v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. 340, 15 Pa. 343; Espin v. Pemberton, 3 De G. & J. 547. In the first of these cases, Gibson, Ch. J., observed: "A purchaser without notice must appear to have acted, not only with good faith, but with extreme vigilance, for equity refuses to protect the careless and the slothful;" and thereupon he rules Mrs. Sergeant chargeable with notice because she failed to make inquiry of her grantor what the legal title was outstanding in another, and because she failed to make a like inquiry of the one holding the outstanding legal title. Numerous authorities illustrate the position that in many circumstances an examination of the records and questioning the grantor would not be sufficient, unless the inquiry were further prosecuted among third persons from whom information could probably be obtained, and that a neglect to make such inquiry, which, though prompted by the situation and demanded by the circumstances, had not been made, left the party whose duty required "due inquiry" still chargeable with constructive notice. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 841, note 3, and cases cited. Applying to the case at bar the principles heretofore announced, it will be readily seen that

Mrs. Green did not fulfill the true measure of diligence in making inquiries of her grantor as to the title, nor of Lakenan; indeed, she repels the idea, and denies his statement that she heard him say anything concerning the situation and nature of the title. Nor does she pretend that she even so much as asked Mrs. Hickman a single question as to the nature and extent of her title, and as to the why and wherefore of the title remaining outstanding in Lakenan; and this, too, although she had been in to see Mrs. Hickman and the house two or three weeks before she got the deed or "traded." Who can doubt that had Mrs. Green asked Mrs. Hickman about the title, or that, if Lakenan had been asked in whom the title was, she would have received a reply adequate to all the demands of due diligence, honesty, and good faith? But she sedulously refrained from making such inquiries, and therefore stands before us charged with the constructive notice which she received at the outset, and with the presumption aforesaid, which it was her duty to rebut, unrebuted.

2. A like line of remark and authorities applies to the possession of Mrs. Hickman; she had been in the open and notorious possession of the premises for three years, acting as the owner of the same, and the owner of an unrecorded deed to herself for life, remainder to her bodily heirs. This being the posture of affairs, a duty was devolved on Mrs. Green to make inquiries of her intended grantor as to the nature and extent of her title, and also of Lakenan, the record owner, similar to those mentioned in the next preceding paragraph. Authorities supporting this view are there referred to; they exist in abundance. In Vaughn v. Tracy, 23 Mo. 417, 25 Mo. 318, 69 Am. Dec. 471, it was ruled that possession and apparent ownership brought home to the second purchaser are evidence of knowledge in such second purchaser of a prior unrecorded deed to the occupant as ought, in ordinary circumstances, to satisfy a jury that the second purchaser purchased with knowledge of the prior deed. This ruling has been constantly followed ever since, and cases showing this are cited in the former opinion herein delivered. Why should this case be deemed dehors the familiar rule? What extraordinary circumstances are there disclosed in this record which forbid its application in the present instance? There are none, and Mrs. Green, on this score also, remains charged with the constructive notice arising from occupancy and apparent ownership, because she has not rebutted the prima facie case made against her by showing proper though fruitless inquiries made. This fact of the prior unrecorded deed could not be ferreted out by searching the records. It rested alone in parol, and could only have been developed and unearthed by oral inquiry; and inquiry which Mrs. Green was as competent herself to make as any one, but an inquiry which neither she nor any one for her attempted to make. It is iterated, however, with great insistence, that the records were searched, an abstract made, and the title examined, but this idea of searching the records for an unrecorded deed, and calling it due inquiry to do so, reminds one of the anecdote of Nelson, who, bidden to withdraw his vessel from a naval battle when he should see displayed a signal from his admiral's ship, and being told that the signal flag was flying, clapped the glass to his blind eye, and said: "I don't see the signal." In the very recent case of Freeman v. Moffit, 119 Mo. 280, the cases of Vaughn v. Tracy, supra, and nearly all of the subsequent cases in this court on this subject of evidence of constructive notice of a prior unrecorded deed arising from possession of land by an apparent owner, and of the duty of inquiry in such circumstances, were cited, quoted from, discussed, and reaffirmed. Among them was the case of Leavitt v. La Force, 71 Mo. 353, from which this extract is made: "If Winans had ventured to examine the land upon which he contemplated taking an incumbrance, which he did take on the 26th of March, immediately upon his return home, he would have had an opportunity to ascertain from Morton, who was in possession as Leavitt's tenant, the true state of the title, and under whom he held. It was his duty, when offering himself as a witness, to have left nothing unexplained which would induce unfavorable inferences in regard to his bona fides." In Freeman's Case, supra, an action of ejectment, Wilkinson was in possession, and had thus been in possession by his tenant for nearly a year, at the time plaintiff came down to Polk county, examined and bought the land. The lower court expressly found plaintiff to be an innocent purchaser, but this court, speaking through the learned author of the majority opinion, held that such finding was an error of fact and an error of law, remarking, after quoting the prevalent rule from Vaughn v. Tracy, supra, etc., that "we think there was strong evidence of notice to plaintiff of Wilkinson's title when he bought, and that, if he had not ignored all the ordinary rules of prudence, he would have learned of the true state of the title, and that Wilkinson was the owner. The fact of Moffit's possession put him on inquiry, and he should not have blindly shut his eyes to the truth as it existed, and the court should have so declared in an instruction." I am entirely unable to see why the same principle, on similar facts, should not dominate the present case, and Mrs. Green be held a purchaser with notice as a matter of law, she not having made the proper inquiries, and being therefore chargeable with constructive notice. Nor does it matter that the lower court expressly found that Mrs. Green was an innocent purchaser. This was done, as already seen in Freeman's Case, by the lower court, but its finding was rejected and repudiated by this court, even in action at law; and in the quite recent case of Blount v. Spratt, 118 Mo. 48 (Macfarlane, J., speaking for the court), it was ruled that equity cases are substantially triable de novo in this court, and that this court would not be bound by the findings of the lower court, nor would the supervisory control of this court over the lower court be abrogated by such findings.

To the same effect is Hamilton v. Armstrong, 190 Mo. 597.

Holding these views, I am constrained to dissent from the majority opinion. I hold that the facts in this record show the clearest and strongest case of notice of any record I have ever examined.

Brace and Burgess, JJ., concur in the foregoing opinion.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

LAKE SHORE & MICHIGAN SOUTHERN R. CO., Plff. in Err.,

Harvey P. PLATT et al.

(32 Ohio St. —.)

A conveyance of lands situated upon a navigable stream, the description being by courses and distances from a fixed monument and establishing a boundary line coincident with the line of navigation, conveys the grantor's title as far as the central thread of the stream.

(June 25, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Lucas County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain land under the waters of the Maumee River. Reversed.

Statement by Shauck, J.:

January 17, 1876, Platt et al. brought ejectment in the common pleas court of Lucas county to recover the subaqueous ground lying between the former and present dock lines along the Maumee river and in front of a part of lot 11 in the city of Toledo. Each party asserts title in fee to such ground, and their rights depend upon the following material facts as shown by the pleadings and the stipulations upon which the cause was submitted in the common pleas:

In 1852 Harriet O. Hall was the owner in fee of lot 11 which included the premises in controversy. August 9, 1852, the Lake Shore Company (its predecessor), commenced proceedings in the probate court to appropriate lands for railroad purposes. The appropriation by meets and bounds carried the line of the company's property thus acquired to the former dock line which was approximately parallel with the shore line and where there was available, for purposes of navigation, a depth of water somewhat exceeding nine feet. The company at once took possession of the lands acquired for landing, dock and terminal purposes (for which purposes they had been acquired) and built its dock upon the line established.

June 21, 1855, Mrs. Hall executed to the company a deed for the same property for the express purpose of assuring its title. The description in this deed also carried the line to the former dock line, and granted the premises described "with all privileges and appurtenances to the same belonging."

The company took possession and constructed the docks necessary for traffic in connection with boats navigating the river and lakes, upon the dock line which was established by authority.

September 10, 1869, Mrs. Hall conveyed to Platt et al. a number of tracts of land, including lot 11, but expressly "reserving that portion of tract 11 which lies northwesterly of the center of the river road, the same being now in possession of the railroad company," such reservation including the premises now in controversy.

Thereafter the dock line was changed for the purpose of accommodating vessels of greater draught, and the railroad company docked out to the new line thus established, completing the reconstruction of its dock in July, 1878.

April 18, 1874, Mrs. Hall by quitclaim granted to Platt et al. all her interest in lot 11.

In the court of common pleas Platt et al. recovered, and that judgment was affirmed by the circuit court.

Mr. George C. Greene, with Mr. E. D. Potter, Jr., for plaintiff in error:

The warranty deed to the railroad company, made in 1855, covered the title to the property described in the deed, together with all the privileges and appurtenances to the same belonging, including the riparian rights.

Morgan v. Mason, 20 Ohio, 410, 55 Am. Dec. 464; Pickering v. Stapler, 5 Serg. & R. 107, 9 Am. Dec. 836.

One who owns land bounding and abutting on the navigable rivers of this state owns to the center of the stream.

Gavit v. Chambers, 8 Ohio, 496; Walker v. Ohio Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio, 548; Lamb v. Rickets, 11 Ohio, 816; Benner v. Platter, 6 Ohio, 510; Hopkins v. Kent, 9 Ohio, 14; Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508; Lucas v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 35 Am. Dec. 687; June v. Purcell, 86 Ohio St. 896; Day v. Pittsburg, Y. & C. R. Co. 44 Ohio St. 406.

There are no apt words in this deed to the railway company showing any intention on the part of the grantors to exclude the plaintiff in error from the use, occupation, and enjoyment of the bed of the river, lying in front of the premises conveyed.

Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 599, 56 Am. Rep. 642; Goodin v. Cincinnati & W. Canal Co. 18 Ohio St. 169, 98 Am. Dec. 95; Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Forty-second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 65 How. Pr. 211; Bipps v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co. 28 Minn. 18; 1 Rorer, Railroads, 402; Chenango Bridge Co. v. Paige, 83 N. Y.

cadnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—For collection of authorities upon the question of the effect of bounding a grant by a stream, see note to Chandos v. Mack (Wis.) 10 L. R. A. 207.

29 L. R. A.

178, 38 Am. Rep. 407; Smith v. Rochester, 92 N. Y. 465, 41 Am. Rep. 290; Carls v. Stillwater Street R. & Transfer Co. 28 Minn. 373, 44 Am. Rep. 393; Kent v. Taylor (N. H.) 6 New Eng. Rep. 191; O'Donnell v. Kelsey, 10 N. Y. 412; Washb. Easem. 105, 124; East & West R. Co. of Alabama v. East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. 22 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 90, and note; Sumner v. Seaton, 47 N. J. Eq. 108; Richardson v. Prentiss, 48 Mich. 88.

The defendants in error having knowledge of and permitting the plaintiff in error to take actual possession of the property in dispute and improve it at a large expense and outlay, and the same being a part of its right of way and terminal property in Toledo with main and side tracks thereon and necessary in the daily use and operation of its road, should not be permitted to maintain an action of ejectment for the same, but their remedy, if they have one, is by action at law to recover the value of the property taken.

Goodin v. Cincinnati & W. Canal Co. 18 Ohio St. 169, 98 Am. Dec. 95; Pryshylowicz v. Missouri River R. Co. 17 Fed. Rep. 492, 8 McCrary, 687; Taylor v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 68 Wis. 327; Paterson, N. & N. Y. R. Co. v. Kamiah, 42 N. J. Eq. 98; Lawrence v. Morgan's Louisiana & T. R. & S. S. Co. 39 La. Ann. 437; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. McBroom, 114 Ind. 198; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Nye, 118 Ind. 223; Omaha & N. W. R. Co. v. Redick, 16 Neb. 313; Cincinnati v. Kemper, 2 Week. L. Bull. 5.

Whether the title of the owner of such lots extends beyond the dry land or not, he is certainly entitled to the rights of a riparian proprietor whose land is bounded by a navigable stream; among those rights are access to the navigable part of the river from the front of his lot, the right to make a landing, wharf or pier for his own use or for the use of the public, subject to such general rules and regulations as the legislature may see proper to impose for the protection of the rights of the public.

Yates v. Milwaukee, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; Gavit v. Chambers, 8 Ohio. 496; Benner v. Platter, 6 Ohio, 505; June v. Purcell, 36 Ohio St. 396; Wright v. Howard, 1 Sim. & Stu. 203; Handly v. Anthony, 18 U. S. 5 Wheat. 384, 5 L. ed. 115; Ex parte Jennings, 6 Cow. 518, 16 Am. Dec. 447; Whitehurst v. McDonald, 8 U. S. App. 164, 52 Fed. Rep. 683; Day v. Pittsburg, Y. & O. R. Co. 44 Ohio St. 406; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 387, 36 L. ed. 1018; Meyers v. Mathis, 42 La. Ann. 471; Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 85 Am. Dec. 637; Seneca Nation of Indians v. Knight, 23 N. Y. 498; Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508; Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 599, 56 Am. Rep. 642; Richardson v. Prentiss, 48 Mich. 88.

Mr. Frank H. Hurd, for defendant in error:

A call for a river carries the boundary to the center of the river, where it is not a navigable stream, at common law. But this is only in those cases where the river eo nomine is made the boundary.

Jones v. Soulard, 65 U. S. 24 How. 65, 16 L. ed. 606; Boston v. Richardson, 18 Allen, 146; Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 453, 85 Am. Dec. 637; Mott v. Mott, 68 N. Y. 254; White's Bank of 29 L. R. A.

Buffalo v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 70; Kingsland v. Chittenden, 6 Lans. 20; Gove v. White, 20 Wis. 434; Walker v. Ohio Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio, 540; June v. Purcell, 36 Ohio St. 397.

Where any one is the owner of the soil under the water by virtue of his grant being extended to the center of the channel, when it is bounded by the river, he can dispose of this land under the water just as any other land he owns. He may divide it into water lots and sell them. He may convey it separately from the upland or he may sell part of it with the upland, and retain the balance, or convey it to a third party. What he has done is a question of interpretation of the conveyance from which the intention is to be derived.

Gould, Waters, p. 45; Bradford v. Cressay, 45 Me. 13; Hatch v. Dwight, 17 Mass. 298, 9 Am. Dec. 145; Storer v. Freeman, 6 Mass. 440, 4 Am. Dec. 155; Tyler v. Hammond, 11 Pick. 218; Child v. Starr, 4 Hill, 374; 8 Kent. Com. p. 434; Den v. Wright, 1 Pet. C. C. 69; Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508; Chicago v. Rumsey, 87 Ill. 351; Jackson v. Hathaway, 15 Johns. 453, 8 Am. Dec. 263; Trustees of Schools v. Schroll, 120 Ill. 521; Tyler, Boundaries, p. 123; Hall, Rights in Seashores, p. 155; Moses v. Eagle & Phoenix Mfg. Co. 62 Ga. 456; Rivas v. Solary, 18 Fla. 124.

If he bounds the land by the river eo nomine the grantee takes to the thread; if he conveys by metes and bounds the title of the grantee is limited by the boundaries fixed.

We find no power given the company to condemn or to hold private property to its exclusive use, solely for wharf purposes.

Iron R. Co. v. Ironton, 19 Ohio St. 299; Walsh v. Barton, 24 Ohio St. 28; Pennsylvania Co. v. Platt, 47 Ohio St. 366.

Where a grantor has the power to grant the fee or an easement in a particular piece of land, if he grants the easement, it could not have been his intention to convey the fee.

Mott v. Mott, 68 N. Y. 254.

In a river like the Maumee where the riparian owner, when the land is bounded by the river, takes to the center of the stream, the right to build wharves is dependent upon the ownership of the soil under them, and whoever erects a wharf upon soil not his own is a trespasser.

The right to build wharves on soil owned by the state or public is a franchise which the adjacent owner enjoys from the state, subject to the public right of navigation.

East Haven v. Hemingway, 7 Conn. 202; Coburn v. Ames, 52 Cal. 398, 28 Am. Rep. 684; Hamlin v. Pairpoint Mfg. Co. 141 Mass. 57; Parker v. Rogers, 8 Or. 189; Houck, Rivers, p. 187; Wharf Case, 8 Bland, Ch. 373; Grant v. Davenport, 18 Iowa, 179; Naglee v. Ingersoll, 7 Pa. 201.

The right of the adjacent owner to build wharves where he holds the title to the soil to the center of the river depends upon the ownership of the soil, which he may exercise by carrying out the wharves to the point of navigability, subject to the supervision of the state or municipality and without making obstruction to navigation.

Houck, Rivers, p. 188; Wood, Nuisances, § 490; Atty. Gen. v. Earl of Londale, L. R. 7 Eq. 389; Jeffersonville v. Louisville & J. S. Ferry Co. 27 Ind. 100; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d

ed. 1155; Nicoll v. Gardner, 13 Wend. 289; Hogan v. Campbell, 8 Port. (Ala.) 34; Norfolk City v. Cooke, 27 Gratt. 435; Delaware & H. Canal Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Hun, 186; Middleton v. Pritchard, 4 Ill. 521, 38 Am. Dec. 112; Chicago v. Laflin, 49 Ill. 176; Rice v. Ruddiman, 10 Mich. 141; Ryan v. Brown, 18 Mich. 207, 100 Am. Dec. 154; Walker v. Ohio Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio, 544; Hickok v. Hine, 23 Ohio St. 528, 18 Am. Rep. 255.

When the riparian proprietor owns to the center of the river his right to build wharves depends upon the ownership of the soil, and if he cannot wharve out to the point of navigability, except by building upon the land of another, he will be a trespasser if he does so, unless he first obtains the latter's consent.

Lembeck v. Nye, 8 L. R. A. 578, 47 Ohio St. 336; People v. Jones, 112 N. Y. 603.

Shauck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

At the dates of the appropriation by the company and the subsequent grant of June 21, 1855, Mrs. Hall, the grantor, and the railway company, the grantee, were alone interested in what is now the subject of controversy. In the practical interpretation of its rights acquired by the appropriation and the grant, the company took actual possession not only of the bank of the stream but of so much of the river as might be necessary to reach the established dock line at a depth of water of nine feet.

By the deed of September 10, 1869, Platt et al. acquired no title to the premises in controversy, for they were expressly excepted from the operation of the deed. Not only so, but by the terms of the reservation or exception, the grantees were notified that the grantor had, by a former conveyance, granted to the company the premises now in controversy.

The exception was not of "so much of tract 11 as the railroad company now occupies," but it was of "that portion of tract 11 which lies northwesterly of the river road, the same being now in possession of the railroad company." This was express notice to the grantees that the company was in possession not only of the bank of the stream but of all that portion of tract 11 which lay between the bank and the central thread of the stream.

On April 13, 1874, when the defendants in error received from Mrs. Hall the quitclaim under which they now assert title, they found that the company had extended its docks over the disputed premises to the newly established dock line. This had been done in the assertion of the rights acquired by virtue of the appropriation and the deed of June 21, 1855, and with the acquiescence of Mrs. Hall to whom these parties now look as the common source of title.

The defendants in error took nothing by the quitclaim, because, not only the terms of their former deed, but the actual possession of the company, affected them with notice of the rights now asserted by the company, which rights their grantor could not then contest, since she had acquiesced in the company's possession continuously from the date of the appropriation.

99 L. R. A.

But from a consideration of the rules which prevail in the construction of grants of this character, we think the premises in controversy passed to the company by the terms of the deed of 1855. It is true of that deed, as well as of the previous proceedings to appropriate, that the Maumee river was not named as the boundary of the lands appropriated or conveyed. But by the strictest construction that could be placed upon the deed it conveyed not only the land upon the bank of the stream, but all that lay between the water's edge and the original dock line projected where a depth of nine feet of water was available for the purposes of navigation. The terms of the grant do not admit of any broader claim on behalf of the grantor than that she did not expressly convey to the central thread of the stream. If title to the subaqueous lands, lying between the former and present dock lines, remained in her, it was by virtue of a presumption operating in her favor, notwithstanding the location of the lands expressly granted, the obvious purposes of the grant and the limited and incidental use of which alone the lands in controversy are susceptible.

The lands were acquired by the company for landing, dock, and terminal purposes. That these purposes were within the contemplation of all the parties is indicated by the location of the lands upon a navigable stream and the express grant of that portion of the stream which was necessary to make the grant available for that purpose.

The ground in controversy is insusceptible of absolute and unqualified dominion, being incidental to the shore and subject to the public right to navigate the stream. Because of the permanent character of the riparian and public rights involved, the case is broadly distinguishable from those of grants bounded on streets and highways which may be abandoned and their sites thus restored to a condition in which they may be subject to absolute and unqualified dominion. For the same reason the case is distinguishable from those of grants of lands bounded by swamps, ponds, and lakes that are not navigable and are subject to drainage. The use of the stream for the purpose of navigation was not only within the contemplation of the parties to the deed from Mrs. Hall to the company, but it was the principal and most obvious element of the value of the lands expressly granted.

Those considerations would seem to justify the presumption that a grant of this character is to the central thread of the stream unless apt terms are employed to limit it.

And such appears to be the settled view of the courts of the country. Well-considered cases in which this doctrine is held are, Garit v. Chambers, 3 Ohio, 496; Walker v. Ohio Board of Public Works, 16 Ohio, 543; June v. Purcell, 36 Ohio St. 396; Watson v. Peters, 26 Mich. 508; Luce v. Carley, 24 Wend. 451, 35 Am. Dec. 637; Norcross v. Griffiths, 65 Wis. 499, 56 Am. Rep. 642; Yates v. Milwaukee, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 497, 19 L. ed. 984; St. Clair County v. Livingston, 90 U. S. 23 Wall. 46, 23 L. ed. 59.

To the application of this doctrine it is quite immaterial whether the stream be named as a boundary of the lands granted or there be a description by courses and distances from a fixed monument whereby a line is established coincident with the stream. The doctrine regards the substance of the grant and not its form. Watson v. Peters, and St. Clair County v. Livingston, supra.

It is true that the common law regarded only those streams as navigable which are subject to the ebb and flow of the tides; and, in this view, the difference between riparian and littoral titles becomes unimportant, since they alike terminate at the water's edge, the title to the residue of the alveus being in the public. While this view has been taken in some of the American cases, it cannot be regarded as the view generally received. Nor could it avail the defendants in error. The manifest result of these cases is that riparian and alvean rights are inseparable, whatever may be the nature or extent of those rights. Alvean rights appertain to the riparian title and do not depend upon title to the subaqueous land. That such rights are incapable of severance from the riparian title to which they are incident was distinctly held in Lake Superior Land Co. v. Emerson, 38 Minn. 406. The conclusion reached in that case was adversely criticised by the same court in Handford v. St. Paul & D. R. Co., 43 Minn. 104, 7 L. R. A. 722, where it was considered that the rights may be severed if they are of such a nature that they may be enjoyed separately from the adjacent land to which they were originally appurtenant. It was accordingly held that submerged lands lying between the high land upon the shore and the line of navigation might be severed from such high land; and that conclusion would result from the consideration that such submerged lands, being susceptible of reclamation without interference with public rights, might become the subject of the riparian title to which access to and use of the navigable waters would attach as an incident. But it was not there held that one may own that which he cannot enjoy.

Since a plaintiff in ejectment must recover, if at all, by virtue of his own title, the contention of the defendants in error would not be aided by the conclusion that the lands in controversy are incapable of private ownership.

Confining ourselves to the requirements of the case, we conclude that the lands in controversy passed to the plaintiff in error by the deed from Mrs. Hall because they were not by clear and apt terms excepted from its operation, and for the additional reason that, it being an express grant of her lands to the line of navigation with all the privileges and appurtenances to the same belonging, the right asserted by the grantee is necessary to satisfy the express terms of the deed. Gould, Waters, § 179; Wood, Nuisances, § 491; Morgan v. Mason, 20 Ohio, 402, 55 Am. Dec. 464.

The views expressed in Lembeck v. Nye, 47 Ohio St. 836, 8 L. R. A. 578, were not intended to have, and cannot have, any application to a case of this character. The lands there in controversy lay under water that was not navigable. By the clear terms of the syllabus the case was limited to lands thus situated; and in the principal opinion prominence is given to the consideration that the lake there in controversy was susceptible of private ownership, and the views here expressed were recognized as controlling in cases of navigable streams.

It is not necessary to consider the evidence offered by the plaintiff in error, in support of its plea of estoppel, as the right for which it contends is fully established by the stipulations.

Judgments of the Circuit Court and Court of Common Pleas reversed, and judgment for plaintiff in error.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Hiram H. GRAYBILL

PENN TOWNSHIP MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE ASSO. OF LANCASTER COUNTY, App't.

(170 Pa. 75.)

Smoked meats taken from a smoke-house to a storage room as fast as they are cured are contents of the smoke-house within the meaning of a policy in separate sums upon a butcher's shop and its contents and the smoke-house and its contents, where it was the understanding of the parties that the smoked meats taken out of the smoke-house for storage were properly insured as contents of the smoke-house, and recovery may be had therefor when burned with the butcher shop, although the smoke-house is not burned.

(July 12, 1895.)

NOTE.—As to the location of movable property as affecting fire insurance thereon, see note to Benton v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. (Mich.) 26 L. R. A. 237.

29 L. R. A.

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Lancaster County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a policy of fire insurance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. A. F. Hostetter and Eugene G. Smith, for appellant:

An executed written contract cannot be pushed aside by the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness.

Rowand v. Finney, 96 Pa. 196; Martin v. Berens, 67 Pa. 459; Murray v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 103 Pa. 48; North & West Branch R. Co. v. Swank, 105 Pa. 561.

Previous negotiations of the parties are presumed to be merged in the written instrument.

Phillips v. Meily, 106 Pa. 548; Juniata Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Hetzel, 103 Pa. 507; Sylvius v. Kosch, 117 Pa. 76; Frey v. Hoydt, 116 Pa. 611.

No doubt the contents which were destroyed by fire, being smoked meat, had some time before been also the contents of the smoke-house. But wherever they might have been sometime, or howsoever often they may have been removed, cannot be material. At the time of the fire they were the "contents" of the building destroyed and were insured for $400, which the defendant company is now and always has been ready to pay.

Cooper v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. 50 Pa. 807, 88 Am. Dec. 544.

Messrs. W. U. Hensel and J. Hay Brown, for appellee:

The testimony was simply descriptive of the term "contents" as used in this policy. There was no stipulation in the policy that the meat insured was insured only in the smoke house, while there was positive testimony that the president of the company knew exactly what the insured intended by the term "contents," and that by no possibility could the smoke-house have held $500 worth of meats at one time. There was no dispute that the property was destroyed, nor as to its value. "It is the duty of the court to interpret a contract."

Folsom v. Cook, 115 Pa. 589; Codding v. Wood, 113 Pa. 871.

The contract being interpreted by the court, it is the function of the jury "to determine whether it is established by proof."

The testimony shows the positive promise to pay the full amount of the policy by the officers of the company, which, in itself, if believed by the jury, would be a waiver of any forfeiture for an alleged breach in removing the meat from the smoke-house to the meat-room.

Wood, Fire Ins. 949; Greenfield v. Massachusetts Mut. L. Ins. Co. 47 N. Y. 489; Williams v. Hartford Ins. Co. 54 Cal. 442, 85 Am. Rep. 77.

Contracts of insurance being prepared by the insurer, must be construed most strongly against the company insuring.

Strunk v. Firemen's Ins. Co. 160 Pa. 845.

The knowledge of the president of the company, who went there to survey the premises, and who subsequently wrote the policy, that the meat would not be kept permanently in the smoke-house, must be imputed to the company itself, and it cannot now take exception to or advantage of the fact that the meat was removed from the smoke-house to the smoke-room.

2 May, Fire Ins. 3d ed. § 507, p. 1108; Viele v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 26 Iowa, 9, 96 Am. Dec. 88; Benson v. Ottawa Agr. Ins. Co. 43 U. C. Q. B. 282; McMaster v. Insurance Co. of North America, 55 N. Y. 222, 14 Am. Rep. 289.

The question whether a change of circumstances in the situation, use, or condition of the property insured increases the risk, is purely one of fact for the jury, and their finding is conclusive.

Wood, Fire Ins. § 248; Williams v. People's F. Ins. Co. 57 N. Y. 285.

When an agent of an insurance company erroneously describes the property in an application for a policy of insurance prepared by him and signed by the insured, the company cannot in case of loss defend by reason of the misdescription.

Susquehanna Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Cusick, 109 Pa. 157.

89 L. R. A.

Williams, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case turns upon the meaning of the word "contents as used in the policy of insurance sued on. A ground barn and a butcher shop were insured as one building for the sum of $400, and the contents were insured for $400 more. A smoke-house was insured for $5 and its contents for $500. The barn, and butcher shop were burned with their contents. The smoke-house was not burned, but its contents, which had been removed to a storage room in one end of the butcher shop were wholly consumed. The question presented on this appeal is whether the smoked meats in the storage room, which were taken there as fast as they were cured in the smoke-house, were contents of the smoke-house, within the meaning of the policy, and were to be paid for by the company as part of the loss for which it was liable. Words must be understood in the sense in which they are commonly used in the business to which the contract in which they are found relates. This contract was to insure the buildings, machinery, and stock of a butcher. The president of the company proposing to insure was on the ground. The buildings and the property were examined by him. The evidence shows that in the barn and butcher shops there were a steam-engine and a boiler with conveniences for handling dressed cattle, machinery for chopping or grinding meat, and for making bologna and other sausages. These as the plaintiff alleges constitute the contents of the barn and butcher shop that were insured for $400. The smoke-house and storage room were also pointed out to him, and it was explained to him as the plaintiff testifies, that the smoke-house could hold but a small amount of meat at one time while the process of smoking was going on, but the hams, sausage, bacon, or other meat was removed from the smoke-house when cured and stored in the storage room, and that what was wanted was insurance on the smoked goods. The plaintiff says that the president stated that the smoked meat would be properly insured as contents of the smoke-house, and these words were written in the application and policy with that understanding, viz., that they would include and cover the smoked meats taken out of the smoke-house for storage in the room used for that purpose. The learned judge of the court below left this evidence to the jury for their consideration, telling them if they were satisfied by it the word "contents" used in connection with the smoke-house was understood and intended by both insurer and insured to cover the smoked meat in store, whether actually in the smoke-house or not, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover to the extent of $500 for his loss on these goods. This is assigned as error, and the contention of the appellant is that it permitted an alteration to be made in a written instrument upon the uncorroborated testimony of the plaintiff. But the word "contents" is not a certain and definite description of any particular class of goods. Its meaning must be ascertained by considering the contents, the nature and methods of the business for which the building whose contents are to be insured is to be used, and the understanding and intentions of the parties as expressed at the time the insurance was contracted for. Thus we learn from the evidence in this case that the contents of the butcher shop were not made up of slaughtered cattle, but of a steam engine and various pieces of machinery; while the contents of the smoke-house included hams, bacon, bologna sausages, and other forms of smoked meat. This is, in the absence of a detailed description of the articles in the body of the policy, the only way in which the character and value of the contents of a building can be shown. But the defendant alleges that as the building was not burned its contents could not be. This is a non sequitur. The contents might be destroyed while outside the building and when that happens the question of the plaintiff's right to recover must depend on whether the purpose of the removal was such as to detach the goods permanently from the building and create a new or an increasing hazard not contemplated when the contract for insurance was made. The investigation of this question is not an attempt to reform the contract, but to determine its meaning and extent. This rule in equity governing the reformation of contracts is not applicable therefore, but the jury is at liberty to determine the question presented to them in this case by the preponderance of the evidence. The evidence, showing the capacity of the smoke-house, the necessity for the removal of the smoked meat as soon as it was properly cured to some place near by for storage while a fresh supply of meat for smoking was put in its place, the location of the storage room and quantity of smoked meats kept in store ready for sale, was relevant to the inquiry in this case, and was properly admitted. So was the evidence tending to show that the attention of the insurer was called to the manner in which the smoke-house was used and the smoked meats stored; that he was informed that the smoked meats were what were to be insured in connection with the smoke-house, and that, with full knowledge of all the facts, he selected the word "contents" as a proper and sufficiently descriptive word to cover the smoked meats whether in the smoke-house undergoing the process of smoking, or in the store-room after its completion. The facts and circumstances thus brought to the attention of the court and jury were helps to a correct exposition of the words the parties had employed. They tended to corroborate the plaintiff's version of the contract, and to sustain his claim. They were persuasive in their character, and, as we infer from their verdict, satisfied the jury that the words "contents of the smoke-house" were understood and intended by both parties to cover the smoked meats passing through the smoke-house to the room near by in which they were stored till needed for the supply of customers.

We see no error in the rulings complained of, and the judgment is affirmed.

NEW HAMPSHIRE SUPREME COURT.

AMOSKEAG MANUFACTURING CO.

v.

Town of CONCORD.

(66 N. H. 532.)

Land covered by water held back by a dam for furnishing power is assessable for taxation, at its enhanced value in the town in which it lies under a statute making real estate taxable where situated, although the power is used in another town.

(July 31, 1891.)

PETITION by the Amoskeag Manufacturing Company to the Supreme Court in Merrimack County for relief from taxation which had been assessed against it by the town of Concord. Cases discharged.

Petitioner owns land on both sides of the Merrimack river which is situated as Garvin's Falls. There is a dam across the river for the creation of a water power and the dividing line between the towns of Concord and Bow is the middle of the river. Petitioner utilized its water-power entirely in the town of Bow, and the power has never been used on the Concord side. Petitioner claimed that in fixing the value of its real estate for taxation in Concord the water-power should be excluded.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. David Cross and E. H. Woodman, for plaintiff:

In Winnipisagoes Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Gilford, 64 N. H. 337, a corporation organized for the purpose of managing and controlling the vast water-power of a lake situated in a dozen or more New Hampshire towns was held taxable in Gilford where the dam was situated or where the waters of the lake were poured out or managed and controlled. The location of the water of the lake had nothing to do with the place of taxation.

Water-power as such is not taxable.

Where a dam extends across a river, the thread of which was the dividing line between two towns, but the water created thereby was applied exclusively to drive mills situated in one of the towns, it was held that the water-power was not subject to taxation in the other town.

Boston Mfg. Co. v. Newton, 22 Pick. 22; Burroughs, Taxn. ed. 1887, p. 229.

In Vermont the courts claim that the water-power applied to a mill or factory, to the extent to which it is applied, becomes a part of the mill or factory itself; and when unimproved it is to be taxed with the land to which it is attached if its existence adds value to it.

NOTE.—For cases somewhat akin to the above, see Paris v. Norway Water Co. (Me.) 21 L. R. A. 523, and note.

29 L. R. A.

Bellows Falls Canal Co. v. Rockingham, 87 Vt. 622; Hilliard, Taxn. § 88, chap. 5.

Mr. Harry G. Sargent, for respondent: Water-power, as such, is not taxable.

Burroughs, Taxn. 229.

Real estate shall be taxed in the town in which it is situate.

Gen. Laws, chap. 54, § 11.

The only fact to be ascertained is, Where is the land situated? The commissioners have found in this case that land to the value of $12,000 is situated in Concord; and this finding is conclusive.

Cocheco Mfg. Co. v. Strafford, 51 N. H. 455; Winnepesaukee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Gilford, 64 N. H. 337.

Where a company owned a water-power which they rented out and which was exempt from taxation, it was held to be proper, in estimating the value of lands not exempt, to take into consideration the increased value of such lands by reason of their proximity to the water-power.

Burroughs, Taxn. p. 228; State v. Flavell, 24 N. J. L. 370.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The valuation of the plaintiffs' property for purposes of taxation has been agreed upon by the parties, and the only question in the case is, How much in value of the water-power created by the dam upon the Merrimack river, one half of which is in Concord and one half in Bow, shall be assessed to Concord? Whatever water-power is used, is used by means of a canal on the Bow side of the river, where it is used in operating a pulp mill there. The value of the whole water-power created by the dam and fall in the river is fixed at $25,000, and the referees have awarded that the plaintiffs shall be assessed in Concord upon $12,000, or $500 less than one half in value of the whole water-power. It does not appear from the case that the cost of constructing the canal, or of appliances for conducting the water to the mill, all of which are in Bow, was included by the referees, or understood by the parties to be included, in the valuation of $25,000. That sum was fixed as the value of the whole water-power, not including the value of the dam and canal embankments and mill appendages, and the committee's finding must have been that, of the water-power, $500 more than one half in value of the whole water-power,—that is, of the reservoir,—is in Bow. The water-power is created by means of a dam at the fall in the river, and the supply of power is made constant and uniform by means of the reservoir made by the dam, and every part of the reservoir contributes to the amount and constancy of the supply of water-power. The power may be applied to operating a mill below any part of the dam, or upon a canal, or various canals, running from the reservoir; but whenever the power is applied, it is created by means of the dam and reservoir above, where it is constantly replenished and stored. Real estate must be taxed in the town in which it is situated (Gen. Laws, chap. 53, § 2; Id. chap. 54, § 11), and the words "land," "lands," or "real estate," shall include "lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and all rights thereto and interests therein." Id. chap. 1, § 20. Water, or water-power as such, and as a separate item of property, is not the subject of taxation. But when the water is confined, by means of a dam or otherwise, in a reservoir, and is poured out through a narrow canal, furnishing power for operating a mill, the land of which the basin or reservoir is composed, has its value for taxable purposes greatly, if not enormously, increased. In point of law, the capacity of the basin for receiving, holding, and pouring out a constant supply of water, is a quality of the land. Cocheco Mfg. Co. v. Strafford, 51 N. H. 455, 473. "Water-power, or rights in a reservoir of water, are an interest in the land upon and by which they are created, and, by the express terms of the statute, must be taxed in the town where the land of which they are a part is situated." Winnepesaukee Lake Cotton & Woolen Mfg. Co. v. Gilford, 64 N. H. 337, 348. The basin or reservoir in this case, "the land upon and by which the water-power is created," is one half in Concord, and the plaintiffs must be assessed for one half the agreed value of the water-power there. The contention that, because the water-power, so far as it is used at all, is used in Bow, it makes a case for taxation wholly there, and not at all in Concord, is supported upon no just ground, and is fully met by the statute upon the subject, which declares that "real estate shall be taxed in the town in which it is situate." "If a riparian owner of a watercourse running through the towns A., B., and C., builds a dam across it in the town of C. and thereby flows his lands in A. and B., he does not thereby repeal the act of the legislature which fixed the boundaries of the towns, nor does he thereby exercise the legislative power of enacting that any part of his real estate shall not be taxed in the town in which it is situate." Cocheco Mfg. Co. v. Strafford, 51 N. H. 473.

39 L. R. A.

The case is not changed, but made stronger, if possible, in the same direction, when the dividing line of the towns is the thread of the river, which divides the reservoir and the dam in the direction of the running water. Instead of by a line running across the stream. If, because the water-power created by the dam and reservoir is used to operate a mill in Bow, that power for some purposes has become annexed to the mill, it is none the less, in point of law and for purposes of taxation, a quality which composes the reservoir; and the land, with its value increased by the use of the water-power upon it, is taxable in Concord, where it is situated.

Case discharged.

Blodgett, J., did not sit. The others concurred.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

David J. LEWIS, Appt.,

v.

DAILY NEWS COMPANY OF CUMBERLAND.

(.....Md.....)

1. Falsely to publish of a person that he "would be an anarchist if he thought it would pay," is libelous.
2. Defining alleged libelous terms in a paraphrastic way and pointing out that they were intended to apply to the plaintiff, is strictly within the office of an innuendo.

(June 19, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Allegany County in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged publication of a libel. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Ferdinand Williams and W. C. Devecmon, for appellant:

Any written or printed publication which holds a person up to scorn or ridicule or to a feeling of contempt or execration, or which imputes or implies his commission of a crime not directly charged, is libelous. So also is any printed publication which tends to lower him in the confidence of the community.

13 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 294, 295; Newell, Defamation, pp. 48, 77, 78; Odgers, Libel & Slander, pp. 1-4.

Any publication injurious to the social character of another and not shown to be true or to have been justifiable, is actionable as a false and malicious libel.

Hagan v. Hendry, 18 Md. 177; Snyder v. Fulton, 34 Md. 128, 6 Am. Rep. 814.

Damages are a presumption of law.

1 Chitty, Pl. 396, 400, 408; Pfitzinger v. Dubs, 64 Fed. Rep. 696; Shilling v. Carson, 27 Md. 175, 92 Am. Dec. 632; Peterson v. Sentman, 37 Md. 140, 11 Am. Rep. 534; Odgers, Libel & Slander, 291, 298.

To write of one that he is thought no more of than a horse thief or counterfeiter is libelous.

Nelson v. Musgrave, 10 Mo. 648.

"A publication stating that the plaintiff is about to commence a suit for libel, but that he will not like to bring it to trial in Otsego county because he is known there" is libelous.

Cooper v. Greeley, 1 Denio, 347.

The word "crank" can be made libelous by proper colloquium and innuendo.

Walker v. Tribune Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 827.

The word "skunk" is held to be libelous per se.

Messuers v. Dickens, 70 Wis. 83.

NOTE.—This, the second case in this series of reports in which the question of liability for using the word "anarchist" as an epithet has arisen, is rather stronger than the former one which it cites, Cerveny v. Chicago Daily News Co. (Ill.) 13 L. R. A. 864, in that the charge is not directly that complainant is an anarchist but that he would be such for pay.

39 L. R. A.

See also 39 L. R. A. 734.

To call a man an anarchist is libelous per se. Cerveny v. Chicago Daily News Co. 13 L. R. A. 864, 139 Ill. 345.

The words, "You cannot get P. down any lower than he is; he is low enough; you can't get him down any lower; you can't spoil a rotten egg,"—were held grossly libelous per se. Pfitzinger v. Dubs, 64 Fed. Rep. 696.

Messrs. David W. Sloan, Robert R. Henderson, and John G. Wilson, for appellee:

To enable the plaintiff to recover the publication must be libelous per se, in (a) imputing to him criminal conduct which would subject him to corporal punishment (Wagman v. Byers, 17 Md. 183); or in (b) imputing to him conduct which tends to injure his reputation and expose him to hatred and contempt among honorable men (Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 715; Newbold v. The J. M. Bradstreet & Son, 37 Md. 52, 40 Am. Rep. 426; 18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 325); or of such a character that special damage to the plaintiff may result from the publication as the natural and proximate, though not the necessary, consequence of the publication.

Newbold v. The J. M. Bradstreet & Son, supra; Walker v. Tribune Co. 29 Fed. Rep. 827; Pollard v. Lyon, 91 U. S. 225, 23 L. ed. 308.

When words are not actionable per se special damage must be alleged.

Stone v. Cooper, 2 Denio, 298; Goldberger v. Philadelphia Grocer Pub. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 42; Dorsey v. Whipple, 8 Gill, 457; Wilson v. Cottman, 65 Md. 190; Odgers, Libel & Slander, 1st Am. ed. 289; Cook v. Cook, 100 Mass. 194; Williams v. Hill, 19 Wend. 805; 1 Poe, Pl. § 174.

It can hardly be contended that the language complained of imputes to the plaintiff the commission of a crime such as would subject him to corporal punishment.

At most this merely charges him with having a guilty mind and to charge a man with having guilty thoughts or a guilty intent is not to charge him with the commission of a crime.

18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 853.

The publication charges the plaintiff with nothing more than vacillation in his political beliefs. He had "made several talks" before a Populist club, he was representing the sixth district on this occasion by proxy, and if it would advance his political ambitions he would join any other political organization. It is facetious in its character.

At most it is a harmless bit of pleasantry. The matter has been very much magnified and an importance attached to it which it does not deserve. An actionable libel cannot be created out of nothing.

Press Co. Limited v. Stewart, 119 Pa. 608; Donaghue v. Gaffy, 54 Conn. 257.

To say of the plaintiff that under certain conditions he would be an anarchist, and to say it in the connection in which it was used as appears from the record, would no more subject the plaintiff to ridicule or contempt than to call him a "crank" and in Walker v. Tribune Co., 29 Fed. Rep. 829, it was said that the word "crank" would not necessarily imply that a man had been guilty of a crime, nor tend to subject him to ridicule or contempt to say of him that he is capricious or subject to vagaries or whims.

Every reflection upon a man's character or motives does not constitute a libel in law and the super-sensitive person whose conduct is commented upon or criticised will not have his litigious spirit gratified by the courts, unless the court can see from the article that the language used tends to injure him.

Goldstein v. Foss, 6 Barn. & C. 154, 2 Younge & J. 145; Robinson v. Jermyn, 1 Price, 11; Hackett v. Providence Teleg. Pub. Co. (R. I.) 29 Atl. Rep. 145; Trimble v. Anderson, 79 Ala. 514; Mulligan v. Cole, L. R. 10 Q. B. 549; People v. Jerome, 1 Mich. 142; Goldberger v. Philadelphia Grocer Pub. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 42; Stone v. Cooper, 2 Denio, 298; Rice v. Simmons, 2 Harr. (Del.) 417, 31 Am. Dec. 766; Capital and Counties Bank v. Henty, 7 App. Cas. 744; Stuart v. Bragg, 10 Q. B. 908.

In this state the question as to whether the declaration contains a good cause of action is always matter of law, and it is for the court to determine on demurrer whether what is charged in the count amounts in law to slander.

Avirett v. State, 76 Md. 520; Peterson v. Sentman, 87 Md. 153, 11 Am. Rep. 534; Van Vechten v. Hopkins, 5 Johns. 211, 4 Am. Dec. 539.

It is not the nature of an innuendo to beget an action.

Sheely v. Biggs, 2 Harr. & J. 368, 3 Am. Dec. 552; Arrow S. S. Co. v. Bennett, 78 Hun, 81; Williams v. Stott, 1 Crompt. & M. 675; 1 Chitty, Pl. 14th Am. ed. 406.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of trespass on the case for libel. The declaration contains three counts. A demurrer to the whole declaration was filed, and, upon being ruled good, judgment was entered for the defendant, and the plaintiff then took this appeal. The defendant is the owner, proprietor, and publisher of a newspaper called the "Daily News." The words which are complained of, and which were published by the defendant, are as follows: "Mr. davy lewis, proxy for some one in the Sixth district, a member of the Populist Club in this city, before which he has made several talks, who would be an anarchist if he thought it would pay." Meanings are ascribed to these words by the innuendoes employed in the three counts of the narr. The demurrer, of course, admits the publication of the alleged defamatory language by the defendant, its untruthfulness, and the malice which prompted its promulgation; but raises the questions—First, whether the words, as explained by the innuendoes, are actionable; and secondly, whether the innuendoes fairly express the effect and meaning of the published words.

Upon demurrer, it is always the province of the court to determine whether the words charged in the declaration amount in law to libel or slander. Dorsey v. Whipps, 8 Gill, 462; Haines v. Campbell, 74 Md. 158; Avirett v. State, 76 Md. 510. And it is equally matter of law as to whether an innuendo is good; that is to say, whether it is fairly warranted by the language declared on, when that language is read, either by itself, or in connection with the inducement and colloquium, if there be an inducement and colloquium set forth. Avirett v. State, supra; Solomon v. Lawson, 8 Q. B. 828. But the innuendo cannot enlarge, extend, or add to the sense or effect of the words declared on, or properly impute to them a meaning which the publication, either in itself or taken in connection with the inducement and colloquium, does not warrant or fairly imply. Now, what words are libelous? "It is well settled that any publication which tends to injure one's reputation, and expose him to hatred or contempt, if made without lawful excuse, is libelous." Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 175, 45 Am. Rep. 715; Snyder v. Fulton, 34 Md. 128, 6 Am. Rep. 814; Hagan v. Hendry, 18 Md. 191. Malice in an action of this kind consists in intentionally doing, without justifiable cause, that which is injurious to another; and everything injurious to the character of another is in this action taken to be false, until it is shown by plea to be true. Therefore, every publication injurious to the character is, in law, false and malicious, until the presumption of falsehood is met by plea of the truth, or the presumption of malice is removed by showing a justifiable occasion or motive. 1 Hare & W. Lead. Cas. ed. 1857, 116, notes to the case of Steele v. Southwick, 9 Johns. 214.

The words complained of charge that the plaintiff "would be an anarchist if he thought it would pay," and the innuendo defining their import in the first count is: "Meaning thereby, and intending to charge, that the plaintiff would, for a money consideration, be an anarchist." The second count, after setting forth a definition of the word "anarchist," explains the meaning of the alleged libelous publication to be that the plaintiff would, for a money consideration, be an anarchist, and engage in the unlawful, treasonable, and felonious designs and acts of anarchists. And the third count avers that the word "anarchist" means a person who, actuated by mere lust of plunder, seeks to overturn by violence all constituted forms and institutions of society and law and order, and all right of property; and that the words "if he thought it would pay" mean that the plaintiff would, if he thought it would inure to his personal gain, from mere lust of plunder, endeavor to destroy all right of property and all law and order. Falsely publishing of an individual that he is an anarchist is libelous. Cereeny v. Chicago Daily News Co. 139 Ill. 198, 18 L. R. A. 864. The declaration alleges that an anarchist is universally accepted by all law-abiding persons in all countries as meaning an enemy and conspirator against all law and social order, and as one who uses unlawful, violent, and felonious means to destroy property and human life, and as one who is treasonable to the government under which he lives and employs assassination of persons in authority as means of accomplishing his unlawful designs against society. Obviously, then, to publish of and concerning an individual that he is such an enemy of law, of order, of society, and of human life, is grossly libelous, and is far from merely charging him, as suggested in the argument, with being only a political propagandist, advocating visionary schemes; for anarchy, as defined in the declaration, and as generally understood, is avowed hostility to all governments, and open antagonism to all political parties, every one of which professes to support some form of government, and generally that which its members consider the best. It cannot be doubted that all law-abiding, right-thinking men regard with abhorrence the individual who justifies or approves of the bloody and atrocious means to which anarchists resort, the world over in furtherance of their reckless and revolutionary designs, against every form of government and against every right of property. It is equally apparent that to accuse another of being an anarchist in the sense in which the term is generally accepted is to accuse him of that which will inevitably injure his reputation, and expose him to obloquy and ignominious reproach. If this be so, then to publish of another that he "would be an anarchist if he thought it would pay" is to impute to him the possession of that degree of moral obliquity and turpitude which would mark him as a fit person, if he were personally benefited thereby, to do the violent and felonious acts of which anarchists are known or believed to be guilty. It fixes upon him a stigma which would cause all honest and upright people to shun him, because a man who would be an anarchist if it would pay him to be one is of necessity not only a person devoid of all moral restraint, but one under the dominion of the worst of human passions, and ready, for self-aggrandizement, to commit the most grievous crimes against the state, against society, and against the individual. And it matters not whether the alleged motive that influences him be an expect-tation of pay in actual money, or the hope of personal gain, inspired by the mere lust of plunder; for in either event the obvious meaning of the charge is that for gain, however acquired, he would be willing to become an obdurate criminal, an enemy of mankind, and a conspirator against the government under which he lives. Surely, such a person would merit universal execration; and to charge that an individual would be thus guilty for gain would undeniably subject him to contempt and hatred, and would therefore be actionable in itself.

It only remains to inquire whether the innuendoes do more than point out or define the meaning of the libelous words; and about this there can be no possible difficulty. They neither enlarge them, nor give to them a significance at variance with their natural and ordinary meaning. The plaintiff is named in the article. He is named, too, in such a manner as necessarily to expose him to ridicule, for the initial letters of both his Christian and surname are printed in small type, with an obvious view of belittling him in the public estimation. The innuendoes further set forth the meaning of the words "anarchist" and "pay;" and they ascribe to them their usual and generally accepted import, defining them in a paraphrastic way, and pointing out that they were intended to apply to the plaintiff. This is strictly within the office of an innuendo.

For the reasons we have given, we consider the declaration sufficient in law. We do not deem it necessary to examine and review the various cases cited by the appellee's counsel in the exceptionally able arguments made by them at the bar, because the law respecting libel is too well settled in Maryland to be shaken by decisions elsewhere, even if, upon a strict analysis, those decisions were shown to be in conflict with our own.

Judgment reversed, with costs above and below, and new trial awarded.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH of Massachusetts

v.

Alexander McCANCE.

(.....Mass.....)

The parts of a book which are obscene, indecent, and impure, when the whole book is not so, must be described or referred to in an indictment so specifically that they can be identified by the evidence, if they are not set out according to their tenor because unfit to appear on the record.

(June 24, 1895.)

EXCEPTIONS by defendant to rulings of the Superior Court for Suffolk County made during a trial of an indictment against him for selling obscene books, which resulted in his conviction. Sustained.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. P. Henry Hutchinson for defendant.

Mr. Frederick E. Hurd, for plaintiff:

An obscene publication need not be spread at length upon the records by a recital thereof in full in the indictment.

Com. v. Holmes, 17 Mass. 886; Com. v. Wright, 189 Mass. 882; Com. v. Tarbox, 1 Cush. 66.

It is the law of England that in an indictment at common law for publishing an obscene book, it is not sufficient to describe the book by its title only, but the words thereof alleged to be obscene must be set out, and if they are omitted the defect will not be cured by a verdict of guilty, and the indictment will be bad.

Bradlaugh v. Queen, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 607.

On an indictment at common law for exhibiting an obscene picture Tilghman, Ch. J., NOTE.—As to the unlawfulness of obscene and indecent publications, see note to Es Worthington Co. (N. Y.) 24 L. R. A. 110.

29 L. R. A.

in Com. v. Sharpless, 2 Serg. & R. 108, 7 Am. Dec. 682, said, with reference to the objection, that the indictment did not sufficiently describe the offense. "I am for paying some respect to the chastity of our records. These are circumstances which may be well omitted."

Field, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an indictment under Stat. 1890, chap. 70. The defendant is charged with "knowingly, unlawfully, feloniously, wickedly, and scandalously" selling "to one Jefferson H. Parker a certain book, then and there called 'The Decameron of Boccaccio,' and which said book, upon the title-page thereof, was then and there of the tenor following, that is to say: 'The Decameron; or Ten Days' Entertainment of Boccaccio. A Revised Translation by W. K. Kelly, with Portrait and Ten Illustrations, Drawn and Engraved by Leopold Flameng. Published for the Trade,'—and which said book, then and there contained, among other things, certain obscene, indecent, and impure language, and manifestly tending to the corruption of the morals of youth, which said book is so lewd, obscene, indecent, and impure that the same would be offensive to the court here, and improper to be placed upon the records thereof, wherefore said jurors do not set forth the same in this indictment," etc. The defendant moved to quash the indictment for this among other reasons, that "the indictment sets forth, in no legal and sufficient terms, wherein said book is amenable to the penalties denounced by the statute; no specification of any offending passage is exhibited." This motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

The exceptions also recite as follows: "The government introduced in evidence the book described in the indictment, and caused to be read the following passages from the said book: Novel 1, third day; novel 2, fourth day; novel 4, fifth day; novel 7, sixth day; novel 8, eighth day; novel 9, ninth day. No evidence of the character of the book was adduced by the commonwealth other than the book itself." The book introduced in evidence is a volume of 710 printed pages, most of which are in the English language, but a few pages are in the original Italian language, with a translation of these into the French language appended. There is a short preface, and at the end of some of the novels are short historical notes by the translator, and each day's entertainment is preceded by an introduction. The Decameron of Boccaccio is a book well known to students of literature, and contains ten novels or stories, for each of ten days' entertainment. Of these 100 novels six only were introduced in evidence by the commonwealth. We cannot know what parts of the book the grand jury found to be obscene, indecent, and impure, and we know of no way whereby from the indictment the defendant could know before the trial what parts of the book would be put in evidence by the commonwealth. The first precedent, so far as we know, for an indictment in this form, is the second count in the indictment in Com. v. Holmes,

17 Mass. 385. In that case the court says: "The second and fifth counts in this indictment are certainly good; for it can never be required that an obscene book and picture should be displayed upon the records of the court, which must be done if the description in these counts is insufficient. This would be to require that the public itself should give permanency and notoriety to indecency in order to punish it." This decision has been followed by many of the courts in this country. See People v. Girardin, 1 Mich. 90; State v. Pennington, 5 Lea, 506; McNair v. People, 89 Ill. 441; Fuller v. People, 92 Ill. 182; State v. Brown, 27 Vt. 619; State v. Griffin, 48 Tex. 588; State v. Smith, 17 R. I. 371; United States v. Bennett, 16 Blatchf. 888, Fed. Cas. No. 14,571. No authorities are cited in Com. v. Holmes, and the opinion in Com. v. Wright, 1 Cush. 46, shows that the decision in Com. v. Holmes must be regarded as an exception to the general rule of pleading relating to libelous publications. Com. v. Tarbox, 1 Cush. 66, decides that in an indictment for publishing an obscene paper, if the indictment purports to set out the alleged publication, it must do it in the very words of the paper, and the court says that "the excepted cases occur whenever a publication of this character is so obscene as to render it improper that it should appear on the record; and then the statement of the contents may be omitted altogether, and a description thereof substituted; but, in this case, a reason for the omission must appear in the indictment by proper averments." See Com. v. Dejardin, 126 Mass. 46, 30 Am. Rep. 652. Com. v. Wright, 189 Mass. 382, where the indictment was quashed, decides that the indictment "must at least by some general description identify the paper" which is alleged to contain obscene matter, and which the defendant is charged with publishing. This question of the mode of pleading in cases of this kind was considered in England by the court of appeals, in Bradlaugh v. Queen, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 607, and it was unanimously decided that the words alleged to be obscene must be set out according to their tenor. The two principal Massachusetts cases were considered, and the decision in Com. v. Holmes was not approved. Id. 620, 638, 641. But the weight of authority in this country is in favor of the decision in Com. v. Holmes, and the principle of that decision has been several times recognized by this court as correct, and we think that it must be regarded as an established rule of law in this commonwealth. It remains to be considered whether the present indictment contains a reasonably specific description of the obscene, indecent, and impure language which it is alleged that the book, among other things, contains. The Decameron of Boccaccio was probably not written for the purpose of corrupting the morals of youth. It was written long before the invention of printing, when the number of persons who could read were few, and it is supposed to represent the taste of many cultivated people of the world in Italy at the time. It was read for the entertainment of men and women. Parts of it are coarse, and according to the standards of modern times, are obscene, indecent, and impure, and other parts of it are decent and pure enough to be read by the present generation. Because it is not a book which is wholly obscene, indecent, and impure, the book is described in the indictment as containing, "among other things, certain obscene, indecent, and impure language." If books of this character are to be regarded as within the provisions of Statute 1890, chapter 70, upon which we express no opinion, we think it reasonable that the parts of the book which the grand jury find to be obscene, indecent, and impure should be described or referred to in the indictment so specifically that they can be identified by the evidence, unless they are set out according to their tenor. In the present indictment it cannot be known that the defendant has not been indicted upon evidence relating to certain parts of the book, and convicted upon evidence relating to certain other parts. A picture or print has no tenor, and must of necessity be set out by description, but printed words always can be set out according to their tenor. If this is not done because it is alleged that the language is too indecent to be placed on the records of the court, we think that, in the absence of any statute regulating the procedure, the law requires that the language complained of should be identified by such a description or reference that it may be known that the indictment was founded upon the language which is put in evidence and relied upon at the trial. If the obscene language complained of is found only in some passages in a book, the rest of which is free from obscenity, the book as a whole should not be presented, but only the book as containing these obscene passages. The records of the court of common pleas or of the supreme judicial court for the county of Worcester contained no copy of the book entitled "Memoirs of a Woman of Pleasure," referred to in the indictment in Com. v. Holmes, but apparently the whole book was presented, and the indictment was at common law. The statutes on the subject were first enacted here in Rev. Stat., chap. 180, § 10. It may be suggested that on a motion to quash the indictment the court cannot take judicial notice of the contents of the book referred to in the indictment. But it appears by the indictment that the book referred to contains other things than the obscene language complained of, and no attempt has been made in the indictment to distinguish between these other things and the obscene language, and no excuse has been given in the indictment for not designating the part of the book complained of, and the evidence shows that the indictment might easily have described or referred to the novels put in evidence so that the defendant could have known to what he was called upon to answer at the trial. We are of opinion that the indictment is not reasonably specific, and that it should have been quashed. The exceptions taken at the trial need not be considered.

Exceptions sustained.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

ST. JOHNS MANUFACTURING CO.

v.

Orrin W. MUNGER, Plff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

Fraud of promoters in procuring a subscription to stock of a corporation before its organization is not a defense against an assessment on the stock by the corporation after the subscriber has carried out his contract and united with others in forming the corporation, but his remedy is restricted to an action against the wrongdoer.

(July 2, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Clinton County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enforce payment of an assessment upon a stock subscription. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Fedewa & Walbridge, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff cannot accept the advantages and refuse to assume the obligations.

Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 815.

NOTE.—As to effect of promoter's fraud upon right of corporation against subscriber, see note to Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 35 L. R. A. 100.

29 L. R. A.

A subscriber, on discovering the fraud, may rescind by notification to the corporate authorities, or he may wait until sued upon the subscription and then set up the fraud as a defense to the action at law.

2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 152.

In all cases where the subscription is taken by a promoter or unauthorized agent, it cannot retain the subscription and repudiate the representations. It must assume both or neither.

Crump v. United States Min. Co. 7 Gratt. 358, 56 Am. Dec. 116; Battelle v. Northwestern Cement & Concrete Pav. Co. 87 Minn. 89; 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 707; Wilson v. Kings County Elev. R. Co. 114 N. Y. 487; Stanton v. New York & E. R. Co. 59 Conn. 272; Davis v. Montgomery Furnace & Chemical Co. (Ala.) 8 So. Rep. 496; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. ed. 1050; Bommer v. American Spiral Spring Butt & Hinge Mfg. Co. 81 N. Y. 468; Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439.

The rule that fraud vitiates all contracts at the option of the person defrauded, applies as well to stock subscriptions in a corporation as to other contracts.

Vreeland v. New Jersey Stone Co. 29 N. J. Eq. 188; Duffield v. E. T. Barnum Wire & Iron Works, 64 Mich. 294; Low v. Connecticut & P. R. R. Co. 45 N. H. 370, affirmed 46 N. H. 284; Hall v. Vermont & M. R. Co. 38 Vt. 401;

Virginia Land Co. v. Haupt, 90 Va. 533;
French v. Ryan (Mich.) 82 N. W. Rep. 1016.

Messrs. Spaulding, Norton & Welmer, for defendant in error:

The defendant is chargeable in law with knowledge that this soliciting committee could not bind a company not yet in existence by any representations they might make.

Miller v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co. 57 Ind. 241.

The company could not have agents, as it was not yet in existence.

Battelle v. Northwestern Cement & Concrete Pave. Co. 37 Minn. 89; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Ketchum, 27 Conn. 180; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sage, 65 Ill. 329, 16 Am. Rep. 587.

The company never knew the committee except as subscribers, afterwards, to the capital stock. Their representations to the defendant were those of strangers or outsiders, were immaterial, and could not bind the company.

Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 307; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders & Corp. Law, 141; Miller v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co. supra.

To work a ratification, the alleged verbal representations must have been made by an actual agent, or one whose action is ratified with knowledge of what he has done.

McGraw v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 54 Mich. 149.

The only remedy is by an action at law against the person who induced the taking of the shares.

Duranty's Case, 26 Beav. 270.

Any representations made by the committee were personal and not binding on the company afterwards organized.

Carmody v. Powers, 60 Mich. 26; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sage, 65 Ill. 329, 16 Am. Rep. 587; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders & Corp. Law, § 141.

Neither those signing the articles of association, nor any one representing them as agents, could determine what the company would or should do after its organization.

Fox v. Allensville, O. S. & V. Turnp. Co. 46 Ind. 31; Bish v. Bradford, 17 Ind. 493; 2 Beach, Priv. Corp. 852, and cases cited.

The defense comes too late.

1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders & Corp. Law, § 161; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 310, and note.

Hooker, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff recovered a judgment against the defendant upon an assessment on the capital stock of the corporation to which the defendant was a subscriber. Upon the trial the plaintiff's counsel objected to evidence in support of the notice accompanying the plea, which objection was sustained, and the case turns upon the sufficiency of the facts stated in the notice as a defense. These facts are substantially as follows: Prior to January 1, 1893, R. M. Steel, of St. Johns, and others, had been carrying on a manufacturing business in that city, under the name of the St. Johns Manufacturing Company. Some time before the date mentioned, a proposition had been made by Steel to a number of the citizens of St. Johns to incorporate said business with a capital of $300,000, of which $200,000 was to be preferred stock, and $100,000 common stock; and some time in 1891 the defendant subscribed for fifty shares of common stock by signing an agreement of which the following is a copy, viz.: "Whereas, the St. Johns Manufacturing Company is to be incorporated as a stock company, with a capital stock of $300,000, we do each of us severally subscribe and agree to pay for the number of shares of said stock set opposite our respective names, the par value of said shares to be $10 each. The stock hereby subscribed to be paid in twenty equal monthly installments, commencing October 20, 1891, with seven per cent interest on unpaid portions after January 1, 1892, or all or any part in excess thereof may be paid at any time at the option of the subscriber." Prior to said subscription, the defendant had no knowledge of the extent or profits of said business carried on by Steel and others. Prior to the time that the defendant subscribed as aforesaid, a meeting was held at St. Johns, which was attended by Steel and a great number of citizens of the place, for the purpose of considering the advisability of forming a corporation to carry on said business, and a committee was appointed by said meeting for the purpose of soliciting subscriptions for stock in the proposed corporation. Said committee consisted of citizens of St. Johns, who proposed to and did subscribe for part of the stock of said company. Said committee, "in order to induce" defendant to subscribe for stock, represented to him that the said business had for a series of years been a very prosperous and money-making one, and that during the period it had manufactured tables it had never paid less than 10 per cent a year on capital invested of $300,000, and had paid as high as 17 or 18 per cent a year on said amount of capital. Said committee further represented to the defendant that the business was to be capitalized in the sum of $300,000, of which $200,000 was to be preferred stock, and $100,000 common stock; that the former was to be paid an annual dividend of 6 per cent from the earnings of the company, and the common stock was to be paid the balance of the profits, which would be at least 14 to 20 per cent per year. The machinery was to be invoiced and appraised at its cost value by disinterested persons, and turned in as part of the capital, and the common stock was to have "such representation on the board of directors, so that they could protect their interests." It was further stated that the practice of the former company of issuing to its workmen and others coupons payable at the St. Johns Mercantile Company (an institution in which said Steel had a large interest) should be discontinued, and that such coupons should thereafter be made payable at all the stores in St. Johns. The notice alleges, further, that the defendant "relied upon" each of such representations, and was thereby induced to subscribe for such stock. The notice states that preferred stock to the amount of $199,000 is owned by Steel; that the new company has continued to issue coupons payable as before, and not at the stores of St. Johns generally; that Steel's stock was paid for by him by turning over to the new company the plant, machinery, stock, and material connected with the business before the incorporation of plaintiff; and that such property was not invoiced and appraised by disinterested persons, but was turned in at more than its cost value; and that each representation made by said committee to the defendant, and by which he was induced to subscribe for said stock, was untrue; and that he had no knowledge of its falsity, either at the time he subscribed or at the time of his payment of $100 upon said subscription. The notice asserts further that the by-laws adopted by said corporation are antagonistic to the right of the holders of the common stock, and unjustly prefer the holders of the preferred stock, to an extent that renders the common stock worthless, and that such by-laws were adopted by the votes of the holders of the preferred stock, to the detriment of the holders of the common stock, and against the protest of some of the latter; that the majority of the directors have been selected by the holders of the preferred stock, and the board has ignored the interests of the holders of the common stock. It is further alleged that the plant has been used for many other purposes than those represented to be contemplated, and for some unauthorized purposes. The foregoing comprises the essential allegations of the defendant's notice, and, if it states a sufficient defense, the judgment must be reversed; but, if it does not, it was proper to sustain the objection made by the plaintiff's counsel, and the judgment should be affirmed. Spicer v. Bonker, 45 Mich. 680.

Counsel for the defendant say that the plaintiff company is bound by the representations of the citizens' committee which procured the defendant's subscription by misstatements, the benefit of which it cannot receive and retain without assuming responsibility for the representations. This is an attempted application of the rule that, by accepting the benefits of a contract made by an agent, the principal is bound by the undertakings and promises of the agent. A number of cases are cited to sustain this contention, which, manifestly, must rest upon the proposition that the citizens' committee was an agent of the company which its efforts created. Among the cases cited are many which support the general rule above stated, viz., that a principal must assume the obligations, if he wishes the benefits, of an unauthorized contract made by an agent. As stated by Paley: "Contracts made for the benefit of another, but without his privity or direction, may be rejected or affirmed at his election. But, by making the election to affirm it, he adopts the agency altogether, as well that which is detrimental as that which is for his benefit. And, in seeking to enforce contracts entered into by agents, the principal is subject to have them impeached by any conduct of his agent which would have had that effect if proceeding from himself. Every species of fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment, therefore, in the agent, affects the principal's right to recover." Paley, Agency, 324; Hitchcock v. Griffin & S. Co. 99 Mich. 451. This doctrine was applied in the case of Orump v. United States Min. Co., 7 Gratt. 852, 56 Am. Dec. 116, but in that case there was no question of the existence of the relation of principal and agent, and contract relations between the parties. Crump was a purchaser of stock from the pre-existing corporation, through its representative, authorized by the corporation to sell the stock. Most of the cases cited by counsel relate to contracts made with, or services performed by, promoters, previous to the organization of the corporation, upon an understanding with the prospective stockholders or some of them. It is uniformly held that such arrangements may be ratified by the corporation after organization. Wilson v. King's County Elev. R. Co. 114 N. Y. 488; Bommer v. American Spiral Spring Butt Hinge Mfg. Co. 81 N. Y. 468; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sage, 65 Ill. 823, 16 Am. Rep. 587; Low v. Connecticut & P. R. R. Co. 45 N. H. 870; Stanton v. New York & E. R. Co. 59 Conn. 272; Reichwald v. Commercial Hotel Co. 106 Ill. 439; Whitney v. Wyman, 101 U. S. 392, 25 L. ed. 1050; Battelle v. Northwestern Cement & Concrete Pave. Co. 87 Minn. 89; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Ketchum, 27 Conn. 170. But in the case of Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sage, supra, while admitting the doctrine of ratification, the court says that, "in the absence of an express promise, no promise to pay will be implied from the fact that the company, when organized, accepts and receives the benefit of the same;" and "a right of recovery against a corporation for anything done before it has a proper existence does not appear to rest upon any satisfactory legal principle. It is soon enough for such corporate bodies to enter into contracts incurring their property when they are duly organized according to their charters, and have their chosen and impartial directors to conduct their business." In Battelle v. Northwestern Cement & Concrete Pave. Co., supra, the court recognizes this doctrine, saying that, "while a corporation is not bound by engagements made on its behalf by its promoters before it is organized, it may after organization adopt them." In New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Ketchum the supreme court of Connecticut reaches the same conclusion. The same is unqualifiedly held in Indiana. See Fox v. Allensville, O. S. & V. Turnp. Co. 46 Ind. 36; Miller v. Wild Cat Gravel Road Co. 57 Ind. 244.

In the present case the defendant united with others to form a corporation, a preliminary subscription being obtained by a citizens' committee, chosen at a public meeting, all of the members of which became subscribers. The subscription was followed by the adoption and signing of articles of association. The corporation thereby became an entity, and those who subscribed the articles became stockholders. The proposition that such stockholder could charge the association with fraud because he was misled by the fraud of interested persons is suggestive of troublesome results. If this can be done, and the stockholders thereby escape payment for his stock, other stockholders, innocent of the fraud, would find their responsibilities proportionately increased, and the burdens of the concern would be shifted upon those members who were unable to show that they became such through the fraud of others. There would be little stability to corporations, and little safety to stockholders, if this doctrine should be sustained. In this case there not only was not a corporation in existence to be a principal, but the facts set up in the notice do not show that there was an agent of a corporation. The promoters were persons who represented the meeting, or possibly themselves, or some prospective stockholder, who, for purposes of his own, desired to see the corporation organized. They cannot be said to be agents of the corporation in any sense. These subscribers contracted with each other to form a corporation, which they did. If one was guilty of fraud upon the others in procuring his subscription, a remedy should exist against such person. Doubtless, a subscriber who is induced by fraud to agree to join in the organization of a corporation might refuse to do so on discovering fraud; but, by carrying out his agreement and uniting with others, he has assumed new relations with them and the public, after which his remedy is restricted to action against the wrongdoers. See 4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 201, and notes; Carmody v. Powers, 60 Mich. 28.

We think the judgment should be affirmed.
Ordered accordingly.

The other Justices concur.

FLORIDA SUPREME COURT.

Raymon C. REYES et al., Appls.,

v.

George C. MIDDLETON et al.

(.....Fla.....)

*1. A deed or other instrument purporting to convey land that shows upon its face that the grantors therein were out of possession of the land granted at the time of its execution, and that such land at the time was adversely held by another, is void upon its face, as to such adverse occupant, and, as to him, does not create such a cloud upon his title as will authorize the interposition of a court of equity on his behalf for its removal.

2. It is well settled that a court of equity will never lend its aid, by injunction, to restrain the libeling or slandering of title to property, where there is no breach of trust or contract right involved, but that in such cases the remedy, if any, is at law, and that the alleged insolvency of the libellant, in such cases, will not, of itself, authorize the interference of the court of equity.

(July —, 1886.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for St. Johns County in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover damages for slander of title. Reversed. The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. M. C. Jordan and W. A. MacWilliams, for appellants:

A bill in equity which states only a pretended title to the defendant, and prays for relief against it on the ground of an apprehended injury, cannot be maintained.

Puterbaugh, Ch. Pl. & Pr. ed. 1874, p. 586; Torrent v. Muskegon Boom Co. 22 Mich. 354; Fletcher v. Toltat, 5 Ves. Jr. 8; Montague, Eq. Pl. 94.

*Headnotes by TAYLOR, J.

NOTE.—For the law upon the question of slander of title, see notes to Burkett v. Griffith (Cal.) 18 L. R. A. 707.

29 L. R. A.

Where a party files a bill to quiet title to land, or to prevent or remove a cloud, it is necessary to establish a legal title as against the claim of the parties defendant.

Stewart v. Stewart, 19 Fla. 846.

A complainant seeking to obtain a cancellation of defendant's title must show himself to be the owner in law or in equity; and if (the burden of proof being on him) he fails to establish his title, it is immaterial whether defendant's title is good or bad.

Hart v. Bloomfield, 66 Miss. 100.

Messrs. C. P. Cooper and J. C. Cooper for appellees.

Taylor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 26th day of July, A. D. 1883, George C. Middleton, Charles E. Gard, Burton W. Cole, William H. Erwin, Betsey P. White, William S. Vansickle, Isaac N. Vansickle, Marion R. Cooper, Frank F. Smith, Joseph Randall (as administrator of the estate of Erastus Randall, deceased), R. M. Simms, W. H. Simpson, Ira S. Bunker, Edgar F. R. Fripp, and T. B. George, all of the county of St. Johns, as complainants, filed their bill in equity in the circuit court of St. Johns county against Ramon C. Reyes (in his own right, and as administrator of the estate of Jose B. Reyes, deceased), Carmen Reyes, Innocencia Reyes, Maria del Rosario Reyes, Gabina Andreu, and Emanuel P. Andreu, her husband, and Adolphus N. Pacetti, all of St. Johns county. The bill alleges, in substance: "That the complainants are severally seised and possessed, in fee, of certain portions of that tract of land situated in St. Johns county, Florida, known as section 37 in township 8 south, of range 29 east, located on Moultrie creek, the same being a Spanish grant confirmed to Jose B. Reyes, containing 223.10 acres; the several respective portions thereof owned and possessed severally by the respective complainants being particularly described in divers deeds of the same to them, that are attached to the bill as exhibits thereto. That complainants are now, severally, in the actual possession of the several portions of said section of land conveyed to each of them severally by said deed exhibits, and that they, and those under whom they claim, have been in the actual possession of same ever since the year 1873. That each of complainants have made improvements upon their several tracts of land, by clearing, cultivating, and fencing same, and by building houses thereon and planting orange groves thereon, and by the making and cultivation thereof, and that the said several tracts or portions of said land described in said deed exhibits are the homes of each of complainants, severally, to whom said tracts are, in and by said deeds, duly conveyed. That the said defendants set up and assert some pretended claim of title to or interest in said lands, by reason of their alleged claim that they, with the exception of Adolphus N. Pacetti, are the heirs-at-law of one Jose B. Reyes, the grantee to whom said lands were duly confirmed as a Spanish grant. That complainants have no personal knowledge whether or not the defendants are in fact the heirs-at-law of said Jose B. Reyes, but they say that said defendants have no title whatever to said lands; the same having been duly and regularly assessed in the year A. D. 1853, and duly and regularly sold on the 1st day of May, A. D. 1854, by one R. B. Canova, the then sheriff and ex officio tax collector of St. Johns county, Florida, for nonpayment of taxes, and said lands having been then and there purchased by the state of Florida, and a deed for same having been executed by said Canova, as said tax collector, to the register of public lands of said state of Florida, and on the 4th day of February, A. D. 1873, sold and conveyed to one B. F. Oliveros by the then commissioner of lands and immigration of said state of Florida in accordance with the statutes in such cases provided. That by reason of said preceding sales and conveyances the said Jose B. Reyes, and those claiming under him, were divested of title to said land, and the same became vested in said B. F. Oliveros, who, on the 24th day of February, A. D. 1874, filed said deed for record in the clerk's office of St. Johns county, state of Florida, and that he entered into actual occupancy of said land in the year 1873, and that the said Oliveros, and those claiming under him, including your orators, have been in the actual, open, notorious, adverse, and exclusive occupation and possession of said above-described real estate ever since the same was so taken possession of by said Oliveros up to the date of filing this bill, and that complainants are now in the actual, open, notorious, adverse, and exclusive occupation and possession of said lands, and neither of the said defendants are now, or ever have been, in the occupation or possession of any part of said land. That, by conveyances through divers different persons from the said Oliveros to complainants, they have acquired the title to said land, and are now seized of title in fee thereto, that appears by the record of deeds of said county of St. Johns, and that defendants have no title whatever to said lands. That the defendant Adolphus N. Pacetti claims some interest in said land by reason of an alleged power of attorney to him, coupled with an interest in said land, executed by the other of said defendants to said Pacetti on the 21st day of September, 1883, and recorded in book of Miscellaneous Records, C, pages 61 and 64 of Records of St. Johns County, Florida; said alleged power of attorney purporting to authorize said Pacetti, in the name of the other of said defendants, or of said Ramon C. Reyes, as administrator aforesaid, to sue for recover, and gain possession of said land, in consideration of an interest therein, as therein stated, as will appear by a certified copy of said power of attorney attached to the bill as an exhibit. That for some years past, to wit, since about the 21st day of September, A. D. 1883, said defendants, and particularly said Ramon C. Reyes and Adolphus N. Pacetti, although out of possession of said land, and the records of said county showing the title of complainants to same, as above set forth, have continuously and publicly stated to divers persons in said county, and in the city of St. Augustine particularly, that they, the said Reyeses, as heirs-at-law of Jose B. Reyes, owned said land, and that said Pacetti was their agent and attorney in fact, with said alleged one-half interest therein, in the matter of taking possession of and asserting title to said land, and in some manner have openly asserted that complainants had no title to said land; and said defendants, from time to time since the 21st day of September, A. D. 1883, have posted up, and caused to be posted up, in many public places, and distributed to divers persons, in the city of St. Augustine, in said county, printed and written circulars, warning and threatening all persons against buying said land of complainants, and of lawsuits that will result therefrom, and offering to sell the same themselves, through Ramon C. Reyes, in his own right, and as administrator aforesaid, or through Adolphus N. Pacetti, thereby clouding and traducing the title of your orators to said land, all of which will more fully appear by reference to one of said circulars as posted up by said defendants, attached to the bill as an exhibit. That for several years they desired and urged the defendants Ramon C. Reyes and Adolphus N. Pacetti to bring the proper actions at law against your orators to test the title between your orators and said defendants to said land, your orators being more than willing that said title should be tried and settled; but although said defendants threatened, from time to time, to bring such action, they did not do so, up to the 16th day of August, 1887, when said Ramon C. Reyes, as administrator, commenced an action in ejectment against one of your orators, Charles E. Gard, on the law side of this court, in which suit issue was joined, and the same was ready and called for trial, but said Reyes, as plaintiff therein, by his attorney, dismissed said suit. And although your orators have waited some time since for said defendants to commence new actions to test their said alleged claim of title to said land, yet they have not done so, but continue to make their said alleged public assertions and claims of title to said land, although still out of possession of same, and to post and distribute similar circulars as to the title to said land. That said defendants, by said methods of claiming title to said lands and warning others against the title of your orators, and offering to sell your orators' said land, and by the record of said alleged power of attorney to the defendant Adolphus N. Pacetti, prevent your orators from selling same, or disposing of it, or raising money on it as security, and generally lessen its value in the estimation of purchasers and persons dealing in real estate; and your orators are therefore prevented from the entire use, enjoyment, and benefit of said property, and the title to same is, in fact and in law, clouded thereby, and your orators, being in possession, have no adequate remedy at law for said injury. That they fear and apprehend, and have reason to fear, that, unless restrained by decree of this court, the defendants will continue to assert that the title to said land is in defendants, and will continue to publicly state that the said Reyeses, as heirs-at-law of Jose B. Reyes, own said land, and that said Pacetti is their agent and attorney in fact for the purposes of asserting title to said land, and will assert that your orators have no title to said land, and will post up, and cause to be posted up, in public places, and distributed to divers persons, printed and written circulars, warning and threatening all persons against buying said land of your orators, and of lawsuits that will result therefrom, and offering to sell same themselves, through the said Ramon C. Reyes, in his own right and as administrator aforesaid, or through the said Pacetti, thereby clouding and traducing the title of your orators to said land. That by reason of defendants' alleged claim of title they may bring separate actions at law against each of your orators, thereby occasioning a multiplicity of suits. That said defendants, particularly Ramon C. Reyes and Adolphus N. Pacetti, have no property, above their legal exemptions, out of which any judgment for damages could be satisfied, that your orators, or either of them, might obtain against said defendants, or either of them, for said alleged slanders upon the titles of your orators to said land."

The prayers of the bill are that the defendants, and all persons claiming through or under them, be perpetually enjoined from alleging or asserting title in themselves to said land, or any claim thereto, or right therein, and from instituting any suits to assert title to, or to recover possession thereof, and from disturbing complainants in any manner in the enjoyment, use, and possession of said land, and that complainants' title thereto may be decreed to be good and indefeasible, as against said claims of title thereto of the said defendants; that said power of attorney from the defendants Reyes to the defendant Pacetti be decreed to be delivered up and canceled, and adjudged to be null and void, and canceled of record where same is recorded. There is a prayer for general relief.

The defendants demurred to the bill upon the ground of a want of equity in the bill, and because the complainants claim to hold separate interests in separate pieces of property, and the damages, if any, would be separate and distinct, and the complainants are therefore improperly joined; and for uncertainty. This demurrer was overruled, and this ruling is the first error assigned. Attached to the bill, as an exhibit thereto, is a power of attorney from the defendants Reyes to the defendant Pacetti, authorizing the latter to sue for and recover possession of any and all lands and claims to which the Reyeses may be entitled by inheritance or otherwise, and to put the Reyeses in possession thereof; and this instrument contains also an agreement with Pacetti, entitling him to one half of all lands and other property that he may recover for the Reyeses, in consideration of his services in and about the recovery thereof. This instrument, the bill assumes, is a cloud upon the complainants' title; and its delivery and cancellation, as such cloud, are prayed for. We do not think that it constitutes such a cloud upon the complainants' title as will authorize the maintenance by them of a bill in equity for its removal. Upon its face, when its features as a conveyance to Pacetti of an interest in the lands is considered, it shows that the grantors were, at the time of its execution, out of possession of the lands proposed by it to be conveyed; and, according to the well-settled rule of this court, it was therefore a nullity, and void upon its face, as to the complainants, who were at the time of its execution in possession of the lands in dispute adversely to such grantors. Doe v. Roe, 13 Fla. 602; Levy v. Cox, 22 Fla. 546; Gould v. Carr, 33 Fla. 523, 24 L. R. A. 130. It is further the well-settled rule of this court that a deed or other instrument that is void upon its face, and that cannot sustain an action, in the absence of rebutting proof, cannot be said to be such a cloud upon a title as will authorize the interposition of equity for its removal. Davidson v. Seegar, 15 Fla. 671; Barnes v. Mayo, 19 Fla. 542; Sloan v. Sloan, 25 Fla. 53. We do not think, therefore, that the bill here makes out such a case as will authorize a court of equity to exert its power of removing cloud on title.
30 L. R. A.,

The next ground of relief set up by the bill, and the one mainly relied upon by the complainants, is that the defendants are, and have been, traducing and slandering the title of complainants to the lands described, by declaring themselves to be the true owners thereof, and that complainants had no title thereto, and by posting up notices or placards warning purchasers from buying any of said lands from any one but themselves, under penalty of purchasing lawsuits, etc. Under this last phase of the bill, there is no allegation as to any overt act of interference by the defendants with the complainants in their quiet use, enjoyment, and possession of the lands. Neither is it alleged that the defendants have interfered in any way directly with the land itself, by any attempt to possess themselves, or to dispossess the complainants, thereof; but the substance of the allegations is simply that the defendants are and have been libeling and slandering the title of complainants to said lands, and the prayer of the bill, upon this phase of it, is that they be restrained and enjoined from so slandering and libeling it in future. There is no allegation that the defendants have brought, or are about to, or threaten to, bring any action or actions against the complainants, or any of them, to test their claims to the lands, or to question complainants' title thereto. It seems to be well settled that a court of equity will never lend its aid, by injunction, to restrain the libeling or slandering of title to property, where there is no breach of trust or contract involved, but that in such cases the remedy, if any, is at law, and that the alleged insolvency of the libellant, in such cases, will not, of itself, authorize the interference of the court of equity. Boston Diastile Co. v. Florence Mfg. Co. 114 Mass. 69, 19 Am. Rep. 810; Westmore v. Scovell, 3 Edw. Ch. 528, 6 L. ed. 748; Brandreth v. Lance, 8 Paige, 24, 4 L. ed. 330, 34 Am. Dec. 368; Mauger v. Dick, 55 How. Pr. 132; Life Assn. of America v. Boogher, 8 Mo. App. 178; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Domestic Sewing-Mach. Co. 49 Ga. 70, 15 Am. Rep. 674; Clark v. Freeman, 11 Beav.

112; Seeley v. Fisher, 11 Sim. 581; Prudential Assur. Co. v. Knott, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 142.

It is further contended here that the complainants are entitled to the relief prayed, upon the ground of the prevention of a multiplicity of suits; and this contention is based upon the idea that the complainants are numerous, and that each of them owns a separate parcel of the land in controversy, and that each of them is subject to a several action of ejectment by the defendants for the respective parcels of the land owned by each. We do not think that the facts set up by the bill disclose a case calling for the interposition of a court of equity to prevent a multiplicity of suits; but, besides this, the bill distinctly alleges that the defendants will not bring ejectment to test the title, though often solicited and invited to do so by the complainants.

It follows from what has been said that the demurrer of the defendants to the bill of complaint should have been sustained, and that the court below erred in overruling same.

The decree appealed from is reversed, with directions to sustain the defendants' demurrer to the bill, and that the bill be dismissed.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

CHICAGO & ALTON R. CO., Appt.,

v.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois, ex rel. Jacob WINDMILLER.

(158 Ill. 409.)

A bridge owned by a bridge company but used exclusively for railroad purposes and leased forever to a railroad company subject to determination of the lease for default of the lessee to perform its terms and conditions, is not railroad property which can be assessed as such with the railroad track by the Illinois state board of equalization instead of the local assessor.

(November, 26, 1894.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the County Court for Pike County in NOTE.—Jurisdiction as to taxation of bridge over river forming boundary of a state or its divisions.

The general course of the decisions is to hold that in all cases of bridges to which a special rule is not made applicable by statute the local authorities are to assess for taxation whatever portion of the bridge is within their jurisdiction.

General rule.

In Cornish Bridge Propra. v. Richardson, 8 N. H. 27, it is said it has been suggested that bridges upon the Connecticut river are not taxable in New Hampshire because they are partly within the state of Vermont. It is not necessary in order to the taxation of a bridge under the statute that it should all be within a single town. There is nothing exempting bridges over the Connecticut river from its operation and although it is true that a portion of the abutment of all such bridges is within the limits of Vermont and the toll-houses may be actually there situated, we cannot think that it was the intention of the legislature to exclude such bridges from taxation on that account while others are taxed. The terms of the act are entire. Charters to build such bridges to take tolls must be granted here. The waters of the river are within the jurisdiction of this state and of course nearly all the structure; and the bridges being substantially within the limits of this state would probably never be deemed a proper subject of taxation in Vermont even if the charter had also been procured there to authorize the erection. 29 L. R. A.

In New York a toll-bridge is assessable as real estate in the town in which it is located. Hudson River Bridge Co. v. Patterson, 74 N. Y. 365.

The abutments and piers of the bridge crossing the Delaware river from Phillipsburg to Easton are taxable as real estate in the township of Phillipsburg to the center of the river. State v. Meta, 29 N. J. L. 122.

All those portions of the bridges over the Potomac river which are within the limits of the state of Maryland are taxable in the county in which they are situated, if they are owned by corporations whose principal office for the transaction of business is not within the state. O'Neil v. Virginia & M. Bridge Co. 18 Md. 1, 79 Am. Dec. 609.

That part of the Portsmouth toll-bridge extending from Portsmouth, N. H., to Kittery, Me., which is located in Kittery is assessable for taxation there although the owners reside in Portsmouth. Kittery v. Portsmouth Bridge Co. 78 Me. 93.

A local assessor has no right to assess any portion of a bridge which is without the limits of the state. Keokuk & H. Bridge Co. v. People, 145 Ill. 506.

Bridges between Iowa and Illinois are locally assessable in Iowa to the middle of the main channel of the river, that is to a point midway between the banks. Dunleith & D. Bridge Co. v. Dubuque County, 55 Iowa, 558.

If a city's jurisdiction extends to low-water mark on the opposite side of the river and it grants a bridge company the right to build a bridge on the favor of relator in a proceeding brought to compel payment of delinquent taxes. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Matthews, Higbee & Grigsby, for appellant:

The exclusive power to assess "railroad track" is conferred upon the state board of equalization, and an assessment upon the same property by the local assessor will be a double assessment, and the tax extended upon the latter assessment will be illegal and void.

Chicago, & A. R. Co. v. People, 98 Ill. 850; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 99 Ill. 464; Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Goar, 118 Ill. 184; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 129 Ill. 571.

By right of way can only be understood the land used as a way for the road.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Paddock, 75 Ill. 616; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 98 Ill. 850.

Where the charter of a railroad company authorizes it to acquire by lease, purchase, or otherwise other roads, etc., and provides that property so acquired shall become the property of the corporation lessee, the courts will give effect to such provision, and property thus leased will become, for purposes of taxation, at least, the property of the lessee.

2 Rorer, Railroads, p. 1507, and cases cited; Huck v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 86 Ill. 852.

The Act of 1878, providing that "all bridge structures across any navigable stream forming the boundary line between the state of Illinois and any other state shall be assessed by the township assessor in the county where the same is located as real estate," was not intended to change the method of taxing railroad property, or the mode of assessing it, but to apply to bridges not constituting a railroad track exclusively, and to make such structures real estate, for the purpose of collecting taxes thereon.

Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 117 Ill. 26.

A lease in perpetuity is equivalent to an absolute conveyance.

Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Boyd, 118 Ill. 73.

Messrs. M. J. Scrafford and William Brown also for appellant.

Messrs. Williams & Williams, with Mr. Averill Beavers, for appellee:

If the bridge in question is owned by the Mississippi River Bridge Company, and the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company owns a railroad track on and across the same, then there is a separate and distinct ownership and it should be segregated, and the bridge structure proper assessed as "real estate," and the track as railroad track.

State v. Mississippi River Bridge Co. 109 Mo. 258; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, 53 Ark. 58; Cass County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 2 L. R. A. 188, 25 Neb. 848; Quincy Railroad Bridge Co. v. Adams County, 88 Ill. 615; St. Joseph & D. L. R. Co. v. Devereux, 41 Fed. Rep. 14; State v. Metz, 29 N. J. L. 123.

No lease, for however long a period, accompanied with conditions of defeasance or forfeiture, can in any sense of the term be equivalent to an absolute deed of conveyance.

State v. Mississippi River Bridge Co. supra.

Although the description of the land may be defective, appellant by entering its appearance and urging general objections, waived the right to object to the sufficiency of the notice of application for judgment.

People v. Dragstman, 100 Ill. 286; People v. Sherman, 88 Ill. 165.

If the Mississippi River Bridge Company has condition that it shall have the right to tax it, it will have the right to tax all of the bridge within its corporate limits. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson (Ky.) 14 S. W. Rep. 85, affirmed 90 Ky. 498.

Such portion of a bridge owned by a private corporation as is within the limits of a municipal corporation is subject to assessment by it for local taxation. St. Louis Bridge Co. v. East St. Louis, 121 Ill. 238.

Bridges over the Mississippi river between Illinois and Missouri are taxable for state and local purposes by Illinois as far as they are east of the middle of the main channel of the river. St. Louis Bridge Co. v. People, 125 Ill. 226; Buttenuth v. St. Louis Bridge Co. 123 Ill. 585.

A bridge which lies partly in the District of Columbia and partly in Virginia cannot be assessed by the District on its entire length. Only that part within the District can be assessed. Alexandria Canal, R. & Bridge Co. v. District of Columbia, 1 Mackey, 217.

In Arkansas where the boundaries of a municipal corporation extend only to high-water mark on navigable rivers a municipal corporation can tax only that part of a bridge across such river which is above high-water mark although the bridge to the middle of the stream is within the county in which the municipality is located. Fort Smith & V. Bridge Co. v. Hawkins, 12 L. R. A. 487, 54 Ark. 809.

A toll bridge owned by a corporation and leased to a railroad company reserving the right to lease it to other parties should not be assessed by the railroad assessors but by the local assessors of the 29 L. R. A.

counties in which it is located. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, 53 Ark. 58.

The bridge across the Ohio river at Louisville is subject to taxation by the state to the low-water mark on the Ohio side, but it cannot be taxed by the city of Louisville although within its limits as it is not upon territory over which the power of taxation has been extended to the city. Louisville Bridge Co. v. Louisville, 81 Ky. 189.

The United States Supreme Court in Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 141 U. S. 679, 35 L. ed. 900, cites the case of Louisville Bridge Co. v. Louisville, as having been affirmed in 89 Kentucky but the opinion was never reported there.

Bridges across the Missouri river at St. Joseph between Missouri and Kansas can be assessed by the local authorities in Missouri only to the center of the stream. St. Joseph & G. I. R. Co. v. Devereux, 41 Fed. Rep. 14.

If a bridge is constructed, not as a part of a railroad, but as an independent structure, it is subject to local taxation although a railroad subsequently acquires the title to it and runs its train over it and returns it as part of its road-bed to the railroad assessors of the state. Ibid.

In Central Vermont R. Co. v. St. Johns, Mont. L. Rep. 4 Q. B. 466, a municipal corporation whose limits extended to the middle of a navigable river was held to have jurisdiction to tax the portion of a railroad bridge across the river which was within its limits. But a note to the report of that case states that it was reversed in 14 Can. Sup. Ct. Rep. 288, 12 Legal News, 490. The grounds of the reversal do not, however, appear.

Under the New Jersey railroad taxation acts, an interest in the bridge as lessee, owner, or otherwise, then it is not exclusively owned by appellant, and should be assessed as real estate. Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 117 Ill. 26.

Wilkin, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The county collector of Pike county applied to the court below at its May term, 1892, for a judgment against certain property for delinquent taxes assessed against it by the assessor of one of the townships of that county for the year 1891. The assessment was against a fractional piece of land containing 21 38-100 acres, as belonging to the Mississippi Bridge Company. The Chicago & Alton Railroad Company appeared, and filed objections to the application, setting up that the property was part of its railroad, denominated by law "railroad track," and as such subject to the assessment by the state board of equalization, and not by any local assessor; that the same had been regularly returned to, and duly assessed by, said board for the year 1891, and the assessment fully paid. The county court, upon hearing the evidence offered in support of and against the objections, overruled the same, and gave judgment accordingly for the amount of the tax assessed.—$2,269. From that judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

That the property in question is subject to taxation is not denied, nor is it claimed that it was unfairly assessed by the local assessor. His assessment is challenged on the sole ground that he had no authority of law for making it. Appellant maintains that the property was railroad property, assessable only by the state board of equalization. Ap-pellee insists it is liable to taxation under the Act approved and in force May 1, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the assessment and taxation of bridges across navigable streams on the borders of this state," wherein it is provided that such bridge shall be assessed by the township assessors in the townships where the same are located as real estate. Rev. Stat. chap. 120, § 1 (2 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. p. 2124). The controlling question in the case, raised by the objections filed below, is, Was the objector entitled to have the property assessed to it as railroad property? If it was, it may be conceded for the purposes of this decision that the state board of equalization alone had power to assess it. Whether objector had the right to demand that the assessment should be against it as for railroad property, in our view of the case, depends upon the ownership of the property. If the railroad company was the owner, it could not be lawfully assessed under section 1, chapter 120, supra, but only by the state board of equalization as railroad track. Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 117 Ill. 26. If, on the other hand, it was owned by the Mississippi Bridge Company, to whom it was assessed by the township assessor, we think it equally clear that the railroad company could have nothing to say as to how or by whom it should be assessed. In other words, if it was owned by the bridge company, it could not be assessed as railroad property. The fact that the structure was a railroad bridge, and used exclusively as such, would not entitle its owner to have it assessed as railroad property, unless that owner was a railroad company. Railroad property, to be assessable by the state board of equalization as "railroad track," must not only be which only apply to corporations of that state, a Pennsylvania corporation which obtains the consent of New Jersey to construct a bridge over the Delaware river is not taxable under that act but under the general taxation laws of the state. State v. Mutohler, 42 N. J. L. 461.

Where the states disagree as to the true extent of their boundaries there may be some conflict in the claims to taxation but the courts are pretty well agreed as to the grounds upon which the claim to tax should rest. For the rulings as to the extent of jurisdiction over rivers and lakes forming state boundaries, see note to Buck v. Ellenbolt (Iowa) 15 L. R. A. 187.

Statutory rules.

A bridge across a navigable stream forming a part of the boundary between Illinois and another state, constructed and used exclusively by a railroad company as part of its continuous track, is for the purpose of taxation a railroad track to be assessed by the state board of equalization and not by the board of local assessors. Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 117 Ill. 26.

In Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Sabula, 19 Fed. Rep. 177, where a statute made railroads assessable by a special board appointed by the state and not by local authorities and bridges over certain rivers assessable by local authorities, there being at the time no bridges owned by railroad companies there, it was held that when a railroad bridge was built it was assessable by local authorities the same as other bridges and not by the special assessing board.

In Iowa by statute all bridges are to be assessed 29 L. R. A.

by the executive council except those over the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, and they are to be assessed by the assessors of the local districts in which they are situated. Missouri Valley & B. Railroad & Bridge Co. v. Harrison County, 74 Iowa, 233.

A bridge built by a bridge company under a charter giving all railroad companies an equal right to use it does not become a part of a railroad so as to be assessed as such by its being leased to one company forever subject to defeasance for failure to comply with the conditions of the lease. State v. Mississippi River Bridge Co. 100 Mo. 233.

Where the right to bridge a navigable stream must be obtained from congress the bridge is not a part of the right of way, road-bed, or superstructure within the meaning of an act making such assessable by the state board of equalization, but local authorities may assess such portions of it as are within their jurisdiction. Cass County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. 31 L. R. A. 123, 35 Neb. 343.

Effect on commerce.

Taxation of a bridge over a navigable river between two states although it is used to carry interstate commerce is not a regulation of commerce among the states or taxation of any agency of the federal government. Henderson Bridge Co. v. Henderson, 141 U. S. 679, 35 L. ed. 900.

Taxation on capital stock.

The companies may be taxable on their capital stock as well as on the bridge property. Quincy Railroad Bridge Co. v. Adams County, 35 Ill. 615.

H. P. F.

so used, but it must be the property of a railroad company. The question is not whether the property could have been assessed to appellant by the local assessor. The public authorities might have elected to so assess it, the railroad company being in possession and control of it; and, if they had done so, the company would, we think, have had the right to insist upon the assessment being made by the state board. But the question here is, Had appellant a right to say the property could only lawfully be assessed against it? If an individual or corporation should construct a railroad bridge over a stream on the borders of this state, and allow a railroad company to use it in connection with other parts of its track, whether under a lease, by charging tolls, or otherwise, the bridge would certainly not thereby become railroad property in the sense that the owner could insist upon its being assessed as such. If it would, the Act of May 1, 1878, providing for the taxation of bridges, cannot in any case be applied to railroad bridges. Nor would the fact that the railroad company using the bridge had agreed with the owner to pay all taxes assessed against it give such railroad company the right, as against the public, to say it should be assessed in a particular way. We regard the foregoing propositions as so self-evident that argument is unnecessary in their support. They are sustained by St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Williams, 53 Ark. 58.

The facts as to the ownership and acquisition of this property are briefly these: In August, 1870, the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company leased from the Louisiana & Missouri River Railroad Company a line of railroad leading west from the Mississippi river at Louisiana, Mo., "together with the steam ferry boats necessary to conduct the business of said railroad across the Mississippi river for a term of one thousand years," at a rental of a per cent given of the gross earnings. The lease provided that, if the ferry should be discontinued, the railroad company should not be required to account for proceeds which might be earned by its operation and management, and, if a bridge should be substituted therefor, the earnings of it should not be taken as a part of the gross earnings of the railroad in determining the rental under the lease. The following November it also leased "forever" from the St. Louis, Jacksonville & Chicago Railroad Company, a road extending east from the river opposite Louisiana, thus giving it a line east and west connected by ferry across the Mississippi river. In March, 1871, the Louisiana & Missouri River Railroad Company was authorized by an act of congress to build a bridge over the river for the use of its railroad. The Mississippi Bridge Company is a corporation organized under the laws of this state and Missouri with authority to construct and maintain a bridge at the same point. On July 5, 1873, this bridge company entered into a contract with the Louisiana & Missouri River Railroad Company, agreeing at its own expense to acquire the land necessary for approaches, and to construct the railroad bridge in question; and in carrying out that contract the bridge company purchased the 21 38-100 acres of land for right of way, and for earth with which to construct the easterly approach thereto. Some time after its completion, the bridge company, as party of the first part, leased the bridge to appellant railroad company, as party of the second part, and to its successors and assigns, forever, upon the terms and conditions therein set forth. The property is described in the lease as "all and singular the bridge of the party of the first part from the city of Louisiana, in the county of Pike, in the state of Missouri, across the Mississippi river, to the county of Pike, in the state of Illinois, and its appurtenances, appendages, and protections, and all franchises and property of the party of the first part, however or whenever acquired, or which may be hereafter acquired." The railroad company agreed, among other things, to use the bridge as part of its railroad line, and keep it in repair, pay all taxes thereon, pay the salaries of the officers of the bridge company, its bonded indebtedness, and an annual dividend of 7 per cent upon its stock. The lease also provides that if the party of the second part, or its successors or assigns, shall fail to keep and perform the covenants, conditions, and agreements therein contained, the party of the first part may re-enter, etc. It is insisted on behalf of appellant that this is a lease in perpetuity, and therefore has the force and effect of an absolute conveyance. If that position could be maintained, the case would be within the decision in Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., supra, and free from difficulty. The lease is not, however, in absolute perpetuity, but may be terminated at any time upon default of the lessee to keep and perform its terms and conditions, and in different ways recognizes the paramount ownership of the property as remaining in the lessor. The terms and conditions of this conveyance are all inconsistent with an intention to pass the absolute title to the lessee. It is, to all intents and purposes, but a lease, though for a term which may continue for all time, the absolute ownership remaining in the lessor. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Boyd, 118 Ill. 78, cited by counsel, is not in point. There the Fox River Railroad Company, as is stated in the opinion, "granted and demised to complainant in perpetuity all its property, real and personal, and all the privileges and franchises it had under its charter from the state;" and we said: "That was equivalent to an absolute conveyance." That conveyance was unconditional. It is certainly not to be supposed that the parties to the instrument now before us made it with the purpose of conveying the absolute ownership of the property, when by a much simpler form of deed they could have clearly expressed such a purpose. State v. Mississippi River Bridge Co. 109 Mo. 253. In that case the question was whether the Missouri portion of this same bridge was liable to taxation; and the court, after stating the facts bearing upon the construction of the bridge, and fully considering the same lease now under consideration, said: "It is clear from this statement of the substance of the instrument that, notwithstanding ing the long term the tenancy may endure, the paramount title remains in the bridge company." If the decision in that case is followed by us, an affirmation of the judgment below must result, and we see no good reason for dissenting from the views there expressed.

It is said, however, that the ownership of the property was determined there upon the lease alone, whereas the further contention is made by appellant that the bridge, when completed, belonged to the Louisiana & Missouri River Railroad Company, subject to whatever rights, if any, the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company had to its exclusive possession and use under the conveyance from the bridge company, dated December 8, 1877, and further subject to the right of the Chicago & Alton Railroad Company to the same as after-acquired railroad track of the Louisiana & Missouri River Railroad Company under the lease from that company dated August 1, 1870. These positions both rest upon the assumption that the bridge company never owned the bridge, but that it originally belonged to the Louisiana & Missouri River Railroad Company. The assumption is, in our opinion, unwarranted by the facts. It is wholly irreconcilable with the lease from the bridge company to appellant. That instrument not only describes the bridge as belonging to the bridge company, but throughout recognizes no right of property therein in either this appellant or the Louisiana & Missouri River Railroad Company. The contract between the last-named company and the bridge company for the construction of the bridge does, in one part of it, state that the railroad company employs the bridge company as its agent and servant to construct and maintain the bridge; but it also contains the stipulation that the bridge company is to advance for the railroad company the money for the building and maintenance of the same, and in consideration thereof, and the acquiring and constructing the approaches to the bridge, the bridge company should "forever have the exclusive possession and use of said bridge, without let or hindrance of or from the said party of the first part [the railroad company], which exclusive possession and use is agreed to be in liquidation of all sums of money advanced by said party of the second part, and for its services to be performed under this agreement." The language "shall forever have the exclusive possession and use of said bridge," in its connection, we think shows that the parties intended that the bridge company should become the owner of the structure when completed. Certainly, appellant and that company so construed it when they made the lease of December 8, 1877. It appears from the evidence that appellant furnished the money to the bridge company with which to build the bridge, and that it was in fact built for its sole benefit, so far as that could be done in view of the right of other railroad companies to use it under the act of congress authorizing its construction, and counsel seem to insist that therefore appellant should be held to be the owner of the property. There is certainly enough in these and other facts proved to raise an inquiry as to why appellant did not take a deed for the property from the bridge company instead of leasing it, but we are unable to see upon what principle courts can be asked to ignore the direct and positive evidence of title as the parties have made it, and hold that appellant is the owner by construction merely that it may be assessed by the state board of equalization, instead of the local assessor. Either from necessity or of its own volition, appellant has never become the absolute owner of the property, but has left the legal title to the same in the Mississippi Bridge Company, and it is therefore subject to taxation against the latter by the township assessor of the town in which it is located.

The judgment of the County Court is therefore right, and it will be affirmed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

COMMONWEALTH of Kentucky

v.

HENDERSON BRIDGE CO.

(.....Ky.....)

1. The right of the state to tax the franchise of a bridge corporation created by it is not defeated by the fact that the company had obtained from another state the privilege of extending its bridge from the boundary of that state at low-water mark of the river to the high lands, and had acquired from congress the privilege of maintaining the bridge across a navigable river, and the designation of the bridge as a post-road.

2. Interstate business is not taxed by taxing the franchise of a bridge company which maintains a toll bridge between states.

3. The "capital stock" of a corporation within the meaning of Stat., § 4079, from which the value of its tangible property is to be deducted in order to find the value of its corporate franchise for the purpose of taxation, means the entire property, real and personal, tangible and intangible, including assets and franchise.

4. Debts of a corporation cannot be deducted in finding the value of its franchise as the difference between the values of its capital stock and tangible property where the constitution requires the property of corporations to be taxed like that of individuals, and debts of the latter are not deducted from their property for taxation.

5. The value of a franchise for the purpose of taxation is the benefit derived from its possession.

NOTE.—As to taxation of bridge between two jurisdictions, see note to case immediately preceding this one.

(May 25, 1896.)

CROSS-APPEALS from the Circuit Court for Franklin County in an action brought to enforce payment of a tax upon defendant's bridge franchise; the plaintiff appealing from so much of the judgment as reduced the value placed upon the franchise by the board of assessors and defendant appealing from so much of the judgment as held its franchises subject to taxation. Reversed on plaintiff's appeal; affirmed on defendant's appeal.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William J. Hendrick for the Commonwealth.

Messrs. Helm & Bruce for defendant.

Grace, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action filed in the Franklin circuit court by the commonwealth of Kentucky against the Henderson Bridge Company, seeking to recover of defendant the sum of $3,675.91, the amount of taxes claimed to be due and payable to the state by said company on its franchise as a corporation created by the laws of Kentucky, its property being located in the state of Kentucky, for and during the year 1894, under a valuation and assessment made by the board of valuation and assessment, viz., the auditor, secretary of state, and treasurer, as established by law, valuing said franchise as of date September 15, 1893; the value of said franchise being fixed at $865,157.46, excluding therefrom the value of the real estate and personal property owned by said defendant in this state; said company being chartered and incorporated by the state of Kentucky as the Henderson Bridge Company; the defendant having been so assessed, and the tax rate being 42½ cents on each $100 in value of its franchise, of which assessment defendant was duly notified, and demand being made for amount due, failed to pay. The answer of defendant is divided into three paragraphs, not in either, however, denying its incorporation under and by the state of Kentucky, nor that its property and franchise is located in Kentucky. Defendant says: First. That though it obtained its charter from the state of Kentucky to build this bridge, yet that it also obtained important rights, powers, faculties, franchises, and privileges from the state of Indiana; that under and by its charter from Kentucky it could only build its structure to low-water mark on the north side of the Ohio river; that being the northern boundary of the state of Kentucky. Defendant recites in this paragraph sundry provisions from the general incorporation law of the state of Indiana, as of date March 2, 1875, as amended by Act of the legislature of date April 8, 1881, showing specially by this amendment that any foreign corporation duly incorporated under the laws of another state to build bridges over any of the streams forming the boundary line between the state of Indiana and such other state might have and enjoy all the rights, privileges, and franchises granted under and by their general laws to any home company formed and incorporated under their laws for that purpose; then reciting other provisions under the general incorporation laws of the state of Indiana, whereby it says it was finally authorized to construct, build, and operate so much of its structure as extended and was situated within the state of Indiana, and, in addition, to build so much trestle and embankment, and place thereon a railroad, as would take trains crossing this bridge out to the highlands. And it says that without these rights, privileges, and franchises the franchise granted by authority of Kentucky is and was of little or no value. From the recitals of the law of Indiana as made one might suppose that this company might have been incorporated under the laws of the state of Indiana had it so desired to extend and complete its structure and approach to this bridge on the Indiana side. The material defect of this plea, however, is that it does not allege that it was so incorporated under and by any law, general or special, of the state of Indiana. It only says that, being incorporated under and by the laws of Kentucky as the Henderson Bridge Company, that then it was granted certain powers and privileges under the laws of Indiana, not denying that it actually built, nor that it now owns and operates, its bridges and the approaches thereto under and by the charter and incorporation of the legislature of Kentucky. But it may be further said, suppose this charter was supplemented by a similar charter by the state of Indiana, authorizing the construction of that portion of the bridge north of low-water mark of the Ohio river, and that the state of Indiana levies and collects its tax both on the tangible property and the franchise, this would be but the exercise of a lawful and rightful authority and power. What possible excuse could this be to the defendant for refusing to pay taxes on its tangible property in Kentucky, and on its franchises granted in Kentucky? It is possible that it may then obtain franchises from both states, and acquire property in both, and exercise its franchise powers in both, and deny its duty to pay taxes to either. This part of defendant's plea is insufficient. Again, defendant says it was authorized and empowered to build and operate its bridge by permission and authority of the congress of the United States; that congress prescribed the dimensions and height of said bridge, and provided that, when built, same should be deemed a post-route; that these were important powers, franchises, and privileges, without which neither the incorporation of its company, nor any franchise granted it by the state of Kentucky, was of any value. It affirms in its brief the right and power of the congress of the United States to charter companies, and to grant franchises to same, to build bridges over any and all navigable streams in the United States, and cites in support of this contention the case Luxton v. North River Bridge Co., reported 158 U. S. 525, 38 L. ed. 808. It is not necessary, in order to the decision of this case, to question the power claimed, nor the authority of the case quoted. The commonwealth is not undertaking in this suit to impose or collect any tax from defendant on any franchise granted it by authority of the United States, and hence this decision has no application. The same objection lies to this part of the defendant's answer that is taken to that part of same pertaining to the state of Indiana: and that is that defendant does not affirm (as, of course, it could not truthfully) that it was in fact incorporated under and by the authority of the United States, or any act of congress, or that it built its bridge under any such act of incorporation or authority, not denying, as before stated, its incorporation under and by the laws of Kentucky, and not denying the fact that under and by said act of incorporation it was created a body corporate, and from this charter it derived its powers to build, own, operate, and collect tolls on, said bridge. Neither does counsel for defendant properly distinguish between rights, powers, and franchises granted by the state of Kentucky, under which it built, and to-day owns, this property, and the duties and burdens imposed by the congress of the United States, but confuses these duties and burdens with grants, privileges, and franchises in this: that while the defendant was created by the laws of Kentucky, and given the rights, powers, and franchises that it enjoys in the construction of this bridge, all that the congress of the United States undertook to do was to impose certain burdens and limitations on this power, by prescribing certain rules and regulations pertaining to the building of this bridge, so that its construction should in no wise interfere with the free navigation of the open river. This was quite legitimate, and altogether proper, and clearly within the power and duty of congress. And again congress declared that this bridge, when so constructed and built, should be deemed a post-route. Yet neither of these things can in any just or appropriate sense be regarded rights, powers, privileges, or franchises conferred by the government of the United States, but as burdens imposed only. So this part of the answer of defendant was also defective and wholly insufficient, and the court below should have sustained the demurrer to the first paragraph of same, embracing these items noticed.

The second paragraph of defendant's answer is as follows: "The defendant says that its bridge between the city of Henderson and the state of Indiana is used entirely for transporting interstate business,—transporting passengers and freight between the states of Indiana and Kentucky. The defendant therefore insists and alleges that the imposition of a tax by the state of Kentucky upon the franchise of the defendant corporation is a tax upon its right to do interstate business, and is an unlawful burden upon, and an attempt upon the part of the state of Kentucky to regulate commerce between the states, in violation of that provision of the Constitution of the United States which confers powers on congress to regulate commerce between the states." This paragraph again shows gross misapprehension on the part of defendant and its counsel of the questions involved in this case. This is a question only of the right of the state of Kentucky to levy and collect of defendant a tax upon its property owned and situated exclusively in Kentucky, and upon the value of its franchise as a corporation, created under and by the authority of the state of Kentucky, and upon a business being wholly done within the borders and limits of the state, and this tax, to the same extent precisely as that assessed and levied on all other corporations created by the laws of Kentucky, situated and doing business in its jurisdiction. This tax is only to the extent that the taxes of all individuals owning property situated in Kentucky may be assessed and collected, and not a farthing more. We are at a loss to see how this demand by the state of this corporation of the same tax that under the constitution and laws of the state must be paid by all other corporations has anything to do with regulating commerce between the states, or how it in any wise interferes with the constitutional inhibition of any act of congress ever passed on this subject. We apprehend that neither under this clause in reference to the regulation of commerce between the states, nor under any other clause in the constitution, has congress ever undertaken to lessen, impair, abridge, or take away the right of any state within the federal union to levy and collect the same rate of taxes on the property of corporations and individuals situated and resident within its boundary, though they may, for the time being, be engaged in commerce, that it levies upon the property of all other corporations and individuals. Certain it is that congress has never yet undertaken to pass such law; neither is it probable that it ever will undertake so to do, at least while its halls are filled with representatives of the people, worthy by reason of their intelligence and character to fill such high positions. And if such a dangerous and destructive law should be passed, what lawyer doubts that the courts of the United States would immediately declare it null and void, as at once destroying the sovereign power of the states on this subject of taxation. This defendant company is not engaged in commerce or transportation at all. It has no authority or power or franchise to engage in commerce or transportation. It was simply authorized to build this bridge, and, when built, then the railroads that may be engaged in transportation, and so indirectly engaged in commerce, may transport merchandise and passengers over its structure, in consideration of a reasonable rate of toll for so doing. This is all; nothing more. This defendant, the Henderson Bridge Company, is no more, in fact not as much, engaged in commerce between the states as each and every railroad in the United States that anywhere on its line may cross from one state into another, conveying freight and passengers. And if, under this pretense, this bridge company can be rightfully and lawfully excused from the payment of its lawful taxes to the state of Kentucky, assessed and levied, as we will hereafter demonstrate, at the same rate, and estimated in the same mode or manner, as that of all other taxes on corporations, then under the same pretext can the property of every railroad of the United States, whose line at any place extends from one state into another, and who is thus necessarily engaged in transporting freight and passengers from one state into another, be likewise exempted from taxation. We deem this proposition incontrovertible, and simply to state it is to show the utter shallowness and fallacy of the pretext by and under which this defendant corporation seeks to shield and protect itself from its just and lawful share of the public burden. In this case the property upon which this tax has been assessed, being only that portion of its structure that extends to the low-water mark on the north side of the Ohio river, is as much within the territorial limits of the state of Kentucky as if it were situated at the geographical center of the state, and, being so situated, is subject to the authority and lawful jurisdiction of the state to same extent as any other piece of property in the limits of the state, subject only to the constitutional inhibition that it shall in no wise obstruct the navigation of said stream. The true line was fixed by the original compact between Virginia and the federal government, whereby Virginia under her right to all territory north of the Ohio was extended to low-water mark on the north side of said stream. And this has always been recognized by both the states bordering on this stream, as well as by the federal government. It has never been questioned. This line,—low-water mark on the north side of the Ohio river,—like all other lines considered with reference to mathematical accuracy, has no element of width or space. It is as clearly and as sharply defined by its own terms as the lines between Indiana and Illinois or Ohio and Michigan. This court has never questioned the right or the power of congress to regulate commerce between the states in any and every legitimate way and manner, and yet it confesses it has but little patience with the many unwarrantable and indefensible demands constantly being presented in this court, torturing and perverting this right into a protection for many derelictions of public duty. We believe, however, this is the first time that this power has been appealed to to destroy the right of taxation by the state of property situated within its territorial limits. The demurrer filed by the commonwealth to this paragraph of the answer was properly sustained by the court below.

The only remaining questions are as to the value of the franchise of the defendant corporation, and the mode and manner of assessing the same; these questions being presented (rather in an argumentative way) by the third paragraph of defendant's answer. To show that the value of the franchise as fixed by the board of valuation and assessment, viz. $865,157.46, is too high, and that the mode of ascertainment adopted was erroneous, the defendant relies chiefly on this clause in the 4079th section of the Kentucky Statutes: "That said board from said statement [referring to a sworn statement required to be made by the president of the company] and from such other evidence as said board may have if such corporation, company, or association be organized under the laws of this state, shall fix the value of the capital stock of the corporation, company, or association as provided in the next succeeding section, and from the amount thus fixed shall deduct the assessed value of all tangible property assessed in this state or in the counties where situated. The remainder thus found shall be the value of its corporate franchise, subject to taxation as aforesaid." The next section, pursuing substantially the same lines of procedure, applies to corporations organized under the laws of other states, and having property and doing business in this state, as well as in other states, provides for an assessment and an apportionment, and, as to the merits of this controversy, is not material. And, to speak more definitely of defendant's contention, it depends on the meaning to be given to the words "capital stock of the corporation," found in the section quoted. This word "stock" we find used by legislatures and by different juridical writers and courts in several different senses, and that its particular meaning must generally be determined by the matters in hand, the thing in the mind of the legislator or the court, the context as well as the clause wherein it may be found. Mr. Lowell, in his work on Transfer of Stock (section 4), says: "Stock has been succinctly designated as 'the sum of all the rights and duties of the shareholder.' Again, it has been used to denote (1) the capital stock, (2) the shares of stock or of the stockholders, and (3) as being applied so as to include both. While the term 'capital stock' generally means the fund or property put in or subscribed by members of the corporate body, yet it may mean the capital put in, and the accumulations of same, not distributed as dividends or profits." Again, it is said that the value of the capital stock is measured by that of the corporate property. An interesting description of this term "stock" or "capital stock," and what it may mean, is found in case of People v. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 438, 13 L. R. A. 762. We make the following extracts: "The capital stock of a company is one thing, and that of the shareholders is another, and a different thing. That of the company is simply its capital existing in money or property or both, while that of the shareholders is representative, not merely of that existing and tangible capital, but also of surplus, of dividend-earning power of franchise, and the good-will of an established and prosperous business. The capital stock of the company is owned and held by the company in its corporate character. The capital stock of the stockholders they own and hold in different proportions as individuals. The one belongs to the corporation, the other to the corporators. The franchise of the company, which may be deemed its business opportunity and capacity, is the property of the corporation, but constitutes no part or element of the capital stock, while the same franchise does enter into and form a part, and a very essential part, of the shareholders' capital stock. While the nominal or par value of the capital stock and of the share stock is the same, the actual value is often widely different. The capital stock of the company may be wholly in cash or in property or both, which may be counted and valued. It may have, in addition, a surplus consisting of some accumulated and reserved fund, or of undivided profits, or both; but that surplus is no part of the company's capital stock. . . . But that surplus does enter into and form part of the share stock, for that represents and absorbs into its own value surplus as well as capital, and the franchise in addition; so that the property of every company may consist of three separate and distinct things, which are its capital stock, its surplus, and its franchise; but these three things, several in the ownership of the company, are united in the ownership of the shareholders. The share of stock covers, embraces, represents all three in their totality, for it is a business photograph of all the corporate possessions and possibilities." In this case, while it is apparent that the court uses the term "capital stock" of the company or corporation in its most limited sense, it yet makes it clear that the corporation, the company, in its property rights, represents and embraces both capital stock, strictly so speaking, the tangible property owned by the company as well, the surplus, undivided earnings, if any, and the franchise; and while that court describes the shares of stock owned by the several individual members of the corporation as representing in interest and value all these things, yet the same things all combined constitute and are the property of the corporation or company. So, again, we find it said by a New York court, in Barry v. Merchants Exchange Co., 1 Sandf. Ch. 307, 7 L. ed. 340, "that the corporation is not limited in its ownership of property by the amount fixed as its capital stock." Again, Mr. Cook, in his work on Stock & Stockholders (section 9), says: "That while capital stock is to be clearly distinguished from the amount of property owned by the corporation, yet occasionally it happens that under the terms of statutes relating to taxation, which have been drawn without regard to the technical meaning of the words, the courts will construe the capital stock to mean all the actual property of the corporation; but this is for the purpose of carrying out the meaning of the statute, and is not the real meaning of the term." Again, it is said that the property of a corporation may embrace not only the property contributed by the stockholders, but that otherwise obtained by it under its charter. See Williams v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 98 N. Y. 162.

Thus we see what a varied meaning this term "capital stock" may have. So that it becomes necessary to examine and see what was the object and meaning of the legislature when using this term in the clause before quoted from section 4079 of our Statutes. In this examination it becomes important to notice those clauses of the constitution in reference to revenue and taxation, and see what was contemplated and enjoined by that instrument in reference to taxation. Section 172 provides: "That all property not exempt from taxation, by this constitution, shall be assessed at its fair cash value, estimated at the price it would bring at a fair voluntary sale. . . ." Section 174 provides: "That all property whether owned by natural persons or by corporations, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, unless exempted by this constitution, and all corporate property shall pay the same rate of taxation paid by individual property. Nothing in this constitution shall be construed to prevent the general assembly from providing for taxation, based on income, licenses, or franchises." Thus it is manifest that what the constitution intended to be taxed was property,—all property; and, as to corporations, not only all tangible property, but that it intended to leave the legislature of the state free to tax the franchise of corporations if it so desired; that the property of a corporation should be taxed as the property of an individual. It will be observed that in these several sections quoted "capital stock," "stock," and "shares of stock" are not mentioned as being appropriate terms to designate the subjects of taxation, but it says "property," "all property," etc., so that there might be no confusion as to what that instrument intended. Neither is there any reason to suspect that the legislature did not understand the language and meaning of the constitution when it came to frame the revenue laws of the state under it now under consideration. Neither is there reason to suspect that it did not intend and endeavor in good faith to carry into effect the intent and meaning of the constitution. So that we may safely interpret all words and phrases (of doubtful and uncertain meaning) in accordance with and so as to effectuate and carry out that intent.

We find that the legislature, in framing the first revenue law under this new constitution, declared that all property, both real and personal, should be assessed for taxation at its fair cash value at a fair voluntary sale, etc. We find that by section 4020 the legislature for the purposes of taxation of corporations divided their property into tangible and intangible, leaving the tangible to be assessed by the officer of the county where the same was situated, but as to the intangible (which term was used as synonymous with "franchise") directed that that should be valued and taxed as provided in section 4077. We find by section 4077 that "every railway company or corporation, . . . bridge company, . . . as also every other corporation, company, or association having or exercising any special or exclusive privilege or franchise, not allowed by law to natural persons, or performing any public service, shall, in addition to the other taxes imposed on it by law, annually pay a tax on its franchise to the state, and a local tax thereon to the county, incorporated city, town, and taxing district where its franchise may be exercised." The auditor, treasurer, and secretary of state are created a board of valuation and assessment for fixing the value of said franchise. They are to designate when this tax shall be payable, and to apportion same, when more than one jurisdiction may be entitled to a share of such tax. Section 4078 gives some general directions as to how this board of valuation and assessment shall proceed to determine the value of this franchise which is to be taxed. It provides that the president or chief officer of such corporation shall, between the 15th day of September and the 1st day of October, annually, make a statement under oath, showing the following facts, viz.: The name, place of business, kind of business, etc., engaged in; the amount of capital stock, preferred and common; the number of shares of each; the amount of stock paid up; the par and real value thereof; the highest price at which such stock was sold at a bona fide sale within twelve months before the 15th day of September of the year when the statement is made; the amount of surplus fund and undivided profits, and the value of all other assets; the total amount of indebtedness as principal; the amount of gross or [and] net earnings or income, including interest on investments and incomes from all other sources, within twelve months preceding the time of making the statement; the amount and kind of tangible property in this state, and where situated, assessed, or liable to assessment in this state, and the fair cash value thereof, estimated at the price it would bring at a fair voluntary sale; and such other facts as the auditor may require,—all this indicating as clearly as it is possible for language to indicate that the object of the legislature was that the board of valuation and assessment should thus be able to form a correct estimate of the value of the entire property of the company or corporation whose case they were investigating. Then follows the clause in section 4079, before quoted, requiring the board, from the statement, and from all evidence before it, to proceed to fix the value of the capital stock (meaning the entire property) of the company or corporation, and that from the amount thus fixed they shall deduct the assessed value of the tangible property of the company or corporation assessed in the state or in the county where situated, and that the balance thus found should be the value of the corporate franchise subject to taxation as aforesaid. So that the question returns, Did the legislature mean by the expression "capital stock" only the amount of money that may have been paid in by the stockholders, or did it mean to embrace and include by that term the entire property, of every kind and description, tangible and intangible, embracing not only capital stock originally paid, but all property afterwards acquired and then owned by the company, as well as any surplus undivided profits then on hand, and all other assets, as well as its franchise?

In the light of the foregoing provisions of the constitution, and of the act of the legislature, and of the instructions given to the board of valuation and assessment, and of the sworn statement demanded of the president of the company, on which, with other testimony, to make this valuation, we are constrained to say that by this term "capital stock" the legislature meant to include the entire property, real and personal, tangible and intangible, assets on hand, and its franchise as well; and that, when so embraced and construed and valued as an entirety, then to take off the tangible property already assessed, and that the net balance will show and shall be the value of the franchise to be taxed under section 4077. This was the construction given to these several clauses by the board of valuation and assessment, and we entertain no doubt of its correctness. All the property of the corporation cannot be taxed in any other way. The total value of the property of this corporation was thus fixed at $2,900,000, and the evidence in the record abundantly supports the correctness of this estimate. While it is true that the technical capital stock of the company was based on $1,000,000, yet under their charter they were authorized to borrow money and issue bonds in aid of the enterprise for which they were incorporated, and they did issue $2,000,000 in bonds, and put the proceeds of these bonds, combining same with the $1,000,000 capital stock, in the building of their bridge and its approaches, so that they had invested in said enterprise not only the $1,000,000 stock, but proceeds of the $2,000,000 in bonds; and the evidence shows the property in its entirety is worth what it cost. But defendants argue that they should not be taxed on the debt that they owe. They are not so taxed. Of course, a debt cannot be made the subject of taxation as against the one who owes it. But, on the other hand, neither can an outstanding debt be deducted from the value of any property in assessing same for taxation. It cannot be done in behalf of an individual; is never done; and when the constitution requires that the property (not stock or capital stock, but property) of all corporations must be taxed in the same manner as the property of an individual, then it is manifest that neither can a corporation, in an assessment of its property for taxation, obtain any credit for any debt that it may owe. This proposition we think absolutely clear. Furthermore, the board of valuation and assessment, following out the line claimed by defendant, after determining the value of the entire property of the defendant, fixing same at $2,900,000, deducted from this amount the value of said property, including the railroad and that portion of the bridge proper situated beyond or north of low-water mark, as shown by the evidence, and leaving as the value of the property in Kentucky the sum of $1,514,893; and this was then apportioned by deducting the value of the tangible property listed in Henderson county, viz., $649,735.54, and leaving $865,157.46 as the value of the franchise of defendant to be taxed under this proceeding. These valuations are clearly within the evidence as shown by the record. It is supported by the sworn statement of the president of the company (after correcting all mistakes in same). It may also be observed in the simple fact that the market value of the stock of the company is in the aggregate $900,000, when we know that the bonds taking precedence of the stock in the sum of $2,000,000 must be good, otherwise the stock could have no value, and thus that the property and franchise must be worth the $2,900,000. Again, it is shown that the annual gross income for the year preceding this valuation was $217,072.31,—enough to pay an annual interest on both bonds and stock of more than 7 per cent,—or, making another estimate, this $217,072 would pay an annual interest on the value of the tangible property as taxed in Indiana and given in to the county of Henderson of nearly 17 per cent. So that the large earning capacity of this property, based on its tangible value only, authorizes us to assume that it lies in its franchise, which is the right to charge tolls on every locomotive, freight and passenger car, ton of freight, and passenger that passes over its road. And this rate of toll is practically, up to this time, in the discretion of the company, the legislature not having undertaken to limit or control the same, and make same reasonable. But it is insisted by counsel in argument that the state of Kentucky has no right to tax the franchise granted by it to this company, and they rely upon the authority of the case of California v. Pacific R. Co., 127 U. S. 40, 32 L. ed. 157, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 153. We have examined these cases, and find that the facts upon which they are made to turn (the very foundation of the decision) are totally dissimilar and unlike the facts in this case, and, consequently, that however sound and correct the law announced in those cases may be (and we do not question it), it has no application to this case. Counsel for appellants copy some two pages of that decision into their brief, showing that the federal courts refused to allow the state of California to tax the franchise of said railroad companies. The court, after devoting many pages of that decision to a recital of the facts of the cases before it as found by the court below, and as the conclusion of fact on which the decision is made to turn, says: "That if, therefore, the Central Pacific Railroad Company is not a federal corporation, its most important franchises (including that of constructing a railroad from the Pacific Ocean to Ogden City) were conferred upon it by congress." Hence the court properly concluded that, the franchise of the road being incorporated and granted by the federal government, was not subject to taxation by the state of California,—a state of case wholly different from this case, as before shown in this opinion. Mr. Morawetz, in his work on Corporations (section 929), speaking of franchises and their value, says: "Care must be taken to distinguish between the different meanings of the word 'value.' One meaning of the word is 'price,' or the 'amount for which a thing can be sold.' In this sense franchises have clearly no value whatever, because by their nature they are not transferable. They cannot be sold or leased or mortgaged, nor can they be taken under execution. On the other hand, franchises clearly have a value if the word 'value' is used to signify the advantage derived from their possession; or, in other words, their utility. The value of a franchise, using the word 'value' in this sense, would not be measured by the cost or difficulty of obtaining the franchise, or by its exclusive character, but by the benefit derived from its possession." Thus the value of the franchise in this case aptly illustrates the meaning of the author. It should be further said that the findings in this board of valuation and assessment partake of a judicial nature. The defendant had its day in court. It did appear, on notice, before that board, and on evidence made its defense, and on this hearing that board rendered its decision in fixing the value of the franchise of defendant, granted by authority of the state of Kentucky. And this finding, if not conclusive, is entitled to a very high degree of consideration and authority, and it should not be lightly set aside or disregarded by the courts, unless the board proceeded upon an erroneous principle, or adopted an improper mode or manner of estimating the value of the franchise, or unless fraud is charged and shown to exist. It is not contemplated by the law that every corporation, company, or association operating under and enjoying a franchise from the state should, simply by denying the correctness of the valuation placed on its franchise by this board, put again the whole thing in issue, and have same reheard and adjudicated by the courts. It would be an inefficient system of revenue for the state if its just taxes against every such corporation, company, or association could only be collected at the end of a separate lawsuit against each. We have thus gone into the merits of this case at some length, knowing the importance of a correct interpretation of our existing revenue laws with reference to the taxation of the franchise of all corporations, companies, and associations operating under and enjoying the benefits of the same conferred by this state. The court below disregarded the finding of the board of valuation and assessment as to the value fixed on the franchise of this defendant company, supported as it was by the only other evidence introduced on the trial of the cause, and fixed the valuation of said franchise for the purpose of taxation at the sum of $140,000 only, and rendering judgment for the commonwealth on that basis (at 42½ cents on the $100 value of same, as fixed by law) for the sum of $595. From that judgment both parties appealed.

That judgment was erroneous, and on the appeal of the Commonwealth it is reversed, but affirmed on the appeal of the Henderson Bridge Company. It is now ordered that same be set aside and held for naught, and this cause is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this opinion.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

William E. RITCHIE, Plff. in Err.,

v.

PEOPLE of the State of Illinois.

(155 Ill. 92.)

1. A statute providing that no female shall be employed in any factory or workshop more than eight hours in any one day or forty-eight hours in any one week prohibits both the employer and employé from entering into a contract of employment for a greater time and restricts their right to contract with each other with reference to the hours of labor.

2. The privilege of contracting is both a liberty and a property right of which one cannot be deprived without due process of law.

NOTE—As to constitutionality of statutes restricting contracts and business, see note to State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 789.

29 L. R. A.

3. The right to labor or employ labor and make contracts in respect thereto upon such terms as may be agreed upon is included in the guaranty of Const., art. 2, § 2, that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.

4. While the right to contract may be subject to limitations growing out of the duties which the individual owes to society, the public, or the government, the power of the legislature to limit such right must rest upon some reasonable basis and cannot be arbitrarily exercised.

5. A statute entitled "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles, etc.," and providing in its body that no female shall be employed in any factory or workshop more than eight hours a day, will embrace only employment in the manufacture of articles of the same kind as those expressly enumerated.

6. A statute prohibiting the employment of females in any factory or workshop for more than eight hours a day is unconstitutional as partial and discriminating in its character whether applying only to manufacturers of wearing apparel and like articles or as applying to manufacturers of all kinds of products.
7. A statute prohibiting the employment of females in any factory or workshop more than eight hours a day is unconstitutional as a purely arbitrary restriction upon the fundamental right of the citizen to control his or her own time and faculties, and a substitution of the legislative judgment for that of the employer and employé in a matter about which they are competent to agree with each other.
8. The legislature in undertaking to impose an unreasonable and unnecessary burden upon any one citizen or class of citizens transcends the authority intrusted to it by the constitution although it imposes the same burden upon all other citizens or class of citizens.
9. The right to make contracts is inherent and inalienable under Const., art. 2, § 1, declaring that all men are by nature free and independent and have certain inherent and inalienable rights among which are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, and any attempt to unreasonably abridge it is unconstitutional.
10. The police power of the state is that power which enables it to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society.
11. Statutes passed in pursuance of the police power of the state must not conflict with the constitution and must have some relation to the end sought to be accomplished, and where their ostensible object is to secure the public comfort, welfare, or safety they must appear to be adapted to that end and cannot invade the rights of person and property under the guise of a police regulation where they are not such in fact.
12. It is the province of the courts to determine whether a statute purporting to be an exercise of the police power of the state, but taking away the property of a citizen or interfering with his personal liberty, is an appropriate measure for the promotion of the comfort, safety, and welfare of society.
13. A statute prohibiting the employment of women in factories or workshops for more than eight hours a day cannot be sustained as a police regulation for the promotion of the public health, on the ground that it is designed to protect women on account of their sex and physique, as sex is no bar under the Illinois constitution or laws to the right to contract, and the mere fact of sex will not justify the exercise of the police power for the purpose of limiting the exercise of such rights by a woman, unless there is some fair, just, and reasonable connection between such limitation and the public health, safety, or welfare, and there is no reasonable ground why a woman should be deprived of the right to determine for herself how many hours during each day she can and may work in an employment conceded to be lawful in itself and suitable for her to engage in, even if the police power can be exercised to prevent injury to the individual engaged in a particular calling.
14. A statute containing two distinct subjects both of which are expressed in the title is wholly void under Const., art. 4, § 13, declaring that no act shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title; but if any subject be embraced which is not expressed in the title the act is void only as to so much thereof as shall not be expressed.
15. Factory inspectors provided for in Act June 17, 1893, are state officers or officers of the government within the provision of Const., art. 4, § 16, providing that bills making appropriations for the pay of members and officers of the general assembly and for the salaries of the officers of the government shall contain no provisions on any other subject.
16. Act June 17, 1893, providing for the regulation of manufacturing establishments, the appointment of factory inspectors, and making an appropriation therefor, although it contains an appropriation for the inspectors' salaries, is not an appropriation bill within Const., art. 4, § 16, making void provisions in appropriation bills upon any other subject.
17. The title of Act June 17, 1893, "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles in this state and to provide for the appointment of state inspectors to enforce the same and to make an appropriation therefor," does not express two subjects because the appropriation for salaries of the factory inspectors provided for is a separate subject, as the words "appropriation therefor" do not necessarily imply that the appropriation is for such salaries but may be for the payment of their expenses.
18. The appropriation in Act June 17, 1893, § 10, for the salaries of factory inspectors is a subject not expressed in the title "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles in this state and to provide for the appointment of state inspectors to enforce the same and make an appropriation therefor," and is void under Const., art. 4, § 13, declaring that if a subject shall be embraced in an act which is not expressed in the title the act shall be void as to so much thereof as is not expressed.

(June 17, 1893.)

ERROR to the Criminal Court for Cook County to review a judgment convicting defendant of violating the provisions of the statute against employing women in factories for more than eight hours during each day. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Moran, Kraus & Mayer, for plaintiff in error:

The title to the act in question, and the act itself, discloses at least three distinct subjects:

1. Regulating the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles.

2. Creating the offices of factory inspector, assistant factory inspector, and deputy factory inspectors, fixing their salaries and terms of office, and empowering the governor to fill the same by appointment.

3. Making an appropriation to pay the salaries and traveling expenses of the factory inspector, his assistant, and deputies.

If the act embraces two subjects, and both are expressed in the title, the entire act must be declared void.

People v. Nelson, 133 Ill. 565.

It cannot be questioned that the offices created by the present act are government offices.

United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 103; Buna

v. People, 45 Ill. 897; Wilcox v. People, 90 Ill. 186; People v. Morgan, Id. 558; State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 20; Throop, Pub. Off. chap. 1; Trimble v. People, 19 Colo. 187; 19 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 882-890; United States v. Perkins, 116 U. S. 488, 29 L. ed. 700.

There is here presented, therefore, an act for the accomplishment of at least two distinct purposes, both of which are expressed in the title, and which the constitution declares shall not be united and embraced in one act.

Section 5 of the Act places unwarranted restrictions upon the individual's right to contract.

State v. Loomis, 21 L. R. A. 789, 115 Mo. 307; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 889; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431; Com. v. Perry, 14 L. R. A. 325, 155 Mass. 117; Ex parte Sing Lee, 96 Cal. 854; State v. Goodwill, 6 L. R. A. 621, 23 W. Va. 179; State v. Wire Creek Coal & Coke Co. 6 L. R. A. 859, 33 W. Va. 188; Leep v. St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. 23 L. R. A. 264, 58 Ark. 407; Millett v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869; Frorer v. People, 16 L. R. A. 492, 141 Ill. 171; Ramsey v. People, 17 L. R. A. 853, 143 Ill. 390; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 22 L. R. A. 340, 147 Ill. 66; Re Kubach, Petitioner, 9 L. R. A. 482, 85 Cal. 274.

The police power, no matter how broad and extensive, is not above the constitution.

Re Jacobs and People v. Gillson, supra; Civil Rights Cases, 109 U. S. 11, 27 L. ed. 839; Re Maguire, 57 Cal. 604, 40 Am. Rep. 125; Hoah Kow v. Nunan, 5 Sawy. 552; Tiedeman, Pol. Powers, § 178; Ex parte Whitwell, 19 L. R. A. 727, 98 Cal. 78; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 210; Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 606, 607.

Before the law, the right to a choice of vocations cannot be said to be denied or intended to be abridged on account of sex.

Re Leach, 21 L. R. A. 701, 184 Ind. 665; Minor v. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 165, 22 L. ed. 627.

The law in question amounts to a prohibition against the laborer, because it makes the employment a misdemeanor.

Baker v. Portland, 5 Sawy. 566; State v. Loomis, 21 L. R. A. 789, 115 Mo. 307; Com. v. Perry, 14 L. R. A. 325, 155 Mass. 117.

In the absence of such a constitutional provision as that which makes the legislature the judge of what is "for the good and welfare of" the state and "for the government and order thereof and of the subjects of the same" the courts are designated as the proper forum in which to pass upon the justness and reasonableness of the law passed by the legislature.

Ex parte Whitwell, 19 L. R. A. 627, 98 Cal. 78; Re Maguire, 57 Cal. 610; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 661, 31 L. ed. 210; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 108, 50 Am. Rep. 636.

Messrs. John W. Elz and Alexander Bruce for defendant in error.

Magruder, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Upon complaint of the factory inspector appointed under the law hereinafter named, a warrant was issued by a justice of the peace of Cook county against plaintiff in error, and, upon his appearance and waiver in writing of jury trial, a trial was had resulting in a finding of guilty, and the imposition of a fine of $5, and costs. The complaint charged that, on a certain day in February, 1894, plaintiff in error employed a certain adult female of the age of more than eighteen years at work in a factory for more than eight hours during said day. The plaintiff in error took an appeal to the criminal court of Cook county, and waived a jury, and upon trial in that court before the judge without a jury he was convicted and fined. The case is brought to this court by writ of error for the purpose of reviewing such judgment of the criminal court.

Upon the trial of the cause the defendant below submitted written propositions to be held as law in the decision of the case. By these propositions the trial court was asked to hold that the act of the legislature of Illinois, entitled "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles in this state, and to provide for the appointment of state inspectors to enforce the same, and to make an appropriation therefor," approved June 17, 1893 (Ill. Laws 1893, p. 99), and each and every section thereof, is illegal and void, and contrary to and in violation of the constitutions of Illinois and of the United States. The court refused all of the propositions so submitted and exception was taken by the defendant.

The present prosecution, as is conceded by counsel on both sides, is for an alleged violation of section 5 of said Act. That section is as follows: "No female shall be employed in any factory or workshop more than eight hours in any one day or forty-eight hours in any one week."

"Factory" or "workshop" is defined in section 7 of the Act as follows: "The words, 'manufacturing establishment,' 'factory,' or 'workshop,' wherever used in this Act, shall be construed to mean any place where goods or products are manufactured or repaired, cleaned or sorted, in whole or in part, for sale or for wages."

Punishment for violation of the provisions of the Act is provided for by section 8 thereof in the following words: "Any person, firm, or corporation, who fails to comply with any provision of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be fined not less than $8 nor more than $100 for each offense."

The main objection urged against the act, and that to which the discussion of counsel on both sides is chiefly directed, relates to the validity of section 5. It is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error that that section is unconstitutional as imposing unwarranted restrictions upon the right to contract. On the other hand, it is claimed by counsel for the people, that the section is a sanitary provision, and justifiable as an exercise of the police power of the state.

Does the provision in question restrict the right to contract? The words, "no female shall be employed," import action on the part of two persons. There must be a person who does the act of employing, and a person who consents to the act of being employed. Webster defines employment as not only "the act of employing," but also "the state of being employed." The prohibition of the statute is, therefore, twofold, first, that no manufacturer, or proprietor of a factory or workshop, shall employ any female therein more than eight hours in one day, and second, that no female shall consent to be so employed. It thus prohibits employer and employé from uniting their minds, or agreeing, upon any longer service during one day than eight hours. In other words, they are prohibited, the one from contracting to employ, and the other from contracting to be employed, otherwise than as directed. "To be 'employed' in anything means not only the act of doing it, but also to be engaged to do it; to be under contract or orders to do it." United States v. Morris, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 464, 10 L. ed. 543. Hence, a direction that a person shall not be employed more than a specified number of hours in one day, is at the same time a direction that such person shall not be under contract to work for more than a specified number of hours in one day. It follows that section 5 does limit and restrict the right of the manufacturer and his employé to contract with each other in reference to the hours of labor.

Is the restriction thus imposed an infringement upon the constitutional rights of the manufacturer and the employé? Section 2 of article 2 of the Constitution of Illinois provides that "no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law." A number of cases have arisen within recent years in which the courts have had occasion to consider this provision, or one similar to it, and its meaning has been quite clearly defined. The privilege of contracting is both a liberty and property right. Frorer v. People, 141 Ill. 171, 16 L. R. A. 492.

Liberty includes the right to acquire property, and that means and includes the right to make and enforce contracts. State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 807, 21 L. R. A. 789. The right to use, buy, and sell property and contract in respect thereto is protected by the constitution. Labor is property, and the laborer has the same right to sell his labor, and to contract with reference thereto, as has any other property owner. In this country the legislature has no power to prevent persons who are sui juris from making their own contracts, nor can it interfere with the freedom of contract between the workman and the employer. The right to labor or employ labor, and make contracts in respect thereto upon such terms as may be agreed upon between the parties, is included in the constitutional guaranty above quoted. State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 118 Pa. 431; Braceville Coal Co. v. People, 147 Ill. 66, 22 L. R. A. 840. The protection of property is one of the objects for which free governments are instituted among men. Ill. Const. art. 2, § 1. The right to acquire, possess, and protect property includes the right to make reasonable contracts. Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325. And where an owner is deprived of one of the attributes of property, like the right to make contracts, he is deprived of his property within the meaning of the constitution. Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636. The fundamental rights of Englishmen brought to this country by its original settlers and wrested from time to time in the progress of history from the sovereigns of the English nation, have been reduced by Blackstone to three principal or primary articles: "the right of personal security, the right of personal liberty, and the right of private property." 1 Bl. Com. p. 129. The right to contract is the only way by which a person can rightfully acquire property by his own labor. "Of all the 'rights of persons' it is the most essential to human happiness." Leop v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 58 Ark. 407, 23 L. R. A. 264.

This right to contract, which is thus included in the fundamental rights of liberty and property, cannot be taken away "without due process of law." The words "due process of law" have been held to be synonymous with the words "law of the land." State v. Loomis, and Frorer v. People, supra. Blackstone says: "The third absolute right, inherent in every Englishman, is that of property, which consist in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the laws of the land." 1 Bl. Com. p. 138; Re Jacobs, supra. The "law of the land" is "general public law binding upon all the members of the community, under all circumstances, and not partial or private laws, affecting the rights of private individuals, or classes of individuals." Millet v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 859. The "law of the land" is the opposite of "arbitrary, unequal, and partial legislation." State v. Loomis, supra. The legislature has no right to deprive one class of persons of privileges allowed to other persons under like conditions. The man, who is forbidden to acquire and enjoy property in the same manner in which the rest of the community is permitted to acquire and enjoy it, is deprived of liberty in particulars of primary importance to his pursuit of happiness. If one man is denied the right to contract as he has hitherto done under the law, and as others are still allowed to do by the law, he is deprived of both liberty and property to the extent to which he is thus deprived of such right. In line with these principles, it has been held that it is not competent, under the constitution, for the legislature to single out owners and employers of a particular class and provide that they shall bear burdens not imposed on other owners of property or employers of labor, and prohibit them from making contracts which other owners or employers are permitted to make. Millet v. People, and Frorer v. People, supra; Ramsey v. People, 142 Ill. 380, 17 L. R. A. 853.

We are not unmindful that the right to contract may be subject to limitations growing out of the duties which the individual owes to society, to the public, or to the government. These limitations are sometimes imposed by the obligation to so use one's own as not to injure another, by the character of property as affected with a public interest or devoted to a public use, by the demands of public policy or the necessity of protecting the public from fraud or injury, by the want of capacity, by the needs of the necessitous borrower as against the demands of the extortionate lender. But the power of the legislature to thus limit the right to contract must rest upon some reasonable basis, and cannot be arbitrarily exercised. It has been said that such power is based in every case on some condition, and not on the absolute right to control. Where legislative enactments, which operate upon classes of individuals only, have been held to be valid, it has been where the classification was reasonable, and not arbitrary. Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. and State v. Loomis supra.

Applying these principles to the consideration of section 5, we are led irresistibly to the conclusion that it is an unconstitutional and void enactment. While some of the language of the act is broad enough to embrace within its terms the manufacture of all kinds of goods or products, other provisions are limited to the manufacture of "coats, vests, trousers, knee-pants, overalls, cloaks, shirts, ladies' waists, purses, feathers, artificial flowers or cigars, or any wearing apparel of any kind whatsoever." The act is entitled "An act to regulate the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel and other articles, etc." Under the rule of construction heretofore laid down by this court, that general and specific words which are capable of an analogous meaning, being associated together, take color from each other, so that the general words are restricted to a sense analogous to the less general, it would seem that the general words, "and other articles," should be restricted to a meaning analogous to the meaning of the words, "clothing, wearing apparel," and, consequently that they would only embrace articles of the same kind as those expressly enumerated." First Nat. Bank of Joliet v. Adam, 138 Ill. 483; Misch v. Russell, 136 Ill. 22, 12 L. R. A. 125. But whether this is so or not, we are inclined to regard the act as one which is partial and discriminating in its character. If it be construed as applying only to manufacturers of clothing, wearing apparel, and articles of a similar nature, we can see no reasonable ground for prohibiting such manufacturers and their employes from contracting for more than eight hours of work in one day, while other manufacturers and their employes are not forbidden to so contract. If the act be construed as applying to manufacturers of all kinds of products, there is no good reason why the prohibition should be directed against manufacturers and their employes, and not against merchants, or builders, or contractors, or carriers, or farmers, or persons engaged in other branches of industry, and their employes therein. Women employed by manufacturers are forbidden by section 5 to make contracts to labor longer than eight hours in a day, while women employed as saleswomen in stores, or as domestic servants, or as bookkeepers, or stenographers, or type-writers, or in laundries, or other occupations not embraced under the 29 L. R. A.

head of manufacturing, are at liberty to contract for as many hours of labor in a day as they choose. The manner in which the section thus discriminates against one class of employers and employes and in favor of all others, places it in opposition to the constitutional guaranties hereinbefore discussed, and so renders it invalid.

But aside from its partial and discriminating character, this enactment is a purely arbitrary restriction upon the fundamental right of the citizen to control his or her own time and faculties. It substitutes the judgment of the legislature for the judgment of the employer and employe in a matter about which they are competent to agree with each other. It assumes to dictate to what extent the capacity to labor may be exercised by the employe, and takes away the right of private judgment as to the amount and duration of the labor to be put forth in a specified period. Where the legislature thus undertakes to impose an unreasonable and unnecessary burden upon any one citizen or class of citizens, it transcends the authority intrusted to it by the constitution, even though it imposes the same burden upon all other citizens or classes of citizens. General laws may be as tyrannical as partial laws. A distinguished writer upon constitutional limitations has said that general rules may sometimes be as obnoxious as special if they operate to deprive individual citizens of vested rights, and that, while every man has a right to require that his own controversies shall be judged by the same rules which are applied in the controversies of his neighbors, the whole community is also entitled, at all times, to demand the protection of the ancient principles which shield private rights against arbitrary interference, even though such interference may be under a rule impartial in its operation. Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. top p. 484, *855; Bank of Columbia v. Okely, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 235, 4 L. ed. 559. Section 1 of article 2 of the Constitution of Illinois provides as follows: "All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inherent and inalienable rights, among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. To secure these rights and the protection of property governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed." Liberty, as has already been stated, includes the right to make contracts, as well with reference to the amount and duration of labor to be performed as concerning any other lawful matter. Hence the right to make contracts is an inherent and inalienable one, and any attempt to unreasonably abridge it is opposed to the constitution. As was aptly said in Leep v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co., supra: "Where the subject of contract is purely and exclusively private, unaffected by any public interest or duty to person, to society or government, and the parties are capable of contracting, there is no condition existing upon which the legislature can interfere for the purpose of prohibiting the contract, or controlling the terms thereof."

An instance of the care with which this right to contract has been guarded, may be found in chapter 48 of the Revised Statutes of this state, where an Act passed in 1867 makes eight hours of labor in certain employments a legal day's work, "where there is no special contract or agreement to the contrary," and the second section of which act contains the following provision: "nor shall any person be prevented by anything herein contained from working as many hours over time or extra hours as he or she may agree."

In Ex parte Kuback, 85 Cal. 274, 9 L. R. A. 482, an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles, making it a misdemeanor for any contractor to employ any person to work more than eight hours a day where the work was to be performed under any contract with the city, was held to be unconstitutional and void, the supreme court of California there saying: "It is claimed in support of the petition that this ordinance was unconstitutional and void. We think this objection is well taken. It is simply an attempt to prevent certain parties from employing others in a lawful business and paying them for their services, and is a direct infringement of the right of such persons to make and enforce their contracts. If the services to be performed were unlawful or against public policy, or the employment were such as might be unfit for certain persons, as, for example, females or infants, the ordinance might be upheld as a sanitary or police regulation, but we cannot conceive of any theory upon which a city could be justified in making it a misdemeanor for one of its citizens to contract with another for services to be rendered, because the contract is that he shall work more than a limited number of hours per day."

In the case of Low v. Rees Printing Co., 41 Neb. 127, 24 L. R. A. 703, recently decided by the supreme court of Nebraska (opinion filed June 6, 1894), an act of the legislature of that state, providing that eight hours shall constitute a legal day's work for all classes of mechanics, servants, and laborers throughout the state, excepting those engaged in farm and domestic labor, and making violation of the provision a misdemeanor, was held to be unconstitutional and void, both as being special legislation, and as attempting to prevent persons, legally competent to enter into contracts, from making their own contracts.

But it is claimed on behalf of defendant in error that this section can be sustained as an exercise of the police power of the state. The police power of the state is that power which enables it to promote the health, comfort, safety, and welfare of society. It is very broad and far reaching, but is not without its limitations. Legislative acts passed in pursuance of it must not be in conflict with the constitution, and must have some relation to the ends sought to be accomplished; that is to say, to the comfort, welfare, or safety of society. Where the ostensible object of an enactment is to secure the public comfort, welfare, or safety, it must appear to be adapted to that end; it cannot invade the rights of persons and property under the guise of a mere police regulation, where it is not such in fact; and where such an act takes away the property of a citizen or interferes with his personal liberty, it is the province of the courts to determine whether it is really an appropriate measure for the promotion of the comfort, safety, and welfare of society. Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co. 70 Ill. 191, 23 Am. Rep. 71; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillson, 109 N. Y. 389.

There is nothing in the title of the Act of 1893 to indicate that it is a sanitary measure. The first three sections contain provisions for keeping workshops in a cleanly state and for inspection to ascertain whether they are so kept. But there is nothing in the nature of the employment contemplated by the act which is in itself unhealthy or unlawful, or injurious to the public morals or welfare. Laws restraining the sale and use of opium and intoxicating liquor have been sustained as valid under the police power. Ah Lim v. Territory, 1 Wash. 156, 9 L. R. A. 895; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 31 L. ed. 205. Undoubtedly the public health, welfare, and safety may be endangered by the general use of opium and intoxicating drinks. But it cannot be said that the same consequences are likely to flow from the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other similar articles. "The manufacture of cloth is an important industry, essential to the welfare of the community." Com. v. Perry, supra. We are not aware that the preparation and manufacture of tobacco into cigars is dangerous to the public health. Re Jacobs, supra.

It is not the nature of the things done, but the sex of the persons doing them, which is made the basis of the claim that the act is a measure for the promotion of the public health. It is sought to sustain the act as an exercise of the police power upon the alleged ground that it is designed to protect woman on account of her sex and physique. It will not be denied, that woman is entitled to the same rights, under the constitution, to make contracts with reference to her labor as are secured thereby to men. The first section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides:

"No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law."

It has been held that a woman is both a "citizen" and a "person" within the meaning of this section. Minor v. Happersett, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. ed. 627. The privileges and immunities here referred to are, in general, "protection by the government, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety, subject, nevertheless, to such restraints as the government may prescribe for the general good of the whole." Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 86, 21 L. ed. 894. As a citizen, woman has the right to acquire and possess property of every kind. As a person, she has the right to claim the benefit of the constitutional provision that she shall not be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. Involved in these rights thus guaranteed to her is the right to make and enforce contracts. The law accords to her, as to every other citizen, the natural right to gain a livelihood by intelligence, honesty, and industry in the arts, the sciences, the professions or other vocations. Before the law, her right to a choice of vocations cannot be said to be denied or abridged on account of sex. Re Leach's Petition, 184 Ind. 665, 21 L. R. A. 701.

The tendency of legislation in this state has been to recognize the rights of woman in the particulars here specified. The Act of 1867, as above quoted, by the use of the words, "he or she," plainly declares that no woman shall be prevented by anything therein contained from working as many hours over time or extra hours as she may agree; and thereby recognizes her right to contract for more than eight hours of work in one day. An Act approved March 22, 1872, entitled "An act to secure freedom in the selection of an occupation, etc.," provides that no person shall be precluded or debarred from any occupation, profession, or employment (except military) on account of sex." 1 Starr & C. Anno. Stat. p. 1056. The Married Woman's Act of 1874 authorizes a married woman to sue and be sued without joining her husband, and provides that contracts may be made and liabilities incurred by her and enforced against her to the same extent and in the same manner as if she were unmarried, and that she may receive, use, and possess her own earnings and sue for the same in her own name, free from the interference of her husband, or his creditors. Ill. Rev. Stat. chap. 68, §§ 1, 6, and 7.

Section 5 of the Act of 1893 is broad enough to include married women and adult single women, as well as minors. As a general thing it is the province of the legislature to determine what regulations are necessary to protect the public health and secure the public safety and welfare. But inasmuch as sex is no bar, under the constitution and the law, to the endowment of woman with the fundamental and inalienable rights of liberty and property which include the right to make her own contracts, the mere fact of sex will not justify the legislature in putting forth the police power of the state for the purpose of limiting her exercise of those rights, unless the courts are able to see that there is some fair, just, and reasonable connection between such limitation and the public health, safety, or welfare proposed to be secured by it. People v. Gillson, supra.

Counsel for the people refer to statements in the text-books recognizing the propriety of regulation, which forbid women to engage in certain kinds of work altogether. Thus, it is said in Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, that "some employments . . . may be admissible for males and improper for females, and regulations recognizing the impropriety and forbidding women engaging in them, would be open to no reasonable objection." 5th ed. p. 745. Attention is also called to the above-mentioned Act of March 22, 1872, which makes an exception of military service and provides that nothing in 29 L. R. A.

the act shall be construed as requiring any female to work on streets, or roads, or serve on juries. But, without stopping to comment upon measures of this character, it is sufficient to say that what is said in reference to them has no application to the Act of 1893. That act is not based upon the theory that the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles is an improper occupation for woman to be engaged in. It does not inhibit their employment in factories or workshops. On the contrary, it recognizes such places as proper for them to work in by permitting their labor therein during eight hours of each day. The question here is not whether a particular employment is a proper one for the use of female labor, but the question is whether, in an employment which is conceded to be lawful in itself and suitable for women to engage in, she shall be deprived of the right to determine for herself how many hours she can and may work during each day. There is no reasonable ground—at least none which has been made manifest to us in the arguments of counsel—for fixing upon eight hours in one day as the limit within which woman can work without injury to her physique, and beyond which, if she work, injury will necessarily follow. But the police power of the state can only be permitted to limit or abridge such a fundamental right as the right to make contracts, when the exercise of such power is necessary to promote the health, comfort, welfare, or safety of society or the public; and it is questionable whether it can be exercised to prevent injury to the individual engaged in a particular calling. The court of appeals of New York, in passing upon the validity of an Act "to improve the public health by prohibiting the manufacture of cigars and preparation of tobacco in any form in tenement houses," etc., has said: "To justify this law it would not be sufficient that the use of tobacco may be injurious to some persons, or that its manufacture may be injurious to those who are engaged in its preparation and manufacture; but it would have to be injurious to the public health." Re Jacobs, supra. Tiedeman, in his work on Limitations of Police Power, says: "In so far as the employment of a certain class in a particular occupation may threaten or inflict damage upon the public or third persons, there can be no doubt as to the constitutionality of any statute which prohibits their prosecution of that trade. But it is questionable, except in the case of minors, whether the prohibition can rest upon the claim that the employment will prove hurtful to them. . . . There can be no more justification for the prohibition of the prosecution of certain callings by women, because the employment will prove hurtful to themselves, than it would be for the state to prohibit men from working in the manufacture of white lead because they are apt to contract lead poisoning, or to prohibit occupation in certain parts of iron smelting works, because the lives of the men so engaged are materially shortened." Section 86.

We are also referred to statements made in some of the text-books to the effect that the legislature may limit the hours of labor of women in manufacturing establishments. Parker & W. Public Health & Safety, § 260; 18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 753. These statements appear to be based entirely upon the decision of the supreme court of Massachusetts in Com. v. Hamilton Mfg. Co. 120 Mass. 385. There it was held that an act providing that no woman over the age of eighteen years should be employed by any person, firm, or corporation in any manufacturing establishment more than ten hours in any one day was valid. But, under the constitution of Massachusetts (art. 4, § 1) the legislature has power to ordain all manner of wholesome and reasonable statutes, with or without penalties, not repugnant to the constitution, "as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of the commonwealth, and for the governing and ordering thereof, and of the subjects of the same." The decision referred to was evidently made in view of the large discretion so vested in the legislative branch of the government; and it was said that the act might be maintained as a health or police regulation, because the legislature deemed the employment of manufacturing dangerous to health. But the Massachusetts case is not in line with the current of authority, as it assumes that the police power is practically without limitation. As has been already stated, the legislature cannot so use that power as to invade the fundamental rights of the citizen; and it is for the courts to decide whether a measure which assumes to have been passed in the interest of the public health really "relates to and is convenient and appropriate to promote the public health." Re Jacobs and People v. Gillson, supra. We said in Lake View v. Rose Hill Cemetery Co., 70 Ill. 191, 22 Am. Rep. 71: "As a general proposition it may be stated it is the province of the law-making power to determine when the exigency exists, calling into exercise this power. What are the subjects of its exercise is clearly a judicial question." The reasoning of the opinion in the Massachusetts case cited does not seem to us to be sound. It assumes that there is no infringement upon the employer's right to contract, because he may employ as many persons or as much labor as he chooses, nor upon the employé's right to contract, because she may labor as many hours as she chooses in some other occupation than that specified in the statute. This is a begging of the question. The right to contract would be valueless if it could not be exercised with reference to the particular subject-matter in hand. If its exercise is forbidden between two persons competent to contract and concerning a lawful subject of contract, it is none the less abridged because other persons may be permitted to contract, or because the same persons may be at liberty to contract about some other matter.

We cannot more appropriately close the discussion of this branch of the case than by quoting, and adopting as our own, the following words of the New York court of appeals in Re Jacobs, supra: "Where a health law is challenged in the courts as unconstitutional on the ground that it arbitrarily interferes with personal liberty and private property without due process of law, the courts must be able to see that it has at least in fact some relation to the public health, that the public health is the end actually aimed at, and that it is appropriate and adapted to that end. This we have not been able to see in this law (section) and we must therefore, pronounce it unconstitutional and void. In reaching this conclusion, we have not been unmindful that the power which courts possess to condemn legislative acts which are in conflict with the supreme law should be exercised with great caution and even with reluctance. But as said by Chancellor Kent (1 Com. 450): 'It is only by the free exercise of this power that courts of justice are enabled to repel assaults and to protect every part of the government and every member of the community from undue and destructive innovations upon their charter rights.'"

It is furthermore contended by plaintiff in error, that the Act of 1893 is void upon the alleged ground that it contains two distinct subjects, and that both of these are expressed in the title. The two constitutional provisions, which are invoked in favor of this position, are sections 18 and 16 of article 4. Section 18 is as follows: "No act hereafter passed shall embrace more than one subject and that shall be expressed in the title. But, if any subject shall be embraced in an act which shall not be expressed in the title, such act shall be void only as to so much thereof as shall not be so expressed."

Section 16 is as follows: The general assembly shall make no appropriation of money out of the treasury in any private law. Bills making appropriations for the pay of members and officers of the general assembly, and for the salaries of the officers of the government, shall contain no provision on any other subject."

The two subjects, alleged to be contained in the act and expressed in its title, are, first, the general subject of regulating the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles, including the requirements as to cleanliness, inspection, employment of minors, keeping registers of names, ages, residences, etc., appointment of inspectors, fixing their salaries, duties, terms of office, etc., and, second, the appropriation of money for the payment of the salaries of the inspectors. Section 9 of the Act provides that "the governor shall, upon the taking effect of this act, appoint a factory inspector, at a salary of fifteen hundred dollars per annum, an assistant factory inspector, at a salary of one thousand dollars per annum, and ten deputy factory inspectors, of whom five shall be women, at a salary of seven hundred and fifty dollars per annum each. The term of office of the factory inspectors shall be four years, and the assistant factory inspector and the deputy factory inspectors shall hold office during good behavior. Said inspector, assistant inspector, and deputy inspectors shall be empowered to visit and inspect, at all reasonable hours, and as often as practicable, the workshops, factories, and manufacturing establishments in this state where the manufacture of goods is carried on. And the inspectors shall report in writing to the governor, on the fifteenth day of December, annually, the result of their inspections and investigation, together with such other information and recommendations as they may deem proper. And said inspectors shall make a special investigation into alleged abuses in any of such workshops whenever the governor shall so direct, and report the result of the same to the governor. It shall also be the duty of said inspector to enforce the provisions of this act, and to prosecute all violations of the same before any magistrate or any court of competent jurisdiction in the state."

Section 10 provides "that the following named sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, respectively, for the purposes hereinafter named, be and are hereby appropriated.

"First. Twenty thousand dollars for the salaries of inspector, assistant inspector, and the ten deputy factory inspectors, as hereinbefore provided.

"Second. The sum of eight thousand dollars to defray traveling expenses and other necessary expenses incurred by said inspector, assistant factory inspector, or deputy inspectors while engaged in the performance of their duties, not to exceed four thousand dollars in any one year."

The general rule is that, where an act includes two distinct subjects and both are expressed in the title, the whole act must be treated as void under such a provision as section 18, because it is impossible to choose between the two subjects and hold the act valid as to one and void as to the other. Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. top p. 178; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. § 108. We are inclined to think that the body of the act does embrace two subjects. The factory inspectors provided for in the act must be regarded as state officers, or officers of the government.

Section 24 of article 5 of the Constitution declares that "an office is a public position, created by the constitution or law, continuing during the pleasure of the appointing power, or for a fixed time, with a successor elected or appointed." The duties of the inspectors are continuing, and are prescribed by statute, and not by contract, and some portion of the functions of government are committed to their charge. They seem to come within the definition of "officers," as given in the constitution, and as laid down in the decisions of this court. Bunn v. People, 45 Ill. 397; Wilcox v. People, 90 Ill. 186; People v. Morgan, Id. 558.

The manifest intention of section 16 was to make the subject of appropriations for the pay of the members and officers of the legislature, and for the salaries of the officers of the government, a separate and distinct subject for legislative action. In a bill making appropriations for those objects every provision is unconstitutional which proposes to do anything besides making such appropriations. Re Appropriation Bill, 14 Fla. 284. If the Act of 1898 was strictly a general appropriation bill to pay the legislature and for the salaries of the officers of the government, everything else in it would be void. But it is not such a bill. Certainly its title does not indicate that it is such a bill. Its body contains a provision appropriating money for the payment of the factory inspector, and his or her deputy and assistants. This provision is merely subordinate and subsidiary to the main purpose of regulating the manufacture of clothing, wearing apparel, and other articles.

In order to make the act void under the constitutional prohibition contained in section 18, the two subjects must not only be contained in the body of the act, but must also be expressed in its title. We do not think that we would be justified in holding that two subjects or objects are expressed in the title to the Act of 1898. Courts always give a liberal and not a hypercritical interpretation to this restriction. All matters are properly included in the act, which are germane to the title. The constitution is obeyed, if all the provisions relate to the one subject indicated in the title, and are parts of it, or incident to it, or reasonably connected with it, or in some reasonable sense auxiliary to the object in view. It is not required that the subject of the bill shall be specifically and exactly expressed in the title, or that the title should be an index of the details of the act. Where there is doubt as to whether the subject is clearly expressed in the title, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the validity of the act. An act to incorporate a city may contain provisions for the raising of revenue for its government. An act "concerning drainage" may include assessments upon lands benefited to pay the expense. Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 82, 85, 86, 88, 92-96; Johnson v. People, 88 Ill. 481.

Here, the main subject or purpose expressed in the title is the regulation of the manufacture of the articles therein named. The appointment of inspectors for the enforcement of such regulation, and the making of "an appropriation therefor," are germane to the main subject, and a part of it. They merely amplify the subject, and are incidental and auxiliary to the object contemplated by it. The title of the act not only does not mention the pay of the legislature and the salaries of the government officers, but it does not mention the salaries of the inspectors. The word "therefor" does not necessarily imply that the appropriation is for the salaries of the inspectors. Non constat, so far as the title expresses to the contrary, that the inspectors were not to act without salaries. The title can well be interpreted as referring to the expenses of enforcing the legislation provided for, such as traveling expenses, the expenses attendant upon gathering information, and making investigations, and reporting to the governor, and prosecuting violations of the act by employing counsel or otherwise. It does not follow, that "a specific provision for the payment of expenses, necessary, proper, incidental, or growing out of a law itself, or which may be deemed needful in carrying it or its subject into execution, would not be valid, because such a provision being matter properly connected with the subject of the law as expressed in the title, would not be prohibited by the title." Re Revenue Law, 14 Fla. 287.

If it were not for section 16, it might be said that the salaries of the inspectors were a necessary expense incidental to the execution of the law, and properly included in the title, though not expressly named therein. But sections 16 and 18 are in the same article of the constitution, and both use the word "subject," which evidently has the same meaning in each. The question, therefore, whether the matter of the salaries of state officers is an independent subject is not a matter of construction, because the constitution itself, by the language used in section 16, defines and sets apart appropriations for such salaries as a subject, which is distinct and separate from all others, and cannot be included in any other. The design of that section was to enable the people to see clearly what and how much compensation their servants are receiving, without being confused by a commingling of outside matters with appropriations therefor.

We are inclined to think that the second clause of section 10 of the Act, appropriating "twenty thousand dollars for the salaries of inspector, assistant inspector, and ten deputy factory inspectors, as hereinbefore provided," is a subject embraced in the act, which is not expressed in the title, and must therefore be regarded as void under the provision in the second sentence of section 18. It is true that the clause only makes an appropriation for the salaries of one class of state officers, and is not a general appropriation for the pay of the legislature and for the salaries of all the officers of the government. But it was the intention of section 16 that the salary of each of such officers, as well as of all of them collectively, should be provided for by appropriations in a separate bill, standing by itself and apart from any provision on any other subject. The mandate of the constitution, as embodied in that section, cannot be violated by passing separate bills, making separate and distinct appropriations for the salaries of particular officers of the government, or of particular classes of government officers, and embodying in such separate bills provisions on other subjects than the appropriations so made. Our conclusion is, that section 5 of the Act of 1898, and the first clause of section 10 thereof, are void and unconstitutional for the reasons here stated. These are the only sections of the Act, which have been attacked in the argument of counsel. No reason has been pointed out why they are not distinct and separable from the balance of the Act. The rule is that, where a part of a statute is unconstitutional, the remainder will not be declared to be unconstitutional also, if the two are distinct and separable so that the latter may stand, though the former becomes of no effect. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Jones, 149 Ill. 361, 24 L. R. A. 141. We do not wish to be understood by anything herein said as holding that section five (5) would be invalid if it was limited in its terms to females who are minors.

The judgment of the Criminal Court of Cook County is reversed, and the cause is remanded to that court with directions to dismiss the prosecution.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

WILLAMETTE IRON WORKS, Resp't.,
v.

OREGON RAILWAY & NAVIGATION
CO., Appl.

(26 Or. 224.)

1. Any structure on a street which is subversive of and repugnant to its use and efficiency as a public thoroughfare is not a legitimate street use and imposes a new servitude on the rights of abutting owners for which compensation must be made.
2. A solid structure 30 feet wide erected in the middle of a street 66 feet wide and curving so as to leave on one side a passageway only 8 feet wide, built as an approach to a toll bridge owned by a private corporation, not forming a part of or extension of any public highway, although authorized by the legislature and city authorities, can lawfully be made only on payment of damages to the abutting owner.
3. An abutting proprietor is entitled to the use of the street in front of his premises to its full width as means of ingress and egress

NOTE.—As to injury of abutter's easements in street, see note to Selden v. Jacksonville (Fla.) 14 L. R. A. 370.

As to what use of a street or highway constitutes an additional burden, see note to Western Railway of Alabama v. Alabama Grand Trunk R. Co. (Ala.) 17 L. R. A. 474.
29 L. R. A.

and for light and air, and this right is as much property as the soil within the boundaries of his lot.

4. The use of a street for other than legitimate street purposes, which constitutes any impairment of or interference with the easements of an abutting owner, is a taking of his property within the meaning of the constitution.
5. No portion of a public street can lawfully be appropriated to the exclusive and permanent use of a private corporation under the guise of an exercise of power to alter or change the grade.
6. Opportunity to acquire the easement of an abutting owner by agreement or condemnation may be given before making an injunction mandatory against an unauthorized approach to a bridge which is in daily use by a large number of electric cars, wagons, and foot passengers.

(October 2, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Multnomah County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to enjoin defendant from occupying the street in front of plaintiff's premises with a bridge approach without paying plaintiff damages therefor. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cox, Cotton, Teal & Minor, and Snow & McCamant, for appellant:

The act of the legislature authorizing the defendant to erect a wagon-road bridge and the approaches thereto is constitutional.

California State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co. 22 Cal. 398; Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Orton, 6 Sawy. 157; Wallace v. Loomis, 97 U. S. 146, 24 L. ed. 895.

Every court approaches with hesitancy the question of declaring a law unconstitutional, and never exerts its power so to do while doubt exists.

Cook v. Portland, 20 Or. 532; Cline v. Greenwood, 10 Or. 241; United States v. Peters, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 128, 3 L. ed. 57; Kendall v. Kingston, 5 Mass. 584; Farmers & Mechanics Bank v. Smith, 3 Serg. & R. 72; Norwich v. Hampshire County Comrs. 13 Pick. 61; Ex parte M'Collum, 1 Cow. 584.

Any limitation upon the legislative power of the state must be strictly construed.

Sharpless v. Philadelphia, 21 Pa. 160, 59 Am. Dec. 759; California State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co. and Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Orton, supra.

The ordinance of the city of Portland regulating the use of Third street is valid.

The power of the state legislature over streets and public highways is plenary, and it may regulate their use either directly through its own legislation, or indirectly by conferring power upon municipalities to regulate their use.

Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 656-658, 685, 688.

There is an absolute power of abandonment and vacation of streets either by the legislature or as a result of power delegated to a municipality.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 666; Savage v. Salem, 24 L. R. A. 788, 23 Or. 381.

A city has power to build the necessary and proper bridges within its limits.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 729; Dively v. Cedar Falls, 27 Iowa, 227; Savage v. Salem, supra.

The plaintiff has suffered no legal injury by the erection of the approach to defendant's bridge.

That which the state has legally authorized cannot be a public nuisance.

Savage v. Salem, supra; Northern Transp. Co. of Ohio v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 336; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. §§ 657, 697.

The right of the abutting owner to recover compensation for the use of a street by a steam railway does not depend upon a mere arbitrary distinction based upon the ownership of the fee, but it depends in all cases upon the question whether or not the use by such steam railway has so far changed the character of the street as to impose a new servitude thereon.

McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237; Spencer v. Point Pleasant & O. R. R. Co. 23 W. Va. 407; Wichita & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 45 Kan. 264; Lewis, Em. Dom. §§ 96, 97; Selden v. Jacksonville, 14 L. R. A. 370, 28 Fla. 558.

Changes in the street made for highway purposes give no right for compensation.

Robinson v. Great Northern R. Co. 48 Minn. 445; Rauenstein v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 28 L. R. A. 768, 186 N. Y. 528.

In many cities it has been considered advisable to bridge railway tracks by means of an elevated viaduct resembling in its nature, purpose, and object the bridge approach to defendant's bridge. We know of no case holding that the abutting property owner suffering damages can recover compensation therefor.

Selden v. Jacksonville, supra; Read v. Camden, 84 N. J. L. 347.

The right of the owner of property depends upon the nature of the use made of the street.

Paquet v. Mount Tabor Street R. Co. 18 Or. 232; McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237; Rauenstein v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. and Robinson v. Great Northern R. Co. supra.

If the fair market value of the property is as much immediately after the construction of the approach as it was before, no damage has been sustained and no recovery can be had.

Springer v. Chicago, 12 L. R. A. 609, 135 Ill. 552; Bohm v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 14 L. R. A. 344, 129 N. Y. 576.

It is true that the plaintiff has been deprived of the use of the full width of Third street in front of its premises, but such deprivation of use, even when caused by railroad tracks and embankment in a street, do not constitute legal injury.

Wichita & O. R. Co. v. Smith, 45 Kan. 264.

The plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction or to the abatement of the bridge.

Savage v. Salem, 24 L. R. A. 787, 23 Or. 381;

Paquet v. Mount Tabor Street R. Co. 18 Or. 233; McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237; Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Schertz, 84 Ill. 185; Spencer v. Point Pleasant & O. R. R. Co. 23 W. Va. 406; Osborne v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 147 U. S. 248, 37 L. ed. 155, 37 Fed. Rep. 880; Porter v. Midland R. Co. 125 Ind. 476.

The construction of the defendant's bridge approach does not result from time to time in new injuries to the plaintiff's property, but the injury, if any, was done at one and the same time; and for an injury of this character there can be but one action of damages, in which can be recovered the entire damage suffered by the person injured.

Osborne v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., Spencer v. Point Pleasant R. Co. and Porter v. Midland R. Co. supra.

Messrs. J. F. Watson and E. B. Watson for respondent.

Bean, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit by an abutting owner to enjoin and restrain the defendant from occupying a portion of the street in front of plaintiff's property with an approach to its bridge across the Willamette river at Portland. The plaintiff's premises are situated on the west side of Third street, and are bounded on the south by G street, on the north by H street, and on the west by Fourth street, and occupying that portion of the property abutting on Third street is a two-story brick and iron building, used as a foundry and machine shops. Third street is about 66 feet wide, and runs northerly through the city to the north line of said H street. In 1887 the legislature granted to the defendant the right to construct and maintain a bridge, with proper and convenient approaches, across the Willamette river, between the then cities of Portland and East Portland, for the purpose of travel and commerce, as a railroad, wagon road, and passenger bridge, and to charge and collect tolls and fares thereon. Laws 1887, p. 252. Subsequently the city of Portland, by ordinance, granted to defendant the right to build on Third street "a solid roadway and approach to said bridge from the north line of G street to the center line of H street, said approach to be on an ascending grade from G street and to be built as a solid construction, not exceeding 80 feet in width." In pursuance of the permission thus given by the legislature and the city of Portland, the defendant proceeded to and did construct from a point about 600 feet east of Third street a double-decked steel bridge across said river,—not, however, as a part of or extension of any public highway,—and from the upper deck thereof, which is used for wagon and passenger traffic, constructed an elevated roadway, substantially at right angles to Third street, over and across private property, to the east end of H street, where, by a curve, it was connected to an approach in Third street, as provided in the ordinance referred to. This approach is 80 feet wide, and occupies the middle of the street in front of plaintiff's property for about three fourths of the distance north from G street, and then turns to the east on a curve so that at a point opposite the north line of plaintiff's property it is about 85 feet from the west line of the street, while at the south end, and for a greater portion of the distance along the block, it is only about 20 feet from the street line and about 8 feet from the sidewalk,—a space not sufficient for wagons to pass each other. At the junction of Third and H streets, and opposite the north line of plaintiff's property, it is about 18½ feet above the street surface, and from that point descends southerly by a gradual descent, reaching the surface of the street at the intersection of Third and G streets, forming an effectual barrier to the crossing of that part of the street by vehicles. It is supported by timbers resting on the street surface, and is so constructed and timbered as to be practically a solid structure, necessarily constituting an exclusive and permanent occupation and appropriation to the use of the defendant of that portion of Third street covered by it. The decree of the court below was in favor of the plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Counsel for defendant seeks to reverse the decree of the court below on the grounds (1) that the erection of the bridge and its approach in Third street, under legislative and municipal authority, violates no property rights of plaintiff, and consequently it is without remedy, although its property may be injured; and (2) the plaintiff's remedy, if it has any, is by an action at law to recover damages, and not by suit for an injunction.

But few questions have come before the courts in recent years involving larger pecuniary interests or of greater practical importance, or which have provoked more discussion, than those growing out of the enforcement by abutting lot owners of their right to compensation for the occupation and use of streets under legislative or municipal authority by private corporations for public use, under constitutions like ours, which provide that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. It is quite generally agreed that any proper exercise of governmental power over a street in a municipality, for street purposes, which does not directly encroach upon the abutting property of an individual, though the consequences may be to impair its use, is not a taking, within the meaning of the constitution, and will not entitle the adjoining proprietor to compensation, or give him a right of action. Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 671; Northern Transp. Co. of Ohio v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. ed. 386. It is within this principle that changes of grade; the use of a street for a surface street railroad; the erection of lamps, hitching posts, telephone, telegraph, and electric light poles; the laying of sewer and water pipes; the crossing of streets over railway tracks by means of elevated viaducts,—are, when authorized by lawful authority, held damnum absque injuria, although the abutting owner may be seriously injured, and the value and usefulness of his property greatly impaired. This is upon the ground that individual interests in streets are subservient to those of the public, and that an adjoining owner received full compensation for such injury as might result to him or his grantees from the use of the street for proper street purposes at the time of the dedication or appropriation of the land therefor. But there is a limitation to legislative or municipal power over a street, which cannot be exceeded without invading the constitutional rights of abutting owners. An abutting proprietor is entitled to the use of the street in front of his premises, to its full width, as a means of ingress and egress, and for light and air, and this right is as much property as the soil within the boundaries of his lot; and therefore any impairment thereof or interference therewith, caused by the use of the street for other than legitimate street purposes, is a taking, within the meaning of the constitution, whether the fee of the street is in the abutting owner or not. He holds his property subject to the power of the proper legislative authority to control and regulate the use of the street as an open public highway, and hence any authorized use thereof, though a new one, gives him no cause of action. But such holding is not subject to the legislative power to divert the street from legitimate street purposes by authorizing a structure thereon which is inconsistent with its continuous use as an open, public street. Any structure on a street which is subversive of and repugnant to its use and efficiency as a public thoroughfare is not a legitimate street use, and imposes a new servitude on the rights of abutting owners, for which compensation must be made. Elliott, Roads & Streets, 526; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. 301; Lewis, Em. Dom. § 136; Booth, Street Railway Law, §§ 80, 81; 2 Dill, Mun. Corp. §§ 711, 712, 738c; McQuaid v. Portland & V. R. Co. 18 Or. 237; Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev.

R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268; Reining v. New York, L. & W. R. Co. 128 N. Y. 157, 14 L. R. A. 133; Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co. 125 N. Y. 165, 11 L. R. A. 640; Corning v. Lowrey, 6 Johns. Ch. 439, 2 L. ed. 178; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. ed. 224; State v. Jersey City, 53 N. J. L. 65. As said by Andrews, J., in Kane v. New York Elev. R. Co., supra: "However difficult it is to trace its origin, or to refer it to any exact legal principle, it is undoubtedly the prevailing doctrine of American jurisprudence that the owner of a lot abutting on a city street, the fee of which is in a municipality, has, by virtue of proximity, special and peculiar rights, facilities, and franchises in the street, not common to citizens at large, in the nature of easements therein, constituting property, of which he cannot be deprived by the legislature or municipality, or by both combined, without compensation." And in Story's Case, supra, the rule is thus stated by Tracey, J.: "While the legislature may regulate the uses of the street as a street, it has, we think, no power to authorize a structure thereon which is subversive of and repugnant to the uses of the street as an open, public street. Whether a particular structure authorized by the legislature is consistent or inconsistent with the uses of the street as a street must be largely a question of fact, depending upon the nature and character of the structure authorized." 90 N. Y. 170, 43 Am. Rep. 146.

This brings us to the question, then, whether the occupation of Third street by the approach to defendant's bridge is compatible with or destructive of its use as an open public street. As already stated, this street is about 66 feet in width, and the approach complained of is practically a solid structure 80 feet wide in the middle of the street, so that no use can be made of that portion of the street occupied by it except by persons desiring to use defendant's bridge and pay toll therefor. In other words, it is in fact an appropriation of a public street to the exclusive use of a private corporation, and to the manifest injury of an abutting proprietor. The plaintiff and the public are absolutely and permanently excluded from the use of all that portion of Third street covered by the approach for general street purposes. It practically terminates the street as an open public thoroughfare at the north line of G street, in place of the north line of H street, as it is laid out and dedicated; and the only roadway in front of plaintiff's property is but a few feet wide, and quite insufficient for the proper and necessary use of such property, or for the accommodation of public travel. While the city authorities undoubtedly have power to authorize the use of the street for legitimate street purposes, we do not think the public can justly demand or require such a sacrifice of private interests, or justify such an exclusive and permanent appropriation of a street in aid of a private enterprise, although for public purposes, as is contemplated in this case. It may be conceded that the general interests of Portland and the public at large are promoted by the appropriation of the street to the purposes of an approach to defendant's bridge; but it by no means follows that the burden of such a public improvement can rightfully be cast upon this plaintiff by appropriating its property for the public benefit, without compensation. We think, therefore, that, while it is competent for the legislature or municipality to authorize the use of a street for legitimate street purposes without making compensation to abutting owners for consequential injuries to their property, they cannot legally authorize structures of the character complained of to be erected thereon for the use and convenience of a private corporation, and which absolutely and permanently exclude the public and the abutting owner from the portion of the street so occupied, without compensating the adjoining proprietor for the injury sustained.

The argument that the building of the approach was a mere change of the grade of the street, authorized by proper municipal authority, is clearly untenable. The city of Portland has undoubted plenary power to alter or change the grade of a public street by proper proceedings under its charter, but the act of the municipal authorities in granting defendant permission to occupy the street did not purport to be an exercise of such power. It was simply conferring upon the defendant, so far as the city was able, the right to the exclusive and permanent use of a portion of the public street; and, while such permission included as a consequence the construction of a solid roadway above and over the street surface, it does not follow that what was done was in exercise of the power to alter or change the grade of a street. The street grade remained the same after the approach was built as before, and this approach is no part of the street, but is foreign thereto, and as useless for general street purposes as any of the structures referred to in the cases cited. We do not think a public street, or any portion thereof, can lawfully be appropriated to the exclusive and permanent use of a private corporation under the guise of an exercise of the power to alter or change the grade. The primary object of this grant of power is to enable the municipality to make the streets safe and convenient for public travel, and not to divert them from legitimate street purposes to the exclusive use of some private corporation. Conceding, therefore, that defendant occupies this street by lawful authority, and hence its structure is not a nuisance, yet it invades the legal rights of an abutting owner, and is an appropriation of the property of such owner without compensation, which is beyond the power of the legislature or municipality, or both, constitutionally, to authorize or sanction.

The defendant's counsel also claims that plaintiff's remedy is by action at law to recover damages, and not by suit in equity to enjoin and restrain the defendant from maintaining the approach complained of. He relies principally upon the case of Osborne v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 147 U. S. 248, 37 L. ed. 155. This was a suit by an abutting owner to enjoin the defendant from laying down its railroad track at street grade under competent municipal authority, on the ground that the track would be a permanent obstruction, and the damage threatened to be done complainant was irreparable, and could not be compensated for by a recovery in an action at law. The constitution of Missouri provides that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation; but, while the statutes of that state contain ample provisions for the assessment of compensation for the taking of property, there is no provision therein for such assessment when the property is merely damaged. It was therefore held that as the laying down of defendant's track at the grade of the street was not an exercise of the power of eminent domain, or the taking of private property for public use, there was no proceeding authorized by law, which the railway company could avail itself of, to obtain an assessment of damages, while the complainant had an adequate remedy by action at law, and therefore the injunction should be denied, and the plaintiff remitted to his remedy at law. But in this case, as we have endeavored to show, the act sought to be restrained is a taking of private property for public use, and in such cases our statute has made adequate provision for the assessment of compensation therefor. Provision is not only made by statute for determining the compensation to be paid the owner, but its payment is made a condition precedent to the right to take the property, and it is within the power of the defendant to comply with this condition. In such case, as we understand the rule, an injunction will almost universally be granted, at least until the condition is complied with. The rule is very clearly stated by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, in the case referred to, as follows: "Whenever the power of eminent domain is about to be exercised without compliance with the conditions upon which the authority for its exercise depends, courts of equity are not curious in analyzing the grounds upon which they rest their interposition. Equitable jurisdiction may be invoked in view of the inadequacy of the legal remedy, where the injury is destructive, or of a continuous character, or irreparable in its nature; and the appropriation of private property to public use, under color of law, but in fact without authority, is such an invasion of private rights as may be assumed to be essentially irremediable, if, indeed, relief may not be awarded ex debito justitiae. But where there is no direct taking of the estate itself, in whole or in part, and the injury complained of is the infliction of damage in respect to the complete enjoyment thereof, a court of equity must be satisfied that the threatened damage is substantial, and the remedy at law in fact inadequate, before restraint will be laid upon the progress of a public work; and if the case made discloses only a legal right to recover damages, rather than to demand compensation, the court will decline to interfere." To the same effect is Booth, Street Railway Law, 189; Elliott, Roads & Streets, 536; Tiedeman, Mun. Corp. § 807; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 728d; Story v. New York Elev. R. Co. 90 N. Y. 179, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Lahr v. Metropolitan Elev. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 268; Columbus & W. R. Co. v. Witherow, 82 Ala. 190; State v. Berdett, 73 Ind. 185, 88 Am. Rep. 117.

As the structure, the maintenance of which is sought to be restrained in this case, is permanent and exclusive in its character, and, if suffered to continue as now located, will inflict a continuing and permanent injury upon the plaintiff, we think it manifest that it is entitled to restrain the continuation thereof by an injunction; but as it was constructed with the knowledge and without objection by plaintiff, on the assurance, however, of the defendant, that it was only intended as a temporary expedient and not as a permanent structure, and the fact that it has become and is one of the principal avenues across the river, and daily used by a large number of electric cars, wagons, and foot passengers, the injunction should not be made mandatory until the defendant has had a reasonable time after the mandate is filed in the court below, to be determined by that court, to acquire the plaintiff's easements in the street, by agreement or by proceedings to condemn the same, if it should be so advised. It follows that the decree of the court below must be affirmed, and the cause will be remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

Rehearing denied.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Moses R. TAYLOR, Piff. in Err.,

v.

Charles P. DOWNEY, Survivor, etc.

(.....Mich.....)

A hotel keeper is not liable for the theft by his night clerk from the hotel safe of money of a regular boarder who has lived in the house for some months, if ordinary care and diligence were used in the employment of the clerk.

(April 2, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ingham County to review a judgment in favor of NOTE.—Liability of bailee for wrongful appropriation by his servant of thing bailed.

Many bailees become such because of the relation which they bear to the public, and the measure of their liability is fixed, not so much by the 29 L. R. A.

law of bailment as by that which governs the capacity in which they act. Thus the business of common carriers, innkeepers, and other classes of persons requires them to have more or less custody of other people's property. But in such defendant in an action brought to hold defendant liable for the loss of money which had been placed by plaintiff in defendant's safe while plaintiff was a boarder at defendant's hotel. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cahill & Ostrander, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff was a boarder. But, as such, the proprietors of the hotel owed him the duty of protection of his property from loss or injury by their own tort or that of their servants.

Chamberlain v. Masterson, 26 Ala. 371; Bird v. Eberard, 4 Misc. 104; Donlin v. McQuade, 61 Mich. 275; Cooley v. Torts, 537; Hofor v. Hodge, 53 Mich. 372, 50 Am. Rep. 256; Neal v. Wilcox, 49 N. C. 146, 67 Am. Dec. 286; Clary v. Willey, 49 Vt. 55.

A bailee for hire is presumptively responsible for the loss of property through the fault of his servants.

This contract for the safe keeping of plaintiff's property was accessory to the main contract for board, and the plaintiff is entitled to damages for the breach of it the same as a traveler on a railroad train is for the loss of his baggage.

Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th cases when the true relation of carrier and shipper or innkeeper and guest exists their liability is governed by a law peculiar to those relations. Cases of that character are not collected here any further than is useful in showing the rule governing them and its modification when the relation of the parties is reduced to that of mere bailor and bailee.

In The Albany, 44 Fed. Rep. 431, the court says that the general rule is that the master is not liable for the willful acts of his servants committed without his express or implied authority unless at least they are done strictly within the scope of their employment, but there is no doubt that in the case of innkeepers, common carriers, and ship owners, they are upon the grounds of public policy liable for the embezzlement by their servants or agents.

The master of a vessel is liable for cargo embezzled by the crew. Schieffelin v. Harvey, 6 Johns. 170, 5 Am. Dec. 206.

The owner of a vessel is liable for the barratry of the master. The William Taber, 2 Ben. 322.

Where the agent of an express company stole money from a package which he had been given to deliver and the company paid the owner the amount the court said it was the duty of the company to make good this sum to the bank. The bank could have recovered against it at law. Hagerstown Bank v. Adams Exp. Co. 45 Pa. 419, 84 Am. Dec. 499.

A carrier is liable for embezzlement by his servant. King v. Shepherd, 8 Story, C. C. 349.

In the Canal Boat E. M. McChesney, 8 Ben. 150, where a portion of the oats forming the cargo of a boat were abstracted with the connivance of the master it was suggested that the boat was not liable because it was not within the scope of the master's employment to steal or be privy to the stealing of the oats. But the court said: A master is civilly liable for the lawless acts of his servant, whether the act be one of omission or commission, and whether negligent, fraudulent, or deceitful, if the act be done in the course of the servant's employment; and it makes no difference that the master did not authorize, or even know of, the act or neglect of the servant, or even that he disapproved or forbade it. The test is as to whether, at the time, the alleged servant did or did not sustain the relation of servant to the master. In the present case, 29 L. R. A.

ed. p. 416; Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith, 54.

It is surely more just that the persons who selected the night clerk and who could remove him for misconduct, and whose orders that clerk was bound to receive and obey, should suffer for the misconduct of that clerk, than that Mr. Taylor, who had not the opportunity of selection, or the power of removal and enforcing obedience to his orders, should be injured by the misconduct.

Smith, Mast. & S. 322; 1 Addison, Torts, art. 599; Dansey v. Richardson, 8 El. & Bl. 144.

Mr. Frank S. Porter, for defendant in error:

Hotel keepers act in a double capacity, being both innkeepers and boarding house keepers.

Jeffords v. Crump, 12 Phila. 500; Manning v. Wells, 9 Humph. 746, 51 Am. Dec. 689; Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush, 41, 96 Am. Dec. 327; Moore v. Long Beach Development Co. 87 Cal. 488; Lawrence v. Howard, 1 Utah, 142.

The law imposes no obligation on a boarding-house keeper to take care of the property of his boarder.

Houlder v. Soulbey, 8 O. B. N. S. 254.

The care of the oats on the boat was confided to the captain of the boat. The owner of the boat and her mortgagee directed the captain to deliver the oats at New York to the address given in the bill of lading, and directed him not to steal them on the way. He did steal them on the way. But they were entrusted to his control, and the owner and the mortgagee of the boat put it in the power of the captain to steal them on the way, and did it in the face of the absolute obligation in the bill of lading that the oats should all of them be delivered at New York, or the vessel should respond for the deficiency."

As to liability for loss of baggage by sleeping-car companies see note to Mann-Boudoir Car Co. v. Dupre (U. S. C. C. S. D. Miss.) 21 L. R. A. 289.

Common innkeepers without any particular contract for that purpose are answerable for all losses at their inns happening either by the acts or negligence of themselves or their servants to travelers and guests received by them. Towson v. Havre de Grace Bank, 6 Harr. & J. 47, 14 Am. Dec. 264. In that case the innkeeper was held liable for money stolen from a guest by the barkeeper of the hotel.

In Treiber v. Burrows, 27 Md. 130, it is said an innkeeper at common law is bound to take more than ordinary care of the goods, money, and baggage of his guest brought within his inn, and is responsible for loss or damage to the same by his servants, domestics, other guests or persons unknown.

If the person to whom the property is delivered appears to be in charge of the hotel the proprietor cannot deny his authority to escape liability for valuables delivered to and embezzled by him. Buckie v. Probasco, 58 Mo. App. 49.

It is the duty of an innkeeper to provide honest servants. Houser v. Tully, 63 Pa. 98, 1 Am. Rep. 390; Jeffords v. Crump, 12 Phila. 500.

In McDaniels v. Robinson, 26 Vt. 337, 63 Am. Dec. 574, it is stated that an innkeeper is responsible for acts of every one within his house.

In Gile v. Libby, 36 Barb. 70, it is stated that the innkeeper is liable if goods are stolen by his servant.

Where a pawnor tendered the money to the servant of the pawnbroker and the servant said he had

The hotel keeper is liable in those cases only where he has been guilty of gross negligence. Wiser v. Chesley, 53 Mo. 547; Johnson v. Reynolds, 8 Kan. 257; Wandell, Inns, Hotels, and Boarding Houses, p. 96; Manning v. Wells and Jeffords v. Crump, supra.

A bailee without reward is not responsible for goods entrusted to him which are stolen by his clerk or servant unless he has been guilty of gross negligence in employing and keeping them.

Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Tompkins v. Baltimore, 14 Serg. & R. 275; Scott v. National Bank of Chester Valley, 72 Pa. 471, 18 Am. Rep. 711; Comp v. Carlisle Deposit Bank, 94 Pa. 409; Merchants Nat. Bank of Savannah v. Guilmartin, 17 L. R. A. 322, 88 Ga. 797.

A bailee for hire or recompense is responsible only for ordinary care, or such care as a prudent man takes of his own property, and where he is not chargeable with negligence he is not responsible for goods entrusted to him which are stolen or destroyed.

Schmidt v. Blood, 9 Wend. 268, 24 Am. Dec. 143; Clafin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 260, 81 Am. Rep. 487; Tinsworth v. Winnegar, 51 Barb. 148; Holtsclaw v. Duff, 27 Mo. 892.

lost the goods, it was held that trover would lie against the master. Jones v. Hart (1699) 2 Salk. 441.

And one who hires a horse is liable to the owner if his servant takes the horse for his own purpose and while so using him injures him by negligent driving. Coupé Co. v. Mandik [1891] 2 Q. B. 418.

Where servant has no duty in respect to thing bailed.

If the master is not engaged in a business to which the bailment is incident and has not engaged his servants with a view to a possible bailment there is no ground for holding him liable for the wrongful appropriation by his servant of property of which he is a passive or gratuitous bailee and over which he has given his servant no control.

Thus in Calye's Case, 8 Coke, 32, 18 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. *132, it is said if a man is lodged upon request with another who is not an innkeeper and is robbed in the house by the servants of him who lodged him, he shall not answer for it.

Where servant's duties give him some control of thing bailed.

Most of the cases in which the question of the bailee's liability for misappropriation of the property by his servant has been considered have been those in which the bailment was received in the general course of the master's business and the servant was placed in the exact relation towards the property which his general employment required, and in which his acts would have rendered his master liable had the bailment been other than gratuitous. In such cases the tendency has been to greatly restrict the master's liability, more perhaps than such liability is restricted by the more modern decisions in other classes of cases involving the question of the master's liability for acts of his servant. See notes to Ritchie v. Waller (Conn.) 27 L. R. A. 161.

The bailee certainly owes the duty not to steal the property himself and not to connive at its being stolen by a third person. And if, instead of standing guard himself, he places his servant on guard the analogies of the law would indicate that he should have some responsibility for the honesty of the one whom he trusts. It may be slight but some of the cases at least have held him to practically no responsibility at all.

29 L. R. A.

The defendant may, after proof of demand and refusal to deliver by plaintiff, exonerate himself by showing that the plaintiff's money was stolen, unless plaintiff, upon whom rests the burden of proof, can show that the loss occurred through the negligence of defendant.

Clafin v. Meyer, 75 N. Y. 260, 81 Am. Rep. 487; Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts, 335; Mills v. Gilbreth, 47 Me. 820, 74 Am. Dec. 487; Stewart v. Stone, 14 L. R. A. 315, 127 N. Y. 500; 2 Kent, Com. p. 587; Marsh v. Horne, 5 Barn. & C. 322; Harris v. Packwood, 8 Taunt. 264.

Per Curiam:

The plaintiff was a regular boarder at the defendant's hotel, where he had lived for some months. Being engaged in building, he drew money from one of the city banks for the purpose of paying his men; and, not wishing too keep it about his person, he requested the defendant's day clerk to put it in the safe, which was kept in the office of the hotel, and to give him a receipt for the amount. The clerk answered, "I will give you a drawer in the safe, that has but one key, and you can keep that." This was accepted, and after the money was expended

In an early Massachusetts case it was held that to make the master liable for any act of fraud or negligence done by his servant the act must be done in the course of his employment; and if he steps outside of it to do a wrong either fraudulently or feloniously without authority the master is no more answerable than any stranger. The cases of innkeepers, common carriers and perhaps shipmasters where goods are embarked are exceptions to the general rule founded on public policy. In case of a special deposit of gold coin the master has no authority to open the receptacle and could not lawfully communicate any authority. The chest when once placed in the bank's vault is to remain there until taken away by the owner or ordered away by the bank. It is no more the duty of the cashier than of any other officer or person to know the contents of or take any account of them. He cannot therefore be considered in any view as acting within the scope of his employment when he embazles the contents and the bank is no more answerable for such act than they would be if he had stolen the pocket book of any person who might have laid it upon the desk while in there transacting some business with the bank. The bank is not answerable for special deposits stolen by its servants any more than if stolen by a stranger; or any more than the owner of a warehouse would be who permitted a friend to deposit a bale of goods there for safe keeping if the goods should be stolen by one of his clerks or agents. Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Smith v. First Nat. Bank in Westfield, 99 Mass. 605, 47 Am. Dec. 59.

The act of the cashier by which he appropriates exclusively to himself a gratuitous special deposit is not an act done in the bank's business within the scope of his employment. The custody of the deposit requires no act to be done but only a mere continuance of possession until a return of the property is demanded. The cashier had nothing to do about it except to suffer it to remain in a safe place of deposit. Consequently in taking it himself, he is said to "step aside" from his employment and do an act for his personal gain regardless of the business for which he was engaged. Such act is lacking both in the rendition of and in the intention to render any services to the employer. The cashier the plaintiff returned the key. Two or three weeks later the plaintiff drew $300 from the bank for a similar purpose, and asked the defendant's clerk if the drawer was vacant. He was told that it was not, but that he could have another which had but one key. He took the key, and locked the money in the drawer. A week or two later he found that the drawer had been forcibly opened, and the money taken, by another clerk of the defendant, who had charge of the office nights. It was the practice to leave the safe open, defendant keeping a day and a night clerk. Action being brought against the defendant to recover the amount taken, the circuit judge directed a verdict for the defendant, from which the plaintiff has appealed.

The testimony shows that the night clerk was employed by the defendant upon recommendations from other reputable proprietors of hotels. Defendant had seen him once before employing him, on an occasion of his visit to his father, who was at the time a boarder at defendant's hotel. Counsel for the plaintiff admit that the relation between the parties was that of boarding-house keeper and boarder, and that such relation differs from that of inn keeper and guest. They claim that the defendant was a bailee for hire, and therefore liable for loss of property by the bailor through fault of the bailee's servants. It is said that the defendant was in the habit of allowing boarders similar privileges to those enjoyed by transient patrons, but, if this is important, we discover no evidence to that effect. If the defendant was a bailee for hire, he owed the same care and diligence that all mutual benefit bailees are bound to exercise for the preservation of the property, viz. ordinary care, and "for nothing less than ordinary negligence, or the failure to exercise such care and diligence as persons of average prudence bestow upon their own property under like circumstances is he, while confining himself to the terms of the bailment, legally responsible." Schouler, Bailm. §§ 15, 816; Millon v. Salisbury, 18 Johns. 211; Collins v. Bennett, 46 N. Y. 490; Chamberlin v. Cobb, 82 Iowa, 161; Story, Bailm. § 398; Smith v. Read, 52 How. Pr. 14, 6 Daly, 88; Lawrence v. Howard, 1 Utah, 142; Johnson v. Reynolds, 3 Kan. 957; Wieser v. Chesley, 58 Mo. 547; Comp v. Carlisle Deposit Bank, 94 Pa. 416. Such bailee is in no sense an insurer, as an inn keeper is sometimes said to be, of the property of his guest; but he may does not as a matter of fact act with the bank's authority and furthermore does not essay or even profess to act in its behalf. He represents nobody but himself. He throws off all allegiance to his master and takes the position of a common enemy to all concerned. He becomes the same as a stranger from without, who deprives the bank of a special deposit and the bank is not chargeable with such a loss in the absence of gross negligence, but is liable if grossly negligent. Merchants Nat. Bank of Savannah v. Guilmarin, 17 L. R. A. 322, 88 Ga. 777.

So it has been held that a bailee is not liable for his servant's willful injuries to the property bailed. Haltz v. Markel (1897) 44 Ill. 225, 98 Am. Dec. 182.

But this extreme view has not obtained in all cases.

In Preston v. Prather, 137 U. S. 604, 34 L. ed. 738, affirming Prather v. Kean, 29 Fed. Rep. 498, the court in speaking of thefts by bank employes of special deposits made in the bank, said: "The doctrine of exemption from liability in such cases was at one time carried so far as to shield the bailees from the fraudulent acts of their own officers and employes although their employment embraced a supervision of the property, such acts not being deemed within the scope of their employment. And in that case the court held the bank liable for a special deposit of bonds stolen by the assistant cashier who was to the knowledge of the management speculating on the board of trade and whose accounts with the bank the directors investigated, at the same time leaving the special deposits unexamined. And that case was followed in Gray v. Merriam, 148 Ill. 179.

So in a Massachusetts case later than Foster v. Essex Bank, supra, in an action against a warehouseman for the value of property destroyed by fire, because its servants who were present at the fire neglected to save the goods, it appearing that the fire occurred in the night, the court said there was no liability, it being no part of the duty of the servants to save property in the night, and states that the true test of liability may be found in the question whether or not any one of defendant's servants who were present at the fire would be answerable to his employers for a neglect of 29 L. R. A.

duty. Aldrich v. Boston & W. R. Co. (1868) 100 Mass. 81, 1 Am. Rep. 76, 97 Am. Dec. 74.

For a special deposit the bank is not liable if the cashier without its knowledge or consent steals it or fraudulently appropriates it to his own use, provided the bank has exercised due diligence in selecting the cashier and in not keeping him in office after it knows or ought to have known that he was or has become untrustworthy. Merchants Nat. Bank of Savannah v. Guilmarin, supra.

A bank is liable in case of loss of a special deposit only in case of gross negligence or fraud. Foster v. Essex Bank and Smith v. First Nat. Bank in Westerfield, supra.

A warehouseman is not liable for the loss of goods embezzled by his store keeper or servant in the absence of gross negligence. Schmidt v. Blood, 9 Wend. 268, 24 Am. Dec. 143.

But in a later case it was held that a warehouseman is bound to exercise at least ordinary care to prevent the goods from being stolen by his servant. Jones v. Morgan, 96 N. Y. 4, 48 Am. Rep. 151.

If the bank uses ordinary care it will not be liable for the embezzlement of special deposits by its teller. Scott v. National Bank of Chester Valley, 72 Pa. 471, 13 Am. Rep. 711.

A bank is not liable for the taking of a special deposit by its president for his own purposes unless it failed to use the degree of care which the most inattentive give to their affairs. First Nat. Bank of Allentown v. Rex, 89 Pa. 306, 88 Am. Rep. 767.

In case the cashier of a bank embezzles a special deposit the bank will not be liable if it has exercised the ordinary diligence which a reasonable prudent man takes of his own property of like description. Giblin v. McMullen, L. R. 2 P. C. 817, 21 L. T. N. S. 214, 17 Week. Rep. 445, 88 L. J. P. C. 85.

In L'Herbette v. Pittsfield Nat. Bank, 162 Mass. 137, where the cashier accepted money as a deposit to be subsequently invested for the depositor and then embezzled it, the bank was held liable for his act.

If bonds are deposited with a bank as security for a loan and left there after the loan is paid the bank will be liable if they are embezzled by its cashier if it takes no precaution to ascertain their be held liable for negligence upon his own part, or the negligence of a servant, if such negligence amounts to a want of ordinary care. If a liability is to be based upon negligence, in this case, it must be based upon a want of care in the employment of the night clerk, for it cannot be said that the clerk was negligent. On the contrary, he committed a felony by stealing the property, not only of the plaintiff, but the defendant also. It was done while in charge of the office by virtue of his employment. It was a complete and deliberate departure from his duty, and an entering upon an enterprise of his own, wholly outside of the scope of his employment. "It was an illegal act, willfully done, for which the employer cannot be required to respond." See opinion of Patterson, J., in Lyons v. Martin, 8 Ad. & El. 512; Stevens v. Woodward, 50 L. J. C. P. 281; Foster v. Essex Bank, 17 Mass. 479, 9 Am. Dec. 168; Merchants Nat. Bank of Savannah v. Guilmarlin, 88 Ga. 797, 17 L. R. A. 822; Comp v. Carlisle Deposit Bank, 94 Pa. 409; Haggerty v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 59 Mich. 846, 60 Am. Rep. 301; Sutherland v. Ingalls, 68 Mich. 620; Mechem, Agency, 740, 741. There is nothing to show that the defendant did not use ordinary care and diligence in the employment of the clerk, and we must therefore hold that no recovery can be had upon the ground of negligence.

This discussion has been based upon the safety. Ouderirk v. Central Nat. Bank of Troy, 119 N. Y. 238.

A district telegraph company which undertakes to protect a private house from burglary during the absence of the owner is bound to exercise reasonable care in the selection of its servants and if it fails to do so it cannot protect itself from liability for goods stolen by the servant on the ground that he is not acting within the line of his duty or the scope of his employment. Williams v. Brooklyn Dist. Teleg. Co. 12 Misc. 566.

In a case of the loss of goods of a boarder, the court says the hotel keeper employs servants to attend to the rooms and his boarders have a right to expect that he will employ those who are honest and if he fails to do so and loss is thereby occasioned without negligence on the other side he is held responsible. All bailees are liable to third persons for the acts of their agents or servants done in the course of employment. But the boarder must not be negligent. Chamberlain v. Masterson, 26 Ala. 371.

Goods not in possession of master.

Whenever the guest assumes the custody and control of his goods in such a way as to indicate that he does not trust the innkeeper and concedes to him no control, there is no implied custody of the innkeeper and he is therefore not responsible unless they should be stolen by some one of his own household whose honesty and fidelity he is presumed to guarantee. Weisenger v. Taylor, 1 Bush, 275, 89 Am. Dec. 628.

In Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush, 41, 96 Am. Dec. 327, in which the property was destroyed by fire the court recognizes the rule of the Weisenger Case, that the landlord pledges the integrity of his servants.

In Peers v. Sampson, 4 Dowl. & R. 686, where a room was hired in which to store goods the key being kept by the hirer, the court held that the owner of the house was not liable for a theft of the goods by his servant on the ground that the goods had never been delivered to him for safe keeping.

If a guest on leaving a hotel leaves money with the clerk with the knowledge of the proprietor the assumption that the deposit was a bailment for mutual benefit. This was not conceded in the case. Counsel for the plaintiff argue, further, that the defendant "made it a part of his business to receive and take charge of the property of their boarders, and are liable for its safe-keeping," and that, while "there is no direct compensation for this service.

... the contract for the safe-keeping was accessory to the main contract for board, and the plaintiff is entitled to damages for the breach of it, the same as a traveler upon a railroad train for the loss of his baggage." We think there is a radical difference, the contract of the railroad company amounting to an undertaking to deliver the baggage as well as the passenger. The cases cited to sustain this point are cases of inn keeper and guest. [Coggs v. Bernard], 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 8th ed. p. 416; Needles v. Howard, 1 E. D. Smith, 54. There is not a uniformity of decision upon this question of a boarding house keeper's liability to a boarder. In Dansey v. Richardson, 8 El. & Bl. 144, a divided court affirmed the instruction that the boarding house keeper did not contract to safely keep baggage of a boarder. This was where a servant carelessly left a hall door open, permitting a thief to enter and steal the baggage, which was in the hall. In Holder v. Soubby, 8 C. B. N. S. 263, Earl, J., protested against the claim that it was the duty of the keeper of a lodging house to take care latter will not be liable for its embezzlement by the clerk if he had no reason to suspect his fidelity as he is a mere gratuitous bailee. Whitemore v. Haroldson, 2 Lea, 312.

Where the deposit was left at owner's risk, it not appearing that the bank had knowledge of it any further than the action of the cashier in taking it bound the bank, and the cashier was a man of good repute, the bank was held not liable, although the deposit was misappropriated by the cashier. Comp v. Carlisle Deposit Bank, 94 Pa. 409.

Effect of statute.

The Missouri act relieving the innkeeper from liability excepts cases of theft by a servant of the hotel. Fisher v. Kelsey, 121 U. S. 383, 30 L. ed. 601.

In Illinois the statute relieves the innkeeper from liability under certain circumstances unless the loss occurs "by a clerk or servant" employed by the landlord in the house or inn. But in such case admissions by the servant out of the master's presence that he took the property are not admissible against the landlord. Moor v. Hill, 98 U. S. 218, 25 L. ed. 103.

Ratification.

In United Soc. of Shakers v. Underwood, 9 Bush, 609, it was held that directors of a bank who divided among stockholders money which was obtained by the sale by bank officers of a special deposit might be held liable for the value of the deposits to the depositors.

Special contract.

In Safe Deposit Co. of Pittsburgh v. Pollock, 55 Pa. 561, 27 Am. Rep. 660, it appeared that the contract of the Safe Deposit Company required it to protect the property from any dishonesty on the part of any of the company's employes.

Although in an early English case it was held that a bailee for hire is not liable for the loss of goods which are stolen by his own servants if he takes as good care of them as he does of his own. Finucane v. Small (1796) 1 Esp. 815, and in that case the bailment was upon a special agreement by the bailee to take care of them for a consideration.

H. P. F.

of a lodger's goods, and said that, where the proprietor had done nothing which amounts to a misfeasance, he knew of no authority or principle upon which he could be held responsible for mere absence of care. In a note to that case it is said that, "even in the case of a common inn, the inn keeper is not liable as such to persons who reside permanently at his house as boarders, nor otherwise than for actual negligence," citing Chamberlain v. Masterson, 26 Ala. 371; Manning v. Wells, 9 Humph. 748, 51 Am. Dec. 688. In Lawrence v. Howard, 1 Utah, 142, it was held that requiring lodgers to lock their rooms and deposit the key at the office was ordinary diligence. Indeed, the court went further, and held that only slight care was required, implying that there was no bailment for mutual benefit in that case. The goods were stolen from the room where the proprietor left them after the plaintiff's departure. The case of Jeffords v. Crump, 12 Phila. 500, holds that "an inn keeper is not liable for goods of a boarder, stolen from the inn, unless there be proof of gross negligence;" thus implying, as did Lawrence v. Howard, that it was a case of depositum. See also Neal v. Wilcox, 49 N. C. 146, 67 Am. Dec. 266. The case of Smith v. Read, 6 Daly, 53, is perhaps as strong a case in support of the plaintiff's contention as any, and this goes no further than to hold that ordinary care is due. See also Cayle's Case, 8 Coke, 32; Bacon, Abr. Inns and Inn Keepers, chap. 5; Vance v. Throckmorton, 5 Bush, 41, 96 Am. Dec. 327; Berkshire Woollen Co. v. Proctor, 7 Cush. 424; Hancock v. Rand, 94 N. Y. 1, 46 Am. Rep.

112; Bishop, Non-Cont. L. § 1171; Johnson v. Reynolds, 3 Kan. 287; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Lowe, 6 L. R. A. 809, and note, 28 Neb. 239; Shoecraft v. Bailey, 25 Iowa, 553.

It is probable that this is the limit of the rule, viz., that boarding house keepers are liable, as bailees for mutual benefit, for the preservation of goods brought upon the premises by boarders. The nature of the liability is not changed by a deposit in the safe, though the degree of care may be increased over that required where the boarder retains the custody of valuables; but the keeper of the house is still a bailee for mutual benefit, and still owes the duty of ordinary care, which varies in degree as the responsibility is thrown upon him, or is assumed by the owner.

In this case it is contended by counsel for the defendant that this was a mere deposit; that the plaintiff drew his money from the bank where he usually kept it, and, for his own convenience, chose to make the safe his bank, which should not be said to have been contemplated by either party as a part of, or accessory to, their contract for board. It may be that there is room for such a distinction, but it is unnecessary to determine the question. The most that plaintiff's counsel can claim is that the defendant was a bailee for hire. If that be conceded, ordinary care was required. There is no proof that it was lacking.

We must therefore affirm the judgment of the Circuit Court.

The other Justices concur.

UTAH SUPREME COURT.

Alfred G. BRIM, Road Supervisor, etc., Appt.,
v.

Thomas W. JONES.

(.....Utah.....)

A statute which makes any person who drives a herd of horses, asses, cattle, sheep, goats, or swine over a public highway constructed on a hillside, liable for all damage done by such animals in destroying the banks or rolling rocks into or upon such highway, is not unconstitutional as a denial of equal privileges, immunities, or protection of the laws, or as depriving any person of property without due process of law.

(March 16, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court, Third District, in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce the statutory penalty for driving cattle over highways situated on a hillside in such a way as to injure or destroy the bank's road-bed. Reversed.

NOTE.—The above case is a novel one in respect to equal rights on highways. On the general subject of constitutional equality of rights and privileges, see note to Louisville Safety Vault & Trust Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (Ky.), 14 L. R. A. 579, 20 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Williams, Van Cott & Sutherland, with Mr. David B. Tewkesbury, for appellant:

The law requires courts to uphold statutes unless they are so plainly and palpably in conflict with the constitution as to leave no doubt or hesitation in the judicial mind of their invalidity.

Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Dey, 19 L. R. A. 445, 83 Iowa, 312.

A statute should not be declared unconstitutional unless very clearly so, and every reasonable intendment should be made to sustain it.

State v. Simmons Hardware Co. 15 L. R. A. 676, 109 Mo. 118.

And a statute should not be declared unconstitutional except in cases of plain and manifest violation of the instrument by the legislature.

Williamson v. Williamson, 8 Smedes & M. 715, 41 Am. Dec. 636; Davis v. Helbig, 27 Md. 452, 92 Am. Dec. 646.

The burden is on the one attacking such law to show its invalidity.

Section 2087 is not special or class legislation.

Allen v. Pioneer Press Co. 3 L. R. A. 532, 40 Minn. 117; Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 481-483; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 32, 38 L.

ed. 925; McCandless v. Richmond & D. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 445, 38 S. C. 108; Union Pac. R. Co. v. De Busk, 8 L. R. A. 850, 12 Colo. 294; Youngblood v. Birmingham Trust & Sav. Co. 20 L. R. A. 58, 95 Ala. 521; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis (Tex.) 21 S. W. Rep. 988; Presby v. Klickitat County, 5 Wash. 329; Re Oberg, 14 L. R. A. 577, 21 Or. 406; Jensen v. Fricke, 138 Ill. 175; Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 811; State v. Schlemmer, 10 L. R. A. 135, 42 La. Ann. 1166; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 708, 28 L. ed. 1146; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 127 U. S. 205, 32 L. ed. 107; People v. Henshaw, 78 Cal. 442; Gartside v. St. Louis, 43 Ill. 47.

It is customary to collect licenses over and above exactions from other persons from "cartmen, hack, cab, omnibus, stage and truck owners and drivers, and carriages and vehicles used for the transportation of passengers or merchandise."

If the legislature can authorize cities to make such exactions then it can do so itself, and in case of cities such legislation is established beyond dispute.

State v. Neil, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 132, 28 Am. Dec. 623; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. ed. 77; Elliott, Roads & Streets, pp. 58, 59, 66-68 et seq.; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 26, 32 L. ed. 585; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 2d ed. pp. 484-487.

The section in question is clearly within the general police power of the territory, and therefore valid even though it were inhibited by section 1 of the 14th Amendment.

State v. Aubuchon, 8 Mo. App. 825; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 586; Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 81, 28 L. ed. 925; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477.

The public highways are subject to the regulations that may be prescribed by the legislature or its delegated authority under the police power.

Elliott, Roads & Streets, pp. 58, 59; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 656.

If the damage done by heavy coal wagons can be collected as an exceptional damage, then the damage done by drivers of sheep through public highways constructed on a hillside can also be collected.

State v. Moore, 104 N. C. 714; Hawthorn v. People, 109 Ill. 811; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 113 U. S. 708, 28 L. ed. 1145.

Messrs. Richards & Richards, for respondent:

The constitution is a limitation upon the general police power as well as other powers.

Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 648; People v. Budd, 5 L. R. A. 559, 117 N. Y. 1.

The act is unconstitutional because it deprives a certain class of persons of their property without due process of law and denies them the equal protection of the law.

Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 558, 28 L. ed. 246; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 438; Pearson v. Yewdall, 95 U. S. 294, 24 L. ed. 436; Bank of State v. Cooper, 2 Yerg. 599, 24 Am. Dec. 537; Miller, Const. pp. 661-665.

This act deprives the persons to whom it applies of their property "without due process of law," because it creates an absolute liability for the damage done by their animals, whether the persons are guilty of negligence or not.

29 L. R. A.

Jensen v. Union Pac. R. Co. and Shaw v. Utah & N. R. Co. 4 L. R. A. 724, 6 Utah, 253; Cateril v. Union Pac. R. Co. 2 Idaho, 540; Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Parks, 82 Ark. 131; Zeigler v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 58 Ala. 595; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Lackey, 78 Ill. 55, 29 Am. Rep. 259; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Smalley, 1 Wash. 206; Bielenberg v. Montana Union R. Co. 2 L. R. A. 818, 8 Mont. 271; Birmingham Mineral R. Co. v. Parsons, 21 L. R. A. 268, 100 Ala. 662; Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Chamberlin, 4 Colo. App. 149; Rio Grande Western R. Co. v. Vaughn, 3 Colo. App. 465; State v. Divine, 98 N. C. 778; New York City Health Department v. Trinity Church, 43 N. Y. S. R. 142; East Kingston v. Toule, 48 N. H. 57, 2 Am. Rep. 174, 97 Am. Dec. 575; Janesville v. Carpenter, 8 L. R. A. 808, 77 Wis. 288; Re Kubach, Petitioner, 9 L. R. A. 482, 85 Cal. 274; Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Geiger, 21 Fla. 669, 58 Am. Rep. 697; McCready v. Sexton, 29 Iowa, 356, 4 Am. Rep. 214; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 184 U. S. 418, 33 L. ed. 970; Bardwell v. Collins, 9 L. R. A. 152, 44 Minn. 97; State v. Ellet, 47 Ohio St. 90.

Smith, J., delivered the opinion, of the court:

The sole question raised upon the appeal in this case is whether or not section 2087, Utah Comp. Laws 1888, is valid and constitutional. The section reads as follows: "Any person who drives a herd of horses, mules, asses, cattle, sheep, goats or swine over a public highway where such highway is constructed on a hillside, shall be liable for all damage done by such animals in destroying the banks or rolling rocks into or upon such highway." The court below decided that this section was invalid and void, and the respondent claims that it is in violation of that portion of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States which provides: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." It is contended that this statute deprives the class of persons described in it of the equal protection of the laws, and deprives them of property without due process of law. An exhaustive argument is made in behalf of both the appellant and respondent in this case, and we have examined all the cases cited on either side. "The question whether a law be void for its repugnancy to the constitution is at all times a question of much delicacy, which should seldom, if ever, be decided in the affirmative in a doubtful case. The court, when impelled by duty to render such a judgment, would be unworthy of its station could it be unmindful of the solemn obligations which that station imposes; but it is not on slight implication and vague conjecture that the legislature is to be pronounced to have transcended its powers, and its acts to be considered as void. The opposition between the constitution and the law should be such that the judge feels a clear and strong conviction of their incompatibility with each other." This was the language of Marshall, Ch. J., in Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 87, 8 L. ed. 162. It is by this rule then that we must determine whether the statute in this case violates the constitution. The claim on behalf of the respondent is that the act is class legislation, and denies to drovers named in it that protection of the law which it extends to other citizens. We cannot agree with the respondent that this law is objectionable upon the ground stated. In the case of Allen v. Pioneer Press Co., 40 Minn. 117, 3 L. R. A. 532, Justice Mitchell, of Minnesota, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "Laws public in their object may be confined to a particular class of persons, if they be general in their application to the class to which they apply; provided the distinction is not arbitrary, and rests upon some reason of public policy growing out of the conditions or business of such class." In Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. p. 483, the author says: "If otherwise unobjectionable, all that can be required in these cases is that the laws be general in their application to the class or locality to which they apply, and they are then public in their character, and of their propriety and policy the legislature must judge." In the case of Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 32, 28 L. ed. 925, the Supreme Court of the United States used the following language: "Class legislation, discriminating some and favoring others, is prohibited; but legislation which in carrying out a public purpose is limited in its application, if within the sphere of its operation it affects alike all persons similarly situated, is not within the amendment." In Gartside v. East St. Louis, 48 Ill. 47, the supreme court of Illinois, speaking of an ordinance requiring certain specified teamsters who were engaged in hauling stones and coal through the city to pay a certain license, says: "From the extent and character of his business, these teams must have passed and repassed almost constantly. This, then, renders the repair of the streets more expensive and more necessary, from the fact that his vehicles seemed to be large and heavy. For the comfort and convenience of the citizens of the place, as well as persons not residing therein and traveling on its streets, it is necessary that they should be repaired and kept in good condition;" and the court upheld the ordinance for the reason stated. In the case of Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Beckwith, 129 U. S. 29, 32 L. ed. 586, Mr. Justice Field, speaking for the Supreme Court, says: "The concluding clause of the first section of the Fourteenth Amendment simply requires that such legislation shall treat alike all persons brought under subjection to it. The equal protection of the law is afforded when this is accomplished." And again, on pages 30 and 31, 129 U. S., and page 587, 32 L. ed., of the same opinion, the learned judge says: "The discriminations which are open to objection are those where persons engaged in the same business are subject to different privileges, under the same conditions. It is only then that the discrimination can be said to impair that equal right which all can claim in the enforcement of the law."

It is not pretended but that the statute under consideration affects all drovers alike; that there is no discrimination made between persons engaged in the same line of business. The contention of respondent is that there is a discrimination made between those persons engaged in business as drovers and those engaged in other business which requires the use of the highway, as, for instance, teamsters and other travelers, in that the latter are not required to pay for any damage that they may do to highways situated on a hillside. It is easy to conceive that the business of drovers would be exceedingly injurious to highways situated upon a hillside if their herds pass over the ground upon and near the highway in our mountain country, inasmuch as they would cause rocks and other obstructions to be thrown into the highway, and would break down banks and otherwise specially injure the highways. It was no doubt for this reason that the legislature required that those persons so engaged should be specially liable for all damage that they did to the highways. Whether teamsters do like injury is not for us to decide. It is in the discretion of the legislature to regulate the use of the highways, and, if they make no distinction between different persons who use them in the same way, we see no reason for complaint.

Counsel for respondent cites numerous authorities, and among others a decision of this court, to the point that statutes requiring railroad companies unconditionally to pay for stock killed by their trains are void, and have been so held under the Fourteenth Amendment, above quoted. These cases are not in point. Railway companies are charged with a public duty to operate their trains, and are granted a public franchise for this purpose. They cannot escape the duty imposed upon them towards the public, to wit, the operation of their trains. If, then, while in the performance of this duty, and without fault, they casually destroy stock straying upon their road, it is manifestly a deprivation of such companies of their property without due process of law to require them absolutely to pay for it, because in such case the duty of operating the train and the duty of paying for the stock killed are directly in conflict. There are loose expressions in some of the cases cited which would indicate that the courts made some other distinction. We think, upon the ground stated, these cases are consistent with the view we take of the statute under consideration. But there is no public requirement that drovers shall drive their herds over highways situated on hill-sides. It is purely a matter of individual choice whether they do or not. They have a right to do so, and, if they do no injury, they are liable to no one for anything. It is manifest, however, that the legislature considered that driving herds of stock of the character described over highways situated upon a hillside was calculated to damage such highways. The maxim of the law is, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas," the legal meaning of which is, "So use your own property as not to injure the right of another." It is but an enforcement of this rule that is attempted by the statute in this case. The rule as was stated by Lord Truro in Egerton v. Brownlow, 4 H. L. Cas. 195, is applicable to the public in at least as full force as to individuals. The public own the highways, and must bear the expense of keeping them in repair.

By this statute they simply say to the drover, who is possessed of property which, if driven in a certain way, is calculated to destroy the highway, that he must so use his own property as not to destroy that of the public. There is no absolute liability for using the public highway, but it is deemed probable that a use in a particular way, with particular property, will produce a peculiar injury, and, if such injury is produced, then the person producing it is held liable. We cannot see that this unjustly discriminates against such persons. On the contrary, it seems to be reasonable, fair, and just legislation as between all of the citizens. It must be held if a case can be conceived that would justify the legislation that that case existed when it passed, and it is certainly not difficult to conceive of the injury and wrong that it was intended to prevent by this statute. We are of the opinion that the statute is valid, and that the court below, in holding it invalid, was wrong. The judgment should be and is therefore reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

King, J., concurs; Barteh, J., dissents.

Affirmed. Jones v. Brim, 165 U. S. 180, 41 L. ed. 677.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Amasa M. EATON et al.

v.

George H. ROBINSON et al.

(.....R. L.....)

1. Officers of a corporation may be compelled to account for all sums withdrawn for salaries with interest thereon, where they have voted and paid them partly and largely for the purpose of depriving stockholders of the results of a litigation in case they are successful, although they are paid nominally and partly for services rendered to the company.

2. Stockholders who are officers of a corporation may be compelled upon a bill properly framed to pay directly to other stockholders their share of money which the officers have fraudulently retained as salaries.

(May 16, 1895.)

EXCEPTIONS by complainants and defendants to a master's report in a proceeding brought to compel officers of a corporation to account for salaries which they were alleged to have fraudulently taken from the corporation. Respondents' exceptions overruled; complainants sustained in part.

The representatives and assignees of the holder of certain stock in the Narragansett Pier Company which had been mortgaged to secure the payment of certain promissory notes, brought a suit to declare the debt paid and to have the mortgage canceled. They succeeded in obtaining the relief sought and then filed a bill against the majority stockholders of the corporation who had been the mortgagees of the stock for an accounting charging that they had conspired to absorb the rents and profits which had accrued to the corporation by paying to themselves as its officers' salaries grossly disproportionate to the services rendered for the purpose of preventing the minority stockholders from receiving the benefit which would otherwise accrue from their redemption of the mortgaged stock.

The court handed down a rescript holding that complainants were entitled to relief and the case was referred to a master to take and report an account of sums which had been received from the corporation by the respondents. The complainants filed exceptions to the master's report in that he allowed certain sums as compensation to certain of respondents, that he allowed the sum of $184 for outlays made by respondents to his refusal to rule that no compensation should be made for their services and also to his refusal to rule that if any compensation should be allowed it should be five per cent upon the sums collected or received by the officers for the benefit of the corporation. The respondents filed exceptions to the master's finding that the sums received by the respondents were received in part for the purpose of defrauding the complainants, to his finding that the directors' vote fixing salaries was not binding, to his finding that the salaries were fixed by the board of directors, and to his refusal to allow compensation to respondents as claimed by them.

Messrs. Walter F. Angell and Amasa M. Eaton, for complainants:

Compensation to a fiduciary rests in the discretion of the court, and is not a matter of right but of grace. It will therefore be withheld whenever the conduct of the parties is such that they are not deserving of reward.

Note to Robinson v. Pett, 3 Lead. Cas. Eq. 550, 570; Swartwaller's Account, 4 Watts, 77; Blake v. Pegram, 109 Mass. 541; McKnight v.

NOTE.—The briefs in the above are believed to present the authorities on the question involved so fully as to make it undesirable to attempt any annotation. The decision is believed to be the most striking application that can be found of the rule denying compensation to fiduciaries for services tainted with fraud.

For other cases as to the right of corporate officers to compensation, see Ten Eyck v. Pontiac, O. & P. A. R. Co. (Mich.) 3 L. R. A. 378; Douglass v. Merchants Ins. Co. (N. Y.) 7 L. R. A. 582; Waterman v. Chicago & I. R. Co. (Ill.) 15 L. R. A. 418; Brown v. Republican Mountain Silver Mines (Colo.) 16 L. R. A. 426; Clark v. American Coal Co. (Iowa) 17 L. R. A. 557; Crumlish v. Central Imp. Co. (W. Va.) 23 L. R. A. 120.
29 L. R. A.

Walsh, 23 N. J. Eq. 136; Moore v. Zabriskie, 18 N. J. Eq. 51; Stelman's App. 5 Pa. 418; Barney v. Saunders, 57 U. S. 16 How. 542, 14 L. ed. 1050; Jenkins v. Eldredge, 3 Story, C. C. 825; Re Coffin, 10 Daly, 27; Gilbert v. Suttiff, 8 Ohio St. 129; Warbass v. Armstrong, 10 N. J. Eq. 268; Nagle's Trust Estate, 12 Phila. 25.

A trustee guilty of willful misconduct in the execution of his trust is not entitled to commissions for his services.

Berryhill's App. 35 Pa. 245; Davis v. Memphis City R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 888; Sellers v. Phenix Iron Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 20; Miner v. Belle Isle Ice Co. 17 L. R. A. 412, 93 Mich. 97.

Although directors of a corporation are not technically trustees, since they do not hold the legal title, it is admitted law that they are within the rules governing the relation of trustees and cestui que trustent, or of agent and principal.

Beers v. Bridgeport Spring Co. 43 Conn. 17; Holder v. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. 71 Ill. 103, 22 Am. Rep. 89; Cumberland Coal & Iron Co. v. Parish, 42 Md. 598; Hubbard v. New York, N. E. & W. Investment Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 675; Mallory v. Mallory-Wheeler Co. 61 Conn. 181; 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 647, 648, and cases cited.

Lord Chancellor Hardwicke, in 1743, in Charitable Corp. v. Sutton, 2 Atk. 400, said: "I will never determine that frauds of this kind are out of the reach of courts of law or equity, for an intolerable grievance would follow from such a determination."

See also Wallworth v. Holt, 4 Myl. & C. 619.

Directors of corporations cannot recover compensation for services rendered the corporation as directors, unless upon a contract or resolution passed by the corporation, or provision therefor made in the charter or by-laws, before the rendering of such services.

Accommodation Loan & Sav. Fund Assn. v. Stonemetz, 29 Pa. 584; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. Ketchum, 27 Conn. 170; Mauz Ferry Gravel Road Co. v. Branegan, 40 Ind. 861; Cheaney v. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. 68 Ill. 570, 18 Am. Rep. 584; Holder v. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. supra; Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. v. Cheaney, 87 Ill. 446; Illinois Linen Co. v. Hough, 91 Ill. 63; Santa Clara Min. Assn. v. Meredith, 49 Md. 389, 38 Am. Rep. 264.

Directors of corporations cannot recover for services rendered the corporation as other officers, unless upon a contract or resolution passed by the corporation, or by a vote of the board of directors in which they take no part, or upon some provision made for such compensation, made in the charter or by-laws, all of which must be before such services are rendered.

Fraylor v. Sonora Min. Co. 17 Cal. 594; Butts v. Wood, 37 N. Y. 317; Merrick v. Peru Coal Co. 61 Ill. 472; Holder v. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co., Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. v. Cheaney, and Illinois Linen Co. v. Hough, supra; Citizens Nat. Bank v. Elliott, 55 Iowa, 104, 39 Am. Dec. 167; Kelsey v. Sargent, 40 Hun, 150; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 517 et seq., and cases cited; 1 Beach, Priv. Corp. § 201.

Corporations are not liable on a quantum meruit for services rendered by officers who are stockholders.

29 L. R. A.

Kilpatrick v. Penrose Ferry Bridge Co. 49 Pa. 118, 88 Am. Dec. 497; American Cent. R. Co. v. Miles, 52 Ill. 174; Cheaney v. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. 68 Ill. 570, 18 Am. Rep. 584; Holder v. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. supra; Cumberland Coal & Iron Co. v. Parish, 42 Md. 598; Citizens Nat. Bank v. Elliott, supra; Pew v. First Nat. Bank of Gloucester, 180 Mass. 891.

If the element of fraud is added the allowance of excessive salaries is a spoliation of the company.

Ziegler v. Hoagland, 59 Hun, 885; Davis v. Memphis City R. Co. 23 Fed. Rep. 888; 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 647; Jones v. Morrison, 81 Minn. 140.

It is immaterial whether the salaries were fixed by the directors or the stockholders. The meetings of both were controlled by the respondents, Robinsons, or their dominants. They were the only ones present at either kind of meetings.

Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 657 et seq., and cases cited; Hubbard v. New York, N. E. & W. Investment Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 675; Davis v. Memphis City R. Co. supra; Mallory v. Mallory-Wheeler Co. 61 Conn. 181; Walker v. Beal, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 743, 19 L. ed. 814.

A court of equity has power, in case of fraud, abuse of trust or misappropriation of corporate funds by the majority in control, to grant relief at the instance of a single stockholder.

Miner v. Belle Island Ice Co. 17 L. R. A. 412, 93 Mich. 97; Beers v. Bridgeport Spring Co. 43 Conn. 17; Jones v. Morrison, 81 Minn. 140; Ziegler v. Hoagland, 59 Hun, 885; Mallory v. Mallory-Wheeler Co. supra; Fougeray v. Cord, 50 N. J. Eq. 185; Hiscock v. Lacy, 9 Misc. 578.

As the complainants have had the benefit of the use of the money of the corporation, they should now replace it with interest.

Wayne Pike Co. v. Hammons, 129 Ind. 368; McCahan's App. 7 Pa. 56; Searty's App. 88 Pa. 525; Frey v. Demarest, 17 N. J. Eq. 71; Walker v. Beal, supra; McKnight v. Walsh, 24 N. J. Eq. 498.

Mr. Arnold Green for respondents.

Per Curiam:

The master has found that the salaries voted and paid to the respondents, while nominally and partly for services rendered to the company, were partly and largely for the purpose of depriving the predecessors in title of the complainants of the results of the litigation, in the event that the litigation should prove successful. Counsel for the respondents maintains that the master erred in finding the latter purpose because as he contends the respondents at the time of the fixing of the salaries could not have known that judgment in the suit at law would be taken for the full amount of the mortgage debt instead of the excess only above the value of the stock pledged, whereby the right to redeem the stock arose. The salaries, however, were not fixed till after the right to redeem the stock had been claimed and suits for the purpose had been begun. We think that the master was justified in his finding.

In so far as the fixing and payment of the salaries were induced by the purpose to deprive the complainants' predecessors in title of their share of the rents and profits accruing to the corporation in case they should obtain the right to redeem the mortgaged stock, such action was oppressive and must be treated as fraudulent. The respondents, as officers of the corporation, stood in a fiduciary relation toward the complainants' predecessors in title as stockholders in the corporation, analogous to that of trustee and cestui que trust and were bound to the exercise of the utmost good faith toward them.

If they acted oppressively, we think that the master erred in allowing them compensation.

Davis v. Memphis City R. Co. 22 Fed. Rep. 888; Sellers v. Phansie Iron Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 20; Swartwaller's Account, 4 Watts, 77; Berryhill's App. 35 Pa. 245; Note to Robinson v. Pett, 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. 550, 570, 600.

In the case cited by the master in which compensation was allowed to officers of corporations, notwithstanding their maladministration, the objection that they were not entitled to compensation because of such maladministration does not appear to have been made. The master should have required the respondents to account for all sums withdrawn for salaries with interest.

We see no reason for disturbing the allowance of $184, by the master for outlays by the respondents for the benefit of the corporation.

We overrule the respondents' exceptions, and those of the complainants, except so far as consistent herewith.

After the above opinion had been handed down the question arose as to the form of the decree which should be entered. Complainants submitted a decree proposing payment directly to the complainants of their aliquot share of the amount found to be due to the corporation. The respondents submitted a decree directing payment into the treasury of the company of the amount found to be due to the corporation.

Messrs. Amasa M. Eaton and Walter F. Angell for complainants.

Mr. Arnold Green, for respondents:

The stockholder does not bring such a suit because his rights have been directly violated or because the cause of action is his or because he is entitled to the relief sought; he is permitted to sue in this manner simply in order to set in motion the judicial machinery of the court. The stockholder either individually or as the representative of the class may commence the suit, and may prosecute it to judgment but in every other respect the action is the ordinary one brought by the corporation; it is maintained, directly for the benefit of the corporation and the final relief when obtained belongs to the corporation and not to the stockholder plaintiff.

29 L. R. A.

2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1095, p. 1637.

If the constituting instruments have conferred on the directors the power to control and manage the corporate affairs the corporate body have no right to interfere with this management nor can a majority of the corporators require the board of directors to act in matters left to their discretion, contrary to their judgment.

2 Wood's Field, Corp. § 859; Dana v. Bank of United States, 5 Watts & S. 228; Com. v. Roman Catholic Soc. Trustees of St. Mary's Church of Philadelphia, 6 Serg. & R. 506; Conro v. Port Henry Iron Co. 12 Barb. 27; State v. Bank of Louisiana, 6 La. 745.

If a majority of the shareholders or the directors of a corporation wrongfully refuse to declare a dividend and distribute profits earned by the company any shareholder feeling aggrieved may obtain relief in a court of equity.

§ Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 447.

Per Curiam (July 3, 1895):

The decree submitted by the complainants may be entered.

The prayer of the bill is for an accounting both with the company and the complainants and that the respondents may be decreed to pay over such sums as shall be found due, to the company or the complainants. This prayer is broad enough to entitle the complainants to a decree for the payment of their share of the moneys wrongfully appropriated as salaries. We think that relief in this form is appropriate to the circumstances of the case and a better form than to require payment into the treasury of the company, and thereby, perhaps, make it necessary for the complainants to resort to another bill to compel the payment of a dividend. Similar relief in a somewhat similar case was granted in Pougeray v. Cord, 50 N. J. Eq. 185.

We do not deem the objection urged by the respondents that directing payment to the complainants of their share of the sums found due to the company instead of into the treasury of the company is a sequestration of the corporate property entitled to any weight. The corporation exists for the benefit of its shareholders. No injustice is done to any one by directing a payment to the complainants of what is due to them.

We see no reason for withholding costs from the complainants. The respondents against whom no relief was granted were all shareholders in the corporation and therefore, if not necessary, were at least proper parties to the bill and interested in the accounting.

AMERICAN NATIONAL BANK
v.
AMERICAN WOOD PAPER CO.

(.....R. L.....)

1. Corporate bonds secured by mortgage and payable to bearer are so far negotiable that the holder may maintain an action thereon in his own name.
2. That a statute giving a title by delivery, and a right of action to the holder, of negotiable paper in terms applied only to promissory notes will not prevent the courts from recognizing corporate bonds as negotiable.
3. That a bond is payable ten years after date or sooner after five years does not destroy its negotiability.
4. A holder of corporate bonds secured by mortgage is not given a present right of action for the principal of the bond upon default in payment of interest by the fact that the mortgage provides that upon default the holder of one third of the amount of bonds may require a sale of the property and the "bonds shall forthwith become due and payable."

(July 8, 1895.)

ACTION to recover the principal and interest of certain bonds secured by a mortgage. On demurrer upon the grounds: (1) that the bonds are not negotiable; (2) that the principal of the bonds had not yet become due and payable. Demurrer overruled on first ground and sustained on second ground.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Arnold Green and James Tillinghast for defendant in support of demurrer.

Messrs. Comstock & Gardner for plaintiff, contra.

Stiness, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff sues to recover the principal and interest due on certain bonds and coupons issued by the defendant May 1, A. D. 1890, and payable May 1, 1900, or sooner after five years. The bonds are secured by a mortgage of all the defendant's property, in the state of Pennsylvania, given to a trustee for the bondholders, in which it is provided that, in case of default in the payment of interest for more than six months, the principal of said bonds shall be due and payable. The declaration sets out the bonds and mortgage, profert of which is made, and alleges default in payment of interest for more than six months after demand made therefor. The defendant demurs to the declaration upon several grounds; but the two grounds pressed in the argument are that the bonds are not negotiable, so as to give the plaintiff a right of action in its own name, and that the terms of the mortgage cannot be imported into the bonds so as to give a right of action for the principal thereof before maturity.

We think that the bonds must be treated as negotiable securities. While there has been some diversity of opinion upon this subject, the tendency of recent decisions, and the weight of authority and reason, seem now to be in favor of negotiability. At first, before such bonds had become common, courts naturally held that they lacked the technical and established characteristics of negotiable instruments. Thus, in Orouch v. Credit Foncier of England (1878) L. R. 8 Q. B. 874, it was held that the contract embodied in similar bonds prevented them from being promissory notes, even if they had been without a seal, and that the custom to treat them as negotiable, being of recent origin, could not attach an incident to a contract contrary to the general law. But in Goodwin v. Roberts (1875) L. R. 10 Exch. 387, the court, by Cockburn, Ch. J., does not concur in thinking the latter ground conclusive. In the recent case of Venables v. Baring Bros. & Co. [1892] 8 Ch. 527, American railroad bonds, upon the evidence of an American lawyer as to their negotiability in this country, were held to have acquired in England, in the city of London, among English merchants, the character of negotiability. Notwithstanding the limitations of this decision, we think it may be taken as practically settling the rule in England. See also Re Imperial Land Co. of Marseilles, L. R. 11 Eq. 478.

In this country the decisions have been quite explicit. The principle on which they rest was well stated by Mr. Justice Grier in Mercer County v. Hackett (1868) 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 83, 17 L. ed. 548; as follows: "This species of bonds is a modern invention, intended to pass by manual delivery, and to have the qualities of negotiable paper; and their value depends mainly upon this character. Being issued by states and corporations, they are necessarily under seal. But there is nothing immoral or contrary to good policy in making them negotiable, if the necessity of commerce require that they should be so. A mere technical dogma of the courts or common law cannot prohibit the commercial world from inventing or using any species of security not known in the last century. Usages of trade and commerce are acknowledged by courts as part of the common law, although they may have been unknown to Bracton or Blackstone. And this malleability to suit the necessities and usages of the mercantile and commercial world is one of the most valuable characteristics of the common law. When a corporation covenants to pay to bearer, and gives a bond with negoti-

NOTE.—The negotiable character of bonds now so fully recognized by custom in spite of the ancient technical rule to the contrary is most interestingly shown in the above case by reason of the failure of the statute as to negotiable paper to include bonds in express terms.

29 L. R. A.

As to the effect on negotiable securities of a mortgage securing them with a provision for accelerating the time of payment on default as to any part of the debt secured, see also Horn v. Bennett (Ind.) 24 L. R. A. 800.

able qualities, and by this means obtains funds for the accomplishment of the useful enterprises of the day, it cannot be allowed to evade the payment by parading some obsolete judicial decision that a bond, for some technical reason, cannot be made payable to bearer. That these securities are treated as negotiable by the commercial usages of the whole civilized world, and have received the sanction of judicial recognition, not only in this court (White v. Vermont & M. R. Co., 62 U. S. 21 How. 575, 16 L. ed. 221), but of nearly every state in the Union, is well known and admitted." After this strong statement, it is needless to say more, except to refer to a few cases to the same effect: Kneeland v. Lawrence, 140 U. S. 309, 35 L. ed. 492; Chicago Railway Equipment Co. v. Merchants Nat. Bank of Chicago, 186 U. S. 263, 34 L. ed. 849; De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. Rep. 853; Reid v. Bank of Mobile, 70 Ala. 199; National Exch. Bank v. Hartford, P. & F. R. Co. 8 R. I. 375, 5 Am. Rep. 582; 1 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 74, note 1, and cases cited. It is true that some states have statutes which declare bonds of this kind to be negotiable (see 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 819); and the point is taken that it is not so in this state, since Pub. Stat., chap. 142, §§ 6, 7, relate only to promissory notes. We do not think, however, that this fact prevents us from holding these bonds to be negotiable. Such statutes are declaratory and remedial, and are evidently not intended to exclude other forms of negotiable paper. Bonds of this sort are clearly within the intent of the statute to give a title by delivery and a right of action to the holder of negotiable paper, and the bonds, in effect, are promissory notes. The special provisions contained therein are not such as to deprive them of their fundamental character of a promise to pay at a certain time. These bonds are not given as collateral to a note secured by mortgage, but the mortgage is security for the bonds themselves. Riker v. Sprague Mfg. Co. 14 R. I. 402, 51 Am. Rep. 413. See Costello v. Crowell, 127 Mass. 293, 34 Am. Rep. 387, and 134 Mass. 280.

Upon the question of importing the terms of the mortgage into the contract, so as to give a present right of action for the principal, we think the objection is well taken. The bonds do not make the terms of the mortgage a part of the contract. They simply recite that they are secured by a mortgage. Turning to the mortgage, we find that, in case of default, one third of the bondholders in amount may require the trustee to sell the property; and, in the same clause, occurs the provision that the bonds shall forthwith become due and payable upon the default. We think that this is a provision only for the purposes of foreclosure by entry or sale. If one third in amount of the bondholders is required for a sale, out of the proceeds of which the principal is to be paid, it would be quite incompatible with this limitation to hold that a single bondholder could precipitate the maturity of the bonds by a suit. When one is due, all are due, and the provision implies that the large majority may think it best not to foreclose at once; and, if so, the right to give time is secured in this provision. It is a provision for a special purpose, and not intended to give a right of action upon default, independently of foreclosure proceedings. Such is the construction given to similar provisions in Batchelder v. Council Grove Water Co. 131 N. Y. 42; White v. Miller, 52 Minn. 367; McClelland v. Bishop, 42 Ohio St. 113; Mallory v. West Shore Hudson River R. Co. 3 Jones & S. 174.

Of the cases cited by the plaintiff to sustain the point that the bonds and mortgage, being connected and contemporaneous, are to be construed together, nearly all are suits for foreclosure or actions for a balance due after foreclosure. This is a very different matter. Clearly, after such an agreement, the obligation may be treated as due for the purpose of foreclosure, and the maker of the note or bond would be liable for the balance remaining due, in some form of action; but whether upon the note or the covenant we are not now called upon to say. Such a liability, however, does not give the right of action which is claimed in this case. Venables v. Baring Bros. & Co., supra, was a suit to establish title. First Nat. Bank of Sturgis v. Peck, 8 Kan. 660, and Chambers v. Marks, 93 Ala. 412, are in favor of the plaintiff's claim; but we think that the weight of authority, the purpose of the provision, and the reason on which its construction depends are against it.

Our conclusion is that the demurrer to the negotiability of the bonds must be overruled, and the demurrer to the statements of the plaintiff's present right of action must be sustained.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

PENNSYLVANIA CO., Appt.,
v.

Martha E. McCAFFREY, Admx. of Richard McCaffrey, Deceased.

(.....Ind.....)

1. The effort of a section boss to save a hand-car in his charge from injury by a train backing towards it is not negligence as matter of law although in trying to get away after ascertaining that the car cannot be saved he falls under it and is injured, if he acts naturally and not recklessly, although by acting differently he might have escaped.

2. A railroad company which requires

NOTE.—The above decision sustaining the liability of a railroad company for an accident caused by the excessively long hours of service of its trainmen seems to be a novel one and must be regarded as 29 L. R. A.

an important addition to the subject of railroad law. As to the effect of disobeying rules of service as negligence, see note to Ford to Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) 24 L. R. A. 657.

a train crew to be on duty nineteen hours each day without time for rest or food is liable for an injury to a track-hand caused by the attempt of some of the crew to operate the train while others have temporarily left it to procure food.

3. Requiring a train crew to be on duty nineteen hours each day without time for food is the proximate cause of an injury to a track-hand by the trains backing on him without warning while the fireman is the only member of the crew on board the brakeman being off to operate a switch and the others in search of food.

4. It is not negligence for a conductor and engineer of a train to leave it to procure food after thirteen hours of consecutive service with no provision made by the company for a food supply.

5. A railroad company is liable for injuries to a track-hand which are caused by its attempt to operate a train with only a fireman and a brakeman.

6. A section boss knowing the custom of a portion of a train's crew to leave it at a certain time for food is not charged with the duty of ascertaining that they have not left it before attempting to put his car on a track which the train has passed, for fear the train may back on him without warning.

7. A railroad employe is not bound to report to the company facts which it already knows.

8. A cause of action is stated by a complaint which alleges that a railroad company moved a train without signals or guards, or any one except a fireman in charge of it back upon and injured a track-hand free from fault.

(September 20, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Clark County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged negligent killing of plaintiff's intestate by defendant's servants. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. S. Stansifer, for appellant:

The complaint does not negative the presumption that the company discharged its duty by employing a competent crew, with all needed instructions for their guidance, in the safe and proper discharge of their duties.

Kelley v. Wisconsin R. Co. 21 Cent. L. J. 219; Pennsylvania Co. v. Whitcomb, 111 Ind. 212; Hard v. Vermont & O. R. Co. 83 Vt. 478; Wood, Mast. & S. 708; Wood, Railway Law, 1468.

In an action by a servant against the master for an injury caused by a fellow servant the complaint must show by proper averment of facts, either,

1. That the master had not exercised ordinary care and prudence in the employment of such fellow servant, or that he had retained him in the service after he had received notice that he was negligent in the discharge of the duties of his position; and

2. That the defendant did not know of the offending servant's negligent habits when he entered the service; or if known, or should have been known, after entering the service then an excuse must be averred for remaining in the service.

20 L. R. A.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 108 Ind. 1.

The evidence so far from showing that McCaffrey did not have knowledge of the offending habits of his fellow servants, discloses that he did in fact have knowledge, and no excuse is shown for his thereafter remaining in the service.

Ibid.

If in the eyes of the law the facts and circumstances fail to make a case on any material point, it is the duty of the trial court reviewable by this court, to instruct peremptorily for the defendants or grant a new trial.

Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Pedigo, 108 Ind. 481; Pittsburgh, O. & St. L. R. Co. v. Spencer, 98 Ind. 186; Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185; Woolery v. Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. 107 Ind. 381, 57 Am. Rep. 114; Conner v. Citizens Street R. Co. 105 Ind. 62, 55 Am. Rep. 177; Indianapolis, P. & O. R. Co. v. Bush, 101 Ind. 582; Pennsylvania Co. v. Marion, 104 Ind. 239; Brucker v. Covington, 69 Ind. 83, 35 Am. Rep. 203; Dodge v. Gaylord, 53 Ind. 365; Moss v. Witness Printing Co. 64 Ind. 125.

It was the duty of appellee to prove by a preponderance of the evidence, as a fact in the case, that McCaffrey was without fault, and if the evidence pointed just as much in one way as the other, or in neither direction, or in other words was silent, the appellee was not entitled to a verdict.

Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Brannagan, 75 Ind. 490; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Greene, 106 Ind. 279, 55 Am. Rep. 736.

Where an employe, after having opportunity to become acquainted with the risks of his situation, accepts them, he cannot complain if he is subsequently injured by such exposure.

Whart. Neg. § 214; Umback v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 88 Ind. 191.

A servant who sees that a fellow servant is negligent or incompetent, is bound to report the fact to the common master, and should he neglect to do so, he is barred from recovering from the master for injuries which, had he been duly diligent, he would have been protected.

Whart. Neg. § 236.

When several persons are thus employed there is necessarily incident to the service of each the risk that others may fall in their care and vigilance which are essential to his safety. In undertaking the service he assumes that risk, and if he should suffer, he cannot recover from his master.

Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755.

The master undertakes to exercise ordinary care to see that ordinarily suitable and safe machinery, appliances, etc., are furnished for the work required of his servants, and also that his servants are ordinarily competent for the work required of them; the servant assumes the ordinary hazards of the service, both as to machinery, appliances, etc., and the competency of his fellow servants.

Gillenwater v. Madison & I. R. Co. 5 Ind. 339, 61 Am. Dec. 101; Madison & I. R. Co. v. Bacon, 6 Ind. 205; Fitzpatrick v. New Albany & S. R. Co. 7 Ind. 436; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Tindall, 13 Ind. 368, 74 Am. Dec. 259; Wilson

v. Madison etc. R. Co. 18 Ind. 226; Slattery v. Toledo & W. R. Co. 23 Ind. 81; Sullivan v. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. 58 Ind. 26; Gormley v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 72 Ind. 81; Robertson v. Terre Haute & I. R. Co. 78 Ind. 77; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 182; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Kirk, 103 Ind. 400; Capper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Ind. 305; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 151; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Daisley, 110 Ind. 75; Krueger v. Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. 111 Ind. 51; Cincinnati, H. & D. R. Co. v. McMullen, 117 Ind. 439; Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 6 L. R. A. 584, 121 Ind. 124; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 210.

It is not enough to show that the company was negligent, but the complaint and evidence must go further and show that McCaffrey did not assume the risk of such negligence, by averring and proving at the trial that he was ignorant of the habit of the trainmen.

Billman v. Indianapolis, C. & L. R. Co. 76 Ind. 166, 40 Am. Rep. 230; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Locke, 112 Ind. 404; Atlas Engine Works v. Randall, 100 Ind. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 798.

The question is not one of contributory negligence, but of assumption of risk, notwithstanding there may be negligence on the part of the master.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 108 Ind. 1; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Frawley, 110 Ind. 18; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Daisley, supra; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Sandford, 117 Ind. 265; Rietman v. Stoltz, 120 Ind. 814.

On petition for rehearing.

If a servant, before or after he enters the service, discovers that the "building, premises, machines, appliances, or fellow servants in connection with which or with whom he is to labor, is unsafe or unfit in any particular, and if notwithstanding such knowledge or means of knowledge he voluntarily enters or continues in the employment without objection or complaint, he is deemed to have assumed the risk of the danger thus known or discoverable, and to waive any claim for damages against the master in case it shall result in injury to him.

2 Thomp. Neg. 1008; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Watson, 114 Ind. 20; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 108 Ind. 1; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Frawley, 110 Ind. 18; Indiana, B. & W. R. Co. v. Daisley, 110 Ind. 75; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Sandford, 117 Ind. 265; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Corps, 8 L. R. A. 636, 124 Ind. 427; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 140; Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Duell, 184 Ind. 156; Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Eastman, 7 Ind. App. 514.

The complaint disclosing that the train was sufficiently manned usually, it follows that there must be an averment of knowledge of the unusual.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 228.

It is not even averred that appellant negligently caused, suffered, or permitted the absence of the conductor and engineer.

Cleveland, C. O. & I. R. Co. v. Wynant, 100 29 L. R. A.

Ind. 160; Pittsburgh, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Adams, 105 Ind. 155; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Bills, 104 Ind. 18.

If the complaint can be distorted into an attempted theory of negligence because of the absence of the conductor, engineer, and fireman, then that absence was the proximate, the cause causing the accident, and it follows that the averments that the one employé on the train (the fireman) was in the rear of the train as it was moving and that there was no one in front to give warning, are mere appendages, or detached phrases, and the body of the facts pleaded, the attempted theory must control.

Louisville, N. A. & U. R. Co. v. Schmidt, 106 Ind. 73.

The rule that if the negligence of the master combines with the negligence of a fellow-servant, and the two contribute to the injury of another servant, the master is liable. In no manner trenches upon the assumption of risks rule.

Rogers v. Leyden, 127 Ind. 51.

Messrs. A. C. Harris, J. H. Stotsenburg, and Evan B. Stotsenburg for appellee.

Daisley, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The facts in this case, as shown by the record are these: The appellant, as lessee, operates the Jeffersonville, Madison & New Albany Railway. It runs a passenger train from Louisville, via Jeffersonville, to New Albany, called the "Dinkey." The crew consists of a conductor, brakeman, engineer, and fireman. They go on duty at 5 A. M. each day, and, as appears by the company's card, remain on duty continuously until midnight. On April 28, 1885, the crew, consisting of Bush, conductor; Brooks, brakeman; Parr, engineer; and Eisle, fireman,—took the dinkey train to run from 5 A. M. until midnight. There were fourteen stops each way. No provision was made for the men to get their meals. The crew lived in New Albany. They could not work nineteen consecutive hours without food. The fireman's little daughter brought his meals in a pail, which he ate on the engine. It is not shown how Brooks, the brakeman, lived, as the company had him in the service on the road, so that he was not present at the trial. On the afternoon of April 28, 1885, appellee's intestate Richard McCaffrey, the section boss, was at work, with four laborers, surfacing the track in the city of New Albany. His hand-car was standing in an alley immediately north of the track, and a few squares east of the State street station, the western terminus of this line, at which passengers were received and delivered. Bush, the conductor, and Parr, the engineer, lived several squares east of the station. As the train came from Louisville to New Albany, due at 5:40 P. M., the engineer and conductor left the train, and ran to their homes, to eat their suppers, while the fireman and brakeman were left in charge of the train, to take the passengers on to the station. As soon as the train, containing three cars, pulled by McCaffrey and his men, they gathered up their tools to quit work for the day, and began to put their hand-car on the track, to run eastwardly to the hand-car house, about one mile distant. McCaffrey resided near by there, on Fifteenth street. The Air-Line Company at that time used the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis track from New Albany into Louisville, and an east-bound train would soon pass. To allow this, it became necessary for the dinkey train to run into a switch, the east end or head of which was 190 feet east of the alley wherein McCaffrey's hand-car stood. Brooks, the brakeman, got off, and ran along to open the switch; but Eisle, the fireman, ran over the head of the switch before stopping the train. He says: "I lost the air, and ran over the switch." There was then no one of the crew on the train but the fireman. Brooks was on the ground to open the switch when he could, and the engineer and conductor were eating hasty suppers at their respective homes. McKenna, the superintendent of the Pennsylvania Company,—the officer having the operating of this train in charge,—knew that the conductor and engineer, driven by hunger, habitually left the train to get something to eat, as was done this afternoon. Parr, the engineer, testifies: "That was the only way I had to get something to eat, unless it was brought to me in a basket." A special policeman named Shay, in the employ of the company, patrolling the track in New Albany, was required to get on the train to assist the passengers off; but he had no authority to take command of the train, and did not on this occasion. The train was thus left, by permission of the company, with no one to operate it, except the fireman. No bell was rung, or other signal given of the backward movement of the train by Eisle. He could not watch, or ring the bell, as he was occupied in handling the engine. It was shown by the appellant that on previous occasions they sometimes let little boys climb on the engine and ring the bell, when the engineer was off securing something to eat, but it was not so in this instance. There was no one to stand on the rear platform, as there should have been, or otherwise to warn the decedent and his men that the train must move backward at once. Eisle reversed the engine, and put on steam, and moved back, just as McCaffrey and his men were putting the hand-car, which weighed 700 pounds, on the track. They put it on in the usual manner; that is, they carried it on the track, and placed it at right angles therewith, and then lifted it quarter round, so as to put the wheels on the rails. As they were so engaged the train backed silently down upon them. Perry Quirk, one of the section hands, tells the rest of the story in this artless way: "It was just six o'clock, and we were putting on the hand-car at the alley. We had hold of her, and were trying to put her on, and I seen the train coming up, and I said, 'Boys, we cannot make it.' We were looking towards the train, and we could see the car coming down; and I said, 'We cannot make it,' and we dropped the car, and stepped out. I hallooed. I said, 'Boys, we cannot make it.' I seen McCaffrey stepping back from the car, and the next I saw him fall.

That is all." It is shown that the hand-car was shoved forward by the collision between it and the train, and the deceased was under the hand-car when the train stopped. William Wren says: "When the train struck the hand-car they had got the wheels parallel with the rails, with two wheels inside of the track, and two outside. I saw him fall, but did not see him struck. He fell across the rail, . . . and the car struck him and drug him down, but did not pass over his body. It drug him ten feet. It rather slipped upon him, and shoved him along." He was mortally hurt, and in intense pain and agony. From the injuries so received, he afterwards died. They brought a train down, and carried him into the cars to take him home. While aboard the train, Shay, the special policeman, sent two or three men into the car to obtain admissions from him. Among these was a constable named Graham, who was a bystander. Graham said, "I do not think you are badly hurt." The suffering man answered that he did not think he could live. Graham, then, in the presence of Conductor Bush, inquired of him as to who was to blame, saying: "Do you blame anybody?" To which he answered: "I don't. It was all my fault. I do not blame any of the boys at all for this." "He said he wanted to save the hand-car, to keep it from being mashed up. He was in fear of being discharged for neglecting his own duty." Parr went to see him the next morning. McCaffrey was asleep, and under the influence of morphine. After a while he roused up, and Parr, who seemed to have been there to talk to him, says that in the course of a conversation he said to McCaffrey, "I am mighty sorry for it," to which he replied, "I don't blame you at all." The widow, who was present on this occasion, denies that any such statement was made. After Bush, the conductor, had returned from supper, and talked with McCaffrey and others on the car, he sent a dispatch to the superintendent, which, on cross-examination, he admitted was substantially as follows (being an accident report filled up): "New Albany, Station, April 28th, 1885. To Superintendent: First section 27. Train northward. Engine 822. Engineer, John Parr. Conductor, C. G. Bush. Place and time, 5:40 P. M.; main track; alley between Bank and Pearl. What caused it? Putting hand-car on track, and backed up, and putting hand-car out of way; got caught between hand-car and track. Name, Richard McCaffrey. Flesh wound on right side. Two ribs on side, three cars next to engine. Nature accident: Putting car on track when train backed up; tried to get away, fell, and train pushed hand-car on him. (Signed) C. G. Bush." This statement was made just after the accident, when the transaction, as observed, was fresh in the minds of the actors and bystanders, and is the only one in the record showing clearly how McCaffrey happened to receive his injuries. It is true, Bush was not an eyewitness to what transpired. It is likewise true that it was made after Bush had seen Brooks, the brakeman, who was standing at the switch when the event happened. As the appellant failed to bring him, as a witness, to the trial, although in its employ, running between Louisville and Indianapolis, at the time, on a passenger train, it is fair to infer that he saw the accident, and would have testified to the facts contained in the dispatch therein set forth.

On these facts, we cannot say that McCaffrey was incautious. A trusty servant, he made an effort to save the hand-car then in his care. Seeing they could not, the crew abandoned it to save their lives, when, in the language of the dispatch, he "tried to get away, fell, and the train pushed the hand-car on him." This clearly establishes that he was not guilty of negligently permitting himself to be run over. In a sudden crisis, coming on one by surprise, it is not expected that a person in the midst of such peril will exercise that deliberate judgment which knowledge and proper time for reflection afford. Moved by a high sense of duty, to serve his master, the servant may be impelled to an effort to save its property when a stranger would escape. But the most prudent and active men may accidentally fall, especially when the mind and sight are turned to an unexpected danger, and no opportunity is given for care where or how to stop. If one acts naturally in a case of sudden and instant peril put on him by another, and is injured, he is not guilty of negligence, although afterwards, out of the presence of danger, with time to reflect, and in the light of all the known facts, it may appear that another course of conduct might have led to an escape. Knapp v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 71 Iowa, 41; Moak's Underhill Torts, pp. 283, 284; Toomley v. Central Park, N. & E. R. Co. 69 N. Y. 158, 25 Am. Rep. 162, and note.

In view of the official report made by the conductor on that fatal day, we need not disturb the judgment of the lower court on the ground that McCaffrey recklessly sacrificed his life in order to save the hand-car and keep his place. It is true, McCaffrey knew the engineer and conductor were compelled by hunger to leave the train at times, and run home, to get something to eat. But there is no proof that he knew they had left the train on this afternoon. It was running back and forth continuously from morning until night. As we understand the logic of the accomplished counsel for the appellant, it is as follows: (1) McCaffrey was a section boss, and the train crew were fellow servants. (2) The absence of the conductor and engineer was the proximate cause of McCaffrey's death. (3) That both the appellant and McCaffrey knew before the fatal day that the conductor and engineer habitually left the train at times, during the nineteen hours of constant duty, to get something to eat; that this was in violation of the rules of the company, and in disregard of their duty under the law. (4) That, having this knowledge, he was bound to abandon the service, or take upon himself the risks incident to operating a train with a deficient crew while part were at their meals. The four propositions involved in his position counsel tersely states as follows: "Moreover, the evidence, so far from showing that McCaffrey did not have knowledge of the offending habits of his fellow servants, discloses that he did, in fact, have knowledge, and no excuse is shown for his thereafter remaining in the service." We think the doctrine of fellowship between trainmen and trackmen so well settled in this state that a citation of authorities to support it is unnecessary. In this case, appellant's counsel frankly admits that his company had at least "constructive notice" that the engineer and conductor were "in the habit of leaving their trains to get their meals." It is a recognized rule of the courts that if the negligence of a master combines with negligence of a fellow servant, and the two contribute to the injury of another servant, the master is liable. Franklin v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 87 Minn. 409; Elmer v. Locke, 185 Mass. 575; Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada v. Cummings, 106 U. S. 700, 27 L. ed. 266; Coppins v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 122 N. Y. 557; Whittaker v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 126 N. Y. 544; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Stupak, 123 Ind. 222, 223; Rogers v. Leyden, 127 Ind. 53, 53.

29 L. R. A.

In Boyce v. Fitzpatrick, 80 Ind. 526, it is said: "While a servant assumes the risk, more or less hazardous, of the service in which he engages, he has a right to assume that all reasonable attention will be given by his employer to his safety, so that he will not be carelessly and needlessly exposed to risks which might be avoided by ordinary care and precaution on the part of his employer; and where, in the absence of such care and precaution, an employé is injured, the employer is liable, although the negligence of a fellow servant contributed to the injury complained of." This principle was approved in Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Berkey, 136 Ind. 181. In our opinion the rule is a just and salutary one, and we ought not to depart from it. Unless it be that a master has a right to require a servant to stand at his post of duty, without food or rest, for nineteen consecutive hours, every day, Sundays included, and that such conduct is not a breach of duty to the public as well as to its other servants, it follows that the appellant in this case has not performed its duty towards decedent, without which it is liable, if this negligence was the proximate cause of his death. That it was is clear. The law of nature is inexorable in its demands. The cravings of hunger must be appeased. The laws of humanity declare that every man fit to be a member of a train crew must have three meals, some rest, and eight hours' sleep, a day. The appellee well says: "Deprived of these requisites of intelligent life, a soldier becomes a coward; a workman, a drone." Any being would lose his strength if worked a few months by the time schedule provided for this crew. Every statute and employer's rule is made in the presence of, and subject to, the laws of nature. Hunger, thirst, and sleep are imperative; and when a schedule is made of nineteen consecutive hours of service on a train, and no provision is made by the company for their supply of food, it is understood that the employes must, of necessity, at times during the service, leave their places to get their meals. So that when the engineer and conductor left the train, after thirteen hours' service, on the day of the accident, to get their supper, it was in obedience to this law of nature,—an overruling necessity,—and was not, therefore, negligence on their part. They were not deserters, and their conduct cannot be characterized as "offending habits." Without notice to the company, it was bound to know that these men must, and therefore did, at intervals during the nineteen hours of each day, leave the train to answer nature's strong and eager desire for food; and, so knowing, it will be held to have consented. If appellant desired to escape responsibility, it should have provided an adequate force. "It is the duty of the railway not to increase the perils of its servants by the inadequacy of the force employed in any particular work; and, in particular, trains must be manned by a sufficient number of train hands." Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 297; Fiske v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 38, 29 Am. Rep. 97; Moak's Underhill, Torts, 47.

We think it clear that the appellant was guilty of a breach of duty toward the public, including McCaffrey, by operating the train with only a fireman and a brakeman, because it was its duty to have an adequate number of competent men on the train to handle it and give notice of its approach. And when, by appellant's conduct, it became necessary for its two chief employes to temporarily absent themselves, it was its duty at once to stop the train until their return, or supply their places with other competent men during their enforced and necessary absence. This legal duty is supported by several rules printed on the time card. Rule 40 provides that the whistle is to be sounded three times when a standing train is to move backward. Rule 40 provides that before starting the bell must be rung. Rule 110 reads as follows: "When a train is run backward (except when shifting and making up trains in yards), a signal man must be stationed in a conspicuous position on the rear car, so as to perceive the first sign of danger, and immediately signal to engine man." The evidence shows that all these rules were violated by the company at the time of the accident. Impliedly conceding all these facts, the appellant seeks to escape responsibility by urging that McCaffrey negligently contributed to his own death. If this were true the general verdict of the jury to the contrary should be set aside. No difference how derelict of duty the company was, if McCaffrey saw or knew the train was backing on him, and going beyond him, he was bound to exercise the caution which the law imposes on every man to take care of himself, even at the risk of losing his position. But as there is evidence in the record strongly tending to establish that he was "stepping back from the car," and "tried to get out of the way, fell, and the train pushed the hand-car on him," at the time the calamity befell him, we are not prepared to say that the jury falsified the facts when they found he was not guilty of negligence contributing to the result.

Complaint is made that the court refused to give the jury the sixteenth and seventeenth instructions asked by defendant. The sixteenth states the proposition that if McCaffrey knew the engineer and conductor were in the habit of absenting themselves from the train, at times, to get necessary food, then it was McCaffrey's bounden duty to know they were on this train at that time, "and not to place, or attempt to place, the hand-car on the track if they were absent, and if he failed in this respect he was negligent." This would have imposed upon him the duty to board the train as it passed, and see if the conductor was on; and, as it is negligence to get on a moving train, he would have been compelled to have followed the train to the station, in case it did not stop long enough for him to overtake it, and make the inspection. On the same principle, he would have been required to see if the fireman was eating his supper on the engine. We are not aware of any rule casting such a burden on the section boss. In Baltimore, O. & C. R. Co. v. Rowan, 104 Ind. 88-94, this court said, "The obligation or duty of the master is not to expose the servant, while conducting his business, to perils or hazards which might have been provided against by the exercise of due care and proper diligence on the part of the master." In Patterson on Railway Accident Law, § 288, it is declared that a railway company "is bound to its servants to exercise . . . that degree of care which will tend to secure its servants' safety, to as great an extent as is compatible with the conduct of an essentially hazardous business by the use of human instrumentalities."

As to the seventeenth instruction, there was no evidence tending to show that "McCaffrey saw the backing train approaching him in time, and with opportunity to get out of the way, and failed to do so." The fact is, while trying to get out of the way he fell, and was then struck, dragged, and injured. In 2 Rice on Evidence, p. 796, it is said: "No instructions should be given which are not relevant to facts which there is evidence tending to prove."

By another instruction the appellant asked the court to charge the jury that, if McCaffrey knew the conductor and engineer were in the habit of leaving the train to get necessary food, "he was bound to report such facts to the company," or he could not recover. This contention is in the face of the fact that the company was bound to know, and did know, of this habit, and it is confessed by the learned counsel for the appellant in his ably-written brief.

Appellant complains of the rulings of the lower court on the pleadings, and contends that neither paragraph of the complaint states facts to constitute a cause of action. The complaint, it appears, was copied almost literally from the pleading set out in full in the case of Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Collarn, 73 Ind. 268, 38 Am. Rep. 184, which was held sufficient. Each paragraph of the complaint in this action shows that McCaffrey was killed by the appellant company moving a train back on him, without signals or guards, or any one except a fireman in charge of it, and that he was free from fault. This is enough. Howard County Comrs. v. Legg, 110 Ind. 481; Wabash R. Co. v. McDaniels, 107 U. S. 454, 27 L. ed. 605; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Moore (Kan.) 1 Pac. Rep. 644; Rev. Stat. 1881, § 284 (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 285); Tennessee Coal & R. Co. v. Roddy, 85 Tenn. 400; Bolinger v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 86 Minn. 418; Sherlock v. Alling, 44 Ind. 189.

The deceased is admitted and was shown to have been a man of intelligence, strength, and integrity, of the age of forty-one years. He had been promoted, and, under the rules, was "in the line of promotion, dependent upon the faithful discharge of duty, and capacity for assuming increased responsibilities." The damages are not excessive for the loss of such a man. In our opinion the cause was fairly tried.

The judgment is affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

William TILLMAN, Appt.,

v.

John J. OTTER.

(....Ky.....)

1. A person seeking to establish title to an office against another in possession of it has the burden of proving his right thereto.
2. The mayor cannot adjourn either of the two branches of the general council alone under authority from the charter that if they cannot agree on an adjournment he "shall adjourn them to a day not beyond the regular time of meeting."
3. The mayor of a city has no power to adjourn the general council to a time beyond that at which it is directed by statute to elect a certain city official for the purpose of depriving it of power to make such election and permitting it to be done by the alternative electing body provided by the statute in case of the council's failure to elect.
4. The majority of one branch of the general council of a city cannot by refusing to consent to fix a time for the election of a city official which a statute requires the council to elect and by remaining away from the meeting, prevent the remaining members of the general council who constitute a majority of both branches from making a valid election.

(January 7, 1893.)

APPPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Louisville Law and Equity Court in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of the office of sinking fund commissioner of the city of Louisville. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Humphrey & Davie, for appellant:

As Otter is the plaintiff who brings the suit, unless he has shown that his is a valid election, his petition should have been dismissed.

Jefferson County Justices v. Clark, 1 T. B. Mon. 86; Spencer County Ct. Justices v. Harcourt, 4 B. Mon. 501; Leeman v. Hinton, 1 Duv. 42; Toney v. Harris, 85 Ky. 464; People v. Weller, 11 Cal. 68.

As the two boards "could not agree" upon an adjournment, the mayor at the request of the president of the board of aldermen, adjourned the board of aldermen to November 7, which was "within the lawful time for adjournment."

There being only six members of the board of aldermen in the chamber when the election was made of course there was no quorum, and could be no business.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 292; Morton v. Youngerman, 89 Ky. 505.

Whether, therefore, the mayor's action in adjourning the board of aldermen over to November 7 was legal or illegal is immaterial.

If the council consists of two boards, the concurrence of both is essential to valid legislation, and this concurrence must be by simultaneously existing bodies.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 288; Beck v. Hanscom, 29 N. H. 224; Kimball v. Marshall, 44 N. H. 465.

There having been no election in the month of October, the board of commissioners of the sinking fund themselves met on the 9th of November and elected the defendant Tillman as such commissioner.

Messrs. Helm & Bruce and T. L. Burnett also for appellant.

Messrs. Ernest MacPherson and B. F. Buckner, for appellee:

In lieu of the writs of scire facias and quo warranto, or of an information in the nature of a quo warranto, ordinary actions may be brought to prevent the usurpation of an office or franchise; and the action may be brought by either the NOTE.—The somewhat kindred subject of the power of the governor to adjourn the legislature is presented in Re Legislative Adjournment (R. I.) 22 L. R. A. 716, and note. The briefs and opinions in the present case are believed to present quite fully the authorities on the question involved in this case. Counsel for appellee writes that in the senate of the United States several cases have been decided according to the principles adopted in this case, two of which are cited in the brief, and that 29 L. R. A.

the last one not mentioned there was the case of Senator Call of Florida, whose election, sustained by the senate, was made without the participation of one branch of the legislature. The counsel says that the present case is the only judicial decision on the proposition that an executive officer who attempts to adjourn two branches of a legislative body must adjourn both and not one, and also that the illegal adjournment of a legislative body leaves it still in session.

commonwealth or "the person entitled" to the office.

Civil Code, §§ 480, 488, 487; Prince v. Skillin, 71 Me. 361, 36 Am. Rep. 825.

The title to an elective office is derived from the election.

Atty. Gen. v. Barston, 4 Wis. 567; People v. Pease, 80 Barb. 591.

The answer denies an "election" but does not deny the facts alleged in the petition as constituting an election and the demurrer to the answer was properly sustained.

Boone, Code Pl. § 61.

The answer of appellant was further defective in not showing his own title to the office.

Richmond & L. Turnp. Road Co. v. Rogers, 7 Bush, 535; Hill v. Barrett, 14 B. Mon. 83; State v. McDaniel, 23 Ohio St. 354; Note to State v. Kupferle, 100 Am. Dec. 270; People v. Thacher, 55 N. Y. 529, 14 Am. Rep. 312; People v. Hall, 80 N. Y. 117; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 712; Hoglan v. Carpenter, 4 Bush, 91.

As the board of councilmen adjourned on October 24, 1889, without naming any time, and the board of aldermen did not adjourn at all, both boards were, by law, in session on the following day, October 25, 1889, when appellee's first election was held. The action of the mayor was a nullity. Neither board requested his interference, and he did not attempt to adjourn both boards. The conditions authorizing his interposition never arose.

People v. Hatch, 33 Ill. 18, argument of Melville W. Fuller.

The rule with respect to legislation that a quorum of both branches of a legislative body must be present in order to enact a valid law can have no just application in the conduct of elections. An election is not a legislative act.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 284; Whiteside v. People, 26 Wend. 634; Kimball v. Marshall, 44 N. H. 465; Ex parte Humphrey, 10 Wend. 612; Beck v. Hancocm, 29 N. H. 218; Sudbury First Parish v. Stearns, 21 Pick. 148; Coles County v. Allison, 23 Ill. 487; Senate Election Cases, 164, 506.

An election is not to be set aside for a mere irregularity or informality, which cannot be said in any manner to have affected the result of the election.

Dill. Mun. Corp. § 197, note.

Pryor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The controversy in this case is over the office of a commissioner of the sinking fund of the city of Louisville. The plaintiff, John J. Otter, who is the appellee in this court claims to have derived title to the office by an election held by the general council of the city on the 25th of October, 1889, and the defendant, William Tillman, claims his title under an election by the commissioners of the sinking fund on the 12th of November following. The provision of the act in relation to the sinking fund, authorizing the election, reads as follows: "The general council shall, in the month of October in each year, elect a commissioner of the sinking fund to fill the place of the commissioner whose term of service expires that year. In the event the council fail to elect in that month, then the election shall be made by the commissioners themselves. If a commissioner shall die, resign, or from any other cause there shall be a vacancy in the office of the commissioners of the sinking fund, the same shall be filled by the board of commissioners of the sinking fund at a regular meeting of said board." The mayor and the president of the board of aldermen are ex officio members, and three others, to be elected by the general council, one in each year, constitute the board, being five in all. On November 12, 1889, W. R. Ray, president of the board, Charles D. Jacob, mayor, and George M. Griffith, president of the board of aldermen, elected the defendant, Tillman, as his own successor, and ignored the action of the general council electing Otter to that office on the preceding 25th of October.

A question has been raised as to the burden of proof, and, without discussing the sufficiency of the answer, it is sufficient to say that as the plaintiff, Otter, was asserting his title to the office, it was incumbent on him to make out his case, as it is well settled that such a proceeding is like the enforcement of any other private right, when prosecuted by or in the name of the party claiming to have been injured; but when in the name of the commonwealth, alleging the usurpation of an office by one of its citizens, the burden is on the defendant to show by what authority he holds it. State v. Harris, 3 Ark. 570, 36 Am. Dec. 460; People v. Utica Ins. Co. 15 Johns. 358, 8 Am. Dec. 243; Miller v. English, 21 N. J. L. 317. In this case Tillman had been in possession of the office and was again chosen by a board empowered upon a certain contingency to make the selection, and the burden was clearly on the plaintiff, Otter, to establish title in himself, although Tillman may have had no right to the office, and it also follows that, if the power of choosing a commissioner by this board was in violation of the constitution,—a question not necessary to be decided,—still the plaintiff must make out his case, as he has no right to appear for the state, and by an action in his own name show that some one is holding an office to which he is not entitled, when he (the plaintiff) has no claim to it himself.

Was the plaintiff, Otter, elected by the general council on the 25th of October, 1889? Is the sole question in this case; and, if he was, then the judgment below should be affirmed. The board of councilmen held a meeting at their chamber in the city hall on the 24th of October, 1889, and a resolution was passed, all the members being present but one, for a joint session at 9 o'clock that evening, for the purpose of electing a sinking fund commissioner. The board of aldermen, holding a session in the same hall, but in a different room, refused to go in to the election, and rejected the resolution. A committee of conference was then appointed by the board of councilmen, with a resolution to the effect that an adjournment be had until the 28th of October (the same month), when a joint meeting would be held, and this was rejected by the board of aldermen. On that same evening the mayor, at the request of the president of the board of aldermen, each one being a commissioner of the sinking fund, adjourned the board of aldermen until the 7th of November, 1889; and, if the power to adjourn this board so as to prevent this election was vested in the mayor, then no election could be held by the people or their representatives (the members of the general council) for commissioner, because the statute expressly provides that the council shall elect in the month of October, and, if they fail to elect in that month, then the commissioners of the sinking fund shall select the member. The power of the mayor to adjourn this board is claimed to exist by reason of a section of the city charter providing that, "when both boards are in session, one shall not adjourn without the concurrence of the other for a longer term than twenty-four hours. If they cannot agree on an adjournment, the mayor shall adjourn them to a day not beyond the regular time of meeting." The mayor made no attempt to adjourn the board of councilmen, and from the plain reading of the charter had no power to adjourn either body unless there had been a failure to agree on an adjournment, and then it was his duty to adjourn both bodies to a day not beyond the regular time of meeting. The adjournment made by him at the suggestion of the president of the board of aldermen was a mere nullity, and left both boards in session, with the right to meet the next day. Nor will a proper construction of the city charter, or the provisions of the law creating and regulating the sinking fund, vest the mayor with such a power as to deprive the legislative councils of the city from complying with the plain provisions of the statute authorizing that election to be held in the month of October. Those opposing the election were each and all violating a plain duty, as they must have known that an adjournment until November, if the mayor had the power to make it, was taking from the representatives of the people of the city the right to select those who were to be the custodians of large sums of money, and confide it to those who were authorized to make the selection only on the contingency of the members of the city legislature failing to do that which the law required them to do, and in regard to which there could be no mistake. The board of councilmen met the next day (the 25th of October), and six of the aldermen with them, and, eighteen councilmen and six aldermen voting for the plaintiff, he was elected commissioner, there being more than two thirds of the general council voting for him. This court is now asked to declare that election invalid because a majority of the members of the board of aldermen, with its president in the lead, had refused to discharge their duty, and purposely, as their own exhibits filed show, adjourned, or attempted to adjourn, to a period with a view of preventing an election by the general council, and in utter disregard of both public and private interests. They were, however, still in session, with six of the members ready to act with the other board. They did act, and, if the absconding members had remained they could not have prevented the election of the plaintiff, as more than two thirds of the members of the joint session and of the entire general council voted for him. It is insisted that this body—the general council acting as the mere agents of the state in the election of men to control as members of the sinking fund vast sums of money—should be regarded in the light of legislative branches of the government, with the right of a minority to resort to parliamentary rules in order to violate a statute, and prevent an election of those who are to control a corporation entirely distinct from the municipal government which gives to the general council its existence. It is conceded that the councilmen and board of aldermen are distinct the one from the other, and that in their legislation for the city the rules governing legislative bodies must ordinarily prevail; but here the general council was made the mere agent of the state to select some one to act for and control the corporation known as the "Sinking Fund." This general council was required to hold an election once in each year, in the month of October, for that purpose, and, if they had assembled in that month, and elected, by a fair majority vote, a member of the board without any resolution to that effect, this court would have held the election good as against a mere usurper; and in this light the defendant must be regarded, under the facts admitted in this case. It is not denied that on the 25th of October, 1889, the plaintiff received eighteen votes from one body, and six from the other, making twenty-four votes in all; and to hold that the plaintiff was not elected, under the circumstances, because of the violation of official duty by the majority of the board of aldermen, would be recognizing a rule that no court should be willing to adopt.

The judgment below is affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

James W. FRENCH, Appt.,

v.

STATE of Indiana, ex rel. Charles HARLEY.

(.....Ind.....)

1. The general assembly may appoint to all offices existing and not otherwise provided for at the time of the adoption of the Constitution by virtue of article 15, § 1. authorizing their choice "in such manner as now is or hereafter may be prescribed by law," and other clauses of the constitution referring to offices "the appointment to which is vested in the general assembly."
2. A practical construction of a state constitution for nearly forty years will be conclusive of its meaning when that would otherwise be doubtful.
3. Associating with the governor, the auditor, treasurer, secretary of state and attorney-general as a board for the purpose of electing prison directors is not an unconstitutional commingling of executive with administrative officers in violation of the provision separating the powers of government into three departments, the legislative, executive, and judicial, but including the administrative in the executive department.

(June 12, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for La Porte County in favor of relator in a proceeding seeking to oust defendant from the office of prison warden. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. G. V. Menzies and John R. Wilson, for appellant:

So much of the act as undertakes to create a board with appointing power and other important executive functions, and at the same time empowers the legislature to fill this board, is unconstitutional.

The court will reject that which is unconstitutional, and enforce the remainder.

State v. Blend, 121 Ind. 521.

While the general assembly under section 1, article 15, of the Constitution may prescribe or ordain an office, yet it has not the power to make the appointment to the office ordained by it. The function of ordaining or declaring the law and of ordaining by law the mode of filling an office is essentially a different thing from directly appointing to the office.

Evansville v. State, 4 L. R. A. 93, 118 Ind. 446; State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 79, 118 Ind. 391; State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 65, 118 Ind. 449; State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 27; State v. Peelle, Nota.—The above case, while not overruling the former Indiana cases cited therein to the effect that appointment to office is an executive function, does at least somewhat limit the scope of those cases, and reduce the extent of the conflict between them and the decisions in some other states, among which are People v. Henderson (Wyo.) 23 L. R. A. 751, and cases cited therein.

29 L. R. A.

121 Ind. 495; State v. Gorby, 123 Ind. 17; State v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 546.

The legislature seems to have been laboring under the delusion that by creating two boards and filling the first by legislative appointment, and vesting this first board with the power to appoint the second board, that they had evaded a well-established rule. In other words, the legislature could not appoint the board of prison directors, but it could appoint the board to appoint a board of prison directors.

The powers and duties given and imposed make the board a public official one, and its members public officers by virtue of their membership.

Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 294; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 1, 4, 8, 11; High, Extr. Legal Rem. § 625; United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 96; State v. Stanley, 66 N. C. 59, 8 Am. Rep. 436; State v. Kennon, supra; United States v. Lockwood, 1 Pinney, 859; Shelby v. Alcorn, 86 Miss. 278, 72 Am. Dec. 169; State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 79, 118 Ind. 392; State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 65, 118 Ind. 449; Evansville v. State, 4 L. R. A. 93, 118 Ind. 426; Throop, Pub. Off. §§ 8, 8, 10.

It cannot be maintained that the legislature has not appointed the members of this new board, but has simply added a new duty to certain state officers.

The legislature cannot vest the duties of any one of these officers in a board composed of all, nor can they act in their official capacity as members of such board.

Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 576.

In Indiana the same person may hold more than one office. But such a holding does not fuse these offices into one,—does not consolidate them.

In these cases where there is a slight indication, by the terms of the law or in the character of the duties imposed, of a duality of office, the courts hold that there are two offices and the incumbent acts in two diverse official capacities.

People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 236; State v. Johnson, 55 Mo. 80; Lathrop v. Brittain, 80 Cal. 680; People v. Love, 25 Cal. 520; United States v. Ferreira, 54 U. S. 18 How. 40, 14 L. ed. 42; State v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 546.

A written constitution must be interpreted and effect given to it as a paramount law of the land, clearly obligatory upon the legislature, as upon the other departments of government and upon individual citizens, according to its spirit and the intent of its framers, as indicated by its terms.

People v. Albertson, 55 N. Y. 50.

No one can be associated with the governor in the performance of executive duties.

Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 578; Smith v. Myers 109 Ind. 8, 58 Am. Rep. 875.

The functions allotted this board, and involved in naming the board, are essentially executive.

State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 80; State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 79, 118 Ind. 392; State v. Noble, 4 L. R. A. 101, 118 Ind. 350; State v. Denny, 4 L. R. A. 65, 118 Ind. 449; Evansville v. State

4 L. R. A. 93, 118 Ind. 426; Pom. Const. Law, § 852; 1 Kent, Com. 310; Conklin, Executive Powers, 57, 59, 105; 2 Burgess, Political Science & Const. Law, 257; Flournoy v. Jeffersonville, 17 Ind. 174, 79 Am. Dec. 438.

The appointing power is not inherently a legislative power. If it is given to the legislature, it is exceptional, and where the language of that grant is in mandatory and imperative terms, as in article 15, section 1, then it must be exercised by the legislature. A judicial power cannot be delegated by the judiciary; a legislative power cannot be delegated by the legislature, and whenever the constitution uses language vesting a power in a department, in the absence of an express provision to the contrary, the language must be construed as mandatory.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 187 et seq.; State v. Noble, supra.

If it is conceded that the legislature had the right to create the office of prison director and did so create it, but failed to use legal and proper means to fill the office, then there was a vacancy, in which case it was the duty of the governor, immediately upon the taking effect of the law, in the performance of his constitutional duty of seeing that the laws are faithfully executed, to fill the vacancy.

State v. Gorbey, 123 Ind. 28.

Mr. W. A. Ketcham for appellee.

Hackney, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 12th day of March, 1895, the governor appointed and commissioned Henry A. Barnhart, Monfort D. Yontz, and Henry A. Root members of the board of prison directors for the prison North, of the state of Indiana. After taking an oath of office and executing bonds, the gentlemen named organized as such board, and on the 19th day of March, 1895, selected and appointed appellant to the position of warden of said prison. The appellant qualified, gave bond, and continued in the possession and discharge of the duties of said position, he having served in said position the two years immediately preceding said appointment. By the second section of the Act of the General Assembly of March 7, 1895, the governor, auditor, treasurer, secretary of state, and attorney-general were constituted a board for the selection of prison directors. That board, on the 12th day of March, 1895, appointed Enos H. Nebeker, Robert S. Foster, and Henry Van Voorst as members of the board of prison directors for said Northern prison; and, after qualifying and giving bonds and taking an oath of office, they organized as the board of prison directors, and on the 19th day of March, 1895, appointed the relator, Charles Harley, as warden for said prison. The relator, having qualified and given bond, demanded from the appellant the position, books, and records of such warden; and, the appellant having refused said demand, the relator brought this suit to oust the appellant from and to establish himself in said position. The sufficiency of appellee's petition and the sufficiency of appellant's answer, to which the lower court sustained the appellee's demurrer, raise the question for decision in this court.

29 L. R. A.

The constitutional validity of said section 2, p. 160, Acts 1895, is challenged by the appellant. The section is as follows:

Sec. 2. The said board of prison directors shall be elected by the governor, auditor, treasurer, secretary of state and attorney-general, who are hereby constituted a board for the purpose. The said state officers shall meet on the 12th day of March, 1895, at 10 o'clock A. M. on said day, in the office of the auditor of state, and proceed to select and appoint the members of the said board of prison directors for each of said prisons, and every four years thereafter on said day for the said purpose; and in the case of a vacancy happening at any time on either of said boards of prison directors intermediate between the said quadriennial elections it shall be the duty of the auditor of state to convene said state officers in his office, by written notice served upon each of said officers fixing a time for such meeting, at which meeting the said state officers shall fill any vacancy, in accordance with the provisions of this act. A majority of the state officers, when in session for said purpose, shall constitute a quorum, and a majority of the quorum shall have power to make any appointment upon the said boards of prison directors."

The principal contention of appellant's learned counsel is that, under the constitution (sec. 1, art. 5), "the executive powers of the state" are "vested in" the "governor;" that appointment to office is an executive function; and that the constitution does not, expressly or by implication, deny the exercise of this function to the governor. If this power was so lodged, in violation of the constitutional authority in the governor, it is insisted, and follows of necessity, that the appointment of the directors, and in turn their appointment of the relator, were invalid. The constitutional provisions upon which the issue rests, in addition to that vesting the executive power of the state in the governor, are as follows: "The powers of the government are divided into three separate departments; the legislative, the executive, including the administrative, and the judicial; and no person charged with official duties under one of the departments shall exercise any of the functions of another, except as in this constitution expressly provided." Article 3, § 1. "All officers whose appointments are not otherwise provided for in this constitution shall be chosen in such manner as now is, or hereafter may be, prescribed by law." Article 15, § 1.

In ascertaining the intention expressed in these sections, it will be necessary to examine other sections which will be set forth hereafter. Our first inquiry is directed to the question, Was it intended by the constitution to confer upon the governor all appointing power? This inquiry need not be extended to the appointment of local administrative officers, nor to judicial officers, nor to the mere agencies by which various departments—legislative, executive, and judicial—perform their separate duties and functions, since that would carry our investigations over unnecessary and undisputed grounds. One method of answering the general inquiry is to ascertain if, by the constitution, it was intended to give the power of appointment in any instance to the legislative branch of the government. By section 18, article 5, it is provided that "when, during the recess of the general assembly, a vacancy shall happen in any office, the appointment to which is vested in the general assembly," etc.; clearly implying that there was some office or class of offices the appointment to which was vested in or intended should be made by the general assembly. By section 80, article 4, it is provided that "no senator or representative shall, during the term for which he may have been elected, be eligible to any office, the election of which is vested in the general assembly." If the word "election" is employed synonymously with "appointment," this provision implies with equal force the existence of power in the general assembly to make appointments to office. If we conclude that the italicized words in these sections were put into the constitution without purpose and without meaning, we but engage in making over that sacred instrument, and we condemn its framers for creating a mere medley of words. This we could not do if we would, for it is the function of the judiciary to interpret, to expose the meaning within the words of the constitution, and not to put meaning into the words of the constitution, nor to eliminate sentences, phrases, or words, nor to add to the terms written. We find in the constitution no other provision to which the two provisions last quoted could have been directed, excepting that found in section 1, article 15, supra. Without having been directed to some other provision supplying the offices to be filled by the general assembly, there is but one of two possible contingencies to be accepted,—the constitution is framed in meaningless and confused language, or the words of section 18, article 5, "the appointment to which is vested in the general assembly," and probably the same words from section 80, article 4, had reference to the "officers whose appointments are not otherwise provided for in the constitution," in section 1, article 15. It is insisted, however, that section 1, article 15, does not give the power to the general assembly to appoint, and that the language of the section "in such manner as now is, or hereafter may be, prescribed by law," simply confers the power upon the legislature to provide the manner of appointment, and not to make the appointment. The consistency of the appellant's position requires the conclusion that all power to appoint to office is in the governor; that the legislature possesses only the power to provide the manner of appointment; and that such manner is limited to a provision that the governor shall make it. It would seem to have been a remarkable conception of a constitutional convention to have written it down that the legislature shall prescribe by whom appointments shall be made, but it shall be prescribed that the governor shall make them. This conception, if written in the constitution, would be no more absurd than to have written it in part, and left it in part to what the appellant insists is a necessary implication. This remarkable theory does not relieve us of the embarrassment of finding repeatedly the expressions of the convention, in the constitution, that there are "offices the appointment to which is vested in the general assembly." Such a theory would strike these words from the constitution, or would render them barren and meaningless. We need not ascertain and define the limits and extent of the appointing power of the governor, nor is it necessary that we should take issue with the cases holding that the appointing power is naturally and properly an executive function. If the constitution has conferred upon the legislative department of the government functions which naturally and more properly belong to another, it is not for us to say that the people could not have done so, nor that the unwisdom of doing so will permit us to assign to the proper departments their proper functions, and thereby do correctly for the people that which the framers of the constitution did erroneously.

It is insisted that the former decisions of this court deny the power, under the constitution, of the general assembly to appoint to office and declare the power to appoint as existing in the governor. Keansville v. State, 118 Ind. 426, 4 L. R. A. 93; State v. Hyde, 121 Ind. 20; State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 883, 4 L. R. A. 79; State v. Denny, 118 Ind. 449, 4 L. R. A. 65; State v. Peelle, 121 Ind. 495; State v. Gorby, 122 Ind. 17. It is true that with sharp conflict of opinion these cases hold to the proposition that the power to appoint is an executive function. With this conclusion, as we have said, we have no present duty to agree or to disagree, further than to maintain that, if this conclusion is true, it could not prevent the people from making such distribution of that power as to them seemed wise or desirable. If this position is at variance with the holding of those cases, be it so. But further, as to those cases, it was said in State v. Gorby, supra, that the Hyde Case and Peelle Case were decided upon the question of the power to appoint officers made by the constitution elective by the people. This theory of those two cases was, as we think, correctly announced by the members of the court joining in the majority opinions in those cases. The conflict was not properly one between the executive and the legislative departments over the right to make the appointments, as it is here contended to be. In the three cases in 118 Ind. the primary question was one of local self-government, and incidentally the question of the power of the general assembly, under section 1, article 15, to appoint certain boards of city control. In considering the latter question the reasoning of the judges leads them to a construction of section 1, article 15, of the Constitution, of which we will take notice hereafter. The case of State v. Gorby, supra, involved the right of the legislature to appoint to an office held to be elective by the people. If the office there in question was an elective office, and had not been filled by election, as contemplated, the power of the governor to appoint, not originally, as under section

1, article 15, but to fill a vacancy, as under section 18, article 5, of the Constitution, was the real issue. The same may be said as to the other cases involving elective offices. Without suggesting as to whether the construction placed upon section 1, article 15, by those cases, was obiter dictum, we pass to the consideration of the effect of the construction of that section, there made, upon the present case. The first of the cases, and that most clearly stating the views of the majority of the court (State v. Denny, supra), after quoting section 1, article 15, proceeds: "This provision is evidently to be construed in the light of the laws in force at the time of its adoption. We think it would be impossible to ascertain its meaning in any other way. Other sections of the constitution make provision for appointments by the governor and for certain appointments by the general assembly, but there was still a large number of offices created by law for whose appointment no provision had been made. In view of this fact, section 1, article 15, was inserted, providing that such officers should be appointed in such manner as then was or should thereafter be prescribed by law. It is disclosed by an examination of the laws then in force that the manner of appointing or electing state librarian, state printer, warden of the state prison at Jeffersonville, commissioners of the insane asylum, and, perhaps, some other officers for whose appointment no provision is made in the constitution, were elected or appointed by joint ballot of the two houses of the general assembly. This, at the time of the adoption of the constitution, was the manner prescribed by law for their appointment. This section provides that they shall continue to be so appointed unless a different mode is prescribed by law." The deduction from this argument is that, as to all of those offices existing and not provided for at the time of the adoption of the constitution, the general assembly may appoint. At a very early period, and extending through Rev. Stat. 1831 (page 512) and Rev. Stat. 1838 (page 572), the official management of the state's prison was by and through a superintendent, whose duties were assumed, not by appointment as to a political trust, but by contract in the nature of a lease, under which he supplied the needs, prescribed and enforced the discipline, received the labor of the prisoners, and made and preserved for the state records of the transactions of the prison. In 1848 (Rev. Stat. 1848, p. 100), under the Constitution of 1816 (sec. 8, art. 4), providing that all offices which might be created by the general assembly should "be filled in such manner as may be directed by law," the general assembly named the offices to be filled by the vote of the two houses of the general assembly, and among them was that of prison superintendent, whose term of office was prescribed at five years. It may be observed that practically the same language as that employed in article 15, section 1, of the present Constitution was, under the former constitution, construed by the general assembly, without question from the people, to mean that the general assembly might appoint, and not that it should be prescribed by the general assembly that the governor should appoint. Later, and in 1846 (Local Laws, p. 85), the office of warden was created, and it was expressly provided that his appointment should be by the general assembly. Here we have a like construction of the appointing power as conferred by the Constitution of 1816. We find in these enactments the rule for the official control of state's prisons existing at the adoption of the present constitution, and, upon the reasoning of the case from which we last quoted, the rule adopted by the constitution; namely, through appointments by the general assembly. But it may be said that the Northern prison was not in operation before the adoption of the present constitution, and that its official control could not have been then provided by law. This is true, but the rule of control and the source of power to control were in existence, and, upon the reasoning of that case, belonged to the general assembly. It would not be a reasonable presumption that the framers of the constitution intended to separate the power of prison control so as to confer it upon the general assembly as to one prison and upon the governor as to another prison. The state's provision for the imprisonment of offenders was an institution of the state, and the two prisons are but branches of that institution, and are not different because located, for convenience, in remote parts of the state than if the last had been but an addition to the first. The control of the state's prison was a governmental function, which, by the rule of the case under consideration, was intrusted to the general assembly.

If we should err in the position that the rule for control of the prison North was in force when the constitution was adopted, and that instead it was by and through an independent office thereafter created, there is still another view of the question to be taken from the standpoint of the practical construction of the constitution. We do not sympathize with the eloquent and able appeal of the appellant's counsel against the doctrine of practical construction as the resort of cowards and a makeshift for avoiding the intention of the framers of the constitution. Upon the doctrine of practical construction and its legitimate scope, we will quote the following from the opinion in Hovey v. Riley, 119 Ind. 386, in which a majority of the court then sitting concurred: "Our own and other courts have, time and time again, adjudged that practical exposition is of controlling influence whenever there is need of interpretation. The language employed by the courts is strong, and the current of opinion is unbroken." In speaking of the effect of a practical exposition, it was said by an able court that 'it has always been regarded by the courts as equivalent to positive law.' Bruce v. Schuyler, 9 Ill. 231, 46 Am. Dec. 447. In adhering to long-continued exposition, another court said: 'We cannot shake a principle which, in practice, has so long and so extensively prevailed.' Rogers v. Goodwin, 2 Mass. 475. But it is unnecessary to quote the expressions of the courts, for harmony reigns throughout the whole scope of judi-dial opinion upon the subject." The present case presents, as strongly as any in the state's history, a practical construction of our present constitution upon the question in review. Beginning with the session of 1855, when the first board of prison directors was created, and at the first session of the general assembly after the adoption of the constitution, when existing prison leases permitted, we find the general assembly assuming the appointing power as to officers of state's prison control. We find that in 1859 (the Constitution not yet ten years in force) the general assembly assumes and exercises the power of appointment of the state's prison directors for the Northern prison. We find that from session to session, from those periods to the session of 1893, this power was assumed and exercised by the general assembly without exception, doubt, or question of authority. The exercise by the general assembly, for nearly forty years, of this power, without question from the people, and covering periods of the bitterest political history in the annals of our state and nation, is not the only fact giving strength to the construction favoring the existence of that power. In the early periods of that assumed authority there were in the general assembly, as members thereof, David Kilgore, Walter March, Walter E. Beach, Thomas D. Walpole, Henry G. Todd, Amzi L. Wheeler, Ezekiel D. Logan, Rodolphus Schoonover, John L. Spann, Samuel J. Anthony, Jefferson Helm, John Mathias, Spencer Wiley, William F. Sherrod, George W. Moore, Hugh Miller, Isaac Kinley, Allen Hamilton, and possibly others who had also been members of the constitutional convention. Not only this fact, but the further fact that during the period of this long acquiescence in the construction of the constitution favoring the existence of the power of appointment in the general assembly sat, as governors of the state, men familiar with the constitution, its origin, and its intended reforms,—lawyers whose ability and fame are the just pride of our state, and including in the long list the names of Wright, Willard, Hammond, Lane, Morton, Baker, Hendricks, Porter, Gray, and Hovey. It is significant also that Gov. Hovey, in his numerous contests over the question of the proper lodgment of the appointing power, did not question the power of the legislature to appoint to the office of prison director, though such appointments were twice made during his service as governor. If we felt that the question as to the power of the legislature to make the appointment of prison officers, construing the constitution upon its letter and spirit, were doubtful, we should feel it our duty to submit to this practical exposition. But we do not regard it as doubtful, and are constrained to differ with the construction of section 1, article 15, as held, or as the reasons given in the cases relied upon by the appellant imply, so far as they may be deemed authority against the right of the legislature to choose officers for the control of the prison North.

The principal decision upon which those cases rest, in so far as they discuss section 20 L. R. A.

1, article 15, is that in State v. Kennon, 7 Ohio St. 546. The provision of the constitution of Ohio considered in that case, and corresponding to that of this state, is as follows: "The election and appointment of all officers, and the filling of all vacancies, not otherwise provided by this constitution, or the Constitution of the United States, shall be made in such manner as may be directed by law; but no appointing power shall be exercised by the general assembly, except as prescribed in this constitution and in the election of United States senators." It was there held that under this provision the general assembly had no power of appointment to a certain office created after the adoption of the constitution. This conclusion is not remarkable, when we recall the words of the constitution, above italicized, denying the right of the general assembly to appoint, and when we observe that the power to prescribe is given with that expressed limitation upon it. In this view of the case it renders very little support to the construction of our constitution urged by appellant. Under this provision, however, it has been recognized in at least two instances, by the same court, that the general assembly is empowered to designate the person, body, or functionary to make such appointments. State v. Coontington, 29 Ohio St. 103; State v. Smith, 44 Ohio St. 348.

We have demonstrated very clearly, we believe, that the appointment to the office of prison director is not, by our constitution, intrusted to the governor alone. Conceding, then, for the sake of the inquiry, that the legislature's power was to prescribe the manner of appointment, and not to make the appointment, has it violated this privilege by naming the persons or functionaries to make the appointment? Having under consideration an appointive office, we do not consider to what extent the word "manner," as employed in section 1, article 15, may include a choice by the general assembly as to whether a given office may be filled by an election, and we confine our consideration of the word in its relation alone to appointive offices.

From the appellant's contention his definition of "manner" is necessarily a direction to the governor to appoint. We have suggested already the fallacy of this position. Nor do we believe that "manner" was intended to permit simply the direction of the particular mental operation in arriving at a choice, nor the qualifications of the person to be chosen, nor character of commission, nor the duration of the term, nor the duties of the person or position, nor the time nor the place of appointing. All of these, save the first, are purely legislative functions, and the first is necessarily with the person chosen, and its direction is not essential to the performance of the privilege, and is not susceptible of legislative, executive, or judicial direction. "Manner" according to the appellant's theory, means the person or functionary to make the appointment. This is so by the case of State v. Denny, supra, where it was said that the manner of appointment of librarian, etc., before the constitution, was by the legislature, and that the same manner of appointment as to such offices is proper, since the constitution. Such is the effect, also, of the holding in State v. Hyde, 129 Ind. 296, 18 L. R. A. 79. In this we agree; not, of course, going to the extent of conceding that it means that, as to the office in question, the governor shall be that functionary. In the case of State v. Hyde, just cited, the controversy was as to the power of the governor to appoint to the office of state superintendent of oil inspection, as against the power of the state geologist to make such appointment, as given by the Act of 1891; and it involved a construction of section 1, article 15, supra. The judges, including Judges Coffey and Olds, who had concurred in the majority opinion in 118 Ind. and 121 Ind. and cases supra, Judge Elliott, who dissented in those cases, and Judges McBride and Miller, filling vacancies occasioned by the deaths of Judges Mitchell and Berkshire, after those cases were decided, all concurred in the following reasoning and conclusions by Mr. Chief Justice Coffey: "In this case, however, we are met squarely with the question as to whether the general assembly possesses the power to confer on the state geologist the legal right to appoint to the office involved in this suit. If it possesses such power, the judgment of the circuit court must be affirmed; otherwise it must be reversed. The solution of the question presented for decision depends upon the nature of the office and the construction to be placed upon the provision of our state constitution. The office is not an administrative state office, whose incumbent is charged with the administration of a separate department of the state government. The duties to be performed are such as pertain purely to the police. It is an office, therefore, which may be filled by appointment; and, as the appointment of the incumbent is not provided for in the constitution, the case falls clearly within the provisions of section 1, article 15. That section applies to such officers only as may be appointed, and for whose appointment no provision is made in the constitution. As the incumbent of the office in question may be appointed, and as no provision is made in the constitution for his appointment, the general assembly has the power to provide by law for the manner of his selection. It has the power to provide that such office shall be filled by popular election, or that it shall be filled by appointment. While the appointment to office is generally the exercise of an executive or administrative function, we do not think it must, of necessity, be made by the chief executive; for by the terms of section 1, article 3, of the Constitution, the executive department of the state includes the administrative. Of course, it was not the intention that any administrative state officer should perform any duty properly and necessarily belonging to the governor of the state; but it was, we think, the intention that such officers should have the power to perform such duties as should be required of them by law in the administration of the state government, where such requirement in no wise conflicted with the powers delegated to the governor alone. The appointment to office being generally the exercise of an executive or administrative function, the power must be conferred upon some executive or administrative officer; but the state geologist is an administrative state officer, elected by the people. . . . The office involved in this controversy does not belong to the class which must, of necessity, be filled by the governor, but it is an office created by statute, largely under the control of the legislature which created it, and falls within the constitutional provision which confers upon the general assembly the power to prescribe the mode or manner of selecting its incumbent."

To name the functionaries, therefore, was the privilege of the general assembly; and it only remains to inquire if, in doing so in this instance, the commingling of the executive with the administrative officers in the performance of the duty to appoint has violated any provision of the constitution. Counsel urge that the power conferred constitutes an independent office, a board of appointment, and is not an addition of duties to offices already imposed; that "no one can be associated with the governor in the performance of executive duties," quoting from Gray v. State, 72 Ind. 578. We do not question the correctness of that holding, but, as we have already shown, the duty in question, while possibly in the nature of an executive duty, cannot, under our constitution, be classed as executive duty, since, by that instrument, the duty was intrusted to the legislative department for performance by it, or, for the purposes of this question, in the manner which it might prescribe. The contention that the association with the governor of administrative state officers, in the duty charged by the law in review, infringes his prerogative, as the executive head of the state, rests upon the proposition that the power of appointment in this instance is an executive function. We should not incline to the view that, if an executive function, the duties and responsibilities attending the exercise of that function could be shared by administrative officers. But, as we have shown, that is not the case before us. Nor do we find it necessary to our conclusion that while, by constitutional permit, the appointment may be made directly by the general assembly, it must be done so; for, by the plain language of the constitution, the manner is a matter of choice by the general assembly. This choice is not embarrassed by limitations or conditions, and, to render it invalid, it must be so exercised as to confer it upon some one or number, incapable of its performance. There is no expressed inhibition of our constitution to the discharge of this duty by executive or administrative officers, or by both classes of officers. It is the constitutional theory of our form of government, as evidenced by the association of the executive and the administrative in one department of the government (section 1, article 3); by casting the duty upon the governor of seeing that the laws are enforced, by administrative officers, of course (section 15, article 5); and by the provision that "the governor shall transact all necessary business with the officers of the government" (section 15, article 5)—that the relation of the executive and the administrative subdivisions are not to be so separated as to deny to the former all participancy in the affairs of the latter. Not only is there no expressed inhibition against the association of the governor with administrative state officers in the discharge of any duty not involving powers and privileges delegated by the constitution to either alone, or to some other department of the government; but, in our opinion, such association is proper, and within the spirit of the provisions of the constitution just referred to. Section 1, article 3, does not deny the idea of such association. It divides the powers of government into the legislative department, the executive department ("including the administrative"), and the judicial department; and it is enjoined that "no person charged with official duties under one of these departments shall exercise any of the functions of another." It will be observed that it is not forbidden that those assigned to one department shall exercise any of the functions of another within such department. While not agreeing that any matter intrusted by the constitution directly to either subdivision of the executive department may be exercised by the other, we think it entirely certain that the inhibition of the section of the constitution last referred to does not deny the exercise jointly by the members of both subdivisions of any function not so delegated to either alone, and consistent with the theory that the duty involves a function of government falling within that department. Under the old constitution, the legislature gave to the governor the duty of selecting a visitor to the state's prison. It is true that the visitor was not an officer, having a voice in the control of the prison, but he was given access to the prison, and an observation of its management, with a view to advising the executive of mismanagement, and enabling him to "see that the laws were faithfully enforced." The only official existing, at the adoption of the present constitution, having a voice in the control, and whose position was by political choice, was a warden, who was chosen by the legislature; and, at the same time, the institution was, necessarily, as it is now, one of the administrative agencies of the state, falling under the executive department of the government. Its management was not through purely executive agencies, nor were they legislative, and they were in no sense judicial. They were of the administrative agencies of the state, subject to executive authority only so far as executive duties required the laws to be enforced by the governor. Nothing exists in the present constitution to change this unity of interest in the institution, or to take it from the list of administrative agencies of the state.

This union of interest in like agencies, where the power of control is not directed by the constitution, has for many years and in many instances been the authority for associating the governor with administrative officers in the performance of governmental duties, and some of them are as follows:

Commissioners of public printing: Governor, secretary, and auditor of state. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 7594. Appointment of monument commissioners (Acts 1887, p. 30): Governor, secretary, auditor, and treasurer. Regents of monument: Same officers. Acts 1895, p. 135. State board of education: Governor and various educational officers. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 5849 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 4420). State board of health: Governor, secretary, and auditor constitute a board of appointment. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6711. Trustees of Purdue University: Governor, agricultural and horticultural boards. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6176. State board of tax commissioners: Governor, secretary, auditor, and two citizens. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 8535. Board of election commissioners: Governor and two electors. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6218. State board of charities: Governor and six citizens. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3193. Executive council for purchase of supplies and repairs of state house: Governor, secretary, and treasurer. Rev. Stat. 1894, §§ 7783, 7789. State bank examiner, appointed by auditor, with approval of governor. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3988. Schoolbook commissioners: Governor and others, the members of state board of education. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 5853. University visiting board: Governor and other officials. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6076 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 4577). Canvass of election returns: Secretary, with governor. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 6282 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 4727). Board to examine treasury: Governor, secretary, and auditor. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 7670 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 5643). Board of audit for female reformatory: Governor, auditor, and secretary. Rev. Stat. 1894, § 8256 (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 6168). This rule of associating the executive with administrative officers in the performance of supervisory administrative duties has obtained as to the president of the United States, and in the states of Alabama, Arkansas, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Florida, Illinois, Kansas, Louisiana, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Mississippi, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, Nevada, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, Washington, and Wisconsin. In the states named, the governor is a member of from one to twelve boards of the character of those of which the governor of this state is a member, as above shown. In the case of Gray v. State, supra, the question involved was upon a statute, enacted in 1872, making the governor, attorney-general, secretary of state, and treasurer of state jointly the agents of the state to scrutinize and pass upon the genuineness of certain bonds of the state, and to borrow money and pay off such bonds. It was held that the duty of these officers was not executive; and it was said: "The governor and other officers named in the act may well be regarded as constituting a board, organized by the legislature, for the performance of certain duties; and a mandate will lie against them to enforce the performance of the duties." The duties involved were ministerial and quasi judicial, but related to the administrative branch of the government. The statute there involved and the conclusion of the court, quoted above, recognize the right to associate the governor with administrative officers in the performance of duties pertaining to the administrative branch of the government.

We are not required, however, to find express authority in the constitution for this association of the officers of two subdivisions of one department of the government in the discharge of duties falling within that department, and not intrusted, by the constitution, to either alone. Nor is it necessary that we should find that such association is authorized from authority of the constitution necessarily implied. It is not essential to the existence of such right that the spirit of the constitution clearly admits it. Our inquiry must be, Does it infringe any provision of the constitution? Hedderich v. State, 101 Ind. 564, 51 Am. Rep. 768; Campbell v. Driggins, 88 Ind. 478; Lafayette, M. & B. R. Co. v. Geiger, 84 Ind. 186; Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299; Wilkins v. State, 118 Ind. 514. In the last of these cases it was said (118 Ind. 516): "It is established law that an act of the legislature cannot be annulled by the judiciary in any respect unless it clearly contravenes some provision of the constitution. Doubt must be resolved in favor of the validity of the statute. Since this doctrine was announced by Chief Justice Marshall, early in the history of our country, it has been inflexibly adhered to by all the courts." It was further said by this court in Robinson v. Schenck, 102 Ind. 807: "It devolves upon the party who assails a statute, on the ground that it violates the constitution, to show a clear violation, and to point out the provision violated. Failing in this, his attack is unavailing." In that case this court quoted with approval, from Kneeland v. Milwaukee, 15 Wis. 455, the following conclusion: "That upon a constitutional question as to which we have no doubt we cannot follow a former decision against our present conviction, for the reason that to do so would violate our oath to support the constitution." With our present conviction, that there is not even a doubt of the validity of the statute in question, we have but one duty and one privilege, and that is to uphold the law.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

ALABAMA SUPREME COURT.

SOUTHERN BUILDING & LOAN ASSO., Appt.,
v.

ANNISTON LOAN & TRUST CO. et al.

(101 Ala. 532.)

Forfeiture of stock in a building and loan association for failure to make required payments, if it is authorized by the contract of the parties, the rules and regulations and by-laws of the association, and the statute under which it is created, cannot be relieved against; and the mortgage given by such member may be foreclosed for the full amount of his original loan, with interest, without any abatement for the value of the stock or for payments made by him thereon.

(January 10, 1894.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Anniston City Court refusing to permit complainant to forfeit the shares of the mortgagor but requiring the amount which had been paid upon them to be credited upon the mortgage in a proceeding to foreclose it. Reversed.

NOTE.—Right to apply payments made on stock in a building and loan association upon a mortgage given for a loan by the same member.

There are few cases in which a forfeiture has been distinctly claimed, and they are not entirely harmonious. In other cases the great majority of the cases permit an application of payments towards dues upon the mortgage. Those which do not take that position because of the peculiar view taken of the workings of a loan association and not from any intention to deprive the borrower of the benefit of his payments. In the absence of any question as to contribution to losses, as to which see note to Wohlford v. Citizens' Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. (Ind.) post, p. —, if the stock matures the borrower has the full benefit of his payments.

For when the stock has matured, the debt of the borrower is paid, and he is entitled to a return of securities given therefor. Charles Tyrrell Loan & Bldg. Assn. v. Haley, 129 Pa. 476.

There are a few cases in which although the question has arisen it has not been necessary for the court to pass upon it.

Thus in Delaware Bldg. Assn. v. Keller, 2 W. N. C. 22, counsel offered to allow credits for the amount paid.

29 L. R. A.

In People's Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Billing (Mich.) 62 N. W. Rep. 373, the contract expressly provided for the deduction of the dues paid upon foreclosure, but the statute provided that no payment of the premium should be deducted, and the court held the provision valid.

Oak Cottage Bldg. Assn. No. 2 v. Eastman, 31 Md. 556, was a suit for redemption, and the rules of the association provided for the application of the dues paid upon the amount of the mortgage.

Associations not protected by law.

Some of the cases have been those in which the association was unincorporated or was operating in a state which had no statute providing for loan associations. In such cases the accounts have been settled under the general rules governing mortgagor and mortgagee.

If the transaction is not brought within the provisions of the acts governing loan associations, it must be governed by the rules governing other cases of mortgagor and mortgagee. Willard v. Baltimore Butcher's Loan & Annuity Assn. 45 Md. 547.

In case of an association not authorized by the legislature the courts will treat the transaction as a loan and charge the borrower with the actual

The Southern Building & Loan Association, duly organized under general statutes in accordance with statutory authority adopted by-laws, providing, that the "object of this association is, to afford its shareholders safe and profitable investments;" that "all shareholders for every share named in their certificate shall be entitled to a loan of $50, if the loan fund in the treasury shall warrant it, and if there is no prior application;" that "shares must be in force six months, or six monthly installments must be paid thereon, before a shareholder will be entitled to a loan;" that "the certificate, terms and conditions of the shares of this association, and the by-laws form the contract with the shareholder; the application for a loan shall form a part of the contract with the borrower, and all contracts and securities executed by the borrower shall be construed with reference to and in accordance with the laws of Alabama;" that "persons desiring to become shareholders must make application according to the form provided for that purpose, said application forming a part and parcel of such applicant's contract with the association;" that any person may become a shareholder by signing the required application, and paying the necessary admission fee as follows:—On ten shares, $1.00 per share; over ten and under twenty-five, 75c. per share; twenty shares, 50c. per share of $50 in cash;" that "should a shareholder whose property is mortgaged to the association desire to release the same by repayment of his indebtedness, he may, on application to the association, be allowed to do so upon giving sixty days' notice of such intention;" that if any shareholder shall neglect to pay the interest or premium on his loan, or his regular monthly installments, or other fees, for three months, or in any way fails to comply with his contract, the association may compel payment of principal and interest and premiums, fines and dues, by proceeding on his note, and foreclosing the mortgage or other security, which shall at once become due and payable, and the association may cancel and treat as forfeited, the said shareholder's shares, whether deposited as collateral security or not, and all payments made thereon shall be forfeited to the association. Time, punctuality, and strict performance on the part of all shareholders, in the payment of premiums, fines, installments, interests and loans is made the essence of the contract;" that "members in good standing may withdraw the amount paid by them in monthly installments of shares, into the loan fund, together with interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, after giving sixty days' notice in writing, and such notice to be given after two years."

Isaac Linsky, as owner of 40 shares, applied regularly for a loan of $2,000, stating, among other things, "I will also comply with all the rules and regulations of the association." He obtained the loan, and executed his note therefor, and a mortgage on real estate as security. The note specified that it was for a loan on 40 shares of stock with interest, and premium, and payable according to the by-laws, and he assigned his stock as collateral security for the loan, and for the payment of monthly installments required of him. Upon default the whole debt became, by the terms of the mortgage, due and payable, and the association was authorized to foreclose on the terms specified. Subsequently Linsky negotiated a loan with Anniston Loan & Trust Company, the complainant in the original bill, for $2,500, and, to secure the same, gave complainant a second mortgage on the real estate which he had already mortgaged to the said association. O. H. Parker, defendant in the original and complainant in the cross bill, is the assignee of Linsky for the benefit of creditors, and is invested by the deed of assignment to him, with all the rights which said Linsky had in the premises; he, as such assignee, and the Anniston Loan & Trust Company, the second mortgagee of said real estate, prior to the commencement of this suit, offered to pay to said association the amount due on its mortgage, provided it would allow a credit for amount received and interest, and credit him with all payments made. Kupfert v. Guttenberg Bldg. Assn. 30 Pa. 465; Hughes' App. 80 Pa. 471.

In Pennsylvania an unincorporated association cannot recover on the mortgage more money than was actually advanced with legal interest. Link v. Germantown Bldg. Assn. 89 Pa. 15.

Payments not ipso facto a reduction of the mortgage.

The cases seem to agree that whatever application may ultimately be made of the payments they are not in the first instance and of necessity to be treated as a reduction of the debt.

Payments on shares are not ipso facto payments of so much of the mortgage debt. North America Bldg. Assn. v. Sutton, 35 Pa. 463, 78 Am. Dec. 349; Economy Bldg. Assn. v. Hungerbuehler, 98 Pa. 258; Kebler v. Miller, 4 Legal Gas. 127; Sunbury Mut. Sav. Fund & Bldg. Assn. v. Martin, 1 Luzerne Legal Reg. 147; Onorow v. Tradesmen's Sav. Fund & Loan Assn. 21 Phila. Leg. Int. 109.

If there has been no appropriation by the parties of payments on the stock to the mortgage debt, such payments cannot be lawfully set up as payments on the mortgage; they do not ipso facto constitute a pro tanto extinguishment of the mortgage. Link v. Germantown Bldg. Assn. 89 Pa. 15.

Right of third persons to require the application.

From the fact that the payments are not regarded as made ipso facto upon the mortgage debt the question frequently arises how far third persons can insist on the application being made.

Surety for borrower.

A surety for the sum borrowed has a right to compel the association to apply the value of the stock in reduction of its claim before making claim on him for payment. Massey v. Citizens Bldg. & Sav. Assn. of Paola, 22 Kan. 624.

If the terms of the mortgage provide that the value of the stock shall be deducted in case of a foreclosure from the total amount due in order to find the amount to be raised from the mortgaged property, sureties on the mortgage have a right to insist on such terms, although as between the borrower and the association it could not have been done. Forsyth v. Hibernia Bldg. Assn. 1 Mackey, 206.

Purchaser at sheriff's sale.

Where there has been no appropriation by an un-the amount paid for stock, as a payment on account of said loan, which said association refused to do, claiming that said stock was forfeited to it by the failure of said Linsky to pay his monthly installments for a period of more than three months prior to the filing of said bill. On the 21st of September, 1892, the Anniston Loan & Trust Company filed this bill against said association, Isaac Linsky and O. H. Parker, as such assignee, the object of which is to redeem said lands from the mortgage of said association, by paying the amount ascertained to be remaining due thereon, and have said 40 shares of stock sold and the proceeds applied also towards the payment of said loan, and to have the premiums paid on said stock credited as a payment on said loan. Parker, as assignee, afterwards, on the 25th day of May, 1893, filed his cross-bill against the Anniston Loan & Trust Company, said association and Linsky, setting up the assignment of Linsky to him, his offer to redeem from said association by offering to pay to it the full amount of said loan, praying for an account, and that he be allowed to redeem from said mortgage by paying the amount due thereon, and also to be allowed to redeem from the mortgage to said Anniston Loan & Trust Company.

The chancellor rendered a decree establishing the right of the trust company, the junior mortgagee, to redeem from the mortgage of Linsky to said association, and the right of the complainant in the cross-bill to redeem from the mortgages of the association and the trust company, holding that the claim of said association, that its debt was not liable to the payments made by said Linsky on account of his subscriptions to the stock of said association, and that it might hold and retain the same without crediting them in the debt for which the stock was pledged was inequitable.

Messrs. Lawrence Cooper, John M. McKleroy, and A. P. Agee, for appellants:

incorporated building association or by the stockholder of payments on the stock, to his mortgage, they are not deemed ipso facto payments on account thereof, and a purchaser at sheriff's sale of the mortgaged premises is not entitled to have credit for the amount. Whilden v. Broomall, 1 Del. Co. Rep. 142; Diemer v. Erolf, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 55; Greenfield's Estate, 1 Chest. Co. Rep. 356; Flynn v. Savings Fund, 37 Phila. Legal Int. 333; Re Treffelsson, 3 Kulp, 308.

Creditors or assignees.

An assignee of mortgaged property will not be entitled to have the value of the stock applied to the payment of the mortgage debt. People's Sav. Bank & Bldg. Assn. v. Collins, 27 Conn. 142.

Dues applied to payments on stock are not credits on the mortgage on distribution of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale. Houlette's Estate, 2 Chest. Co. Rep. 511.

If the parties have not applied the payments to the debt, a stranger, such as a purchaser of the mortgaged property, cannot claim such application for the purpose of reducing the lien on his land. Spring Garden Assn. v. Tradesmen's Loan Assn. 43 Pa. 493; Building Assn. v. Eschelbach, 7 Phila. 189; 29 L. R. A.

The various insurance organizations of the country, mutual or otherwise, provide for a forfeiture, in default of payment. Regardless of the number of payments, whether one or fifty, a default being made, the member is no longer in good standing, and all rights are thereby forfeited. Having thus defaulted, an action would not lie for the recovery of the amount paid, or for the amount of the policy.

Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 74 Ala. 578.

Article 2, section 11, of by-laws, to which Linsky subscribed when he became a member, expressly stipulated that time and punctuality are the essence of the contract.

Bacon, Ben. Soc. § 354.

The failure to make punctual payment constitutes a breach for which an action would lie, while a forfeiture is the creature of chartered authority, under a specific contract, enforceable for the violation of a duty or of an obligation.

Endlich, Bldg. Assn. § 99; 8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 450, § 31; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, 23 L. ed. 789; Holmes v. Smythe, 100 Ill. 413; Freeman v. Otawa Bldg. Homestead & Sav. Assn. 114 Ill. 182; Smith v. Mariner, 5 Wis. 551, 68 Am. Dec. 73; Roehner v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co. 63 N. Y. 160; Klein v. New York L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 88, 26 L. ed. 662.

Forfeiture of stock is necessarily forfeiture of membership, and vice versa.

Endlich, Bldg. Assn. § 102.

The sound theory is that such stock payments do not operate a pro tanto extinguishment of mortgage debt.

Robertson v. American Homestead Assn. 10 Md. 397, 69 Am. Dec. 162.

Messrs. Caldwell, Johnson & Acker, and Knox, Bowie & Pelham, for appellees:

The advantage attempted to be secured by appellant by forfeiting and appropriating the shares of stock assigned to it as collateral security and all the payments thereon, is altogether unconscionable and inequitable.

Every mortgage is in form an absolute con-

Springville Sav. Fund & Loan Assn. v. Baber, 11 Phila. 548; Kramer v. Springfield Sav. Fund & Loan Assn. 6 W. N. C. 267.

But in a lower court it had been held that one who purchases from the mortgagor the mortgaged premises may compel an application by the association of the value of the stock in satisfaction of the mortgage. Kelly v. Accommodation Sav. Fund & Loan Assn. 3 Phila. 237.

Second mortgages.

In favor of second mortgagees the court has at times marshaled the securities and compelled the association to apply first to its claim the security upon which it alone had a lien.

In Red Bank Mut. Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Patterson, 27 N. J. Eq. 223, the stock was applied to the mortgage in favor of a second mortgagee, and the same course was taken in Phillipsburg Mut. Loan & Bldg. Assn. v. Hawk, 27 N. J. Eq. 355, and Herbert v. Mechanics Bldg. & Loan Assn. of New Brunswick, 17 N. J. Eq. 497, 30 Am. Dec. 601.

So where the association having notice of a second mortgage on the land releases its lien on the stock as against the second mortgagee, the mortgage will be regarded as satisfied to the value of the veyance with a condition that it may be terminated by a payment of the mortgage debt at maturity. But, notwithstanding this, in equity it was considered as intended only as security for the debt, and so the mortgagor's equity of redemption was recognized and enforced in equity as a just relief against the hardship resulting from an enforcement of the contract according to its terms.

4 Kent, Com. 158 et seq.

Forfeiture of membership on the part of the borrower does not mean a forfeiture of all the payments made by him on account of his subscription to the stock or the installments upon the loan secured from the company.

Endlich, Bldg. Asso. §§ 165, 453, 459, 460; Robinson v. American Homestead Asso. 10 Md. 397, 69 Am. Dec. 162; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 639.

A claim on the part of the society, that the share is forfeited to it, and that no credit should be given for it, is inequitable and cannot be allowed.

Endlich, Bldg. Asso. § 459; Massey v. Citizens Bldg. & Sav. Asso. of Paola, 22 Kan. 624.

Fines may be levied to enforce punctuality on the part of the stockholder, but these to be valid, must be reasonable.

Endlich, Bldg. Asso. § 407; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 630; Robertson v. American Homestead Asso. 10 Md. 397, 69 Am. Dec. 158.

It is unreasonable, and therefore we assume that the legislature did not intend that more than one fine should be imposed for the same delinquency.

Hagerman v. Ohio Bldg. & Sav. Asso. 25 Ohio. St. 186; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. § 410.

When the borrower makes default he is entitled, as a matter of right, to be credited with the value of his stock, or the aggregate amount of payments made by him on account of the stock or loan, as the case may be.

Mobile Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Robertson, 65 Ala. 382; Falls v. United States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Asso. 24 L. R. A. 174, 97 Ala. 417; Robertson v. American Homestead Asso. supra; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. 453; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 639.

Haralson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The main question in this case, as stated by the appellant, is the right and power of the Southern Building & Loan Association to declare forfeited the shares of a borrowing member. Or, as stated by counsel for appellant,—"The cause was submitted in the court below, upon an agreed state of facts, and the single point of dispute turns upon the question of the right of the Southern Building & Loan Association to forfeit the shares of stock held by it as collateral, and the refusal of said association to credit its mortgage with the value of the stock, or the aggregate amount of the payments made by Isaac Linsky on account of said stock or on account of said loan. There is no dispute as to what payments were made, but the Southern Building & Loan Association plants itself upon the proposition that it is entitled to recover the full amount of the original loan with interest, without any abatement for the value of the stock, or the aggregate amount of payments made by Isaac Linsky during the life of the loan. The learned court below held that this construction was inequitable and not within the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract was made, and that the junior mortgagee, and the assignee for the benefit of creditors, were entitled to redeem upon paying the amount of the mortgage loan, after deducting the value of the stock, or the aggregate amount of the payments made by said Isaac Linsky prior to making default." We thus have the issue plainly and sharply defined and the parties treat the value of the stock as merely the aggregate of all the payments which have been made upon it, thus following the rule which is laid down in the books for the ascertainment of its value. Endlich, Bldg. Asso. §§ 455, 457, and authorities there cited.

The question has given rise to some confusion in the decisions of courts. In North Carolina the transaction has been treated upon the basis of an actual loan of money, and the aggregate amount of payments upon required to keep up his stipulated payments. In such cases the question of the application of the payment in reduction of the debt can scarcely be said to arise since there is no debt. At the same time each payment discharges so much of the obligation so that the advanced member has the full benefit of it.

Under the English idea of a building association a shareholder who received an advance upon his stock was deemed to receive all the benefit which he could from the association and to be in the same condition in which an unadvanced member would be who received the full value of his share at the termination of the accumulation period, and having received all the benefit, he was bound to pay his subscriptions to the termination of the society. He could not longer withdraw from it. Farmer v. Smith, 4 Hurlst. & N. 196, 28 L. J. Exch. 220, 5 Jur. N. S. 523, note.

When the association redeems shares, the amount advanced on them is no part of the debt which the shareholder owes the association. His only debt is the monthly dues and interest on money advanced, to be continued until the unredeemed shareholders have received the amount which the articles of the association provide for. Winchester Bldg. Asso.

stock. Washington Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Beagben, 27 N. J. Eq. 99.

But the holder of a second mortgage on the land mortgaged to the association cannot compel the association to apply the value of the shares of stock upon the first mortgage against the objection of one to whom the borrower has pledged the shares as collateral security. Reilly v. Mayer, 12 N. J. Eq. 65.

In Harris's App., 18 W. N. C. 14, in which the borrowing member had made a second mortgage on his property, and then assigned his stock to a third person subject to the prior assignment to the association, to secure an indebtedness to him, it was held that the borrower himself might appropriate payments made on his stock in part satisfaction of the lien when foreclosure proceedings were brought, but that the second mortgagee had no such right so as to prevent the collection of the debt out of the mortgaged premises.

Associations on the terminating plan.

Where the original idea of loan associations is carried out the advanced member is not regarded as owing any debt to the association but as simply 29 L. R. A.

stock, as partial payments on the loan by the borrower. Oorby v. Fayetteville Bldg. & Loan Assn. 81 N. C. 56; Hoskins v. Mechanics Bldg. & Loan Assn. 84 N. C. 888. And the earlier Pennsylvania cases, previously to that of North America Bldg. Assn. v. Sutton, 35 Pa. 463, 78 Am. Dec. 849, maintain the same view of the question. Commenting upon these decisions, Mr. Endlich says, that the supreme court of Pennsylvania in Sutton's Case, supra, for the first time approached an understanding of the nature and dealings between the building association and its members; that under the rulings in the former cases in that court, upon the theory of partial payments, it followed that each stock payment made by the borrowing member was a pro tanto reduction of his mortgage debt, to be deducted with interest, from the date of payment; and he adds, "The fallacy of this doctrine is obvious, from the fact that the borrower's standing as a member is not merged in his superadded character of debtor, and that, as a member, he is not entitled to an account of profits made by the society upon his contributions, before the period of its termination (or that of the series to which his stock belongs), whilst the settlement of his liabilities as borrower is also referred to in the winding up of the mutual scheme. It has, therefore, become a well-recognized doctrine that payments of dues upon stock are not payments to the mortgage debt, and do not, ipso facto, work an extinguishment of so much of the mortgage. The fact that the borrower has assigned his shares to the society as collateral security for his debt makes no difference; for this is a recognition of the distinct standing of the member as a member and as a debtor." Endlich, Bldg. Assn. § 452. And it is a correct principle, as has been held, that there is no connection established between the stock held by the stockholder and the bond held by the company, such as that payments made on stock are to be treated as payments on the bond, so that one is steadily offset against the other, or the one merges in the other,—a fallacy sometimes indulged, arising from a failure to observe the separate existence of the stock on the one hand and the bond on the other,—the separate relation borne to the company on the one side, by its stockholder, and on the other, by its borrower. The payment on the one, is not necessarily, a payment on the other. State v. Hornbacker, 42 N. J. L. 635; Endlich, Bldg. Assn. § 452. Mr. Freeman, in an extended note to Robertson v. American Homestead Assn., 69 Am. Dec. 163, gives approval to the same principle, citing a long list of cases in support thereof; and the learned annotator adds, as a conclusion from the very many authorities he cites, as to the amount that the borrower ought justly to pay, when he wishes to withdraw or is in default, and his mortgage is sought to be enforced, that, "It must be remembered, that when a member obtains a loan or advance he anticipates the amount he is to receive upon the termination of the association, or of the series to which it belongs. His obligation does not look to a repayment before that time. If he desires to withdraw, or it becomes necessary to enforce his mortgage against him before that period arrives, the question is, What amount ought he equitably to pay? In ascertaining this amount the only difference between the two cases seems to be, that when he voluntarily withdraws he is entitled to receive the bonus or share of profits allowed him under the laws of the associations, and when he is in default, no such allowance is to be made him." The justness of this conclusion is vindicated on the ground that the defaulting member's action is an injury to the association arising out of a breach of his obligations, for if he continue from time to time, for purposes of his own convenience, to withhold his contributions to the common fund, when they become payable, it is clear he is thereby depriving the association of just that much money which ought to be invested for the common good; and if this be allowed till the end, it is also plain he will have derived, from his own violation of duty,

v. Gilbert, 23 Gratt. 787; Cason v. Seidner, 77 Va. 297; Fox v. Cottage Bldg. Fund Assn. 11 Va. 677.

Upon default by the borrower, equity will not state the account on the basis of the loan advanced, but will ascertain the amount of the dues, interest, and fines unpaid, and give a decree for that amount. Hagerman v. Ohio Bldg. & Sav. Assn. 25 Ohio St. 186; Risk v. Delphos Bldg. & Sav. Assn. 31 Ohio St. 518.

In a foreclosure proceeding, the amount to be made is to be found by ascertaining the probable duration of the association, and finding a principal which at interest for the proposed time would give the amount of dues and interest which would become payable during that time, and add to this the arrearages. Cincinnati German Assn. v. Flach, 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 468.

A borrowing member of a building association has no right to receive interest on his stock payments or to have such payments applied in reduction of his indebtedness prior to the termination of the enterprise, unless such right is expressly reserved in his contract. Reeve v. Ladies Bldg. Assn. 18 L. R. A. 129, 56 Ark. 325.

If a member ceases to make his payments to a going concern, he will be liable for the amount of 29 L. R. A.

the dues which would accrue from the time he makes default until his stock has matured, with interest at the legal rate and all arrearages and fines. Border State Perpetual Bldg. Assn. of Baltimore v. McCarthy, 57 Md. 555.

In Building Assn. v. Leyden, 1 Week. L. Bull. 126, the court refused to uphold a provision in the mortgage providing for the deduction of dues paid upon foreclosure, holding that the borrower has all the rights of a stockholder, and that the settlement must be made on the basis of dues to be paid at the time default is made. And that ruling was followed in Building Assn. v. Egger, 5 Week. L. Bull. 752; Allemania Assn. v. Mueller, 8 Week. L. Bull. 97.

In considering the amount due the association for the purpose of taxation the court in State v. Hornbacker, 42 N. J. L. 635, says the unsoundness of the argument of the association consists in not observing the distinct and separate existence of the stock on the one hand and the bond on the other, the distinct and separate relation borne to the company on the one hand by its stockholders and on the other by its borrowers. A connection is sought to be established between the stock held by the stockholder and the bond held by an unjust advantage, in sharing with the other members notwithstanding his defaults, an equal participation in the profits. In principle there can be no difference in the rule as to the prompt payment of premiums on a policy in a life insurance company, and the premiums and other dues on a building and loan contract, and this court, speaking of the former said, "It is too late at this day to raise any question as to the legal validity of such a contract. To one who understands anything of the principles upon which the business of life insurance is conducted, it is obvious that the punctual payment of premiums is of the very essence of the contract. The calculations of insurance actuaries fixing the rates of insurance, are based on the theory of prompt payment, so as to afford opportunity for such reinvestment as to reap the fruits of compound interest upon the company's moneyed capital. Laxity in the enforcement of punctual payments might, and no doubt would, frequently lead to ultimate, if not speedy, financial ruin. Stipulations, therefore, incorporated in insurance policies, making such payments conditions precedent to the continued liability of the insurer, are generally maintained as valid by the courts." Alabama Gold L. Ins. Co. v. Thomas, 74 Ala. 582. Forfeiture for the nonpayment of premiums is a necessary means, for insurance, or building and loan companies, of protecting themselves from embarrassment, and delinquency cannot be allowed except at the option of the companies. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Statham, 38 U. S. 24, 23 L. ed. 789; Klein v. New York L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 88, 26 L. ed. 662. In keeping with this doctrine, Mr. Pomeroy lays it down, that a forfeiture of shares of stock in a corporation, duly incurred by the stockholders, for failure to pay the calls, or installments thereon, as provided by the charter or by-laws of the company, will not be set aside or relieved against by a court of equity. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 457, 458; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 1825, 1826.

With these principles in view, let us inquire into the particulars of the case we have before us. This association was chartered under the provisions of the code. Part 2, title 1, chap. 4. Section 1556 confers upon building and loan associations chartered thereunder, the power, (4) "to make all needful rules and regulations and by-laws, for the transaction of its business, and the management and control of its affairs;" (6) "to compel payment and compliance with all lawful orders, by fines and forfeitures;" and (12) "to secure the payment of installments and loans, and a compliance with all the terms on which loans are purchased, by mortgages with power of sale on real estate, and the same to foreclose on default," etc. The association adopted a code of by-laws clearly within the statutory powers conferred, by which it was provided, among other things, that the certificate, terms, and conditions of the shares of the association, and the by-laws, form the contract with the shareholders; "that persons desiring to become shareholders must make application according to forms provided for that purpose, the application forming a part and parcel of the applicant's contract with the association (and in these applications there is an agreement, by the applicant, that he will comply with all the rules and regulations of the association); that all loans must be secured by note and first mortgage on real estate, the borrower to pay interest and a premium, at the rate of five per cent per annum, each, of 35 cents on each share (of $50) named in the certificate, on or before the 5th of each month, without notice, 5 cents of which shall be placed to the expense account; that members in good standing may withdraw the amount paid by them, in monthly installments of shares, into the loan fund, together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent per annum, after giving 60 days' notice in writing, such notice to be given after the expiration of two years; and that, if any shareholder shall neglect to pay the interest or premium on his loan, or his regular monthly installments, or other fees, for three months, or in any way the company by virtue of which as payments are made on the stock they are treated as payments on the bond, so that one steadily merges in or becomes offset by the other; but while in a general way this view may seem fair because an exchange of one for the other is the result expected to happen, it is still not the view warranted by the terms of the company's constitution nor by the terms of the bond. The borrower cannot be compelled to pay the principal of the loan in cash, but may when his stock becomes paid up exchange his stock for the principal of the debt, but until so exchanged they are distinct in legal contemplation as well as in form. The stock is collateral security for and not a credit on the bond.

Under the Ohio statutes parts of the loan are not to be canceled as dues are paid on the shares but the loan is to be settled with such dues and other credits when the share is fully paid. Seibel v. Victoria Bldg. Asso. No. 2, 43 Ohio St. 371.

In the absence of a statute or by-law of the association permitting the crediting of payments on the loan, it cannot be done but the stock must be left to mature as other stock of the association does. Sweeney v. El. Paso Bldg. & Loan Asso. (Tex.)

24 L. R. A.

26 S. W. Rep. 22; Blakeley v. El Paso Bldg. & Loan Asso. Id. 292.

Payments on stock should not be applied in reduction of the debt. El Paso Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Lane, 51 Tex. 369.

Payments on stock are not made for the use of borrowed money, but through them the stockholder acquires an interest in the property of the association. International Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Abbott, 85 Tex. 220.

In Mechanics Bldg. & Loan Asso. of New Brunswick v. Conover, 14 N. J. Eq. 219, the court said: "The claim is that the claimant is entitled to have deducted from the amount of the mortgage the premiums that he has paid on account, and to this extent the claim would, at first view, seem to be equitable and just. The member has taken a loan of $300. He is to repay it by monthly installments. He is to have, moreover, the benefit of all premiums, fines, and advanced rates of interest paid by himself and all his associate members. It is very natural, therefore, for the members to suppose that when he has paid $100 in monthly installments, no more than the balance of $100 can remain due on the mortgage. But he forgets that fails to comply with his contract, the association may compel payment of principal and interest, and premiums, fines and dues, by proceeding on his note, and foreclosing the mortgage or other security, which shall at once become due and payable, and the association may cancel and treat as forfeited the said shareholder's share, whether deposited as collateral security or not, and all payments made thereon shall be forfeited to the association; that time, punctuality and strict performance on the part of all shareholders, in the payment of premiums, fines, installments, interest and loans, is made the essence of the contract. Linsky signed his applications for the loan he received, and in them he agreed, "I will also comply with all the rules and regulations of the association." They were approved, and under them he received a loan from the association for $2,000, on the 16th of June, 1890, for which he executed and delivered his note or bond, payable six years after date, with interest thereon, and the premiums bid in his applications and payable according to the by-laws, and assigning in said note as collateral security to the association, for the sum loaned to him, and for the payment of the monthly installments required of him, his 40 shares of stock in the association. In the conclusion of the note is the provision:—"And it is stipulated, that in the event I make default in the payment of said installments, interest, premiums or fines to said association, for a period of three months, then this bond shall mature and become payable, and I hereby authorize said association to cancel my said shares, and the same shall be thereby forfeited." At the same time, he executed the mortgage, a copy of which is attached to the answer of the association, conditioned, that "If the said Isaac Linsky shall well and truly pay said sum of $2,000, as evidenced by said note, at the maturity thereof, . . . and shall also promptly [pay] on the 5th day of each month the installments due on his shares, until the amount in the loan fund to the credit of his shares, from monthly payments and profits, equals fifty dollars for each share, on which said loan is made, and shall also promptly pay the monthly interest on said loan and the premiums so bid by him monthly, and shall comply with the laws of said association, then this conveyance shall be null and void, otherwise to remain in full force and effect," subject to foreclosure as provided therein. On the 15th day of September, 1892, said Linsky having made default in the payment of the installments on his stock, interest, premium and fines, for more than three months, and never having filed an application for the withdrawal of his shares of stock, after he had been paying thereon, two years or at any other time, the association, by resolution duly adopted, declared the said forty shares of stock of said Linsky forfeited to the remaining stockholders of said association, and the same was passed to the credit of the loan fund of the association.

From what has been said, it appears, then, that the association was duly organized, under a charter obtained under the general law of the state for that purpose; that the statute under which it was organized authorized it to make all needful by-laws for the transaction of its business, and to compel payment and compliance with the by-laws which provided for the forfeiture of the stock of its shareholders, if they failed for three months to pay the stipulated contributions to the association, as provided by the by-laws and the contract of the borrower; that Linsky agreed to abide by these rules and regulations, and agreed that they should be a part of his contract of loan; that he executed his note and mortgage, and agreed therein, that if he failed to comply with the terms of his contract, his stock should be forfeited to the association; that he did make default; and that the association, in accordance with its by-laws, declared his stock forfeited. The policy of the law favored the forfeiture, the statute authorized it, the rules of the association and contract of the parties provided for it, and the association declared it, in accordance with the terms of the contract and by-laws.

the payments are made, not upon his mortgage debt, but into a general fund, the benefits of which are to be shared by every member of the association. And while he may reap great profits from premiums, fines, and high rates of interest, he incurs the hazards of losses from dishonest officers, defaulting members, and ill-secured loans, so that he may actually repay the whole amount loaned, with a high rate of interest, and yet be a debtor to the association. The debt is in fact never discharged until it is either actually paid according to the terms of the mortgage or until the accumulation shall be sufficient to redeem every mortgage given by a shareholder, and cancel every share of members who have taken no loan at its par value. The undertaking of the members to repay the loan is absolute, and he must perform his engagement. He can only redeem his mortgage by paying its full amount. He can have no credit for the value of his shares until the scheme closes, and there are funds sufficient to divide the full amount of the shares among all the shareholders according to the terms of the scheme." And that case was affirmed on this point in Herbert v. Mechanics Bldg. & Loan Assn. of New Brunswick, 17 N. J. Eq. 497, 80 Am. Dec. 601.

29 L. R. A.

In Robertson v. American Homestead Assn., 10 Md. 307, 65 Am. Dec. 145, the court in promulgating a rule to ascertain the amount which the association would be entitled to on selling the mortgaged lands in foreclosure proceedings states that from the sum of the items which were to be paid the amount already paid must be deducted. And that rule was subsequently applied in McCahan v. Columbian Bldg. Assn. of East Baltimore, No. 2, 40 Md. 226.

In Mosley v. Baker, 6 Hare, 87, 12 Jur. 551, 17 L. J. Ch. 257, affirmed in 1 Hall & T. 301, 8 De G. M. & G. 1082, 18 L. J. Ch. 457, 13 Jur. 817, which was a bill to redeem from the mortgage, it was held that permission to redeem should be granted only upon payment of all future subscriptions upon the shares until the dissolution of the society, the probable duration of which was to be ascertained by calculation, and the future payments to be treated as if immediately due.

Upon construction of the rule of the society in that case the court in Smith v. Pilkington, 1 De G. F. & J. 120, 4 Jur. N. S. 58, 29 N. J. Ch. 227, held that when a member comes to redeem his mortgage the account is to be taken, not of what is then due, but of the sums originally secured by the mortgage.

We find thus erected, against our declaring this forfeiture unconscionable and inequitable, as we are asked to do in this bill, a barrier so high, we are unable to surmount it. The appellant is entitled to the full amount of its said loan, principal and interest, according to the terms of the contract, from the time said Linsky ceased to pay the same thereon, without any abatement for the value of the stock forfeited; and if the same is not promptly paid, in redemption of its said mortgage by the complainant in the cross-bill, or by the complainant in the original bill,—the complainant having submitted itself to the authority of the court to that end,—it is entitled to a decree of foreclosure of its said mortgage, and to a sale of the real property therein described, for the payment of its said debt and interest. The complainant in the cross-bill is entitled to redeem the mortgages of the appellant, and of the Anniston Loan & Trust Company, by paying the amounts that may be ascertained to be due thereon, respectively, within a short time to be specified by the court; and, in default of such redemption by him, then, the complainant in the original bill, the Anniston Loan & Trust Company, is entitled to redeem the mortgage of the defendant,—the Southern Building & Loan Association—by paying the full amount due thereon, principal and interest, without abatement for alleged payments thereon, and in that case, the decree of the court foreclosing its own mortgage, and that of said association, so redeemed by it, and to a sale of the real estate in said mortgages mentioned, for the payment of its own debt and that of said association which it has paid.

The decree of the court below is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings in conformity with the above directions.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

George Lamb BUIST, Receiver, etc., of Assistance Building & Loan Association, Rept.,

v.

Daniel BRYAN, Appt.

(.....S. C.....)

1. The appointment of a receiver for a building and loan association terminates the contract of a shareholder who is also a borrower and has given a mortgage to secure the loan so that he is not liable for the monthly dues accruing after such appointment.
2. The monthly payments for subscriptions to the shares of a building and loan association which have been pledged as collateral security for a loan secured by mortgage, in which interest and dues are consolidated, should be applied upon the mortgage in determining whether that has been paid when the association is in the hands of a receiver.

and then credit is to be given to the mortgagor for the proper proportion of the profits and for the payments which he may have made in respect to the monthly subscriptions.

In Georgia the rules of the society provide that to redeem a mortgage the mortgagor must pay such an amount as will at the rate at which funds are selling at the time, produce the same monthly interest as the stockholder had been paying, and the court held that upon foreclosure the society was entitled to retain an equal amount. Richards v. Bibb County Loan Assn. 24 Ga. 198.

A member may prevent the company from throwing the funds of the series to which he belongs into the common funds of the association, and may compel their application to the payment of his loan. Sullivan v. Jackson Bldg. & Loan Assn. 70 Miss. 94.

Under that conception of an association if the advance is returned the stock is released from the lien of the association and the owner thereafter has all the rights of other members of the association.

When the society has foreclosed its mortgage and made the amount out of the mortgaged premises. 29 L. R. A.

(April 18, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Charleston County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

The complaint in the action was as follows:

"The plaintiff, George Lamb Buist, as receiver of Assistance Building and Loan Association, a body corporate under the laws of said state, complaining of the above-named defendant, Daniel Bryan, alleges: (1) That heretofore, to wit, on or about the 9th day of September, 1892, in a certain cause depending in the court of common pleas for Charleston county, said state, entitled 'E. M. Moreland v. Assistance Building and Loan Association,' the plaintiff, George Lamb Buist, was duly appointed receiver of the said Assistance Building and Loan Association, and by said court authorized and empowered also, the mortgagor's stock is released from the pledge, and he holds it as though he had never gotten any advance on it. Ocmulgee Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Thomson, 52 Ga. 427.

Where there is a provision for the crediting of payments of dues upon the borrower's giving notice of withdrawal, he cannot have such credit upon foreclosure of his mortgage because he will receive the benefit of his installments upon the winding up of the association in the increased value of his shares. People's Bldg. & Loan Assn. of Harrison v. Furey, 47 N. J. Eq. 410.

Rule under changed conception of loan association.

Where the old rule was observed the advanced member received on foreclosure the benefit of his payments by having to pay simply the dues that were yet to accrue under his contract.

Thus it is made to seem that the scheme of the English societies contemplates the allowance of payments already made. Matteron v. Elderfield, L. R. 4 Ch. 207, 20 L. T. N. S. 503, 17 Week. Rep. 422.

In the earlier Pennsylvania cases in which the associations were operating without the protection of a statute the advance was treated as a mere loan to take charge of all and singular the assets of said corporation, and to bring all actions of any kind and description necessary for winding up the affairs of said association, and protecting the interests of the stockholders thereof; that the said George Lamb Buist duly entered upon the discharge of his duty as such receiver, having qualified as required by said order, and ever since has been, and is now, the duly appointed receiver of said Assistance Building and Loan Association. (2) That the said Assistance Building and Loan Association is a corporation organized under the laws of this state, and was at the times hereinafter mentioned such, doing business at Charleston, in said state. (3) That heretofore, to wit, on or about the 7th day of November, A. D. 1883, the defendant, Daniel Bryan, duly made, executed, and delivered his bond or obligation in writing under seal, in the full and just sum of twenty-eight hundred dollars, wherein and whereby it was recited that whereas the above-bound Daniel Bryan having bid in an advance stock of fourteen hundred dollars on seven (7) shares of the said association held by the said Daniel Bryan as a stockholder therein, and, as collateral security, has assigned to the said association the said shares, and has received for such advances in cash the sum of eight hundred and forty dollars, and that it is contemplated that the said association shall wind up when the funds and assets of the same have so accumulated as to enable each stockholder and member thereof, upon a fair division, to be paid or receive two hundred dollars of property or assets on each and every share held by him or her; the said bond being conditioned that 'if the said Daniel Bryan, his heirs, executors, or administrators, shall and do well and truly pay or cause to be paid unto the above-named Assistance Building and Loan Association the monthly sum of fourteen dollars, of which the sum of seven dollars per month is for subscriptions to the said shares, and the sum of seven dollars per month is for interest on the said sum actually paid over to said

Daniel Bryan, to be paid before the seventh of each and every month until the said association shall wind up and determine, and upon such winding up or determination shall transfer and surrender the said seven (7) shares to the said association, in satisfaction of the advance aforesaid, and shall stand to and abide by the constitution, rules, and regulations of said association, then the above obligation to be void and of none effect, or else to remain in full force and virtue: Provided, that this contract shall not be construed in any manner to provide for more than the highest rate of interest allowed by law for the use of any sum actually obtained from said association.' (4) That on the 7th day of November, 1888, to secure the performance of the conditions of said bond or obligation, the defendant, Daniel Bryan, duly made, executed, and delivered to the said Assistance Building and Loan Association his deed, and thereby conveyed, by way of mortgage, to the said Assistance Building and Loan Association, its successors and assigns, the following lands and tenements, in the county of Charleston and state aforesaid, to wit: 'All that lot, piece, or parcel of land situate, lying, and being on the north side of Lee street, one door east of Meeting street, in Ward No. 7 [now No. 9] of the city of Charleston and state aforesaid, measuring and containing in front on Lee street forty (40) feet, and in depth fifty (50) feet, abutting and bounding north on lands of —, east on lands now or late of John W. O'Brien, south on Lee street, and west on lands of the said Eugenia O. Robinson, which said lot of land is part of the lot marked No. 68 of Hume's plat, dated 12th December, 1873, of the Blake lands, and conveyed to me by Eugenia O. Robinson by deed dated 7th October, 1881; recorded in Book K, No. 18, page 147, R. M. C. Office for Charleston county.' (5) That on the — day of —, 188—, the said mortgage was delivered to the register of mesne conveyances of said county, to be by him entered on record, and was on said date recorded in Book Q. No. 18, and the account was made up accordingly as shown by the authorities cited supra. These decisions have had more or less effect in giving the transaction the character of a loan in that state. And in other states also it has been given that effect and the account stated on that basis.

All payments made under the constitution and laws of the building association must be regarded as payments on account of loans made to the stockholders. Building Asso. v. Timmins, 3 Phila. 209.

The borrower is entitled to apply his stock as a credit on his mortgage. Building Asso. v. Rood, 2 Kulp, 246.

The mortgagor may direct the payments to be applied upon the mortgage. Building Asso. v. Taylor, 18 W. N. C. 13.

In Tilley v. American Bldg. & Loan Asso., 53 Fed. Rep. 618, which was a bill to cancel the mortgage, the court directed the interest paid to be deducted and the mortgage foreclosed for the balance.

A mortgagee may apply the value of his stock in reduction of the claim of the association upon the assets arising from the sale of real estate under a security given to the association. Early's App. 59 Pa. 411.

29 L. R. A.

The association is only entitled to the amount loaned with interest from which is to be deducted the sums paid as dues. Hanner v. Greensboro Bldg. & Loan Asso. 78 N. C. 188.

In Clarksville Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Stephens, 22 N. J. Eq. 351, the court in foreclosure proceedings appropriated the stock payments which had been made to the satisfaction of the indebtedness to the association.

In Hekeinkaemper v. German Bldg. & Sav. Asso. of Atchison, 22 Kan. 549, the lower court ignored the premium bid and gave judgment for the actual amount of the loan without allowing the amounts that had been paid, and the supreme court held that there was no error of which the borrower could complain.

When a member not in default seeks to redeem his mortgage, the amount to be discharged is the principal sum loaned. Toward payment of this the mortgagor may properly apply the gross amount of all sums paid as monthly dues, computing the same as the amount may be at the time of the adjustment. But upon such sums no interest can be claimed, nor can they be required to be applied as of the time when received. They are not payments originally required nor stipulated to page 270. (6) That the said Daniel Bryan has failed to pay the monthly installments due, respectively, as follows, to wit: On the 7th day of May, 1892, known as the one hundred and fifth installment; and installment due on the 7th day of June, 1892, known as the one hundred and sixth installment; and the installment due on the 7th of July, 1892, known as the one hundred and seventh installment; and the installment due on the 7th day of August, 1892, known as the one hundred and eighth installment; and the installment due on the 7th day of September, 1892, known as the one hundred and ninth installment. And that each and all of said monthly dues or installments have been due for more than the space of three months. And that the said Daniel Bryan has neglected and refused to pay the same, whereby the condition of said bond has been broken, and this plaintiff, suing as receiver of said Assistance Building and Loan Association, is entitled to have a foreclosure of said mortgage decreed by this honorable court, and judgment and execution for any deficiency. Wherefore the plaintiff demands judgment: First. That the liability of the said defendant, Daniel Bryan, under and by virtue of the said bond or obligation, be determined by this honorable court, and the amount thereof fixed and ascertained. Second. That upon the liability of the defendant therein being so determined and ascertained, that a foreclosure of the said mortgage be decreed, and that the property therein described be sold, and the proceeds applied—First, to the payment of the costs and expenses of these proceedings; next, to the payment of any taxes which may be liens on the said premises; and then to the payment of whatever sum of money may then be due upon the said bond and mortgage so held by this plaintiff. Third. That the defendant, Daniel Bryan, may be adjudged to pay any deficiency which may exist after applying all of such sales moneys as hereinbefore prayed for, and that the plaintiff have leave to enter judgment and issue execution against the said defendant, Daniel Bryan, therefor. Fourth. That the defendant, Daniel Bryan, and all persons claiming under him subsequent to the commencement of this action, may be barred and foreclosed of all equity of redemption or other interest in the said mortgaged premises. Fifth. That the plaintiff may have such other and further relief as the nature of his case may demand and to this honorable court seem meet."

Defendant answered, alleging a defalcation by the treasurer, insolvency of the association and concealment by the directors, and stating that a suit was pending by the plaintiff herein against the directors of the insolvent association, to replace the funds lost through their negligence and mismanagement, and that the bringing of the present suit before the determination of the suit against such directors was premature. Plaintiff demurred to the above allegations of the answer.

Upon the hearing defendant interposed an oral demurrer to the complaint, upon the ground that it did not state facts constituting a cause of action. This demurrer was overruled, and an order entered sustaining plaintiff's demurrer as to the above allegations of the answer, and overruling it as to the rest. Defendant appealed, and filed the following exceptions: "(1) Because the complaint herein did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and the circuit judge erred in overruling defendant's demurrer interposed upon that ground. (2) Because, in overruling the demurrer to the complaint his honor in effect ruled that a receiver of an insolvent building and loan association, which has run the period of its natural life, can sue the borrowing members of said association for further payments, notwithstanding the fact that the association has ceased to be in operation, and no equivalent collections are made from the nonborrowing members of said association. (3) Because to allow the collections sued for in the complaint is to authorize the collection of an extortionate and usurious rate of interest. (4) Because his honor erred in sustaining the be made as payments toward any loan. Barker v. Bigelow, 15 Gray, 180.

It is impossible for the society to say that the installments as received from time to time are not ascribed as payments to the advance. Brownlie v. Russell, 8 App. Cas. 235, 48 L. T. N. S. 881, 47 J. P. 757.

In estimating the amount due by a deceased borrowing member of an association, he should be credited with the withdrawal value and not the estimated value of the shares. Hensel v. International Bldg. & Loan Assn. (Tex.) 20 S. W. Rep. 116.

But a borrower cannot at the same time treat his payments as payments on stock and payments on loans, although his payments on stock, if perceived in and if the association is successfully wound up, may ultimately pay off his mortgage. He cannot make his payments perform a double office at one and the same time. He cannot pay two debts with the same money, and if when he is sued for the loan he chooses to abandon the stock and insist upon the payments which he has made upon it being applied to his loan, he has a right to do so. Up to that time what he has paid upon the stock must be taken to have been paid upon stock and nothing else. Now that he has determined to abandon his stock and apply it to the mortgage, he cannot claim that the payments on stock were at that time really payments on the mortgage just as if he had never owned any stock. The effect of that would be to say that a borrowing member may own stock without paying anything for it. He has no right to claim that the dues paid upon the stock shall be credited to him against the mortgage as of the date when these payments were made, precisely as if he had never owned any stock and had never incurred any obligation for the unpaid installments due upon it. Hazel Loan & Bldg. Assn. v. Groesbeck, 17 Phila. 242.

Right to a credit of profits.

Under the original scheme of such associations the advanced member was not entitled to share in the profits of the enterprise except so far as they operated to bring the stock to maturity before the estimated time. So that if he defaulted or sought to redeem before that time profits were not taken into his account. But where the association had appropriated a certain part of the profits for the benefit of withdrawing members a member seeking to redeem his mortgage was regarded as in the podemurrer to the answer, so far as it applies to the allegations in the twelfth and thirteenth paragraphs of said answer. (The allegations set out above.)

Messrs. Fitssimons & Moffett and R. G. O'Neale, for appellant:

The complaint does not state a cause of action because it seeks to liquidate the affairs of an insolvent corporation by continuing its operation under its charter and by-laws, and by extending the liability of one class of stockholders and limiting that of another.

Re Assigned Estate of Nat. Sav. Loan & Bldg. Asso. 9 W. N. C. 79; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. § 485; Low Street Bldg. Asso. No. 6 v. Zucker, 48 Md. 448; Windsor v. Bandel, 40 Md. 172.

The complaint does not state a cause of action, because the allegations show payment in full, principal and interest, of the amount borrowed.

To enforce the collections sued for would be in violation of the statute against usury.

Hardin v. Trimmer, 27 S. C. 110; Carolina Sav. Bank v. Parrott, 30 S. C. 61.

All payments made, by whatever name called, must be credited on the bond.

Mechanics & Farmers Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Dorsey, 15 S. C. 468; Columbia Bldg. & Loan Asso. v. Bollinger, 12 Rich. Eq. 124, 78 Am. Dec. 468; Thompson v. Gillison, 28 S. C. 542.

The so-called "stock payments" are nothing more than partial payments upon the loan made to the borrower.

Rowland v. Old Dominion Bldg. & Loan Asso. 115 N. C. 825; Overby v. Fayetteville Bldg. & Loan Asso. 81 N. C. 56; Mills v. Salisbury Bldg. & Loan Asso. 75 N. C. 292; North America Bldg. Asso. v. Sutton, 35 Pa. 463, 78 Am. Dec. 849; Hoskins v. Mechanics Bldg. & Loan Asso. 84 N. C. 838; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. § 496, note 2, § 501, p. 502; Low Street Bldg. Asso. No. 6 v. Zucker, supra; Peters' Bldg. Asso. No. 5 of Baltimore v. Jaacksch, 51 Md. 198.

Mr. H. E. Young, also for appellants:

The borrowing member of the association is sition of a withdrawing member and given the benefit of this appropriation.

The borrower is no longer entitled to share in the profits of the association. White v. Mechanics Bldg. Fund Asso. 22 Gratt. 233.

In Bowker v. Mill River Loan Fund Asso., 7 Allen, 100, it was held that the relation of a borrower to the association was simply that of debtor having no interest as a member, or share in its profits.

A borrower does not when he withdraws money on his shares retain his original stock with a right to participate in the profits of the business. Instead of conforming to the regulations and contributing as others are required to do, he puts an end to his relation and ceases to have any interest in its affairs, and by his voluntary act is a stockholder no longer. Overby v. Fayetteville Bldg. & Loan Asso. 81 N. C. 56.

A defaulting borrower is entitled to a credit of the amount actually paid on his mortgage, but not for any share of the profits, which had he continued to the end he might have been entitled to. Watkins v. Workingmen's Bldg. & Loan Asso. 97 Pa. 514; Building Asso. v. Morgan, 2 Kulp, 19.

In Falls v. United States Sav. Loan & Bldg. Asso., 34 L. R. A. 174, 97 Ala. 417, the court in determining to be charged only with the amount he has actually received with legal interest and credited with all his payments upon stock and interest upon the principle of partial payments.

Cook v. Kent, 105 Mass. 254; Bowker v. Mill River Loan Fund Asso. 7 Allen, 100; Windsor v. Bandel, 40 Md. 173; Low Street Bldg. Asso. No. 6 v. Zucker, 48 Md. 448; Peters' Bldg. Asso. No. 5 of Baltimore v. Jaacksch, 51 Md. 198; 1 Endlich. Bldg. Asso. § 498; City Loan & Bldg. Asso. of Augusta v. Goodrich, 48 Ga. 445; Goodrich v. Olby Loan & Bldg. Asso. of Augusta, 54 Ga. 98; Thomson v. Ocmulgee Bldg. & Loan Asso. 56 Ga. 350; Cason v. Seldner, 77 Va. 293; Brownlie v. Russell, 8 App. Cas. 248; Tosh v. North British Bldg. Soc. & Liquidator, 11 App. Cas. 496.

He cannot be made responsible for any losses unless there is a special rule of the association making him liable for them.

Rosenberg v. Northumberland Bldg. Soc. L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 375; Wilson v. Miles Plating Bldg. Soc. Id. 381, note; Bradbury v. Wild [1895] 1 Ch. 388; 1 Endlich, Bldg. Asso. § 496, note 1.

Messrs. Mordecai & Gadsen and B. H. Rutledge, for respondent:

The borrower must return to the association the sum he has actually received, with interest from the time he received it, and must be credited with such sums as he has paid in excess of the interest but not credited with dues paid on his stock, nor with fines. The net balance thus found due is his debt to the association.

Strohen v. Franklin Sav. Fund & Loan Asso. 115 Pa. 278; Rogers v. Hargo, 92 Tenn. 85; Rowland v. Old Dominion Bldg. & Loan Asso. 115 N. C. 825; Towle v. American Bldg. Loan & Invest. Asso. 61 Fed. Rep. 446.

Gary, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an appeal from an order of the circuit judge overruling a demurrer to the complaint on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

ing the question of whether or not the contract was usurious found that the borrower was not a member of the association because not entitled to a share of the profits and then held that his payments upon his shares each year amounted to a reduction of his indebtedness and that since the rate of interest remained the same, the contract was usurious.

In a suit to redeem the plaintiff should be credited as a present debt with all subscriptions to redemption money which would become payable by him, assuming the association to continue for the whole of the calculated period, and should receive credit for the amount of bonus payable to withdrawing members at the date of notice. Fleming v. Self, 3 De G. M. & G. 997, 1 Jur. N. S. 25, 24 L. J. Ch. 29.

A member who wishes to redeem his mortgage may have a credit for bonus which has been declared by the directors. Archer v. Harrison, 7 De G. M. & G. 404, 3 Jur. N. S. 194, 29 L. J. Ch. 227, 4 Jur. N. S. 58.

And in one case it was held that upon foreclosure the borrower is entitled to profits. Ingoldby v. Riley, 28 L. T. N. S. 55.

And in one case it was held that a borrower can-

The complaint and the exceptions Nos. 1, 2, and 3 will accompany the report of the case.

The appellant contends that the complaint shows upon its face that the mortgage has been paid. In considering this question, this court must determine whether the monthly payments for subscriptions to the shares of stock should have been applied upon the mortgage. The authorities upon this question are by no means harmonious. The question has not directly been decided in this state, though there are authorities bearing upon this point. The authorities in our state have, however, decided two questions: (1) That the money advanced was a loan; (2) that where the mortgage is to secure the monthly payments of interest and dues, and the contract is declared to be usurious, the borrower is entitled to a credit, not only for the amount paid as interest, but also for the amount paid for subscription on the shares of stock, in ascertaining the amount due on the mortgage. In the case of Columbia Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Bollinger, 12 Rich. Eq. 126, 78 Am. Dec. 468, it appears that in December, 1854, Bollinger, who was a member of the association and holder of 10 shares of the capital stock, bid off $2,000 of the funds of the corporation at the premium of 85 per cent. The contract, in the beginning, allowed a discount of $700 on an advance of $1,900, which was called a purchase of $2,000 of the funds of the corporation. This sum of $2,000 and interest of 6 per cent was to be repaid, in sums of $10, at the end of each month succeeding the 14th of December, 1854, the date of the bond and mortgage. These were the provisions of the bond. Before the second Monday of December, 1854, the defendant had made 32 monthly payments, amounting to $320. After the execution of the bond and mortgage, the monthly payments required by the condition thereof were duly made until November, 1856. This constituted a further sum paid of $460. The actual payments on the loan or advance amounted to $1,480. Bollinger set up the plea of usury, which was sustained. Chief Justice O'Neal, delivering the opinion of the court, after reciting the provision of the usury law then of force, concludes as follows: "Under this provision, the corporation will be entitled to recover the sum actually loaned, deducting the payments made. The result will be that $1,800 will be the principal, on which payments to the amount of $1,480 have been made; so the corporation has been overpaid $320. The consequence is that complainant's bill must be dismissed." It will thus be seen that, in determining the amount due under the mortgage, the association was required to deduct, not only the amount of the dues paid after the execution of the mortgage, but also the amount of those paid before the execution of the mortgage.

In the case of Mechanics' & Farmers' Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Dorsey, 15 S. C. 462, it appears that in 1878 the defendant obtained a loan of $1,000 from the said company, and, to secure this loan, gave his bond, with mortgage of real estate, conditioned to pay to the association monthly the sum of $17.25, itemized as follows: $5 for monthly subscription on his share; $5 for interest on the sum advanced to him, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum; and $7.25 for the monthly premium which he contracted to give for the loan,—in all, $17.25. He obtained this sum at public sale, agreeing to give a premium of $1.45, which premium was to be paid monthly, and amounted to $7.25 for five shares. For this amount, and for the monthly interest, as, also, the monthly subscription, on his five shares, he gave the bond and mortgage above mentioned; the monthly payments, as therein stated, being in the aggregate $17.25. The defendant failed to meet his bond, and suit was commenced to foreclose the mortgage. The defendant pleaded usury. The following appears in the decree of the circuit judge, which was affirmed on appeal to the supreme court: "It is the opinion of this court that the interest paid to the association plaintiff by the defendant, John Dorsey, should be credited upon the dues that should legally have been not be a withdrawing stockholder so long as his stock is held in pledge by the association. Wadlinger v. Washington German Bldg. & Loan Assn. 133 Pa. 622.

Forfeiture.

Some of the associations for the purpose of enforcing a compliance with the shareholder's contract provide for a forfeiture of his stock in case of default. Since the member gives no security to the association for the performance of his contract some such provision as this appears to be necessary. When, however, the member has his share of the effects of the association advanced to him he gives security for the payment of his future dues and the necessity no longer exists to resort to forfeiture to protect the association. All the association can ask is that the member shall carry out his contract, and if his security is ample there is no occasion for forfeiture and there would seem to be nothing to justify it.

The cases of Southern Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Aniston Loan & T. Co. and Randall v. National Bldg. Loan & Protective Union of Minneapolis (Neb.) well represent the argument on the different sides of the question. In the former 29 L. R. A.

the court says: "The policy of the law favored the forfeiture, the statute authorized it, the rules of the association and contract of the parties provided for it and the association declared it in accordance with the terms of the contract and by-laws. We find thus erected against declaring this forfeiture unconscionable and inequitable . . . a barrier so high we are unable to surmount it."

In Randall v. National Bldg. Loan & Protective Union of Minneapolis, supra, the articles of the association provided for the forfeiture of stock in case of the nonpayment of dues, but the court says: "We agree that equity will not ordinarily relieve against such forfeitures, and this rule probably extends so far that if the borrower had not been a borrower and her stock had been forfeited for delinquency in assessments, she might not have the aid of a court to recover for past payments; but the principle does not extend so far as to induce a court to enable a lender to recover the face of the debt where payments have been made under an agreement that on certain conditions they may be forfeited."

The court then continues: "If A. lend to B. $1000 payable in installments of $10 each—B. agreeing, that, if he fail to pay any installment when it comes collected by the plaintiff, to wit, $5.83 per month, which is the interest, monthly, on $1,000, at the rate of seven per cent per annum. The amount in interest, installments, and premium paid into the association plaintiff from January, 1878, to November, 1879, by the defendant, John Dorsey, was $174.75. The amount to which the association was entitled from the same date to November, 1879, at 7 per cent per annum, was $134.09, leaving a balance of $40.66 in favor of John Dorsey. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed (1) that the complaint be dismissed with costs; (2) that the balance of $40.66 be placed to the credit of the defendant, John Dorsey, on the books of the association plaintiff, who shall apply the same, at the rate of $5.83 monthly, to the satisfaction of the defendant's dues, until the said amount of $40.66 shall have been exhausted." The complaint in that case alleged that the defendant, at the time the action was brought, to wit, September, 1879, was in arrears nine months of subscription, interest, and premium, and that the principal sum was therefore due also. Chief Justice Simpson, delivering the opinion of the court in that case, says: "We regard the question here as settled by the case of Columbia Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Bollinger, 12 Rich. Eq. 124, 78 Am. Dec. 463, in which a very learned and able opinion of the distinguished chancellor on the circuit, Chancellor Carroll, was overruled by the supreme court. That case and this are almost identical. The charters of the two companies were nearly the same; the by-laws almost exactly alike. A stockholder in that company, as in this, borrowed in advance a certain sum of money, which he expected would ultimately be his. He borrowed at public bidding, as in this. He contracted as here, by bond and mortgage, to pay the monthly interest. The premium, instead of being paid monthly, was deducted at the time of the contract. This was paid in cash, instead of by monthly installments. This is the only difference between the cases. Is this a difference in principle? We do not so understand it. The court in that case held the contract usurious; Judge O'Neal, with that strong conviction which characterized all of his opinions, declaring 'that there was no doubt about it;' and, but for the earnest and able decree of Chancellor Carroll, he would not have thought it necessary even to look into the authorities on the subject. The argument of Chancellor Carroll and the opinion of the supreme court overruling it present the two opposing views on this subject. The decree of Chancellor Carroll is based upon two prominent grounds: First. That the dealing of the parties was a transaction between partners, and in reference to partnership funds, and was not a loan. He cited Silver v. Barnes, 6 Bing. N. C. 180, and several English authorities. Second. That the money advanced to Bollinger was but that which he (Bollinger) would get when the corporation wound up, and if he was willing to deduct $300,—the premium,—because he was getting the money in advance, there was nothing illegal in this. In that case, as has already been stated, the premium was deducted at the time the contract was made, instead of being contracted to be paid in monthly installments, as the interest was to be paid. The chancellor thought that in this respect it was like a party agreeing to take less for a debt than the amount actually due, and, having executed the contract, he could not afterwards dispute or repudiate it. These positions, which are the only ones that can be taken with any plausibility in support of such a contract, after full consideration by the supreme court, were overruled, and the contract of Bollinger was declared usurious. We are bound by this decision." In the case of Thompson v. Gillison, 28 S. C. 542, the monthly stock payments were calculated as payments on the bond, divesting the question of usury.

The authorities establish the following propositions: (1) That the appointment of a receiver terminates the contract with the mortgagor as originally contemplated. (2) due, all payments shall be forfeited—and B. pays ninety-nine of such installments and fails to pay the one hundredth, would any court in Christendom permit A. to recover the $1000? It is just such penalties that courts of equity have always relieved against."

The courts are thus far quite evenly divided upon the question.

A borrowing member of a loan association who has forfeited his stock for nonpayment of dues cannot refuse to pay his mortgage because the valid stock outstanding has reached maturity. Having forfeited his stock he has none to set off against his indebtedness on the mortgage, and that being an asset of the association it is entitled to collect it to the full amount. Hatfield v. Huntington City Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. 132 Ind. 149.

If the scheme contemplates that the loan should be paid by the stock when it reaches its par value the borrower is not entitled to have money paid on the stock applied on a loan before that time, and if his stock is forfeited to the association for the non-payment of dues according to the rules of the association, he is entitled to no relief. Freeman v. Ottawa Bldg. Homestead & Sav. Assn. 114 Ill. 182.

If a voluntary association forfeits the stock and proceeds to enforce the mortgage, the court will treat the transaction as a loan, and the account will be made up by charging against the member what he borrowed, with interest and allowing in reduction the amounts which he has paid as dues. Bechtold v. Brehm, 26 Pa. 269.

A forfeiture of the stock will not be enforced and if the amount of the loan is obtained from a foreclosure of the mortgage, the mortgagor is still a stockholder in the association, with all the rights which his stock will give him in the winding up of its affairs. Rowland v. Old Dominion Bldg. & Loan Assn. 115 N. C. 825.

Under the Minnesota statutes, stock cannot be forfeited absolutely to the company, but it must be sold and the claim of the association satisfied and the balance returned to the member. Henkel v. Pioneer Sav. & Loan Assn. (Minn.) 68 N. W. Rep. 248.

In American Homestead Co. v. Linigan, 46 La. Ann. 1118, counsel for the association permitted a credit of the value of the stock, although a forfeiture was at first claimed.

Insolvency or abandonment of scheme.

When the scheme is for any reason abandoned so

That the mortgagor, who is also a shareholder, is not liable for monthly dues accruing after the appointment of a receiver. (3) That upon the determination of his contract with the association, as originally contemplated, the mortgagor is entitled as credits on his mortgage both for the amounts paid as interest, and also as dues on his shares of stock. (4) That, where the amounts paid by the mortgagor as interest and dues aggregate a sum equal to the amount the mortgage was given to secure, a complaint for foreclosure of the mortgage will not be sustained. (5) That if the association goes into the hands of a receiver before the interest on the amount actually advanced, at the rate specified in the contract, and for the length of time the contract was in full force and effect, equals the amount of the premium, then the amount due under the mortgage is to be ascertained by calculating interest on the amount actually advanced, at the rate agreed upon, for the length of time the contract remained of force as originally entered into, and deducting from such amount all payments of interest and dues; the amount paid as interest and dues not to bear interest. In such a contract as this the interest would be calculated at the rate of 10 per cent per annum. (6) The assignment and transfer of the shares of stock by the mortgagor as collateral security for the loan, and consolidating the interest and dues in the mortgage, show that the amount paid monthly, consisting of interest and dues, is to be regarded as what is called "redemption money," and raises an implied agreement that such payment shall be credited on the mortgage.

In support of our positions on these questions, we cite the following authorities; Thompson, Bldg. Asso. chap. 8, §§ 80, 42, 50; Id. chap. 12, §§ 5, 18; Endlich, Bldg. Asso. §§ 883, 873, 496, 498, 502; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law. pp. 629, 642; Randall v. National Bldg. Loan & Protective Union of Minneapolis, 42 Neb. 809, post, 133; Brownlie v. Russell, 8 App. Cas. 248. The leading authorities sustaining a contrary rule as to payments are Strohen v. Franklin Sav. Fund & Loan Asso. 115 Pa. 273; Rogers v. Hargo, 92 Tenn. 85; Towle v. American Bldg. Loan & Invest. Soc. 61 Fed. Rep. 446.

The complaint shows upon its face that the payments made by the defendant exceed the amount due under the mortgage. We decide nothing as to the demurrer to the answer. This action of foreclosure cannot therefore be sustained.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed, and the complaint dismissed.

Rehearing denied.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

Fannie M. RANDALL et al.

NATIONAL BUILDING, LOAN & PROTECTIVE UNION of Minneapolis, Appt.

(42 Neb. 809.)

*1. A member of a building and loan association, who was also a bor-

*Headnotes by IRVING, C.

that the advanced member cannot have the benefit which he expected from it the tendency is to relieve him from his obligation and adjust his account on another basis.

Where it is necessary to appoint a receiver to wind up the association because of insolvency, the court should call in all outstanding loans not giving credit for the amounts paid on the stock, and then distribute the proceeds among all the stockholders. Towle v. American Bldg. Loan & Invest. Soc. 61 Fed. Rep. 446.

If the association becomes insolvent, the borrower should be required to repay the amount borrowed with interest, and will then be entitled to share equally with other members in the distribution of the assets. Strohen v. Franklin Sav. Fund & Loan Asso. 115 Pa. 273.

Upon insolvency of an association the borrower should be charged with the amount loaned with interest and credited with interest and premiums paid, and his stock permitted to stand for a dividend with that of other members of the association. Rogers v. Hargo, 92 Tenn. 85.

When the scheme of the loan association cannot be carried out because of the insolvency of the association, the contract should be treated as rescinded, the loans collected with interest and the borrowing members relegated to their position as stockholders to receive their pro rata shares of the assets which are collected for distribution. State Sav. & Loan Asso. v. Carroll, 4 Pa. Dist. Rep. 6. If the association ceases to do business the rule will be to charge each stockholder with his receipts and interest on them from the time he obtained them, and credit him with his payments and interest from the date each is made and divide the assets according to the result, subject to such equitable modification as to expenses, losses, etc., as may appear equitable from the proof at the trial. City Loan & Bldg. Asso. of Augusta v. Goodrich, 48 Ga. 448.

If the association has rendered impossible the objects for which it was originated by proceeding to dissolve, the borrower cannot be held to his agreement, and his account will be stated in the usual way by casting interest on the amount borrowed and allowing credit for all payments made by him to the association. Waverly Mut. & Permanent Land, Loan & Bldg. Asso. of Baltimore County v. Buck, 64 Md. 388; Cook v. Kent, 105 Mass. 264.

If the association is prematurely dissolved, the

See also 34 L. R. A. 201.

made a general finding for the plaintiff in the first suit, but ascertained the amount due on the mortgage, and decreed a foreclosure and sale. The association appealed. Held, that inasmuch as both parties sought the same relief, and the appellant obtained all the relief it sought, except as to the amount found due, the other issues were immaterial to the appeal.

2. The plan of a building association was that its members should make certain payments periodically upon the stock, and for other purposes; that the stock should mature at a fixed time. Its loans also matured at a fixed time. A member made a number of payments upon the stock, and also certain payments of interest and premium. She then ceased to pay. The association declared her stock forfeited, and instituted an action to foreclose the mortgage securing the loan. Held, that the payments upon the stock should, in an accounting of the amount due on the mortgage, be treated as payments pro tanto on the loan.

3. The fact that the contract of membership provided strictly for the forfeiture of stock in case any payment was not made when due, did not change the above rule. In an action to enforce the mortgage a court of equity will, under such circumstances, relieve against such forfeiture, to the extent of treating the payments made upon the stock as payments upon the loan.

4. The fact that opinions are prepared by the commissioner of this court is no indication that such cases have not been examined by the judges. All questions of law, and, so far as practicable, questions of fact, are mortgagors should be charged the amount borrowed with interest, deducting from time to time the payments of the dues and interest that have been paid. Windsor v. Bandel, 40 Md. 172; Hampstead Bldg. Assn. No. 11 of Baltimore v. King, 58 Md. 279.

†Rehearing headnotes by POSEY, J.

If the association becomes insolvent, the liability of the mortgagor is only to pay the amount received with interest, deducting therefrom the sums which have from time to time been paid. Low Street Bldg. Assn. No. 6 v. Zucker, 48 Md. 452.

If the association should cease active operations under its constitution before the proper time for it to terminate from the time of such suspension, the right to demand the weekly dues as such will cease; and if the amount paid in before that time be not sufficient to cover the original amount advanced on the shares redeemed and all accrued interest thereon, the member will then only be liable for the balance of that amount with interest until paid. But if the amount paid in at the time of the suspension or when the association ceases to operate be equal to or more than the amount advanced on the redeemed shares and the accrued interest thereon and there are no arrearages of dues and fines at that time, in such case the member will be entitled to have the mortgage released. Peters Bldg. Assn. No. 5 of Baltimore v. Jaeksch, 51 Md. 198.

After the association has become insolvent, one of its officers cannot apply stock held by him in satisfaction of his mortgage to the association, in its possession, or which it has assigned to a third person as security for a debt owing to him by it. Quein v. Smith, 103 Pa. 381.

But if in accordance with the rules of the association payments from non-borrowing members might be stopped at any time upon the election of the members of those shares, such election will not change the rights or duties of the borrowing memconsidered by each of the judges and commissioners, and opinions are invariably submitted for examination and criticism by the entire membership of the court.

5. Stock payments, by a borrowing member of a building and loan association, are not pro facto credits upon his indebtedness, so as to reduce pro tanto the amount due on his mortgage.

6. But a borrower may elect to have payments on account of stock applied upon his indebtedness to the association.

7. An agreement whereby the stock of a borrowing member of a building and loan association, pledged as collateral security for his loan, is to be forfeited upon default of interest, without allowing credit on account of payments previously made on such stock, is unconscionable, and will not be enforced by the courts of this state, although recognised as valid in the association's own state.

(November 20, 1904.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a decree of the District Court for Hall County in favor of plaintiff in a suit brought to cancel a mortgage with which was consolidated a suit by a defendant for the foreclosure of the mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. W. A. Prince and George D. Emery for appellant.

Mr. M. Randall for appellees.

Irvine, C., filed the following opinion:

The defendant was a Minnesota corporation, bers. Hekelnkaemper v. German Bldg. & Sav. Assn. of Atchison, 22 Kan. 549.

Change of rules.

A resolution of the association that the value of all stock borrowed on should be allowed to such holders as wished to redeem, cannot be rescinded to the prejudice of a member who had made application to withdraw, and has refrained from paying his monthly dues in the belief that his application has been accepted. Eyre v. Building Assn. 17 Phila. Leg. Int. 148.

Right of third person to resist application.

A borrower who has assigned his stock for a valuable consideration to a third person will not be allowed to set off its value against his debt in a suit to foreclose so as to destroy its value in the hands of the assignee. Schober v. Accommodation Sav. Fund & Loan Assn. 35 Pa. 223.

Attaching creditors of the mortgagor may acquire such an interest in stock as to prevent its application to the payment of the debt at the demand of persons holding a junior lien on the real estate. Central Bldg. Assn. v. Schmitt, 12 W. N. C. 239.

If after the assignment of stock as collateral for a loan, a second loan is taken out, and the same stock is assigned as collateral, the borrower cannot after a judgment on the first loan apply the value of the stock towards its satisfaction. Philadelphia Mercantile Loan Assn. v. Moore, 47 Pa. 238.

Effect of special agreement.

Stock payments will not be credited on the debt if the parties have agreed that the stock is to be kept alive. Kelly v. Perseverance Bldg. Assn. 39 Pa. 148.

If the association takes an assignment of stock to apply in satisfaction of the debt, it must allow the amount which has been paid upon it. Philanthropic Bldg. Assn. v. McKnight, 35 Pa. 470.

H. P. F.

in the nature of a building and loan association. The plaintiff became a member of the association, and procured a loan therefrom, executing her note and mortgage—the latter on property on Grand Island—to secure the loan. This was in September, 1889. In 1891 she brought her suit—her husband joining therein—in the district court of Hall county, charging that she was induced by fraud to procure the loan; pleading a tender to the association of all remaining due on the mortgage; asking an accounting of the amount justly due, and that the mortgage be canceled upon her payment into court of the amount so found. Soon after the defendant commenced suit in the same court to foreclose the mortgage. The two actions were consolidated. The court found generally for the plaintiffs in the first action, ascertaining the amount due on the mortgage as $703.06, and ordered that unless this amount should be paid in a time fixed the mortgaged premises be sold to satisfy the debt. The defendant appeals.

A portion of the argument related to the propriety of the court's finding for the plaintiffs, and the petition and proofs are attacked as insufficient to authorize the relief prayed. We cannot see how these questions are material in the present condition of the case. The plaintiffs asked that they be permitted to pay the amount due. The defendant asked that they be required to pay the amount due. While the decree finds generally for the plaintiffs, it orders a sale of the property if the amount due is not paid within a time certain. The defendant, therefore, obtained all the relief it sought, unless the court erred in ascertaining the amount of recovery. We think this question is the only one for determination, under this condition of the record. The contract of membership in the association required the member to make certain periodical payments as assessments on the stock subscribed; certain payments to the expense fund, and certain other payments, or rather somewhat uncertain payments, to be made as called for, for the purpose of satisfying the stock of its deceased members. The contract of loan required the borrower to pay, in monthly installments, interest on the loan at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, and a "premium" of 5 per cent per annum. In ascertaining the amount due on the mortgage, the court applied the payments made upon the stock of the plaintiff as partial payments of the principal debt. The defendant claims that this was erroneous, that the loan and membership were by virtue of separate contracts, that they must be treated as distinct, that under the rules of the association the stock payments had become forfeited by delinquency in subsequent payments, and that the defendant was entitled to recover the face of the loan together with all unpaid premiums and interest. It must be here remarked that the court allowed no interest from the commencement of the action to the rendition of the decree. This was correct, provided the court properly assessed the amount of recovery, because the amount so found was less than the tender made before action was brought, which was refused by the association.

In order to determine the principal question, it will be necessary to state more particularly some of the features of this particular association. In the first place, its plan was that its stock and loans should both mature at a time certain. There was no general provision for a surrender and withdrawal from the membership, but the right to withdraw before the maturity of the stock was confined to the representatives of deceased members who might, at their option, remain in the association or withdraw. To meet payments on account of such withdrawals, the withdrawal assessments before mentioned were made. The contract of membership provided in different places, very rigidly, that in case any member failed to pay, by the time it was due, any of the various assessments, his membership should be forfeited, and all sums theretofore paid should be forfeited to the association, without right to recover or accounting therefor. The note and mortgage provided that any failure to pay any installment of the interest or premium when due should mature the whole debt. Mrs. Randall subscribed for thirteen shares of stock in September, 1889. Her note and mortgage were dated October 1, 1889, and are for $1,000. The stock was planned to mature in five years. The note was payable fifty-nine months after date. An initiation fee, with certain other charges, and all assessments, interest, and premium, were paid until and including February, 1891, when Mrs. Randall ceased to pay, and soon after brought suit. In July, 1891, and before the suit to foreclose was commenced, the association passed a resolution declaring Mrs. Randall's stock, and the payments thereon, forfeited. Under these circumstances, is Mrs. Randall entitled to have her stock payments credited upon the loan?

30 L. R. A.

In the first place, it must be remembered that this association is a foreign corporation, and is not entitled to the protection which our statutes (Comp. Stat. chap. 16, §§ 145 et seq.) afford or attempt to afford to such corporations in this state. The events were prior to the amendment of the law referred to, in 1891, and the association has not attempted to comply with the provisions of the amendatory law in regard to foreign corporations. The validity or nature of that legislation is not, therefore, presented for consideration in this case. The cases are very numerous, relating to the respective rights of such associations and their members. A review of them would be tedious, and not very useful. A very clear statement of the result of the cases may be found in the note to Robertson v. American Homestead Assn., 69 Am. Dec. 145. The law is there stated with abundant citations that when a member of an association becomes a borrower the transaction has been considered as so much in the nature of a loan that subsequent payments made by the member upon his stock are partial payments upon his debt; but other cases (and we think the greater weight of the modern cases) decide that payments of dues are not, ipso facto, payments upon the mortgage debt, and do not operate of themselves to extinguish it pro tanto; still the borrower has a right to so apply them, and the association may, in case of default, make such application. A proper regard for the nature of the contract, we think, leads to the conclusion that during the currency of the debt and membership the accounts arising out of each should be kept separate, and that stock payments do not, as they are made, operate as payments on the debt; but it must not be forgotten that the object of the stock payments is ultimately to satisfy the stock, and that in the case of a borrower such payments operate ultimately to satisfy the debt. While a borrower may ultimately, if the association works successfully, become entitled to other returns upon his stock until the debt is satisfied, all payments made by him are finally applied to that purpose. We are aware that there always seems to be an effort made to obscure this relationship, and to give the transaction a different form; but whatever may be the devices of actuaries to make it appear that payments are investments simply in a profitable stock, and that the loan, in some mysterious manner, pays itself, the fact is that it is paid from the stock assessments, and that, in the contemplation of both parties, the stock assessments are to be applied sooner or later for that purpose. The right of either party to so apply them, in an organization of this character, during the currency of both loan and membership, is not here to be decided; but the association has terminated Mrs. Randall's membership by its resolution of forfeiture, and has matured the loan by its election to foreclose. This proceeding is therefore not one to determine the rights of a continuing membership, but this is a proceeding, after membership determined and the loan matured, to adjust the correlative rights and duties of the parties. In such case we think it very clear that the stock payments must be applied to the purpose for which they were principally intended, to wit, as payments on the debt. In case of associations whose shares have an uncertain maturity, elaborate calculations have sometimes to be made in order to determine the present value of the shares; but in this case, where the maturity is certain, and the plaintiff renounces all claim to profits, the face of the payments indicates the proper credits. To avoid this application of the payments, the defendant urges the forfeiture clauses of its contract. We agree with the defendant that equity will not ordinarily relieve against such forfeitures, and this rule probably extends so far that if Mrs. Randall had not been a borrower, and her stock had been forfeited for delinquency in assessments, she might not have the affirmative aid of a court to recover for past payments; but this principle does not extend so far as to induce a court to lend its affirmative aid to enable a lender to recover the face of the debt where payments have been made under an agreement that, on certain conditions, they may be forfeited. It is more than probable that the effect of this forfeiture would be to deprive Mrs. Randall of the right to participate in any profits which have arisen on her stock; and, when given this effect, we think the contract of the parties has been enforced. If A. lend B. $1,000, payable in installments of $10 each,—B. agreeing that, if he fail to pay any installment when it comes due, all payments shall be forfeited,—and B. pay 99 of such installments, and fail to pay the one hundredth, would any court in Christendom permit A. to recover the $1,000? It is just such penalties that courts of equity have always relieved against. The treatment of penal bonds, as well as the whole doctrine of mortgages, is based upon a principle of relieving against such forfeitures, or rather refusing to assist them, and the principle which has thus prevailed in such cases for centuries is precisely applicable here. We think, therefore, that the district court proceeded properly in making the computation. In Lincoln Bldg. & Soc. Assn. v. Graham, 7 Neb. 178, it is evident this court adopted a similar view in making the computation.

29 L. R. A.

The plaintiffs state in their brief that they took a cross-appeal. Aside from this statement, the record bears no evidence of such fact. This is not very material, however, because the plaintiffs state that their cross-appeal is based upon the failure of the district court to find in their favor on their plea of usury. We cannot find, on a close examination of the record, that the plaintiffs anywhere plead usury in the transaction. The decree of the district court is therefore, in all things, affirmed.

Affirmed.

Harrison, J., did not sit.

A petition for rehearing was subsequently granted in response to which on February 19, 1895, Post, J., delivered the following opinion:

It is evident from the brief submitted by counsel for the appellant, that they are not familiar with the method of transacting business in this court. The fact that the opinion heretofore filed (42 Neb. 809), was not prepared by a member of the court must not be taken as an indication that the conclusion therein announced represents the views of the commissioners only. On the contrary, every question of law, and, so far as practicable, every issue of fact, is examined by all the court, both judges and commissioners; and, in accordance with our invariable rule, opinions, whether prepared by judges or commissioners, are submitted for examination and criticism by the entire membership of the court. This observation is suggested, not alone by the courteous remarks of counsel for appellant, but also by the fact that our practice, which is conceded to be an innovation upon the rule in other jurisdictions, is apparently not understood by members of the profession in our sister states. But to return to the case at bar. Not only is the judgment, heretofore announced that of the court, but it is in accordance with our unanimous conclusion at the time this cause was argued and submitted.

2. A re-examination of the subject, in the light of able briefs, has tended to confirm the views stated on the former occasion. It may be conceded that the liability of a member of a building and loan association on his stock and on his loan, if he be a borrower, are entirely different, and that payments on the former are not necessarily credits on the latter. It does not follow, however, that a failure to pay interest or dues in accordance with his agreement or the by-laws of the association will in every instance per se amount to a forfeiture of his stock, so as to authorize a confiscation of the amount paid thereon. We adopt as sound the doctrine announced in the text of Thompson on Building Associations (page 97), viz.: "If the borrower is in default, having violated the rules, he has forfeited his right to any interest profit; but he has not thereby forfeited his stock, and can apply that as a credit if he chooses." We are inclined, also, to agree with the view recently expressed by the supreme court of North Carolina in Rowland v. Old Dominion Bldg. & Loan Assn., 115 N. C. 825, that an agreement whereby the stock of a member of a building association, held as collateral security for a loan made to the pledgee, is to be forfeited upon default of payment of dues or interest, without allowing credit on account of payments previously made on such stock, is unconscionable, and should not be enforced by the courts of this state, although recognized as valid in the association's own state. We have not overlooked the recent case of Southern Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Annis-ton Loan & T. Co. 101 Ala. 582, ante, 120, which certainly sustains the proposition contended for by the appellant herein. But that decision appears to rest upon the authority of North America Bldg. Assn. v. Sutton, 85 Pa. 463, overruling, as it is said, cases in that state asserting a different doctrine. However, that assumption is, we think, due to a misconception of the effect of the case last cited. According to the earlier Pennsylvania cases stock payments by a borrowing member were regarded as credits on his mortgage, reducing pro tanto the amount of his indebtedness to the association; and although that doctrine has been modified by North America Bldg. Assn. v. Sutton, supra, to the extent that payments by a borrower on account of his stock are no longer ipso facto credits on his mortgage, they may be still so applied at his election, as is evident from the following quotation from the case mentioned: "What was there said [referring to prior decisions of that court] is not to be regarded as laying down the rule that payment of the dues on stock ipso facto works an extinguishment of so much of the mortgage. The debtor may so apply it, but the payment itself is not an application of the money to the reduction of the mortgage. . . . The debtor is not compelled to give up his stock whenever suit is brought on his bond or mortgage. Such would, however, be the necessity of the case, if the law applied, against his consent, the installment paid by him upon his stock to the discharge of his indebtedness for money borrowed." See also Watkins v. Workmen's Bldg. & Loan Assn. 97 Pa. 514; Economy Bldg. Assn. v. Hungerbuehler, 98 Pa. 258. The Alabama case is not, it seems, sanctioned either by the weight of authority or the sounder reasoning, as is demonstrated by the opinion of our Brother Irvine, above referred to.

The motion for a rehearing is accordingly denied.

Harrison, J., not sitting.

UNION PACIFIC R. CO., Ply. in Err.,
v.

Lars ERICKSON.

(41 Neb. L.)

- *1. The plaintiff was a section man employed by the defendant. He was engaged in repairing the roadway, and stepped away from the track to permit a fast passenger train to pass. He stood about 12 feet from the track. As the train passed him, a large piece of coal fell from the tender, struck the ground, and, being shattered, a fragment rebounded, and struck the plaintiff, injuring him. The evidence showed that it required the full capacity of the tender to store enough coal to supply the engine during its run, and that the tender had been loaded to its full capacity from a chute without any precautions as to the safe disposition of the coal in the tender; that it was the fireman's duty to place in safety any coal found in a dangerous position. Held, that, under these facts, it was proper to submit the case to the jury as to whether the company had been negligent in loading the coal.
2. While the facts justifying an inference of negligence must be established by the evidence, and their existence must not be left to the conjecture of a jury, and while, ordinarily, negligence cannot be presumed merely from the happening of an accident, still facts may be established by circumstances, and the same facts which prove the accident may be circumstances from which the facts justifying an inference of negligence may be found to exist.
3. In such a case evidence tending to show that it was practicable to place railings about the top of the tenders to safely increase their capacity, and that this tender was not provided with such a railing,—Held, to be admissible.
4. Employment in the service of a common master is not alone sufficient to constitute two men fellow servants within the rule exempting the master from liability to one for injuries caused by the negligence of the other. To make the rule applicable, there must be some consociation in the same department of duty or line of employment.

(June 5, 1894.)

ERROR to the District Court for Dodge County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servant. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the Commissioner's opinion.

Messrs. J. M. Thurston, W. R. Kelly, and E. F. Smith, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff has entirely failed to prove any actionable negligence on the part of the defendant's employes in any respect stated in the petition, or to account for the falling or bursting of the piece of coal mentioned therein.

Mere proof of the injury, or of the immediate accident, is insufficient to establish negligence, and negligence is not to be inferred.

*Headnotes by IRVINE, C.

NOTE.—Upon the subject of who are fellow servants within the rule that the master is not liable for injury to one by another, see note to Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 732.

Patterson, Railway Accident Law, § 378, and note; Grossenbach v. Milwaukee, 65 Wis. 35, 56 Am. Rep. 614; Baker v. Madison, 56 Wis. 380; Brown v. Kendall, 6 Cush. 292; Rockwood v. Wilson, 11 Cush. 221; Nitro Glycerine Case, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 524, 21 L. ed. 206; Burlington & M. R. R. Co. v. Wendt, 12 Neb. 76; Stevenson v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 18 Fed. Rep. 498; Morrison v. Phillips & C. Constr. Co. 44 Wis. 410, 28 Am. Rep. 599; Ladd v. New Bedford R. Co. 119 Mass. 412, 20 Am. Rep. 831; Steffen v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 46 Wis. 259; Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 51 Wis. 196; De Vau v. Pennsylvania & N. Y. Canal & R. Co. 180 N. Y. 632; Sorenson v. Menasha Paper & Pulp Co. 56 Wis. 888; Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Wis. 616, 58 Am. Rep. 881.

The court erred in allowing the plaintiff, on cross-examination of the engineer, Myers, to show that after the date of the accident railings were put around the top of the locomotive tenders belonging to the company.

Lang v. Sanger, 76 Wis. 71; Columbia & P. S. R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 144 U. S. 202, 36 L. ed. 405; McClary v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 3 Neb. 44, 19 Am. Rep. 631; Pickett v. Orock, 20 Wis. 858.

Plaintiff does not say he knew the way the tender was usually loaded when it daily passed him while he was working on the right of way, but when he could have known this by observation the law presumes that he did know it.

Belin v. Armour, 58 Wis. 1.

An act from which injurious consequences would not reasonably be expected or apprehended by persons of common prudence is not an act of negligence.

Wood v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 51 Wis. 201; McKee v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 817, 83 Iowa, 616; Loftus v. Union Ferry Co. of Brooklyn, 84 N. Y. 459, 88 Am. Rep. 533; Sjogren v. Hall, 58 Mich. 274; Richards v. Rough, 53 Mich. 212; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Howard, 4 U. S. App. 202, 49 Fed. Rep. 206; Meyer v. Midland Pac. R. Co. 2 Neb. 339; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 127 Ill. 637; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Weaver, 85 Kan. 412, 57 Am. Rep. 176.

If the plaintiff is right in his assumption that this injury arose from a defect in the construction of the tender, or in its management, obvious to himself, or which with ordinary care he might have known, then by continuing in his employment without demurrer he assumed such risk and hazard.

Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lonergan, 118 Ill. 41; Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Wis. 620, 58 Am. Rep. 831; 14 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 842; Wood, Mast. & S. 845; Minty v. Union Pac. R. Co. 4 L. R. A. 409, 2 Idaho, 437.

The falling of coal sometimes from a moving or passing train was a danger incident to his employment, and his familiarity therewith must be considered as conclusively proven.

Wood, Mast. & S. §§ 326 et seq.; 3 Wood, Railway Law, 1452 et seq.; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1008; Patterson, Railway Accident Law, 342 et seq.; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1008; Herbert v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 8 Dak. 88; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 29 L. ed. 755; Bunt v. Sierra Butte Gold Min. Co. 138 U. S. 438, 34 L. 29 L. R. A.

ed. 1031; Howland v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 230; De Forest v. Jewett, 88 N. Y. 264; Hughes v. Winona & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 187; Fraker v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 32 Minn. 54; Dowell v. Burlington, C. R. & N. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 639; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Donahue, 75 Ill. 106; Sweeney v. Central Pac. R. Co. 57 Cal. 15; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Lonergan, 118 Ill. 41; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Peasey, 84 Kan. 472; Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Wis. 616, 58 Am. Rep. 881; 14 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 842; Ladd v. New Bedford R. Co. 119 Mass. 412, 20 Am. Rep. 831; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 122 U. S. 189, 30 L. ed. 1114; Barton's Hill Coal Co. v. Reid, 3 Macq. H. L. Cas. 265.

Had the negligence been shown to exist, and to have been that of the engineer or fireman then they were fellow servants with the plaintiff, engaged in the same general business, and under the same employers; and for that reason no recovery can be had.

Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 88 Am. Dec. 339; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 385, 86 Am. Dec. 268; 24 Am. Law Rev. p. 190; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Collins, 2 Duv. 114, 87 Am. Dec. 486; Wright v. New York Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 562; St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Triplett, 11 L. R. A. 778, 54 Ark. 289; Cooley, Torts, 541-544; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 122 U. S. 195, 30 L. ed. 1117; 1 Addison, Torts, 565; 3 Wood, Railway Law, § 338; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1026; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 888, § 115; 2 Rorer, Railroads, 829; Pierce, Railroads, p. 361; 1 Redfield, Railroads, 5th ed. 543; Wood, Mast. & S. 821, § 455; Fraser, Mast. & S. 210; McKinney, Fellow Servants, § 75; Pollock, Torts, 85; 1 Smith, Mast. & S. 208-238; Ooon v. Syracuse & U. R. Co. 5 N. Y. 492; Brodeur v. Valley Falls Co. 16 R. I. 448; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fort, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 558, 21 L. ed. 739; Waller v. South-Eastern R. Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 109; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1008; Holden v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 268, 37 Am. Rep. 348; Whaalan v. Mad River & L. E. R. Co. 8 Ohio St. 249; Foster v. Minnesota Cent. R. Co. 14 Minn. 860; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377, 28 L. ed. 787; Pittsburg, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Devinney, 17 Ohio St. 198; Kumler v. Junction R. Co. 38 Ohio St. 150; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Weaver, 85 Kan. 423, 57 Am. Rep. 176; Mealman v. Union Pac. R. Co. 37 Fed. Rep. 189.

The rule as announced in Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49, 88 Am. Dec. 339, was recognized in — Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. ed. 612; Van Winkle v. Manhattan R. Co. 23 Blatchf. 422; Rohrbach v. Pacific Railroad, 43 Mo. 187.

The rule was also recognized in —

Armour v. Hahn, 111 U. S. 818, 28 L. ed. 442; Tuttle v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 122 U. S. 189, 30 L. ed. 1114; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 478, 27 L. ed. 1008; Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 837; Clifford v. Old Colony R. Co. 141 Mass. 564; Keys v. Pennsylvania Co. (Pa.) 1 Cent. Rep. 893; Collins v. St. Paul & S. O. R. Co. 30 Minn. 31; Whaalan v. Mad River & L. E. R. Co. 8 Ohio St. 249; Gormley v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 73 Ind.

81; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Wachter, 60 Md. 395; Houston & T. O. R. Co. v. Rider, 62 Tex. 287; Boldt v. New York Cent. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 432; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Coon v. Syracuse & U. R. Co. 5 N. Y. 492; Capper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Ind. 305; Henry v. Staten Island R. Co. 81 N. Y. 878; Russell v. Hudson River R. Co. 17 N. Y. 134; Houland v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 54 Wis. 226; Heine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 525; Cooper v. Milwaukee & P. du Ch. R. Co. 23 Wis. 668; Roberts v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co. 83 Minn. 218; Brown v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 81 Minn. 553; Toner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 69 Wis. 188; Brown v. Central Pac. R. Co. (Cal.) 7 Pac. Rep. 447; Beal v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171; Vaities v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 85 Ill. 590; Harvey v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 88 N. Y. 481; Holden v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 268, 37 Am. Rep. 343; King v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 9 Cush. 112; Van Wickle v. Manhattan R. Co. 32 Fed. Rep. 278; Gillshannon v. Stony Brook R. Corp. 10 Cush. 228; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Ryan, 82 Tex. 585; Elliot v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 3 L. R. A. 863, 5 Dak. 523.

There is and can be no question of vice-principal in this case, as no one having any control or direction over the plaintiff was guilty of or contributed to the act which caused the injury.

McAndrews v. Burns, 89 N. J. L. 117; Mealman v. Union Pac. R. Co. 87 Fed. Rep. 189; Nashville & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 9 Heisk. 27; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Caven, 9 Bush, 659; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Collins, 2 Duv. 114, 87 Am. Dec. 486; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Robinson, 4 Bush, 507; Murray v. South Carolina R. Co. 1 McMull. L. 885, 86 Am. Dec. 268; Waller v. South Eastern R. Co. 2 Hurlst. & C. 103.

On petition for rehearing.

The existing rule of the common law as to a fellow servant is not an exception to the general rule as to the master's liability to the public, but it is a rule in itself and applicable to a different relation.

Pollock, Jurisp. p. 117; Hays v. Millar, 77 Pa. 238, 18 Am. Rep. 445.

There is no liability on the part of the company in the case at bar, because there was no neglect of any of the personal duties of the master, or of any duty which by reason of the relation was due from it to its servant.

Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 385, 37 L. ed. 790; Baulee v. New York & H. R. Co. 59 N. Y. 856, 17 Am. Rep. 325; Dow v. Kansas Pac. R. Co. 8 Kan. 642; Morgan v. Vale of Neath R. Co. 5 Best & S. 786.

The old rule laid down in the Farwell Case, supra, has been declared to be intact by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 388, 37 L. ed. 772. See also Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Hamblly, 154 U. S. 849, 38 L. ed. 1009; Howard v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 26 Fed. Rep. 887; Schlereth v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. (Mo.) 19 S. W. Rep. 1184.

The injury to the plaintiff was not, within the authorities, the result of actionable negligence upon the part of the defendant. It was too remote and disconnected for any such act to constitute a cause of action in plaintiff's favor against the defendant.

Atkinson v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 60 Wis. 141, 50 Am. Rep. 352; Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 469, 24 L. ed. 256; Hutchinson, Carr, 2d ed. § 809; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Trainor, 88 Md. 542; Davies v. Mann, 10 Mees. & W. 546.

Messrs. Frick & Dolesal, for defendant in error:

Servants engaged in different departments are not fellow servants.

Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 98 Ill. 802, 34 Am. Rep. 168; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Kelly, 127 Ill. 687; Indianapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Morgenstern, 106 Ill. 216; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Norment, 84 Va. 167; Moon v. Richmond & A. R. Co. 78 Va. 745, 49 Am. Rep. 401; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. McKennie, 81 Va. 71; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 413, 57 Am. Rep. 176; East Tennessee, V. & G. R. Co. v. DeArmond, 86 Tenn. 78; Krogg v. Atlanta & W. P. Railroad, 77 Ga. 103; King v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 277; Garraby v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. E. R. Co. 25 Fed. Rep. 258; O'Donnell v. Allegheny Valley R. Co. 59 Pa. 239, 98 Am. Dec. 386; Ryan v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 60 Ill. 171, 14 Am. Rep. 82; Lewis v. St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. 59 Mo. 495, 21 Am. Rep. 885; Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Vautrain v. St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. 8 Mo. App. 538; Hall v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 74 Mo. 298; Hardy v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 36 Fed. Rep. 657; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brooks, 58 Ky. 129; Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Caven, 9 Bush, 559.

Irvine, C., filed the following opinion:

Erickson was employed by the railway company as a section hand, and was engaged in his work repairing the road-bed of the railroad near Fremont, when a fast passenger train approached, and he stepped aside to let it pass. As the train passed him, a large piece of coal fell from the tender of the locomotive, struck the ground near him, and broke into smaller pieces, one of which flew towards him, striking him, and causing a fracture of the leg. He brought this action against the railroad company alleging as negligence that the piece of coal had been negligently allowed to fall from the tender while the train was running at a high rate of speed; that the coal had been negligently loaded and negligently permitted to remain on the tender in a position rendering it liable to fall and to be cast off by the motion of the train. The railway company answered, among other things denying any negligence upon its part, and alleging contributory negligence on the part of Erickson. There was a verdict and judgment for Erickson for $1,625.

Probably, to follow the order of discussion in the brief of the railway company will disclose the features of the case as well as possible. The first point made is that the evidence did not disclose any negligence on the part of the railway company or its employees. The rule of negligence has been so frequently announced by this court that it is hardly necessary to restate it. Questions of negligence and contributory negligence are for the jury where, from the facts proved, different minds may reasonably draw different conclusions. The evidence here tends to show that Erickson, when he saw the train approaching, stepped aside until he was about 12 feet from the track, and that in so doing he pursued the course customarily resorted to by section men. There is no doubt that a large lump of coal did fall from the tender as the train passed him; that it struck the ground near the track, and, breaking into pieces, one portion thereof rebounded and struck him, causing the injury. It is quite clearly established that the lump of coal was no larger than would conveniently go into the firebox of the engine, and it may be assumed that it was proper to have a lump of such size upon the tender. The train was bound east. The run of the engine was from Grand Island to Council Bluffs, a distance of over 150 miles. Coal was loaded upon the tender at Grand Island. There was no coal-laying station for passenger trains between the two points. The tender of this engine would hold from ten to eleven tons, and it required that amount of coal to supply the engine during its run. The coal was loaded from a chute at Grand Island, and, according to the fireman, the tender was loaded at this time, as usual, before the engineer and fireman mounted the engine. As he states, "I found it in all ways thrown in, just as they pulled the chute down." It lay "in all shapes, upside down, every way dropped in there." From this and from all the evidence it is quite clear that in order to make the run, it was necessary to completely fill the tender; that, in order to do so, the coal was dropped in from a chute without any precautions as to its safe disposition, but the fireman testifies that it was his duty to "wet the coal down;" that for that purpose he mounted the tender before the engine started, and, if he saw any coal liable to fall from the tender, it was his duty to put it in a place of safety. According to this witness, about six tons of coal remained in the tender at the time of the accident. The train was a through train, and stopped at only a few stations. We think that this evidence fairly made a case to submit to the jury under the rule as above stated. The principal contention on the part of the railroad company is that negligence in loading the coal could not be inferred merely from the fact that the lump fell from the tender. There is no doubt of the general principle that negligence cannot be inferred merely from the fact that an accident happened, and it is also true that, while negligence is an inference to be drawn from the facts proved, facts warranting that inference must be proved, and the jury cannot be left to conjecture the existence of facts which might ground the inference of negligence. But facts may be established by circumstances as well as by direct testimony, and the same facts which prove the accident may, in some cases, be circumstances which establish the facts justifying an inference of negligence. So in this case. Neither fireman nor engineer saw the coal fall. It was certainly not dislodged from a place of safety by any act of theirs at the time. Erickson and the section boss did see it fall as the train passed. It is not merely a conjecture, it is a plain inference, from the fact that it fell under the circumstances, that it had been so placed upon the tender that it was in a position from which it was liable to be dislodged by the motion of the train. All the evidence shows that it was necessary to heap the coal upon the tender in order to enable it to carry sufficient to make the run. The fireman's evidence shows that no precautions were taken in loading to load it safely, and that he was charged with the duty to inspect the loading, and change the position of the pieces where they were unsafe. The method of loading accounts for the lumps being in a position of unstable equilibrium, and, unless we disregard the laws of physics, we must say that it had been left in such a position or it would not have fallen. In this connection we are cited to the case of Schultz v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 67 Wis. 616, 58 Am. Rep. 881, a case arising out of a similar accident. Portions of that decision are open to criticism, but upon the question of negligence we do not think that the conclusion was wrong, or even that it conflicted with that we reach. All that the court there held was that the facts established did not make out a case of negligence in law. The court did not say that a jury would not be justified in finding negligence from such facts. We would say the same,—that the court should not, under such facts, instruct the jury either that there was or was not negligence. This was an inference for the jury to draw.

As to contributory negligence, we can see no room for doubt. Erickson was necessarily near the track. He had never seen coal fall from tenders. He did not observe how this tender was loaded, and he was certainly far enough away to be secure from any ordinary danger to be apprehended from a passing train properly loaded.

Our attention is here directed to an assignment of error in regard to the admission of evidence to the effect that, subsequently to this accident, railings were put around the tops of tenders belonging to the company. If testimony had been directly admitted to show that fact, a question, to say the least, serious, would be presented, but the record hardly supports the assignment of error in that regard. We quote all relating to the subject: "The Union Pacific Company . . . or arrangements can be made by which there is a kind of railing around the top of the tenders, isn't there? A. Well, I should answer that there could be arrangements made. Q. Would not you answer that they have got such railing around the top of the tenders? A. They have at this time, but we did not then." These questions and answers were objected to. They occur in the cross-examination of the engineer, who was called by the company. They were followed by some questions, without objections, as to the purposes for which those railings were placed upon the tenders. Such evidence tended to show that they were to increase the capacity of the tender. When the questions objected to be examined, it will be found that there was no inquiry in regard to subsequent acts of the company. The first question merely asked if it was practicable to use a railing. The second asked whether the company had not such railings around the tenders, without specifying the time. The statement that they had been placed there since the accident was the engineer's answer, and from his use of pronouns it is not clear whether he meant that all tenders had been so provided since the accident or whether he meant to say simply that his engine did not have one at that time. We do not think this testimony is open to the objection urged. The feature objected to was really introduced by the company itself upon redirect examination, as follows: "Now, with regard to this railing that Mr. Frick has spoke about, were such railings used at the time of that tender at that time, that you knew of? A. No, sir. Q. Do you know of any other passenger engine at that time? A. I don't remember, but I think they was putting them on. I would not say positively." The peculiar construction both of these questions and their answers still leaves the same doubt as to the meaning of the evidence. But when we consider the evidence as to the capacity of this tender, and the amount of coal required, together with the evidence just referred to, it would seem that the railings were found necessary to prevent overloading, and that the company then realized this fact. This much was certainly material, and tending to establish the negligence complained of.

The next contention is that, if the accident resulted in the manner claimed by the plaintiff, it was a matter obvious to him, and that, continuing in the employment, he submitted to the hazard thereof. But, as already stated, he never knew such an accident to happen; moreover, he knew nothing about the manner of loading the tenders. These were matters wholly foreign to that portion of the company's work in which he was engaged, and this argument will accord with the further argument made, that the company could not be held liable unless it had been informed by the previous occurrence of similar accidents that this manner of loading the tenders was dangerous. Neither argument is well founded. The former for the reason that Erickson did not know, was not bound to know, and was not in a position to know, the danger. The latter for the reason, if for no other, that it must occur to every one of ordinary judgment that the natural and probable consequence of an insecure load of coal upon the tender of an engine running at a high rate of speed might be the falling of coal therefrom, and consequent injury to persons at stations, and workmen necessarily engaged near the track. It would not require the actual happening of such event to apprise one of the danger.

The next proposition is that Erickson was a fellow servant of whoever was guilty of negligence, and that the company is therefore not liable. Upon this subject elaborate briefs have been filed upon either side, reviewing nearly all the American authorities. We shall not here undertake such a review. We are aware of the hopeless conflict existing. In fact, a study of the question must convince any one that shortly after the introduction of railways the law entered upon a slow but marked period of transition upon the subject of fellow servants. No definite result has yet been reached. Probably the leading case both in America and in England applying the doctrine of fellow servants to all the employes of a common master is that of Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp., 4 Met. 49, 88 Am. Dec. 339. All the cases holding that broad doctrine seem to be based directly or indirectly upon the authority or the reasoning of Chief Justice Shaw in that case. It was decided in 1842 before the railway system of the country was developed, before the existence of other large corporations employing vast numbers of men engaged in the pursuit of one general object, but performing different functions, and engaged in many distinct departments. This state of affairs was then just arising, and the vast change of conditions in the relations of master and servant was then only beginning to appear. The extent of that change, and the consequences of applying old rules to new conditions could not then be foreseen. In that case, as in all others upon the subject, the reasons for the rule exempting masters from liability to servants for injuries produced by the negligence of their fellow servants are stated as two-fold: First, that such injuries must be presumed to be within the contemplation of the parties when they made their contract; and, secondly, that public policy requires the enforcement of such a rule, upon the theory that, by enforcing it, each servant is made closely observant of the acts of his fellow servants, and that the scrutiny of one another naturally tends to efficiency and care. The first reason given, where the rule is sought to be applied without discrimination to all servants of a common master, has already been completely set aside and disregarded, even by those courts in America most inclined to conservatism upon the subject. It is everywhere conceded—First that, inasmuch as a corporation can only act through agents, and all agents are servants, the logical application of the rule would discharge a corporation entirely from liability to its servants; and this gives rise to a corollary that where the negligence is that of a vice-principal, whose acts must be taken as those of the master, the rule does not apply. The recognition of this exception was necessary to preserve another rule, that, while a servant assumes the dangers incident to his employment, he does not assume dangers caused by the negligence of his master. There is as much reason for holding that a servant in entering an employment contracts with a view to possible negligence of the master, as to hold that he contracts with a view to possible negligence of the man who works beside him and upon the same footing. To illustrate by reference to railways, which probably afford as great a variety of grades in employment as any occupation, can it be logically said that a section man in the matters within the scope of his employment is less liable to err than a conductor, superintendent, or general manager with reference to his own duties? To the writer's mind, when the first distinction was drawn between grades of servants, the force of the general rule, so far as it was based upon contract, was destroyed.

As to the second reason,—that founded upon public policy,—there is much force in the observation of Mr. Justice Field in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 877, 28 L. ed. 787: "It may be doubted whether the exemption has the effect thus claimed for it. We have never known parties more willing to subject themselves to dangers of life and limb because, if losing the one or suffering in the other, damages could be recovered by their representatives or themselves for the loss or injury. The dread of personal injury has always proved sufficient to bring into exercise the vigilance and activity of the servant." Still, we concede that there may be some force to the rule so far as grounded upon public policy, and confined to servants who are, in the language of the supreme court of Illinois, "consociated by means of their daily duties, or co-operating in the same department of duty and in the same line of employment." Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 98 Ill. 302, 34 Am. Rep. 168. Beyond this line we can see no force in it. When the authorities are examined, it is found that they range themselves in two general classes,—those following the opinion of Chief Justice Shaw, and those distinguishing between grades of employment and employes in distinct departments of service. The principal objection urged to the latter class is that, by adopting such distinction, the courts overthrow a general rule of easy application, and adopt one not susceptible of precise application, and uncertain in its results. Possibly this objection is well taken. If so, we can only say that it accords with the general spirit of the common law. Perhaps the main distinction between the civil law and the common law is that the civil law is based upon well-defined logical rules readily susceptible of ascertainment, while the common law is founded upon broader general principles, to be applied to the diversity of human affairs in such a manner as to favor individual liberty and to conform themselves to changed conditions. When the law of fellow servants was first announced, business enterprises were comparatively small and simple. The servants of one master were not numerous; they were all engaged in the pursuit of a simple and common undertaking. Now things have changed. Large enterprises are conducted by persons or corporations employing vast numbers of servants, divided into classes, each pursuing a different portion of the work, and each practically independent of the other. The old reasons do not apply to the new conditions. We are not prepared in this case to propose any set rule for always determining when two employes are fellow servants within the meaning of the rule, and when they are not, nor are we required for present purposes so to do. Erickson was a section man. He was employed, with several others, to keep the road-bed and the track in repair. The fireman was employed to fire the engine, and perform certain duties in connection with the operation of trains. Some one was employed at Grand Island to load the tenders with coal. With either the fireman or this third person Erickson had nothing in common except that he drew his pay from a common source, and that, in a broad sense, they were all carrying out parts of a vast transportation business. Erickson had no control over either of the others, no opportunity of judging of their competency, no supervision of their specific acts, and only by adopting the broadest rule as announced by Mr. Justice Shaw could we hold them to be fellow servants. This rule we are not prepared to adopt. We hold, on the contrary, that employment in the service of a common master is not alone sufficient to constitute two men fellow servants within the rule exempting the master from liability to one for injuries caused by the negligence of the other, and that to make the rule applicable there must be some consociation in the same department of duty or line of employment. For the purposes of this case we are content to follow the opinion of Mr. Justice Miller in Garrahy v. Kansas City, St. J. & C. B. R. Co., 25 Fed. Rep. 258, where in the light of quite recent decisions and of the mature judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, supra, he held that persons occupying such relations were not fellow servants within the meaning of the rule.

The other errors discussed in the briefs relate to the giving and refusal of instructions. If we are right in the conclusions reached on the branches of the case already discussed, there was no error in the instructions, as those given and refused, so far as they are complained of, simply relate to those questions.

Judgment affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

COLORADO SUPREME COURT.

Albert H. JONES, Plff. in Err.,

v.
ASPEN HARDWARE CO.

(.....Colo.....)

1. Neither a de jure nor a de facto corporation can exist where the articles are not filed in the office of the secretary of state and the fee therefor paid as required by Sess. Laws 1887, p. 406, which expressly prohibits the exercise of any corporate powers until this is done.
2. Members of a company which fails in an attempt to acquire corporate existence must be given the advantages as well as the liabilities of a partnership.

(May 20, 1896.)

ERROR to the District Court for Pitkin County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover possession of certain goods which had been taken by a United States marshal under attachment against one A. B. Eads. Reversed.

Statement by Hayt, Ch. J.:

The Aspen Hardware Company instituted this suit in the court below for the purpose of recovering a stock of goods seized by the United States marshal under a writ of attachment issued out of the circuit court of the United States at the suit of Joseph A. Thatcher, plaintiff, against one A. B. Eads. The only question in the case has reference to the corporate capacity of defendant in error, it not having filed, prior to the attachment levy, its certificate of incorporation with the secretary of state, as required by statute. Sess. Laws 1887, p. 406. In the district court judgment was entered in favor of the company. The statute reads as follows: "Every corporation, joint-stock company or association, incorporated by or under any general or special law of this state, or by or under any general or special law of any foreign state or kingdom, or of any state or territory of the United States beyond the limits of this state, having capital stock divided into shares, shall pay to the secretary of state for the use of the state, a fee of ten dollars, in case the capital stock which said corporation, joint-stock company, or association is authorized to have, does not exceed one hundred thousand dollars; but, in case the capital stock thereof is in excess of one hundred thousand dollars, the secretary of state shall collect the further sum of ten (10) cents on each and every thousand dollars of such excess, and a like fee of ten cents on each thousand of the amount of each subsequent increase of stock. The said fee shall be due and payable upon the filing of the certificate of incorporation, articles of association, or charter of said corporation, joint-stock company or association, in the office of the secretary of state; and no such corporation, joint-stock company or association shall have or exercise any corporate powers or be permitted to do any business in this state until the said fee shall have been paid; and the secretary of state shall not file any certificate of incorporation, articles of association, charter or certificate, of the increase of capital stock, or certify or give any certificate to any such corporation, joint-stock company, or association, until said fee shall have been paid to him. But this act shall not apply to corporations not for pecuniary profit, or corporations organized for religious, educational, or benevolent purposes." Acts 1887, p. 406, § 1.

Messrs. Butler & McKinley and Wilson & Salmon, for plaintiff in error:

The defendant can question the corporate existence and capacity of plaintiff.

A party "dealing with a corporation is not estopped to deny its legal existence where there is a failure to comply with an express condition precedent, requiring certain acts to be done before the corporation can be considered in existence or its transaction possessing validity.

Humphreys v. Mooney, 5 Colo. 282; Abbott v. Omaha Smelting & Ref. Co. 4 Neb. 416; Mokelumne Hill Canal & Min. Co. v. Woodbury, 14 Cal. 427, 78 Am. Dec. 658; Bates v. Wilson, 14 Colo. 166; Buffalo & A. R. Co. v. Cary, 26 N. Y. 77.

There must be a colorable, legal, corporate existence, to give life as a corporation de facto.

Whatever is germane to the subject-matter expressed in the title or naturally related to or connected therewith is within the requirement that an act of the legislature shall embrace but one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in the title.

Golden Canal Co. v. Bright, 8 Colo. 144; Clare v. People, 9 Colo. 126; People v. Goddard, 8 Colo. 437; People v. Scott, 9 Colo. 432; Dallas v. Redman, 10 Colo. 297; Edwards v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. 18 Colo. 59.

The law requires some things of parties who may have the legal right to incorporate, and these prerequisites must be complied with before the corporation can be organized legally. Unless it be so organized, and in strict accordance with the law authorizing its creation or formation, it cannot exercise the function of a corporation.

Empire Mills v. Alston Grocery Co. (Tex.) 19 L. R. A. 366.

Messrs. W. W. Cooley and H. W. Clark for defendant in error.

Hayt, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In November, A. D. 1889, Shepard & Bowles, as copartners, were doing a general hardware business in the city of Aspen, and during that month made a sale of their business, stock in trade, good-will, etc., to A. B. Eads, the consideration for this transfer

NOTE.—The present case seems to be a novel one in respect to the rights or privileges as partners of the members of an attempted corporation. As to their liabilities as partners, see note to Rutherford v. Hill (Or.) 17 L. R. A. 549.

29 L. R. A.

being certain real estate and the assumption of certain indebtedness of the firm of Shepard & Bowles. Eads being unable to comply with the terms of the agreement, a new arrangement was made between the parties, and an organization known as the Aspen Hardware Company was formed by Bowles, Eads, and one Kettler. The articles of incorporation provided that the affairs of the company should be managed by a board of three directors, naming Bowles, Eads, and Kettler as such directors for the first year. It was the evident intention of the parties that the company should be duly and legally incorporated, and to this end they caused to be executed articles of incorporation on the 16th day of November, 1889, in due form, and immediately filed the same with the clerk and recorder of Pitkin county. For some reason, not explained by the evidence, the articles were not filed in the office of the secretary of state until after the levy of the writ of attachment hereinafter referred to, and not until the day upon which this suit in replevin was instituted, but whether before or after the commencement of this action does not clearly appear from the evidence. After the articles were filed with the county clerk, the board of directors held a meeting, elected officers, caused capital stock to be issued, etc., Eads being present and participating in this meeting, at which Bowles was elected president, Eads vice-president, and Kettler secretary and treasurer. Thereupon, Eads, for a valuable consideration, sold and transferred the property to the new organization, and Mr. Bowles from that time forward conducted the business for the Aspen Hardware Company, selling goods and purchasing new goods in the corporate name. Eads, soon after the sale, left the town of Aspen, and did not return, nor personally take part in the business at that point, but continued as a director and vice-president of the company, and retained a portion of his stock, although he had sold a part of it prior to the levy of the writ of attachment. The business was thus continued until July 31, 1890, when a suit was commenced by Thatcher, plaintiff, against A. B. Eads, and the property in question levied upon as the property of the defendant in that suit, and this action of replevin was immediately instituted to recover possession of the property, or its value.

The controversy in this case is narrowed to the single question of the capacity of defendant in error to take title to the property in controversy as a corporation at the time of the attempted transfer by Eads, it not having at that time filed its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state, or paid the fee for such filing, as provided by the Statute of 1887. Sess. Laws 1887, p. 406. This is the first time the effect of this statute has been before this court for consideration, although in Edwards v. Denver & R. G. R. Co., 13 Colo. 59, the constitutionality of a somewhat similar act was under review. That act was attacked upon several grounds, among which was that it was void because the subject was not clearly expressed in the title, the title being "An act to provide for the formation of corporations;" and it was held that this title was sufficient to cover legislation requiring a fee to be paid for filing the certificate of incorporation, under the principle that the same was germane to the general subject expressed in the title, and that legislation fixing the amount of such fee, time of payment, etc., was not obnoxious to the constitutional provision with reference to titles. The Act of 1887, now under consideration, is entitled "An act to fix the fees to be collected by the secretary of state for incorporation and certain other privileges." The body of the act, however, relates entirely to the fee to be charged and collected for filing certificates of incorporation, articles of association, charters, or increase of capital stock of joint-stock companies, and in addition thereto, provides that no such corporation, joint-stock company, or association "shall have or exercise any corporate powers or be permitted to do any business in this state, until the said fee shall have been paid." This provision is so closely allied to the general subject, which is the fixing of fees for filing certificates of incorporation, etc., that under the uniform rule of decisions in this state it must be held to be a proper matter for legislation under the title selected. Golden Canal Co. v. Bright, 8 Colo. 144; People v. Goddard, 8 Colo. 432; People v. Scott, 9 Colo. 422; Dallas v. Redman, 10 Colo. 297; Edwards v. Denver & R. G. R. Co. supra; Re Pratt, 19 Colo. 138.

In this case the Aspen Hardware Company claims title to the property in dispute in its corporate capacity, and not as a copartnership. It is admitted that the fee for filing the certificate of incorporation with the secretary of state was not paid prior to the levy of the writ of attachment, and that the certificate was not filed in the office of the secretary of state until about the time of the bringing of the present action, the evidence leaving the exact time uncertain. It is to be remembered that in this case the corporation is the party plaintiff, and it may be stated as a general rule that when a company relies on its corporate capacity it assumes the burden of establishing such capacity. The language of the act is plain and unambiguous. It reads, "No such corporation . . . shall have or exercise any corporate powers. . . ." The taking of title to property was certainly the exercise of a corporate power, and as such prohibited by the express terms of the statute. This is not controverted by counsel for appellee, but it is contended that Eads, having assisted in the organization of the corporation, and having sold to it the hardware stock, is estopped from denying the corporate existence of the company, and that the attaching creditor took the property subject to the same estoppel. The doctrine of estoppel cannot be successfully invoked, we think, unless the corporation has at least a de facto existence. The rule is stated as follows by Morawetz on Private Corporations (sec. 750), it having been first announced in the case of Brouwer v. Appleby, 1 Sandf. 158: "A defendant who has contracted with a corporation de facto is never permitted to allege any defect in its organization as affecting its capacity to contract or sue, but that all such objections, if valid, are only available on behalf of the sovereign power of the state." It is also well settled that to constitute a de facto corporation there must be either a charter or a law authorizing the creation of such a corporation, with an attempt in good faith to comply with its terms, and also a user or attempt to exercise corporate powers under it. Dugan v. Colorado Mortg. & Investment Co. 11 Colo. 113; Bates v. Wilson, 14 Colo. 140. A de facto corporation can never be recognized in violation of a positive law. This principle, which seems to be supported by all the authorities, is thus stated by Morawetz on Private Corporations (sec. 758): "If the formation of a corporate association is not only prohibited by this general rule of the common law, but is also in violation of some principle of morality or public policy, or a positive statutory prohibition, the parties forming such association will not be legally bound by their agreement of membership, and the courts will not recognize the association, either as among its members or against third parties." To recognize the defendant as a de facto corporation, would, as we have seen, be in direct conflict with the express language of the act, which declares that without the payment of the fee the corporation shall have no corporate power.

One object of this statute is to restrict the organization of "wild-cat" corporations, it being supposed that the increased fee required by the act would, in a measure at least, prevent the over-capitalization of companies. The legislature being of the opinion that this purpose would be advanced by requiring the fee to be paid as a condition precedent to the exercise of any corporate power, it is the duty of the courts to give effect to this intent as the same is manifest from the plain language of the act. The taking of title to the property in controversy being the exercise of a corporate power, and, as such, forbidden until the fee for filing has been paid, it follows that the title of the Aspen Hardware Company as a corporation cannot be upheld. Having failed to comply with the statute, the Aspen Hardware Company, at the time of the transfer, was neither de jure nor a de facto corporation, but simply a voluntary association of individuals in the nature of a copartnership.

There is a broad distinction between those acts made necessary by the statute as a prerequisite to the exercise of corporate powers and those acts required of individuals seeking incorporation, but not made prerequisites to the exercise of such powers. "In respect to the former, any material omission will be fatal to the existence of the corporation, and may be taken advantage of collaterally in any form in which the fact of incorporation can properly be called in question. In respect to the latter, the incorporation is responsible only to the government in a direct proceeding to forfeit the charter." Abbott v. Omaha Smelting & Ref. Co. 4 Neb. 416. The omission in this case is of acts of the former class, and consequently there was no corporation in esse at the time of the levy of the writ, while the evidence leaves it in doubt if this omission had been supplied prior to the institution of the present action. But although it could not at the time exercise any corporate power, this did not prevent the Aspen Hardware Company from taking title to the property as a copartnership. In other words, under the conceded facts, the company was not at the time a corporation, but this will not preclude it from maintaining the action as a copartnership. The plaintiff sues as the Aspen Hardware Company, and the facts alleged show that such company was a copartnership, and not a corporation. There is nothing in the name of the association to conflict with this as at common law partners may carry on business under any name they choose. They are bound rather by their acts than by the style which they give to themselves. Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 233; Chaffe v. Ludeling, 27 La. Ann. 607. This principle has been applied in many cases where parties have set up the defense of individual nonliability by reason of having directed an incorporation to be had, but where none in fact was consummated. Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 233, 234; Abbott v. Omaha Smelting & Ref. Co. supra; Empire Mills v. Alston Grocery Co. (Tex.) 13 L. R. A. 866. The law having cast this liability upon the members of the association, we think they must be given the advantages accorded a copartnership. So, in this case, while we feel compelled under the statute to deny plaintiff's right of recovery as a corporation, we think they may maintain the action as a copartnership. The cause will accordingly be reversed and remanded, with directions to the district court to allow the parties to amend their pleadings as they may be advised.

Reversed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

A. M. CARPENTER'S APPEAL.

(.....Pa.....)

One killing his ancestor for an estate which would naturally come to him under the NOTE.—For the authorities upon the question how far statutes will be regarded as having abrogated the maxim that one cannot profit by his own wrong, see note to Shellenberger v. Ransom (Neb.) 25 L. R. A. 364.

29 L. R. A.

statutes of descent and distribution may take it under a constitution prohibiting attainders working corruption of blood and forfeiture of estate and statutes providing no penalty for murder except death by hanging.

(July 12, 1895.)

A PPEAL by one of the collateral heirs of James Carpenter, deceased, from a decree of the Orphan's Court for Juniata County confirming the report of an auditor distributing the decedent's estate which allowed it to go to a descendant who had murdered deceased for the purpose of securing the estate. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Howard Neely and W. U. Hensel, for appellant:

The widow and heir could not inherit, and any transfer of their inheritance to their counsel or other transfer carries nothing with it, but the estate is to be inherited by Carpenter's collateral relatives.

The time-honored legal principles and maxims, the authority of the courts of England, the judicial decisions of the courts of the state of New York, the wisdom of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the better-considered judgment of the highest court in Nebraska, support the claim of the collateral relatives.

A man can take no advantage of his own wrong, nor will he be allowed to found any claim upon his own iniquity.

Broom, Legal Maxims, p. 297.

Of the rules of reason, the first to be considered in the interpretation and construction of statute laws "are the very principles and sound conclusions of foreign learning, taken out of the heart and, as it were, the very bowels of theology, grammar, logic; also of philosophy, physics, politics, economics, ethics; for, although in our annals and books of reports these are not mentioned nor spoken of in the same terms, yet the things which you shall find there are of such sort, for the sparks of all sciences are covered in the ashes of the law."

Finch, Common Law, 1759, chap. 8.

Conscience is a universal judge, holding its assizes at every man's door, sitting in judgment upon every act and every omission, partaking of a moral quality, to condemn or to approve.

Dill, Laws & Jurisp. Lecture 1, p. 4.

In Mutual L. Ins. Co. of New York v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997, it was held that proof that the assignee of a policy of life insurance caused the death of the assured by felonious means is sufficient to defeat a recovery on the policy.

In Riggs v. Palmer, 5 L. R. A. 340, 115 N. Y. 506, the majority of the court of appeals of that state followed this principle and declared a doctrine that rules the distribution here.

If the beneficiary attempts the life of the testator he cannot take under the testament.

2 Cushing, Civil Law, ed. 1850, 78, 84; Pothier, Succession, chap. 1, § 2, art. 4; 4 Toul-lier, Droit Civil Français, 114, 134; 4 Duranton, 111; 3 Marcade, 42; Code Napoleon, art. 727; 1 Domat, Civil Law, pt. 2, title 1, §§ 3, 2551, 2552.

It will not be construed, no matter what the language, that the legislature intended to allow a public mischief or wrong.

Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 330; Code Civ. Proc. 866; Anderson v. Appleton, 2 L. R. A. 175, 112 N. Y. 104; Broom, Legal Maxims, 19 20; Finch, Common Law, 75, 76; Noy, Maxims, 9th ed. 2; Doctor and Student, 18th ed. 15, 16.

General terms should be so limited in their application as not to lead to injustice, oppression, or to absurd consequence.

Endlich, Interpretation of statutes, §§ 258, 267; Perry County v. Jefferson County, 94 Ill. 29 L. R. A.

214; Smith v. People, supra; Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 370, 85 Am. Dec. 826.

In McKinnon v. Lundy, 24 Ont. Rep. 133, it was held by the high court of justice for Ontario, chancery division, that by his felonious act in killing his wife, the husband absolutely precluded and debarred himself from obtaining any benefit under her will or out of her estate, and his grantee, his brother, could stand in no better position than himself.

Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Ass. [1892] 1 Q. B. 147.

McKinnon v. Lundy, supra, was reversed by the higher court, wholly on the ground that in that case the conviction having been of manslaughter only, the element of intent or motive upon which we here rely, was necessarily absent.

McKinnon v. Lundy, 21 Ont. App. Rep. 560.

This court has declared that statutory rights just as broad as those given by the intestate laws may be forfeited.

Strouse v. Becker, 88 Pa. 190, 80 Am. Dec. 474; Huey's App. 29 Pa. 219; Freeman v. Smith, 80 Pa. 265; Emerson v. Smith, 51 Pa. 90, 88 Am. Dec. 566; Gilleland v. Rhoads, 34 Pa. 187; Imhoff's App. 119 Pa. 355; Hatch v. Mutual L. Ins. Co. 120 Mass. 550, 21 Am. Rep. 541.

The statutory provision that "every" deed and conveyance which shall not be recorded in a certain period after execution shall be deemed fraudulent and void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee, for valuable consideration without notice, protects only bona fide purchasers and mortgagees for a valuable consideration without notice.

Union Canal Co. v. Young, 1 Whart. 410; Hoffman v. Strohecker, 7 Watts, 86, 82 Am. Dec. 740; Jaques v. Weeks, 7 Watts, 361.

In cases in which fraud is the fact out of which the cause of action arises, the commencement of the statutory term will be postponed until the discovery of this fact.

Mitchell v. Buffington, 10 W. N. C. 861; Jones v. Conoway, 4 Yeates, 109; Ferris v. Henderson, 12 Pa. 49, 51 Am. Dec. 580; Pennock v. Freeman, 1 Watts, 401; Notes to Shellenberger v. Ransom (Neb.) 25 L. R. A. 564; Levey v. H. C. Fricke Coke Co. 23 L. R. A. 283, 166 Pa. 536.

The Act of June 13, 1836, section 16, Pub. Laws, 546, empowering any two justices of the peace of a county to issue orders of removal to remove a pauper from one district to another, though couched in the most general terms, is interpreted to prevent justices who reside in the removing township from issuing such order, because, to permit this would contravene the principle of the law that no man can be a judge in his own case.

Upper Dublin v. Germantown, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 213, 1 L. ed. 853; Washington Overseers v. Beaver Overseers, 3 Watts & S. 548, McVeytown v. Union Twp. 5 Watts & S. 434.

An act which provided that a mayor should not be, by reason of his office, ineligible as a town councillor or alderman would make him ineligible when he acted in the judicial capacity of returning officers at the election; for it would not be a just construction of the language used, or legitimate inference from it, that the legislature had intended to repeal by a mere side wind the principle of the law that a man cannot be a judge in his own case.

Queen v. Owens, 2 El. & El. 86; Queen v. Teckesbury, L. R. 8 Q. B. 639; Reg. v. Milledge, L. R. 4 Q. B. Div. 882; Queen v. Coaks, 8 El. & Bl. 249.

So, when an act gave to "all" persons of full age and sound mind the right to dispose of their real estate, as well by last will and testament in writing as otherwise, by an act executed in his or her lifetime, it was held not to extend to married women on the ground that it was "not the design of the legislature" to alter the relation between husband and wife, or the legal effect of that relation by mere implication from language not expressing such intention.

Osgood v. Breed, 12 Mass. 580; Wilbur v. Crane, 18 Pick. 284.

A charitable provision for the support of "maimed" soldiers should not extend to soldiers who had been maimed in the service of a foreign state, or in punishment for a crime.

Duke, Charitable Uses, 134.

Nor does an act imposing penalty for cutting timber extend to the case of a co-tenant.

Wheeler v. Carpenter, 107 Pa. 271.

An act rendering parties in interest competent to testify on their behalf will not affect the established rule that an indorser of a negotiable instrument shall not be a witness to invalidate the instrument to which he is a party.

John v. Pardes, 109 Pa. 545.

Where an act declared that no "interest or policy of law" should exclude a party or person from being a witness in any civil proceeding, it was held that a married woman was not thereby made a competent witness to bastardize her issue.

Tioga County v. South Creek Twp. 75 Pa. 433; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, §§ 127, 128 et seq.

It has been said that acts of congress are to be construed by the rules of the common law.

Rice v. Minnesota & N. W. R. Co. 66 U. S. 1 Black, 358, 17 L. ed. 147; Jones v. Dexter, 8 Fla. 276. See also, Seais v. Stovall, 67 Ala. 237; Hove v. Peckham, 6 How. Pr. 229; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 127; Sutherland, Stat. Constr. §§ 189, 290; Bishop, Written Law, § 142.

A fundamental principle of the common law will not be repealed by a statute which is simply prescribing a rule of action upon an entirely different subject, with reference to which the principle may have only occasional and accidental application, when the statute does not notice the general principle and there is nothing in the subject to suggest the question of the applicability to it of such principle.

Notes to Shellenberger v. Ransom (Neb.) 25 L. R. A. 564.

Refusing to presume the repeal of a fundamental principle of the common law by a statute upon a subject which requires no notice to be taken of such principle, is vastly different from engrafting an exception upon a statute.

Ibid.

A statute which made in unqualified terms an act criminal or penal would be understood as not applying where the act was excusable or justifiable on grounds generally recognized by law.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 129; 1 Bishop, New Crim. L. §§ 291b, 804, pp. 165, 181.

Messrs. J. C. Bucher, W. H. Sponsler, and J. N. Keller, for appellee:

Where a statute makes no exceptions, the courts can make none.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 17, p. 23; Pittsburgh v. Kalchauer, 114 Pa. 552.

It is the duty of all courts to confine themselves to the words of the legislature, nothing adding thereto, nothing diminishing.

Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pittsburgh, 104 Pa. 553; Everett v. Wells, 2 Scott, N. R. 581.

The rule of interpretation is, in respect to the intention of the legislature, that when the language is explicit, the courts are bound to seek for the intention, in the words of the act itself, and they are not at liberty to suppose, or to hold, that the legislature intended anything different from what their language imports.

Potter's Dwarrr, Stat. 146.

Where the words of a statute are plainly expressive of an intent, the interpretation must be in accordance therewith.

Bradbury v. Wagenhorst, 54 Pa. 180; Shellenberger v. Ransom, 25 L. R. A. 564, 41 Neb. 681.

The legislature has the power to determine and declare the rules of public policy and in regard to the devolution of the property of an intestate, they did so declare it in the plain enactment of our statute of descent.

While the argument of the appellant fitly applies to remedial statutes, it can have no application to our statute of descent which neither recognizes a mischief nor provides a remedy but is itself a legislative declaration of a rule of public policy.

The legislature evidently intended that there should be no exception to the statute, because knowledge of the civil law and of the Code Napoleon, "where, by an exception, they who murdered their ancestors are excluded from the inheritance," is imputed to the legislature at the time of the enactment of our statute.

If there should be such an exception to the statute, it is the province of the legislature to amend it and not of the courts to engraft it.

Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 5, p. 8; Woodbury v. Berry, 18 Ohio St. 456; Priestman v. United States, 4 U. S. 4 Dall. 80, 1 L. ed. 728; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Pittsburgh, 104 Pa. 553; Clingan v. Mitchellre, 81 Pa. 25.

The highest courts of several sister states have decided similar questions and in every instance the court refused to engraft an exception upon a statute of descent.

Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 242; Deem v. Millikin, 6 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 357; Shellenberger v. Ransom, 25 L. R. A. 564, 41 Neb. 681; McKinnon v. Lundy, 24 Ont. Rep. 132, reversing 31 Ont. App. Rep. 560.

Green, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The penalty for murder in the first degree in Pennsylvania is death by hanging. No confiscation of lands or goods, and no deprivation of the inheritable quality of blood, constitutes any part of the penalty of this offense. The Declaration of Rights (art. 1, § 18, of the Constitution of the state) declares that "no person shall be attainted of treason or felony by the legislature," and by section 19 it is provided that: "No attainer shall work corruption of blood, nor, except during the life of the offender, forfeiture of estate to the commonwealth. The estate of such persons as shall destroy their own lives shall descend or vest as in cases of natural death; and if any person shall be killed by casualty, there shall be no forfeiture by reason thereof." These are provisions of the organic law which may not be transcended by any legislation. Inasmuch as the prescribed penalty for murder is death by hanging (Crimes Act 1860, § 75; Brightly's Purdon's Dig. p. 429, pl. 142), without any forfeiture of estate or corruption of blood, it cannot be said that any such consequences can be lawfully attributed to any such offense. In other words, our constitution positively prohibits any attainder of treason or felony by the legislature, and any corruption of blood by reason of attainder, or any forfeiture of estate, except during the life of the offender. The legislature has never imposed any penalty of corruption of blood or forfeiture of estate for the crime of murder, and therefore no such penalty has any legal existence. In the case now under consideration it is asked by the appellant that this court shall decree that in case of the murder of a father by his son the inheritable quality of the son's blood shall be taken from him, and that his estate, under the statute of distributions, shall be forfeited to others. We are unwilling to make any such decree, for the plain reason that we have no lawful power so to do. The intestate law in the plainest words designates the persons who shall succeed to the estates of deceased intestates. It is impossible for the courts to designate any different persons to take such estates without violating the law. We have no possible warrant for doing so. The law says, if there is a son, he shall take the estate. How can we say that, although there is a son, he shall not take, but remote relatives shall take, who have no right to take it if there is a son? From what source is it possible to derive such a power in the courts? It is argued that the son who murders his own father has forfeited all right to his father's estate, because it is his own wrongful act that has terminated his father's life. The logical foundation of this argument is, and must be, that it is a punishment for the son's wrongful act. But the law must fix punishments; the courts can only enforce them. In this state no such punishment as this is fixed by any law, and therefore the courts cannot impose it. It is argued, however, that it would be contrary to public policy to allow a parricide to inherit his father's estate. Where is the authority for such a contention? How can such a proposition be maintained when there is a positive statute which disposes of the whole subject? How can there be a public policy leading to one conclusion when there is a positive statute directing a precisely opposite conclusion? 29 L. R. A. .

In other words, when the imperative language of a statute prescribes that upon the death of a person his estate shall vest in his children, in the absence of a will, how can any doctrine, or principle, or other thing, called "public policy," take away the estate of a child, and give it to some other person? The intestate law casts the estate upon certain designated persons, and this is absolute and peremptory; and the estate cannot be diverted from those persons, and given to other persons, without violating the statute. There can be no public policy which contravenes the positive language of a statute. The supposed analogies derived from the fraudulent abuse of a contract right, or an actual notice accomplishing the same result as a constructive notice under the recording acts, or the waiver of an exemption act by one entitled to its benefits, and other instances of a similar character, are no analogies at all. There may be reasons why a statutory provision may not be applicable in a given case when the purpose of the statute is subverted in a different mode, or dispensed with altogether; but here is a contingency which does not depend upon any act, or omission to act, of any person whatever. It is the act of the law which casts the descent of estates, and that is not regulated or controlled by the acts, the follies, the frauds, or the crimes of any individual persons. Unless the law itself contains some qualification which changes its application, or provides some disqualification by way of penalty, it must have its way, because there is no other way.

If we consider the question upon authority, we find the great preponderance of judicial decision in accord with the views above expressed. In view of the dreadful and unnatural character of the crime of the son in this case, it is not a matter of wonder that the precise question has never yet been before us, and that there is a dearth of authority among the tribunals upon such a subject. In the case of Owens v. Owens, 100 N. C. 242, Sarah Owens was convicted of being an accessory before the fact to the murder of her husband. She was sentenced to imprisonment for life, and while undergoing her sentence she petitioned the court to assign her dower in the real estate of her deceased husband. In allowing her petition the court said: "We are unable to find any sufficient grounds for denying to the petitioner the relief she demands, and it belongs to the lawmaking power alone to prescribe additional grounds of forfeiture of the right which the law itself gives to a surviving wife. Forfeitures of property for crime are unknown to our law, nor does it intercept for such cause the transmission of an intestate's property to heirs and distributees, nor can we recognize any such operating principle." In Deem v. Midkin, 6 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 357, the facts were that Elmer L. Sharkey murdered his mother for the purpose of succeeding to the title to her real estate. He was convicted and hanged after having mortgaged the real estate. The collateral heirs contended that by reason of his crime no interest had passed to the son and therefore the mortgages were void. In the opinion the court said: "The statute of descent neither recognizes mischief nor provides a remedy. It is a legislative declaration of a rule of public policy. . . . There should be no difficulty in distinguishing this case from those in which the rights asserted have no foundation other than the fraudulent or unlawful conduct of a contracting party, nor from those in which attempts are made to use the process of the courts for fraudulent purposes. . . . The natural inference is that when the legislature incorporated the general rule into the statute, and omitted the exception, they intended that there should be no exception to the rule of inheritance prescribed." In the case of Shelender v. Ransom, 41 Neb. 681, 25 L. R. A. 564, the supreme court of Nebraska, reversing its own former decision reported in 81 Neb. 61, 10 L. R. A. 810, held that the murderer did not forfeit the estate of his daughter, whom he had murdered in order that he might acquire the title to her real estate. At the first hearing the court followed the decision of a majority of the New York court of appeals in Riggs v. Palmer, 115 N. Y. 506, 5 L. R. A. 840, but changed their ruling on the re-argument in 1894. In delivering the second opinion the court says: "The conclusion reached by the reasoning of Judge Earle in Riggs v. Palmer, as well as that in this case, was based very largely on that species of judicial legislation above characterized as 'rational construction.' If courts can thus enlarge statutory enactments by construction, it may be that the references in the majority opinion in Riggs v. Palmer, to the provisions of the civil law were very apt at illustrating how, by rational interpretation, our statute should be made to read. . . . The legislature has spoken. Their intention is free from doubt, and their will must be obeyed. 'It may be proper,' it has been said in Kentucky, 'in giving a construction to a statute, to look to the effects and consequences, when its provisions are ambiguous, or the legislative intent is doubtful. But when the law is clear and explicit, and its provisions are susceptible of but one interpretation, its consequences, if evil, can only be avoided by a change of the law itself, to be effected by legislative, and not judicial, action.' " The case of Riggs v. Palmer was decided by a divided court, but it was a case of devise, and not of descent, and involved only the question of permitting a devisee to take title under the will of a testator whom he had murdered in order to get the property devised to him by the will. While we do not agree to the conclusion reached, the case only involved the operation of a private grant, and therein differs widely from a case in which the statutory law of descent is in question. In the former case it was only necessary to set aside an instrument between private parties on the ground of fraud, but in the latter it would be necessary to set aside the positive law of the state. The case of Mutual L. Ins. Co. of New York v. Armstrong, 117 U. S. 591, 29 L. ed. 997, cited for the appellant, merely decided that proof that the assignee of a policy of life insurance caused the death of the assured by felonious means was sufficient to defeat a recovery on the policy. Mr. Justice Field, delivering the opinion, said: "It would be a reproach to the jurisprudence of the country if one could recover insurance money payable on the death of a party whose life he had feloniously taken. As well might he recover insurance money upon a building that he has willfully fired," thus showing that the decision was based entirely upon the ground of fraud upon a contract right. The case of Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund L. Assn. [1892] 1 Q. B. 147, also cited for appellant, is of an entirely similar character. It was an attempt to enforce a trust in favor of one who had brought about the conditions essential to its fulfillment by killing the person whose death made it operative. Lord Justice Fry said in the opinion: "If no action can arise from fraud, it seems impossible to suppose it can arise from felony or misdemeanor." In the argument for the appellant no case is cited which presents the very question which arises on this record. But there are at least the three cases above cited which do involve the same question as this, and they are all decided against the contention of the appellant. These authorities appear to us to be far more in consonance with sound principle than those which are seemingly, though not really, of an opposite tendency, and they certainly harmonize with the views we entertain. The assignments of error are not sustained.

20 L. R. A.

The decree of the court below is affirmed, and the appeal is dismissed, at the cost of the appellant.

Williams, J.:

I concur in the disposition of so much of the fund as is derived from the estate of Mrs. Carpenter, who was convicted only of being an accessory after the fact to the murder of her husband. I dissent from the disposition of so much of it as is derived from the alleged estate of the son, who was convicted of murder, and whose crime was committed for the purpose of securing the property of his father. The son could not, by his own felony, acquire the property of his father, and be protected by the law in the possession of the fruits of his crime.

IOWA SUPREME COURT

Lizzie T. PRICE

v.

Henry PRICE and Wife, Appts.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. Wrongfully depriving a wife of the affection, companionship, and society of her husband gives her a right of action for damages, under Code, §2211, which authorizes a wife to maintain actions "for the preservation and protection of her rights and property as if unmarried."
2. Evidence of conversations between a husband and his father and between the latter and the wife's mother may be proved in an action for alienating the husband's affections in order to show the weight and probable effect of a property inducement held out to abandon her.
3. That both defendants jointly sued for alienating a husband's affections and who are shown to have acted in concert were not present at a conversation with one of them respecting an inducement held out to the husband will not prevent the admission of the evidence of such conversation.

(October 8, 1894.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged wrongful alienation from her of the affections of plaintiff's husband. Affirmed.

Statement by Robinson, J.:

Action at law to recover damages alleged to have been caused by the wrongful acts of defendants, in injuring the reputation and good name of plaintiff, and in depriving her of her husband and of a home, in causing her husband to ill-use her, and for the loss of social position, and for mental and physical suffering. There was a trial by jury, and a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $4,000. A motion for a new trial was overruled on condition that one half the amount should be remitted. That was done, and from the judgment rendered against them for the remainder the defendants appeal.

Messrs. C. C. Nourse and C. L. Nourse, for appellants:

No such action can be sustained under the laws of this state. No right of action existed at common law. None is given by the statute, therefore none exists.

Peters v. Peters, 42 Iowa, 184; Duffles v. Duffles, 8 L. R. A. 420, 76 Wis. 374; Calloway v. Laydon, 47 Iowa, 456, 20 Am. Rep. 489; Mulford v. Cleveland, 21 Ohio St. 196; Freese v. Tripp, 70 Ill. 497; Doe v. Roe, 8 L. R. A. 833, 82 Me. 503; Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 633, 32 Am. Rep. 397.

At common law an action based upon pa-

NOTE.—In connection with the above case, see the authorities collected in Warren v. Warren (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 545, and nota.

29 L. R. A.

See also 32 L. R. A. 623; 38 L. R. A. 242; 40 L. R. A. 549; 43 L. R. A. 114; 47 L. R. A. 610.

rental influences over the wife was discounted by the courts.

Hutchison v. Peck, 5 Johns. 196.

Where the statute of the state, in relation to the right of married woman, confer upon her no additional rights, but merely relate to the form of action for the maintenance of rights recognized by the common law, no action of the wife will lie for the loss of the society of her husband. Such is the character of our statute.

Peters v. Peters, 42 Iowa, 184; Calloway v. Laydon, supra; Miller v. Miller, 78 Iowa, 177; Tuttle v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 518, 48 Iowa, 286; Mowry v. Chaney, 43 Iowa, 609.

Where the right of action has been recognized in the wife, it has only been sustained in the following cases:

1. Where the husband has committed adultery by the enticement of another woman, thereby justifying a separation, and

2. Where the husband has been induced to abandon the wife by charges of adultery or want of chastity, made by defendant against her, and believed by her husband.

This is an action against defendants for a joint tort. No conspiracy or previous agreement to commit the wrong complained of is alleged or charged in the petition. The evidence conclusively shows that the defendant, Mary Price, the mother, said and did nothing in this interview Saturday, or during the difficulty between George and his father on Sunday morning, to which any objection whatever can be made.

The evidence shows that whatever was said or done wrongfully on these occasions was not the joint act of defendants.

La France v. Krayner, 42 Iowa, 145; Ennis v. Shiley, 47 Iowa, 553; Engleken v. Webber, 47 Iowa, 556; Richmond v. Shickler, 57 Iowa, 488; Flint v. Gauer, 66 Iowa, 696.

The district court erred in permitting evidence as to the pecuniary circumstances of defendant.

Guengereoh v. Smith, 34 Iowa, 348.

Before any damages can be recovered, actual malice must be proved, and it is not to be inferred merely from a wrongful act, however willfully or knowingly committed.

Curl v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. 63 Iowa, 417; Jones v. Marshall, 56 Iowa, 789; Inman v. Ball, 65 Iowa, 543.

Messrs. Bishop & Wilcoxon and Hume & Dawson for appellee.

Robinson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 14th day of April, 1888, the plaintiff married George L. Price, who is a son of the defendants. She alleges that soon after the marriage the defendants, by means of conversations and letters, communicated to her husband false, defamatory, and slanderous matter concerning her character and reputation, and made threats and promises to him for the express purpose and with the malicious intent to destroy the affection existing between them, and to excite ill-will and hated on his part for her, for the purpose of causing him to abandon her; that the defendants offered him valuable property and large sums of money if he would abandon her, and threatened to disinherit him if he did not do so; that in consequence of the course pursued by the defendants her husband became angry with and jealous of her, and cursed, choked, wounded, and otherwise ill-treated her, and abandoned her, in destitute circumstances, when alone among strangers and without help, and deprived her of her home, of the social intercourse and confidence of her friends and of her husband, and his care, love, confidence, protection, help, and support, and caused her mental and physical pain and suffering.

1. The judgment in this case was rendered in June, 1891, and the appeal was taken in the next September. At the October term, 1892, of this court, the appellee filed a motion to affirm the judgment of the district court on the ground that the appeal had been abandoned. That motion was supported and resisted by affidavits and a partial transcript of the record, and was submitted with the cause for our determination. It is claimed that when the motion was filed the appellants had neither filed nor served any abstract or argument; but, to excuse their failure to comply with the rules in that respect, they show that negotiations for a settlement had been pending for some time, and that a stipulation of settlement had been signed by the parties to the action. A complete abstract has since been filed, with an argument for each party, and the cause is now ready for determination on the merits. The stipulation of settlement was not signed by all the parties interested in the judgment, and never became effectual to end the case. There is now no reason for disposing of it otherwise than on the merits, and the motion to affirm is overruled.

2. The court charged the jury, in effect, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover "for the loss, if any, she has sustained, of the love, affection, companionship, support, and society of her husband," wrongfully caused by the defendants. The appellants insist that no action for such loss can be maintained under the laws of this state, that no right of action on such grounds existed at common law, and that none is given by the statutes of this state. The authorities are not in accord in regard to the rights of the wife at common law. It was said in Duffes v. Duffes, 76 Wis. 874, 8 L. R. A. 420, that the common law gave to the wife no cause or right of action for the loss of the society and support of her husband in a case of this kind. That conclusion was based largely upon the fact that under the common law the title to the personal property of the wife was vested in the husband; that he was entitled to her labor, or the proceeds of it; and that an injury to her was, in contemplation of the law, an injury to him alone. In Des v. Roe, 83 Me. 503, 8 L. R. A. 583, the right of the wife to maintain an action for the alienation of her husband's affections, and for depriving her of his comfort, society, and support, was denied. But in Bennett v. Bennett, 116 N. Y. 584, 6 L. R. A.

R. A. 553, it was said that at common law the right of action for a wrong committed on a married woman belonged to her, and, although it was necessary for her husband to join in an action to recover damages caused by it, yet it was in effect her action. An elaborate discussion of authorities bearing on this question will be found in Westlake v. Westlake, 34 Ohio St. 631, 32 Am. Rep. 897. The tendency of legislation in this country is towards making husband and wife equal in law, giving to each the rights possessed by the other, and the legislation of this state is designed to accomplish that end, in most respects. Section 2311 of the Code provides that "a wife may receive the wages of her personal labor and maintain an action therefor in her own name, and hold the same in her own right, and she may prosecute and defend all actions at law or in equity for the preservation and protection of her rights and property as if unmarried." Section 2563 is as follows: "A married woman may in all cases sue and be sued without joining her husband with her, to the same extent as if she were unmarried, and an attachment or judgment in such actions shall be enforced by or against her as if she were a single woman." Other provisions of the statute give to a married woman the right to acquire and dispose of both real and personal property to the same extent and in the same manner that the husband can property held by him in his own right, and provide that either the husband or wife owning property in the possession or under the control of the other may maintain an action therefor in the same manner and to the same extent as though unmarried. The wife is liable for civil injuries which she commits, and her husband is not responsible therefor, except in cases where he would be jointly liable if the marriage relation did not exist. The property of each is exempt from the debts of the other, excepting in a few cases, and the wife may contract and incur liabilities which may be enforced by and against her as though she were unmarried. Code, §§ 2202, 2204, 2205, 2212, 2213. It is said in Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 1, 6 L. R. A. 829, that from time immemorial the law has regarded the right of the husband "to the conjugal affection and society of his wife as a valuable property, and has compelled the man who has injured it to make compensation," and that husband and wife have equal rights, in this: that each owes to the other the fullest possible measure of conjugal affection and society. In this state the husband is entitled to the earnings of the wife, when she is not engaged in business on her own account, and is required to provide for the wife a reasonable support, according to their rank and station in society. Thill v. Pohlman, 76 Iowa, 689; Van Doran v. Marden, 48 Iowa, 188. But the marriage state is not one entered into for the purpose of labor and support alone. Considerations of the highest character, as the comfort and happiness of the parties to the marriage contract, and the welfare of their children, give to each the right to the affection, companionship, and society of the other, and whoever wrongfully deprives either of that right may be held responsible. As it is a valuable property right when due to the husband, it must be so regarded when due to the wife. That being true, the recovery by her of damages caused by its loss, as well as for loss of support, is authorized by section 2211 of the Code. Nor is the right of recovery by the wife limited to cases where the loss is wrongfully caused by charges affecting her chastity, as suggested by the appellants. Our conclusion is not only in harmony with and authorized by the legislation of this state, but it finds support in numerous decisions of courts of other states. Westlake v. Westlake, and Bennett v. Bennett, supra; Holmes v. Holmes, 133 Ind. 386; Haynes v. Nowlin, 129 Ind. 581, 14 L. R. A. 787; Seaver v. Adams, 66 N. H. 142; Foot v. Card, 58 Conn. 1, 6 L. R. A. 829; Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 14 L. R. A. 545; Cooley, Torts, 228, note. In Peters v. Peters, 42 Iowa, 182, it was held that the wife cannot maintain an action against her husband for damages caused by an assault and battery, and that section 2211 of the Code refers to and authorizes actions against parties other than the husband. The case of Calloway v. Laydon, 47 Iowa, 456, arose under a statute enacted to regulate the sale of intoxicating liquors. The facts involved in those cases were in legal effect so unlike those involved in this case that the opinion in neither of those cases can properly be regarded as in conflict with the conclusion we have reached in this case.

8. The appellants contend that the verdict was not sustained by the evidence, and that it is contrary to the charge of the court. At the time of their marriage the plaintiff was 23 and her husband was 19 years of age. She was a dressmaker, and had done considerable work, but her health was not good. She had made her home with her mother and a younger brother in Des Moines, but it appears that her mother was in debt, her household goods mortgaged, and that they had but scanty means of support. After the marriage the plaintiff and George made their home with her mother, but in a short time they all went to the home of the defendants, in the same city, with some expectation of living there for a time. Trouble soon arose between them and the defendant Henry Price, and they sought another place of residence. There is irreconcilable conflict in the evidence, but we are of the opinion that the jury were authorized to find that the material facts were substantially as follows: The defendants never fully approved the marriage of the plaintiff to their son. During the few days that the two families were together at the home of the defendants, Henry Price complained that plaintiff's health was not good; and that she would soon be a burden to his son; and that plaintiff and her mother had not disclosed to him their financial condition, and the state of plaintiff's health, before the marriage. He stated that he thought the plaintiff and George should separate; that it would be better if George were free, for in that case he would have a part of the estate, but he did not intend that any of his money should go outside of his family. For several months after their marriage, George lived a part of the time with the plaintiff and her mother, and a part of the time with defendants. He worked for several different firms and persons, and contributed something to the support of the plaintiff, but he did not remain long with any one employer. The defendants were active during that time in trying to induce him to leave the plaintiff. In the fall of 1888, George made his home most of the time with the defendants, meanwhile visiting the plaintiff occasionally. About the 1st of December he went south and finally to Keokuk, and there secured work in a hotel. For about a month after he left Des Moines the plaintiff did not hear from him, or know where he was; and when she applied to defendants for information they professed to be as ignorant as she was in regard to him, although they corresponded with him, and knew where he was and what he was doing. On the 2d day of January, 1889, George wrote to his wife, expressing much affection for her, and asking if she wished to be with him. Her answer appears to have been prompt, as he wrote to her again three days later acknowledging the receipt of a telegram and a letter from her. His second letter was affectionate in terms, and in it he expressed a desire for her to be with him, said he would send for her in a few weeks, and cautioned her not to tell any one where she was going, mentioning especially his own family. He wrote other letters of the same character, but the plaintiff soon joined him in Keokuk. They lived together there until about the 4th of February, 1889, when he left her. During the first part of the time they were in Keokuk, George was kind and affectionate to the plaintiff, and they lived happily together. He received letters from the defendants during that time, and finally received one which the plaintiff did not read. When that was received, George told the plaintiff he was going to leave her, as the defendants wished him to do. He left the next day, but before going she obtained from him, without his knowledge, and kept, several letters he had received from the defendants. After an absence of a few days he returned, and demanded the letters. She refused to surrender them, and he used profane language to her, seized her, struck her, choked her, knocked her down, threatened to kill her if she did not produce the letters, and said he wished he had minded his father before and left her. He then left her in Keokuk, without means, and with a board bill for himself and her unpaid. She finally paid the bill, and reached the home of her mother, in Des Moines, and commenced this action. Since that time he has called on her once or twice, and has written a few letters to her, asking her to return to him. Letter-press copies of them were taken by him, and there is little doubt that they were written for the purposes of this litigation. His conduct toward his wife has been most unmanly, and we are satisfied that, to a considerable extent, it was caused by the unwarranted interference of the defendants. The evidence in regard to the influence which the defendants exercised over their son while he and the plaintiff were together at Keokuk, to induce him to leave her, is not at all clear and satisfactory. But we are satisfied that the defendants had for months been endeavoring to separate the plaintiff and her husband, and we think the jury were authorized to find that the separation was accomplished by letters he received from them at Keokuk. His statements at the time he left her were to that effect, and his course cannot be attributed to any other probable cause. Two juries have found for the plaintiff, and the evidence is such that we are of the opinion that we should not disturb the judgment for lack of evidence to support it.

4. Objection is made to the ruling of the court in admitting evidence in regard to conversations between George and his father, and between his father and the mother of plaintiff, when the two families were together at the home of defendants. We think the evidence was properly received as tending to explain the relation of the parties to the suit, and the motives which induced them to act. Objection is also made to evidence, to show the property owned by defendant Henry Price. The evidence was properly admitted, not to enhance the amount of recovery, but to enable the jury to judge more accurately of the weight and probable effect of the property inducement which the defendants held out to their son to abandon the plaintiff.

5. It is said that a fatal objection to all the evidence is that this action is against the defendants for a joint wrong, and that whatever of a wrongful nature was said or done by the defendants was not said or done jointly. We do not think this claim is sustained by the evidence. While it is true that each defendant did not participate directly in all of the conversations and acts of the other, yet there was evidence which tended to show that they acted in concert, and to accomplish a common object,—the separation of their son from the plaintiff.

6. What we have said disposes of the controlling questions in the case. Others, including some based upon portions of the charge given, and the refusal of the court to give instructions asked, have been presented in argument, and carefully examined. We do not regard them as of sufficient importance to be stated at length. It is sufficient to say that we do not find in them any reason for disturbing the judgment of the district court.

It is therefore affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Edmund SHERWOOD, Resp't.,

v.

Roger S. POWELL, App't.

(.....Minn.....)

"Where it appears from a complaint in an action for libel based on an allegation in a pleading in another action, that the defamatory allegation was wholly gratuitous, irrelevant, and immaterial; that it was well known by defendant to be false and untrue; that it was published without cause or justification, and with express malice,—it is not privileged.

(June 27, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for St. Louis County overruling a demurrer to the complaint in an action brought to recover damages for the alleged publication of a libel. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Roger S. Powell, appellant, in propria persona:

The complaint shows on its face that the alleged libelous matter as published was a publication absolutely privileged according to the great weight of authorities.

Townshend, Slander & Libel, 8d ed. § 221; Thorn v. Blanchard, 5 Johns. 508; Wilson v. Sullivan, 81 Ga. 288; Strauss v. Meyer, 48 Ill. 385; Bartlett v. Christliff, 69 Md. 219.

*Headnote by COLLINS, J.

NOTE.—For note on libel in pleadings, see Randall v. Hamilton (La.) 23 L. R. A. 642
29 L. R. A.

Messrs. J. B. Arnold and Edmund Sherwood, in propria persona, for respondent:

Privilege in all cases is subject to two conditions:

First. The words must be spoken or written in good faith.

Hodgson v. Scarlett, 1 Barn. & Ald. 240; Ring v. Wheeler, 7 Cow. 725; Jennings v. Paine, 4 Wis. 361; Bradley v. Heath, 12 Pick. 168, 23 Am. Dec. 418; Quinn v. Scott, 23 Minn. 462; Brook v. Montague, Cro. Jac. 90; Smith v. Howard, 28 Iowa, 51; Mower v. Watson, 11 Vt. 536, 84 Am. Dec. 704; Torrey v. Field, 10 Vt. 353; 2 Starkie, Ev. 467, 468; Johnson v. Brown, 13 W. Va. 71; Warner v. Paine, 2 Sandf. 195; Lanning v. Christy, 30 Ohio St. 115, 27 Am. Rep. 431.

Second. The words must be relevant or pertinent to the issue.

Marah v. Ellsworth, 36 How. Pr. 532; 3 Saunders, Pl. & Ev. 801, 802; Starkie, Slander & Libel, chap. 10; Bradley v. Heath, supra; Remington v. Congdon, 2 Pick. 810, 18 Am. Dec. 431; Hoar v. Wood, 3 Met. 198; Hodgson v. Scarlett, 1 Holt, 631; McLaughlin v. Cowley, 127 Mass. 316; Garr v. Selden, 4 N. Y. 91.

And the question of good faith and relevancy or pertinency is for the jury.

White v. Nicholls, 44 U. S. 8 How. 266, 11 L. ed. 591; Smith v. Howard, 28 Iowa, 51; Somervill v. Hawkins, 3 Eng. L. & Eq. 508; Mayo v. Sample, 18 Iowa, 306; Howard v. Thompson, 21 Wend. 330, 34 Am. Dec. 238; White v. Carroll, 42 N. Y. 161, 1 Am. Rep. 508; Wyatt v. Budd, 47 Cal. 625; Rainbow v. Benson, 71 Iowa, 301; Chaffin v. Lynch, 84

Va. 884; Todd v. Hawkins, 8 Car. & P. 83; Dada v. Piper, 41 Hun. 254; Wright v. Woodgate, 2 Crompt. M. & R. 578, Tyrw. & G. 12; Fairman v. Lee, 5 Barn. & Ald. 642; Robinson v. May, 2 Smith, 8; Flint v. Pike, 4 Barn. & C. 484; Bromage v. Prosser, Id. 247; Blake v. Pilford, 1 Moody & R. 198; Parmiter v. Coupland, 6 Mees. & W. 105; Thompson v. Shackell, 1 Moody & M. 187; Gilbert v. People, 1 Denio, 41, 43 Am. Dec. 646; Buddington v. Davis, 6 How. Pr. 401.

Libels in pleadings are actionable when the allegations complained of are false or made without probable cause.

Benning v. Rielle, Mont. L. Rep. 6 Q. B. 365; Weil v. Israel, 42 La. Ann. 955; Hyde v. McCabe, 100 Mo. 412.

Collins, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Appeal from an order overruling a general demurrer to a complaint in an action for libel. The language complained of was set forth, used, and published of and concerning this plaintiff in an answer interposed by defendant in a former action between these same parties. Appellant contends that the alleged libelous matter was an absolutely privileged publication, because it was set forth and published in a pleading in a judicial proceeding, and that the rule of law is that under no circumstances can defamatory words published or spoken of a party in the course of such a proceeding be made the basis of an action for libel or slander. An efficient administration of justice requires that in the use of language much latitude must be given in legal proceedings, but we cannot indorse so broad a rule, although it is not without support in the books. It seems to be well established in the English courts that counsel, parties, and witnesses are given free rein in pending litigation, and are absolutely exempted from liability to an action for defamatory words spoken or published of a party in the course of legal proceedings. A rule which tolerates and encourages gratuitous, immaterial, and malicious attacks upon a litigant, and excuses and justifies them, simply affords an opportunity for evilly disposed persons to vilify and calumniate, under the guise of an honest effort to secure the proper administration of justice. The doctrine which prevails abroad has not commended itself to the judiciary of this country, and it has been qualified by the American courts so that statements, verbal or written, made in the course of judicial proceedings, must at least be pertinent and material to the case, to be privileged. Hoar v. Wood, 3 Met. 193. This qualified rule was subsequently approved in Rice v. Coolidge, 121 Mass. 393, 28 Am. Rep. 279; McLaughlin v. Cowley, 127 Mass. 316. See also, White v. Nicholls, 44 U. S. 8 How. 266, 11 L. ed. 591; Gilbert v. People, 1 Denio, 41, 43 Am. Dec. 646; Hyde v. McCabe, 100 Mo. 412; Whitney v. Allen, 62 Ill. 472.

Referring to some expressions in the cases last cited, as to the effect of a bona fide belief, based on reasonable grounds, in the pertinency and materiality of a statement or allegation in an affidavit or pleading, it is well to say that we are now considering a demurrer to a complaint from which it is apparent that the alleged libel was wholly gratuitous, irrelevant, and immaterial, and in which complaint it is averred that the libelous matter was well known by defendant to be false and untrue, that it was published without cause or justification, and with express malice towards this plaintiff. We have stated that the allegation or paragraph in the answer complained of was irrelevant and immaterial. The statements did not relate or pertain to any matter in issue between the parties, and, although purporting to be pleaded as a counterclaim, it utterly failed to state even the substance of a cause of action against the plaintiff.

Order affirmed.

WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Washington, Resp't.,

v.

Newel S. BARR, App't.

(..... Wash.)

1 The right to fix a loaded gun in a building so that it will be discharged on forcing open the front door and kill a person attempting to enter is a question of fact or mixed fact and law for the jury.

2. An information charging that defendant purposely killed a person named is not insufficient because there was no intent to kill any particular person but merely to kill any one who might attempt to enter a cer-

NOTE.—Liability for killing or injuring trespassers by means of spring guns, traps, and other dangerous instruments.

- I. The general doctrine of liability.
- II. Liable as for homicide.
- III. When considered as a nuisance.
- IV. The property owner's or the trespasser's act.
- V. The question of notice.
- VI. Act held legal.
- VII. English cases.

I. The general doctrine of liability.

When it is said that a man may rightfully use as much force as is necessary for the protection of his person or property, the rule is subject to the most important modification that he shall not, except in extreme cases, endanger human life or cause great bodily harm. State v. Morgan (1842) 25 N. C. 186, 196, 38 Am. Dec. 714.

The law not allowing the taking of human life, except for the necessary prevention of a crime, which if committed would be punished by the law with death. Gray v. Combs (1852) 7 J. J. Marsh. 473, 28 Am. Dec. 481.

For it is not every right of person and still less of property that can lawfully be asserted, or every wrong that may rightfully be redressed by extreme remedies. State v. Morgan, supra.

29 L. R. A.

tain building, under a statute requiring the fact to be stated but making an information sufficient against such an attack unless the defendant could be misled to his injury.

3. The right to prove the good character of an accused is properly confined to a few years previous to the crime without allowing proof of his reputation long before in boyhood days.

(March 25, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Whatcom County convicting him of murder in the second degree. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

A person cannot, because a wrong has been done to him, commit some other wrong for the purpose of repairing the injury, but must endeavor to obtain redress in a lawful manner. Ibbotson v. Peat (1835) 3 Hurlst. & C. 644, 649, 31 L. J. Exch. 118.

A person is not permitted, for the protection in his absence of property against a mere trespasser, to use means endangering the life or safety of a human being, whatever he may do, where the entry on his premises is to commit a felony or breach of the peace. Loomis v. Terry (1837) 17 Wend. 496, 31 Am. Dec. 306.

Proper regard must be had for life and the persons of others, and individuals using deadly weapons and dangerous implements must so use them that injury to others may not be inflicted. Hooker v. Miller (1873) 37 Iowa, 613, 18 Am. Rep. 18.

It is inhuman to catch a man by means which may maim him or endanger his life, and as far as human laws can go, it is the object of the English law to uphold humanity and the sanctions of religion. Bird v. Holbrook (1828) 4 Bing. 623, 1 Moore & P. 607.

For human life is not to be sported with by the use of fire arms. State v. Hardie (1878) 47 Iowa, 647, 23 Am. Rep. 496, 498.

Therefore trespassers and other inconsiderable violators of the law are not to be visited by barbarous punishments or prevented by inhuman inflictions of bodily injuries. Hooker v. Miller, supra.

The wrong or guilt of the trespasser or thief if not such as to justify the injury if inflicted directly, cannot be justified because inflicted indirectly and by the assisting agency of the wrongdoer. State v. Moore (1868) 31 Conn. 479, 38 Am. Dec. 159; Johnson v. Patterson (1840) 14 Conn. 1, 35 Am. Dec. 95, 97.

If by the rules of the common law the defendant could not, if present, have discharged the guns which he placed in his shop by his own direct agency, against a thief who had broken and entered for the purpose of stealing, he could not place and leave them so that the thief, if he entered, would discharge them against himself. State v. Moore, supra.

For although a man may rightfully use as much force as is necessary for the protection of his personal property, yet he must not, except in extreme cases, endanger human life or do great bodily harm; killing being only justifiable to save life or limb, or prevent a great crime, or to accomplish a necessary public duty. State v. Patterson (1873) 45 Vt. 308, 12 Am. Rep. 203.

The rule being subject to the above important modification. State v. Morgan (1843) 25 N. C. 186, 38 Am. Dec. 714, 718; Carroll v. State (1868) 23 Ala. 29, 54 Am. Dec. 233, 234; Noles v. State (1855) 25 Ala. 31, 62 Am. Dec. 711, 713.

The preservation of human life and of limb and member from grievous harm being of more im-

Mr. E. P. Dole, for appellant:

There is no question but that a man may lawfully set spring guns or any other dangerous traps in his dwelling house or store, to protect his house at night-time from burglars, but he must see to it that they are so arranged as not to inflict injury upon those who go there for lawful purposes, and seek admission in the usual and lawful modes.

Wood, Nuisances, 2d ed. p. 147.

It is not easy to see how the mere act of setting spring guns on his own premises by the defendant can be held unlawful in itself.

Hott v. Wilkes, 3 Barn. & Ald. 804; State v. Moore, 31 Conn. 479, 38 Am. Dec. 159; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 194, and cases cited.

portance to society than the protection of property. Simpson v. State (1877) 59 Ala. 1, 31 Am. Rep. 7.

One may keep and use such instruments and no other as the same necessary degree of force will justify. A dog is an instrument for protection; a ferocious one is a dangerous instrument, and the keeping him on the premises to protect them against trespassers is unlawful upon the same principle that setting spring guns or concealed spears or placing poisoned food, is unlawful. Woolf v. Chalker (1832) 31 Conn. 121, 121, 31 Am. Dec. 175.

And although the rules of the common law recognized a right in every man to defend his property as well as person and habitation, by taking the life of the aggressor as a natural right, yet they limit and restrain the exercise of that right to the prevention of a certain class of forcible and atrocious crimes, of which breaking in a shop in the night is not one at common law. State v. Moore (1868) 31 Conn. 479, 38 Am. Dec. 159.

If the act of the trespasser is punishable as a misdemeanor that fact does not demand greater violence or more dangerous means to secure protection than if the same act was regarded as a mere trespass and not a crime. In other words, it requires no more violence to protect property from a trespasser when there is a statute punishing him criminally than it would in the absence of such enactment. Hooker v. Miller (1873) 37 Iowa, 613, 18 Am. Rep. 18.

The rule in part delicto affording no protection in a civil action to a party who has control of dangerous implements and negligently uses them or places them in a situation unsafe to others, whereby another without knowledge thereof is injured, although at the time in the commission of a trespass. Ibid.

In setting a spring gun the defendant violates the law and becomes liable for injuries sustained, under the doctrine that all injuries inflicted by one while acting in violation of the law will support an action in favor of the injured party against the perpetrator. Ibid.

In the absence of any statutory provision making the offense of breaking and entering a shop in the night season burglary, and by the rules of common law, a man may not take life in prevention of such a crime. State v. Moore (1868) 31 Conn. 479, 38 Am. Dec. 159.

The common law independent of statute not authorizing the taking of life for the purpose of preventing a crime such as the breaking and entering of a shop in the night for the purpose of stealing therefrom, the offense not being a burglary at common law; in Connecticut, however, such action is justified, the statute in that state making the offense burglary. Ibid.

It being the duty of the owner of the premises to prevent the entry thereon by means not fatal if he can do so consistently with his own safety.

To prevent burglary he can use such instruments, and homicide, through them, of a burglar would be justifiable.

2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1025; Gray v. Combs, 7 J. J. Marsh. 478, 28 Am. Dec. 431.

The right of self-defense, in case of this kind, is founded on the law of nature, and is not, nor can be, superseded by any law of society.

2 Whart. Crim. Law, § 1019a.

In order to constitute murder, it is necessary that there must have been a specific intent or purpose to kill.

Without a direct and positive allegation of such purpose, the indictment is fatally defective.

Blanton v. State, 1 Wash. 268.

The evidence must conform to the allegations.

Destler v. Dabney, 3 Wash. 202.

Messrs. Thomas G. Newman and C. W. Howard, for respondent:

Whether in setting this gun defendant did what he had a right to do or not is not wholly an abstract question of law.

Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 898, 16 Am. Rep. 347.

Defendant is not being tried as to his abstract right to set a gun, but is being tried for the killing of John Erickson, and to successfully defend must show, not that he had an abstract right to set a gun, but that he had a Brown v. State (1882) 55 Ark. 593, citing Pond v. People (1880) 8 Mich. 177; Carroll v. State (1853) 23 Ala. 23, 31, 58 Am. Dec. 232; Noles v. State (1855) 26 Ala. 31, 62 Am. Dec. 711, 713; State v. Patterson (1873) 45 Vt. 308, 12 Am. Rep. 208.

So a man must not set traps of a dangerous description in a situation to invite his neighbor's dogs, and as it were to compel them by their instinct to come into the traps. Townsend v. Wathen (1806) 9 East, 277.

The malicious intention of the defendant may be considered and the jury are not confined to the actual damages sustained. Sears v. Lyon (1818) 2 Stark. 317.

The English rule expressly authorizes, not only the destruction of all kinds of animals, but of human life. Johnson v. Paterson (1840) 14 Conn. 1, 35 Am. Dec. 96, 97.

The principles upon which the English doctrine is established are the prevention of intrusion upon property, every proprietor being allowed to use such force as is absolutely necessary to vindicate his rights. Ilott v. Wilkes (1820) 3 Barn. & Ald. 304; Johnson v. Patterson, supra.

Yet the principles on which the decisions in that country purport to rest are not sustainable or applicable here. Woolf v. Chalker (1863) 31 Conn. 121, 131, 31 Am. Dec. 175.

The English rule as established by the case of Ilott v. Wilkes (1820) 3 Barn. & Ald. 304, is inapplicable in the state of Connecticut, the ordinary protection of fences as required by statute, and redress by impounding and suits at law, being found sufficiently effectual for almost any sort of intrusion on real estate. Johnson v. Patterson, supra.

Yet the English act authorizing the setting of spring guns is declaratory as to a part and prohibitory as to a part,—declaratory as to the setting of spring guns without notice, the word "declaratory" being expressly introduced; prohibitory as to setting spring guns, even with notice, except in dwelling houses by night. Bird v. Holbrook (1823) 4 Bing. 623, 1 Moore & P. 607.

In Aldrich v. Wright (1873) 53 N. H. 898, 16 Am. Rep. 339, 347, the court stated that on the subject of defending a man's property in his absence by spring guns, man-traps, or other engines calculated to destroy human life, or inflict grievous bodily harm, the English courts turned a question of fact into a question of law and were not successful in their efforts to prescribe adequate rules for determining the reasonable necessity of such engines in the varying circumstances of different cases.

The error of the English courts was partially corrected by the Acts of 7 & 8 George IV., chap. 13, §§ 1-4, and the Act 24 & 25 Vict., chap. 100, § 31, making it a misdemeanor to set such engines, except in a dwelling house for the protection thereof in the night, and excepting such gun or trap as may have been or may be usually set with the intent of destroying vermin. Ibid.

29 L. R. A.

A person passing with a dog through a wood in which he knows dog spears are set, has no right of action against the owner of the wood for the death of or injury to the dog, who by reason of his natural instinct and against the will of his master, runs off the path against one of such spears and is killed or injured. Jordin v. Crump (1841) 8 Mees. & W. 732, 5 Jur. 1113.

In an action to recover damages resulting from injuries sustained by the plaintiff from a gun-shot wound, received by him by means of a spring gun placed by defendant on his own premises, the court in Hooker v. Miller (1873) 37 Iowa, 613, 18 Am. Rep. 18, affirmed the judgment of the court below in favor of the plaintiff.

In Dodson v. Mock (1838) 20 N. C. 146, trespass was brought for killing the plaintiff's dog by means of poisoned meat placed upon the defendant's premises, and the court held that if the dog was killed by the direct administration of poisoning, trespass vi et armis was the proper remedy, but if the dog was killed by poisoned food placed where the defendant knew that the dog would come along and eat it, case was the proper remedy.

But unless contrivances are placed upon the premises with an actual or constructive intent to hurt intruders, the owner is not liable for injuries resulting to persons by reason of the condition in which the premises had been left, or from the prosecution of the business thereon in which the perpetrator has a right to engage. Indianapolis v. Emmelmar (1886) 103 Ind. 530, 59 Am. Rep. 65.

A trespasser or mere licensee, who is injured by any dangerous machinery or contrivance on the land or premises of another, cannot recover damages unless the contrivance is such that the owner may not lawfully erect or use, or when the injury is inflicted willfully, wantonly, or through the gross negligence of the owner or occupier of the premises. Galveston Oil Co. v. Morton (1888) 70 Tex. 400.

Although it may be admitted that the instrument in question is calculated to do grievous bodily harm to human beings, still where it does not appear to have been set with that intention, there is nothing to show that the setting of it by the defendant is an illegal act. Jordan v. Crump (1841) 8 Mees. & W. 732, 5 Jur. 1113.

II. Liable as for homicide.

The responsibility of the defendant is in many instances viewed in the light of a crime, and he is held as for homicide, no matter whether the trespasser has or has not notice of the danger.

Viewed in this light the question of the intention of the property owner must be considered, as without the intention to take life the crime cannot amount to murder and will be extenuated and amount to no more than manslaughter.

The measure of protection to property is declared with certainty, and the force which may be right to take the life of John Erickson,—that the killing was either justifiable or excusable.

1 Bishop, Crim. L. 7th ed. § 814.

A man may not set spring guns for the protection of his property against trespassers.

Kerr, Homicide, §§ 185, 186; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 586, 606; State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 808, 13 Am. Rep. 208; Carroll v. State, 23 Ala. 28, 58 Am. Dec. 284.

What may not be done directly, may not be done by means of a spring gun and indirectly.

If the attempted entry of deceased into the house of defendant was not such as under all the circumstances as they appeared to the defendant acting as a reasonably prudent man would justify the injury inflicted, the justification can in no way be strengthened by the manner of its infliction.

Kerr, Homicide, § 186; Simpson v. State, 59 Ala. 1, 81 Am. Rep. 9; Johnson v. Patterson, 14 Conn. 1, 85 Am. Dec. 100.

Necessity alone can excuse the taking of human life.

State v. Morgan, 25 N. C. 186, 38 Am. Dec. 718; State v. Patterson, 45 Vt. 808, 13 Am. Rep. 207; Carroll v. State, 23 Ala. 28, 58 Am. Dec. 284; Brown v. State, 55 Ark. 598; Noles v. State, 26 Ala. 31, 62 Am. Dec. 713; People v. Walsh, 43 Cal. 447.

One who proposes doing an unlawful act, by which the life of a fellow being may be taken, cannot excuse himself from the conse-quency of the trespass or the frequency of the repetition does not enlarge the one or the other. The secrecy and frequency of the trespass will not justify the owner in concealing himself, and with a deadly weapon taking the life or grievously wounding the trespasser as he creeps stealthily to commit the intended wrong, and there is no difference in his concealing his person and weapon and inflicting unlawful violence, and contriving and setting a mute concealed agency or instrumentality which will inflict the same, or it may be greater violence in each case the intention being the same and it is to exceed the degree of force which the law allows to be exerted. Simpson v. State (1877) 59 Ala. 1, 81 Am. Rep. 9.

The setting of a spring gun or other like engine may be harmless if of his own wrong the trespasser does not come in contact with it, and he may lose his right to recover compensation for the injury sustained, yet the state does not lose the right nor is its duty lessened to demand retribution for its broken laws and the unlawful death or wounding one of its citizens. Ibid.

It is criminal homicide to set spring guns or other weapons capable of doing mischief on premises so as to cause death. Ibid.

Yet it is culpable only because of the intent with which it is done. Ibid.

As in order to support a conviction for assault with intent to murder, a specific felonious intent must be proved. Ibid.

For an intention to kill cannot be implied from general conduct, or as a matter of law, but must be proved as a matter of fact and its existence must be determined by the facts and circumstances in evidence. Ibid.

The question whether the gun set with the intent to kill a particular person who was injured by it was not an attempt to murder, committed by means not amounting to an assault and indictable under another clause of the Alabama statute, was a question not presented by the record. Ibid.

By the strict letter of the common law a man may not take life in defense of property in a shop, and therefore may not justify a homicide committed by placing spring guns therein. State v. Moore (1893) 31 Conn. 479, 88 Am. Dec. 159.

It is well settled that a bare trespass against the property of another, notwithstanding his dwelling, is not a sufficient provocation to warrant the owner in using a deadly weapon in its defense, and if he uses such a weapon and kills the trespasser, it is murder, and this though the killing was actually necessary to prevent the trespass. State v. Vance (1864) 17 Iowa, 133, 141.

A mere trespass against property other than a dwelling is not a sufficient justification to authorize the use of a deadly weapon by the owner in its defense, and if death results in such a case it is 29 L. R. A.

murder, though the killing be actually necessary to prevent the trespass. Hooker v. Miller (1873) 37 Iowa, 613, 18 Am. Rep. 13, citing State v. Vance, supra.

The rule is based upon the consideration that an act of violence done to prevent trespass which causes death is beyond the provocation and the perpetrator is guilty of murder. Hooker v. Miller, supra.

It is based, not on the light in which the law regards the act and the punishment provided for; and the criminality of the act or the turpitude of the trespasser is not the foundation thereof, but it is based upon the limitation which the law imposes upon the right of the owner of property in rendering it protection. Hooker v. Miller, supra.

And is supported upon the consideration that the protection of one's property will not justify the resort to means that are destructive to the property of another, when not demanded by necessity or the nature of the rights of property concerned, and humanity requires the extension of the rule to the person of the trespasser. Ibid.

If a man deliberately kills another to prevent a mere trespass on his property, whether that trespass could or could not be otherwise prevented, he is guilty of murder. State v. Morgan (1842) 25 N. C. 186, 198, 38 Am. Dec. 714.

The principles established in State v. Morgan, supra, were followed by the court in State v. McDonald (1856) 49 N. C. 19, and State v. Brandon (1862) 53 N. C. 467.

If the intention was not to take life but merely to chastise the trespasser, and to deter the offender from repeating the same, the offense may be extenuated and no more than manslaughter; the law so far recognizing the adequacy of the provocation arising from the trespass. State v. Vance (1864) 17 Iowa, 133, 141. To the same effect, Claxton v. State (1840) 2 Humph. 181; McCoy v. State (1848) 3 Ark. 451; Com. v. Drew (1808) 4 Mass. 391; Cokely v. State (1857) 4 Iowa, 477; State v. Shelly (1859) 3 Iowa, 477.

So if the act was done in the heat of passion. Hooker v. Miller (1873) 37 Iowa, 613, 18 Am. Rep. 13.

Where spring guns or other weapons calculated to do mischief are placed upon premises with the general intention to kill trespassers, and one is injured thereby, the owner of such premises cannot be convicted of assault with intent to murder, there being no intention to kill such particular person. Simpson v. State (1877) 59 Ala. 1, 81 Am. Rep. 1.

While, because of the unlawful intent with which the gun is set the owner is made criminally liable for the consequences he contemplates, it is not his violence, except by implication of law which produces the injury, and it is not an assault which connected with an intent to murder is punishable under the Alabama statute. Ibid.

quences thereof by giving notice of his evil intention, or of the danger which he himself has created, and this is true although the person killed thereby may have received the notice and was a trespasser at the time of the injury.

Johnson v. Patterson, 14 Conn. 1, 35 Am. Dec. 100; Carroll v. State, 33 Ala. 28, 58 Am. Dec. 282.

Carelessness is criminal, and, within limits, supplies the place of the direct criminal intent.

1 Bishop, Crim. L. 7th ed. § 818; 9 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 588; State v. Hardie, 47 Iowa, 647, 29 Am. Rep. 496; State v. Emery, 78 Mo. 77, 47 Am. Rep. 92; 2 Hill's Code, § 1185.

III. When considered as a nuisance.

The setting of spring guns, traps, and other dangerous instruments may amount to a public nuisance and as such be indictable or the person so setting them may be liable in an action of damages.

If dangerous to the public it is indictable as a nuisance. Simpson v. State (1877) 59 Ala. 1, 31 Am. Rep. 9; State v. Moore (1883) 31 Conn. 479, 38 Am. Dec. 159.

When placed so as to be actually dangerous to the public who have occasion to pass the highway. State v. Moore, supra.

And the person setting them may be indicted and be liable to an action at the suit of the party injured. Hewison v. New Haven (1897) 34 Conn. 136, 141, 91 Am. Dec. 718.

It must, however, be shown that the nuisance to the public is of a real and substantial nature. State v. Moore, supra.

But unless the public safety is thereby endangered it is not indictable. Simpson v. State and State v. Moore, supra.

Placing a loaded gun so as to range over a highway, cocked and with strings attached to the trigger so that it may be discharged by a cat or a rat, or any other object coming in contact with the string, and sufficiently near and unprotected to inflict injury if any one should then be within its range upon the highway, creates a real and substantial danger to which passengers on a highway should not be subjected. State v. Moore, supra.

In State v. Moore, supra, information was laid for nuisance consisting in the placing by defendant of spring guns in his shop for protection against burglars, so situated as to endanger persons passing on the adjacent highway. The court held that the mere act of setting spring guns on his own premises by the defendant could not be held unlawful in itself, although the defendant might be responsible for an injury occasioned thereby to individuals and be indictable for the erection of a nuisance, if the public were subjected to any danger and consequent annoyance.

In that case it was found that scattering shot might pass between the cracks in the boarded walls of the defendant's shop which were one thickness of boarding, but it was not found that they would pass through with sufficient force to inflict injury, or even to cross the intervening space between the shop and the highway, and the court therefore held that it was not sufficiently found that the apprehended danger to the public was real and substantial, and therefore gave judgment for the defendant.

In Townsend v. Wathen (1898) 9 East, 377, it was held that if a man places a dangerous trap baited with flesh in his own ground, so near to the highway or to the premises of another that dogs passing along the highway or kept in his neighbor's premises will probably be attracted by their instinct into the traps, and in consequence of such

Hoyt, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was convicted of the crime of murder in the second degree, and from the judgment and sentence imposed thereunder prosecutes this appeal. The circumstances connected with the homicide were substantially as follows: Defendant and one Walter Pixley, a boy seventeen years of age, occupied a cabin together. The cabin belonged to the defendant, but the land upon which it was situated was the property of the Bellingham Bay Improvement Company. The cabin was a small building, about ten by fourteen feet in dimensions, constructed of boards one inch in thickness, placed up and down, and set his neighbor's dog is so attracted and injured thereby, an action on the case lies. The court stated that every man must be taken to contemplate the probable consequences of the act he does, and therefore when the defendant caused the traps scented with the strongest meats to be placed so near to the plaintiff's house as to influence the instinct of those animals and draw them irresistibly to their destruction, he must be considered as contemplating this probable consequence of his act.

IV. The property owner's or the trespasser's act.

In some cases the injury has been considered as the act of the person committing the trespass or other wrong. This is noticeable so in the English decisions upon the question but the courts here mostly hold the contrary doctrine.

Thus in Gray v. Combe (1833) 7 J. J. Marsh. 473, 23 Am. Dec. 431, the act was considered as that of the slave, the time and circumstances constituting and coming of necessity and legitimately from the means resorted to.

And especially is this so where the trespasser has notice of the impending danger. Hott v. Wilkes (1820) 2 Barn. & Ald. 304.

Resistance by force to the setting of it, by an individual (if not dangerous to the public) the law will not sanction though he may apprehend injury to him is intended if he trespasses on the premises, the injury existing only in the menace and being conditional, his own act intervening and putting in motion the force from which the injury will proceed. Simpson v. State (1877) 59 Ala. 1, 31 Am. Rep. 12.

The doctrine of contributory negligence has, however, been held not applicable to the case. Hooker v. Miller (1873) 37 Iowa, 613, 18 Am. Rep. 18.

The court in Johnson v. Patterson (1840) 14 Conn. 1, 35 Am. Dec. 103, considered that the argument as used by the judges in the English cases, that the trespasser incurs the evil which he suffers by entering or permitting his creatures to enter on another's land with full knowledge of the impending injury, and must attribute the consequence to his own voluntary act, and that if death ensues it is his own procurement, would, if sound, supercede the necessity of complicated codes of criminal law, and would allow the punishment of death for every offense, even for a trespass and without the interposition of an intelligent jury.

In the Connecticut case, the act of firing off the gun was not considered the agency of the trespasser, the act of discharging the gun being looked upon as accidental and against his will. Although he knew that by his own act he was exposing himself to death, yet he must be considered as meaning to avoid that catastrophe if possible. Johnson v. Patterson, supra.

V. The question of notice.

The question whether or not the defendant has given notice of the impending danger has been battened with shingles. There was one door and a single window. The lock on the door fitted so loosely that the door could be pushed open with little force without unlocking it. About December 8, 1893, defendant and Pixley went into the mountains for a hunting trip, intending to be gone most of the winter. On the morning they left, defendant placed a spring gun inside the cabin. It was loaded with a double charge of powder and shot, and in addition thereto a loaded Winchester rifle 45-90 cartridge was placed therein, on top of the shot and powder. It was aimed directly at the casing of the door, in such a way that a person of ordinary height standing in front of the door, and placing his hand on the knob, would, upon pushing the door open a few inches, receive the entire charge in his body. The window and door were then nailed up, the door being first locked with the insecure lock above referred to. The boards were placed up and down over the door, and fastened by nails driven through a one-inch board. Before the cabin was so fastened up, some of the best of its contents were removed to the house of a neighbor, and those remaining were of but little value. On the day of the homicide, and the preceding day, deceased, with three companions, had made several trips to a construction camp a little further from the business part of Whatcom than this cabin, for made a special element in the English cases in considering the plaintiff's right to recover, the courts in that jurisdiction holding that if due notice has been given and the plaintiff in defiance thereof has placed himself in peril the consequences must be taken to be the result of his own act and therefore he cannot recover. This doctrine has to some extent been followed or approved of by the courts in some of our own jurisdictions.

If the defendant were present himself at the time of such trespass, he could not have used the deadly weapon nor have inflicted any wound, but when absent he has a right to resort to severe measures, and although it is a maxim of the law that a man cannot do that indirectly which he cannot do directly, yet such maxim is not applicable to the case of a plaintiff who has express notice and wrongfully enters, the act of firing off the gun, which is the cause of the injury, being considered his act and not the act of the person who placed the gun there. Ilott v. Wilkes (1890) 8 Barn. & Aid. 304.

Although it may be lawful to put such instruments on a man's own ground, yet as they are calculated to produce great bodily injury to innocent persons many trespasses being comparatively innocent it is necessary to give as much notice to the public as possible, so as to put people on their guard against the danger. Bird v. Holbrook (1828) 4 Bing. 623, 1 Moore & P. 607; Ilott v. Wilkes, supra. For he who sets spring guns without giving notice is guilty of an inhuman act, and if injurious consequences ensue is liable to yield redress to the sufferer. Bird v. Holbrook, supra.

The common understanding of mankind showing that notice ought to be given when these means of protection are resorted to. Ibid.

Where the plaintiff with notice of the danger gathered nuts on the defendant's woodland upon which nine or ten spring guns were concealed, and was wounded thereby, the court held the defendant's conduct justifiable. Ilott v. Wilkes (1890) 8 Barn. & Aid. 304.

In Jordin v. Crump (1841) 8 Mees. & W. 782, 5 Jur. 113, the declaration alleged that the defendant wrongfully and unlawfully set and concealed a dog spear, an engine calculated to do grievous bodily harm as well to the leading subjects of the queen as to their dogs, among the bushes near the footpath, by means whereof the plaintiff's sheep dog, which was passing along the footpath with the plaintiff when a rabbit crossed the path which rabbit the dog pursued against the will of the plaintiff, when in pursuit was struck and grievously maimed and wounded by one of such spears and rendered of little value to the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded that the said instrument or engine was so set and concealed for the purpose of preserving his game, and for the purpose of disabling and killing dogs in pursuit thereof, further verifying his action on the ground of notice. The court held the defense good even without the allegation of notice.

The case of Jordin v. Crump, supra, was distinguished from that of Deane v. Clayton (1817) 7 Taunt. 489, 2 Marsh. 577, 1 J. B. Moore, 203, upon the ground that in the former case the plaintiff had express notice that the dog spears were set in the wood, but the court stated that even though there was such a distinction, yet in the absence of notice the court's decision would still be in favor of the defendant, on the ground that the setting of such spears was a lawful act and the accident occasioned by them was the act of the dog and not of the defendant, and that the plaintiff was bound to keep his dog on the footpath.

In Deane v. Clayton, supra, the owner of a wood which was not divided from adjoining property except by a low bank and a shallow ditch, not sufficient to prevent dogs passing from crossing, for the purpose of preventing hares in his woods from being killed by dogs and foxes, kept iron spikes screwed into trees so placed that each end would point along the course of a hare path and at such a height as to allow a hare to pass under it without injury, but to wound and kill a dog that might happen to run against one, the spikes being in their nature and positions adapted to effect that purpose. None of the spikes were less than fifty yards distant from the footpath, some being one hundred and fifty or one hundred and sixty yards distant. Notice was painted on boards on the outside of some parts of the wood, that steel traps, spring guns, and dog spears were set for vermin. The plaintiff with the permission of the owner of the adjoining wood was hunting with a valuable pointer, which, when pursuing a hare which ran over the bank and ditch in the defendant's wood, ran against a spike and was killed. The court were equally divided in opinion as to the liability of the defendant for damages for loss of the dog.

Where such means are used, the nature and value of the property sought to be protected must be such as to justify the proceeding, and full notice of the mischief to be encountered must be given and the principles of humanity must not be violated, otherwise the owner will be subjected to damages for the injury sustained. Loomis v. Terry (1887) 17 Wend. 496, 31 Am. Dec. 306.

With regard to the question whether notice to the trespasser of the dangerous contrivances laid for the protection of the property would relieve the owner of liability for injuries received thereby, the court in Hooker v. Miller (1873) 37 Iowa, 613, 18 Am. Rep. 13, did not determine, as the facts did not involve that question and no such defense was raised, but the court intimated that the authorities recognized such a rule.

In this case the defendant was the owner of a vineyard and placed a spring gun there for the protection of his fruit, so arranged that it would be discharged in the direction of one entering his the purpose of securing work upon a road in process of construction. On the morning of the day of the homicide they took their blankets and started for said camp, but, not having completed arrangements for getting work, they thought best not to carry their blankets all of the way, and left them in a tree or stump a short distance from this cabin. After arriving at the camp they found it would be necessary to return to town to find the man they wished to see. Having done so, they found this man, and completed arrangements under which they were to go to work, on the road. Thereafter two of them, deceased and one Nels Anderson, after purchasing a loaf of bread and some bologna sausage, upon which to make a supper, started to walk to camp. It was then dark, the road was rough and muddy, and it was raining. When they came near the cabin, which they had passed before, and which was boarded up, and apparently unoccupied, the deceased stated that he did not think anybody had lived in it for a long while; that he would see if they could not get in, and, if they could, they had better get their blankets, and sleep there, instead of going on to camp. In attempting to make an entrance through the door, secured as before stated, the spring gun was discharged, and the entire charge penetrated the casing of the door, and passed entirely through the body of the de-premises, and gave no notice whatever that he had so arranged a gun or of his intention to do so.

The court instructed the jury in this case that if the defendant had set the gun in such a way as to destroy life, or do great bodily harm, of which plaintiff had no knowledge, and the plaintiff, in entering the premises for the purpose of taking grapes without defendant's permission, was wounded by means of the gun, he was entitled to recover; that the act of the plaintiff in that case was but a misdemeanor and would not justify its resistance by means that would take life or do great bodily harm; that the defendant had no right to use a spring gun for his protection against a mere trespasser without notice to him, and the defendant's liability on account of the wound caused by the spring gun was the same as though he had discharged it with his own hands.

In Bird v. Holbrook (1828) 4 Bing. 628, 1 Moore & P. 607, the action was upon the case for shooting plaintiff with a spring gun which the defendant had set for the protection of his property, some of which had been stolen, the gun being set without notice in a garden walled around, the plaintiff climbing over the walls in pursuit of a stray fowl, and the court held the defendant liable in damages.

That case was distinguished by the court from that of Hlott v. Wilkes (1820) 3 Barn. & Ald. 804, in that the defendant placed his gun for the express purpose of doing injury, his intention being shown by the fact that when called upon to give notice he said, "if I give notice I shall not catch him," his intention being that the gun should be discharged and that the contents should be lodged in the body of his victim if he could not be caught in any other way, and on these grounds the court held the action clearly maintainable, particularly upon the latter ground. Bird v. Holbrook, supra.

VI. Act held legal.

In some few instances the act of setting spring guns and traps upon one's own property has been held lawful even by our own courts, where the defendant could not otherwise protect his property, the right to defend it being looked upon as a necessity to individual security and as not incompatible with the public good, the right being one emphatically brought by the individual into society and not derived from it, and one that the owner is not deprived of where the obnoxious injustice of the trespasser would deprive him thereof, the act being considered as that of the trespasser, the party contemplating the injury giving the owner an indefinite right over his person or a right to make use of such means to prevent the injury as his behavior and the owner's situation make necessary. Thus—to us, whatever means are necessary must be lawful because it would be absurd to suppose that the law of nature allows us defense and yet forbids us at the same time to do whatever is necessary for this purpose. It therefore follows that he who attempts to injure us gives us an indefinite right over his person, or a right to make use of such means to prevent the injury as his behavior and our situation make necessary. Gray v. Combs (1892) 7 J. J. Marsh. 478, 23 Am. Dec. 451, quoting Rutherford's Institutions.

The law of nature allows us to defend our persons or property, and such a general allowance implies that no particular means of defense are prescribed 29 L. R. A.

So it is said the right of defense, its possession and exercise, are necessary to individual security, and are not incompatible with the public good. Society may curtail this right and restrain its exercise in many important particulars, yet it is emphatically a right brought by the individual with him into society and not derived from it, and he there retains the plenary right except so far as it has been restrained by the laws of society. Gray v. Combs, supra.

The right of defending goods is an indefinite one, and one is not naturally debarred from proceeding to extremities in their defense, where the obstinate injustice of those who would deprive us of them renders this necessary. Gray v. Combs, supra, quoting Rutherford's Institutions.

It is lawful for a person having valuable property in a warehouse secured by locks and doors, as additional security in the night-time, to erect a spring gun explodable only upon entering the premises. Gray v. Combs, supra.

The person setting a spring gun in a warehouse for its defense in the night-time is not responsible to the owner of a slave for the death of such slave, who is killed by such gun when breaking and entering such warehouse in the night-time to steal. Ibid.

In the above case the court deemed the defense used by the defendant in the protection of his premises lawful, and the calamity which pursued ascribable to the slave's own act, the time and circumstances constituting and coming of necessity and legitimately from the means resorted to.

In McClelland v. Kay (1853) 14 B. Mon. 108, 107, the court construed the opinion in the preceding case as authority for the right of defense of property against depredations to the extent of justifying one in shooting a slave when in the act of stealing.

So in King v. Kline (1847) 6 Pa. 318, where plaintiff brought trespass to recover damages for the killing of his dog by the defendant, who had set an iron trap for the dog upon his premises and shot him when caught therein, the court held the defendant had a right to protect and preserve the conventional use of his property against the plaintiff's dog, and if he could not otherwise protect it he was justified in killing the dog when caught on his premises in the act of destruction.

In Gray v. Combs, supra, the court looked upon the doctrine as laid down by Sir William Black-ceased, killing him instantly. There is some testimony as to statements made by the defendant tending to show what his intentions were in setting the spring gun. Such testimony is more or less conflicting, and the determination of what was proved thereby was properly left to the jury; and to our minds it appears, from a fair preponderance of such testimony, that the statements made by the defendant were not such as would have been likely to have been made by one who had no other motive than to protect his cabin and the property therein by such means as could be made use of without wanton disregard for the lives of his fellow men. But whether or not this was so is, in our opinion, immaterial in the determination of the questions presented on this appeal. There was also testimony tending to show that, after the door had been nailed up, a placard bearing the word "danger" was posted on the outside of the boards nailed over the door. But whether or not this was so is also immaterial.

The principal contention of the defendant was that in setting the gun as above stated he only did what he had an absolute right to do, and he asked the court so to instruct the jury, and now assigns as error its refusal so to do, which assignment of error, if sustained, will result in the reversal of the judgment and sentence, and the discharge of the defendant. If the question as to what the defendant had a right to do by way of providing for the defense of the cabin and property contained therein were one of law, unmixed with any question of fact, there might be force in this claim; but, in our opinion, stone in Volume 4 of his Commentaries, page 181, to the effect that the law will not "suffer any crime to be prevented by death unless the same, if committed, would be punished by death," as incorrect, stating that in most civilized countries the authorized extent of resistance in the necessary defense of the person or property against the perpetrator of crimes must greatly exceed the amount of punishment prescribed by the law for their perpetration.

VII. English cases.

In Jay v. Whitfield (1807) 3 Barn. & Ald. 306, 4 Bing. 644, the plaintiff having entered on the defendant's premises for the purpose of cutting a stick, was shot by a spring gun and damages were allowed for the injuries thus inflicted.

In Bird v. Holbrook (1828) 4 Bing. 623, 1 Moore & P. 607, the court looked upon the plaintiff as a mere trespasser, and as the defendant would not be authorized in taking him into custody, he could not do indirectly that which he was forbidden to do directly.

In Evans v. Lisle (1836) 7 Car. & P. 563, the action was brought for placing lighted brimstone in a church tower whereby the plaintiff, who with others was ringing the bells, was annoyed by the fumes, the defendant pleading the general issue and that the plaintiff was wrongfully in such tower creating a disturbance, and that the brimstone was so placed there by the directions of the rector for the purpose of causing the defendant to depart therefrom, after a request and refusal on the plaintiff's part. The court held that in order to support such special plea a request to depart must be shown, and also the authority of the rector to place the brimstone, and further that in order to entitle the plaintiff to a verdict on the general issue, the jury must be satisfied that some substantial damage from the fumes had been sustained by the plaintiff.

The setting of dog spears is not in itself an illegal act, nor is it rendered such by the Statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV., chap. 18, which prohibits the setting or placing of man traps, or other engines calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm, with intent that or whereby the same may destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm. Jordin v. Crump (1841) 3 Mees. & W. 732, 5 Jur. 1113.

In Wootton v. Dawkins (1857) 3 C. B. N. S. 412, in which the declaration contained two counts, one founded upon the Statute 7 & 8 Geo. IV., chap. 18, § 1, for unlawfully setting a spring gun or engine calculated to inflict grievous bodily harm, the second claiming damages generally in consequence of a personal injury sustained by plaintiff through the wrongful act of the defendant, the defendant pleaded not guilty. The facts were that the plaintiff believing that his bantam fowl had strayed into the defendant's garden obtained permission in the day-time to search for it and that not finding it upon that occasion plaintiff went again without permission in the night-time, and while engaged in such search came in contact with a wire which exploded and injured him. There being no evidence to show what the nature of the engines or the substance which caused the explosion was, or that the injury complained of was occasioned by a spring gun or other engine calculated to destroy human life, or to inflict grievous bodily harm, or that it was caused otherwise than by the plaintiff's own carelessness, the plaintiff was nonsuited and upon appeal the court of queen's bench upheld such verdict, holding that in the absence of such evidence the defendant was not liable, either at common law or under the statute.

In Daniel v. James (1877) L. R. 2 C. P. Div. 351, the defendant was summoned under the English Statute 24 & 25 Vict., chap. 97, § 41, for placing poisoned flesh in an inclosed garden for the purpose of destroying a dog which was in the habit of straying there. It was held that he was not liable within the provision of the act although the offense might be within the provision of the Act of 27 & 28 Vict., chap. 115, § 2.

In Clark v. Chambers (1878) L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 327, 47 L. J. Q. B. 427, 38 L. T. N. S. 454, 27 Week. Rep. 613, the defendant was the occupier of premises abutting on a private road leading to certain other premises as well as to his own. The road consisted of a carriage road and a foot-way the soil of both being the property of different owners, the defendant having no interest in it beyond the right of way to and from his premises, which he used as a place where athletic sports were carried on by persons resorting thereto for that purpose for their own amusement. The defendant, for the purpose of preventing vehicles from getting as far as the grounds and overlooking such sports, erected barriers across the road consisting of a hurdle set up lengthwise next to the foot-path with two wooden barriers armed with spikes blocking the entire road at the time the sports were carried on. Part of the barriers armed with spikes were removed by some person without defendant's authority and placed in an upright position across the foot-path and the plaintiff while lawfully on such road in the night-time was damaged by the spikes upon such barrier his eye coming in contact therewith, and the court held that the defendant having placed such dangerous instrument in the road was liable even though the immediate cause of the accident was the act of a third person.

R. W.

it is not. It is no doubt true that in the old English cases, and perhaps in some of the earlier cases in this country, this question was passed upon by the courts as one of law; but, in our opinion, in so deciding this question, such courts made a mistake which has led to most of the trouble connected with the proper determination of this and kindred questions. The relation of the English cases to this question is so well stated by the learned judge who wrote the opinion in the case of Aldrich v. Wright, 53 N. H. 898, 16 Am. Rep. 839, that we quote therefrom: "On the subject of defending a man's property, in his absence, by spring guns, man-traps, or other engines calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm, the English courts turned a question of fact into a question of law, and were not successful in their efforts to prescribe adequate rules for determining the reasonable necessity of such engines under the varying circumstances of different cases." This error of the courts, and the trouble and uncertainty arising therefrom, resulted in the regulation of this matter in England by statute, the enactment of which was necessary and proper, under the circumstances, but would have been unnecessary if the courts had treated this question as one of fact, and left it to the jury to decide, under proper instructions, in the light of the facts of each particular case. If the reasonable necessity of employing defensive machinery of all kinds had been left to the jury, as such a question of fact should have been, this judicial and legislative trouble would have been avoided, and the general principles of the common law would have been amply sufficient to protect the rights of all concerned. The result in England of holding this to be a question of law, instead of one of fact, furnishes a good reason for the courts of this country adopting a different rule. Those of several of the states have done so, while those of others have adhered to the rule laid down in England. By this decision we hope to place this court in a line with those of the former class, for the reasons above suggested, and for many others which might be given.

It is a universal principle that neither in defense of person or property can one go further than is reasonably necessary for that purpose, and this single principle, followed to a logical conclusion, will establish the proposition that whether or not what was done in a particular case was justified under the law must be a question of fact, or mixed law and fact, and not a pure question of law. It follows that the contention of the defendant that the court should have taken this question from the jury, and decided it itself, cannot be sustained, and since for that reason it was properly submitted to the jury, under what seems to us to have been proper instructions, we could content ourselves with what we have said as sufficient to require us to find against the above-stated contention of the defendant; but owing to the importance of the question, and the fact that it is claimed that there was some technical error connected with the instructions, we feel called upon to make some brief additional observations. It was the settled law in England that means which might reasonably be expected to cause death could not be made use of to prevent other crimes than those classed as felonies. But it was held that, to prevent felonious crimes, such means might be made use of, and this same distinction has been adopted by many of the courts of this country, but without any good reason existing therefor. The reason why the use of such means was allowed to prevent crimes of that kind in England was that they were there punishable by death. This being so, there was reason for the rule. If one was about to perpetrate a crime for which, under the law, his life would be forfeited, there was reason in holding that his life might be taken, if necessary to prevent his committing it. But in this country few crimes subject the ones who have committed them to the death penalty, and it is only as to those which do that the reason of the rule has any force. What were felonies at common law usually subject the offender here to comparatively light punishment, and upon principle it should be here held that one could only properly make use of means which might be expected to cause death to prevent the commission of a capital offense.

We are aware that courts of high standing have come to a contrary conclusion, and have held that such means might be made use of to prevent the commission of some felonies, especially to prevent the crime of burglary; but it seems to us that in so doing they have lost sight of the changed condition of things in this country, and have adhered to the English rule, when the reason therefor has no existence. The crime of burglary has been so much extended by the statutes of this state that, excepting in the case of burglary of a dwelling house when occupied by the owner or some member of his family, there is no reason why more extreme means should be allowed for its prevention than to prevent other felonies. As to what may properly be done to prevent the burglary of a dwelling house when occupied is another question. There it is not simply the damage to the property which may result from the burglary, or the sanctity connected with the property when so protected, that it can only be reached by the commission of a burglary that is involved, but in addition thereto is the question of the risk to the lives of the inmates. It is common knowledge that burglaries under such circumstances often result in the death of some of the inmates of the dwelling upon which the burglary is committed, and for that reason it might well be held that a burglary of that kind could rightfully be prevented by such means as might result in death.

Applying the principles which will naturally arise from the above suggestions to the conceded facts in the case at bar, it must result that not only was the defendant not entitled to the instruction asked for, but that, on the contrary, the court might have been justified in holding that the defendant did that which he had no right to do. The undisputed facts showed that there was no person in this cabin whose life could have been endangered by a burglary committed thereon:

hence, if what we have said is correct, it might not be prevented by means which might be expected to destroy the life of a human being. That the means used were of that kind is evident, whether judged by what might reasonably have been expected to have been the result or by the result itself.

It is not necessary, however, to go to the extent above suggested in order to sustain the ruling of the trial court. Even if it should be assumed that the defendant had a right to protect his cabin by setting a gun to defend the same, such right would still be subject to the universal rule that only such means as are reasonably necessary to prevent the crime should be made use of, and the undisputed facts abundantly warranted the jury in coming to the conclusion that more than the prevention of the burglary of the cabin was intended by the defendant in loading and setting the gun as he did. The extreme charge of both powder and shot, and the addition of such a terrible missile as an entire rifle cartridge, in a gun so placed that it would hit one but a few feet from the muzzle, furnished abundant reason for the jury to find that a vindictive desire to take the life of whoever should interfere with the cabin, rather than the prevention of the commission of a crime therein, was the object sought by the defendant. Authorities might be given upon this proposition, but on account of the confusion and want of harmony among the cases, growing in part, at least, out of the reasons above suggested, their citation would be of little use. In our opinion, the court committed no error in refusing the instruction asked, for the reason that the question to be decided was one of fact, or mixed fact and law, and therefore for the jury; and for the further reason that, under the disputed facts, any proper interpretation of the law applied thereto would have warranted the court in instructing the jury that the defendant had no right to protect his property by the means used. Some other reasons for reversal have been urged in behalf of the defendant. If considered as founded upon each separate exception taken during the progress of the trial, as they seem to be by the manner of their statement in the brief of appellant, their examination would prolong this opinion into a treatise upon criminal law. We shall content ourselves with considering two propositions which cover most of the exceptions taken, and with a statement that we have carefully considered the others, and find in regard thereto that the rulings excepted to deprived the defendant of no substantial right.

The questions which it is necessary to briefly discuss are: "First, as to the sufficiency of the information; and, second, as to the proofs introduced and offered as to the character of the defendant. In the information the defendant is charged with having purposely killed the deceased, and, since the proofs showed that he could have had no intention to kill any particular person, it is claimed that the information was insufficient, or, if sufficient, was not supported by the proofs. In our opinion, the statement in the information as to the intent to kill the particular person would have been sufficient in an indictment at common law, and would have been supported by proof of having done an act with intent to kill another person than the deceased, which resulted in the death of the person whom it was charged he intended to kill. But it is contended that our statute, which requires the fact to be stated in the information, controls, and that, even although this information would have been good at common law, it was not good under our statute, for the reason that the facts were not correctly stated therein. The information was proof against this attack for two reasons: First, that the facts were substantially stated,—the general intent to kill became special when the means made use of had taken effect on a particular person; and, secondly, our statute as to informations, when invoked, must be taken as a whole, and when so taken an information is good thereunder against an attack of this kind, unless it were possible that the defendant could in some manner have been misled thereby to his injury; and it is evident that this defendant could not have been so misled by the statement that he intended to kill the deceased when the facts were that he had a general intent to kill, which resulted in the death of the deceased.

The other question, above suggested, arises upon the action of the court in refusing to allow a witness to testify as to the reputation of the defendant from his boyhood days to the time of the homicide. Upon this question the court allowed the defendant to introduce proof covering all the later years of his life, and some that went further back. This being so, the rights of the defendant were not infringed; for while it is true, as suggested by counsel for defendant, that even boyhood reputation might in some degree affect his probable action at the time of the homicide, a due consideration of the rule that testimony must not be too remote will justify the action of the court. If a defendant puts in evidence as to good character, it is competent for the prosecution to show bad character, and, in order that this right of the prosecution may be made effective, it is necessary that the evidence on the part of the defendant should be confined to a time not too remote from the date of the commission of the crime. It would be impracticable for the prosecution, in most cases, to trace the life and habits of a defendant for more than a few years; and to allow him to go back to boyhood, and put in proof which it would be out of the power of the prosecution to contradict or in any manner rebut, however false it might be, would result in an advantage to the defendant which the rule in question never contemplated. The case seems to have been tried carefully, and in such a manner as to protect every substantial right of the defendant.

The judgment and sentence will be affirmed.

Anders, Gordon, and Scott, JJ., concur.

TENNESSEE SUPREME COURT.

COMMERCIAL NATIONAL BANK OF COLUMBUS, Ohio, Appt.,v.
MATHERWELL IRON & STEEL CO.
et al.

(.....Tenn.)

1. A receiver appointed by the courts of one state cannot sue in another state to recover property belonging to the estate which has never been in his possession.
2. Milliken & Vertrees' Code, § 5040, providing that residents of other states having exhausted their remedies there against debtors residing in such states, may subject to the satisfaction of their claims property situated in Tennessee, gives such creditors a remedy to the same extent, and in the same manner, and with the same priority as a citizen of Tennessee.
3. A statute making a judgment confessed by a corporation, after a petition has been filed for its dissolution, void as against the receiver and creditors, is not effective to control the disposition of property attached according to the laws of another state under such judgment.
4. That a nonresident creditor has exhausted his remedy against his debtor in the state of his residence, so as to be enabled to take advantage of Milliken & Vertrees' Code, § 5040, permitting him to subject property in that state to the payment of his claim, is shown by the fact that the property of the debtor in the state of his residence has been placed in the possession of a receiver under a statute forbidding interference with it.

(June 17, 1896.)

APPEAL by complainant from a decree of the Chancery Court for Shelby County in favor of defendants in a suit brought to enforce collection of an Ohio judgment from assets of defendants located in the state of Tennessee. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. William M. Randolph & Sons and F. D. Albery, for appellants:

It is immaterial that both the Commercial National Bank and the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company are corporations doing business in Ohio.

Taylor v. Badouz, 93 Tenn. 249; Gibson's Suits in Chancery, §§ 963, 968.

The return of nulla bona on an execution is not essential in such cases as the present.

Turley v. Taylor, 3 Lea, 178; Montgomery v. McGee, 7 Humph. 284; McKeldin v. Gouldy, 91 Tenn. 679.

There is nothing in the character of a judgment entered upon confession without action to prevent it from being available as a cause of action in another state, equally as well as one rendered upon adversary proceedings.

Sipes v. Whitney, 30 Ohio St. 69; 2 Black,

NOTE.—See Gilman v. Hudson River Boot & Shoe Mfg. Co. (Wla.) 23 L. R. A. 52, and note, for rights of receiver as to property outside of the jurisdiction in which he is appointed.

29 L. R. A.

Judgm. § 868; Fitzsimmons v. Johnson, 90 Tenn. 431.

The judgment sued on in this case was authorized.

2 Ohio Rev. Stat. ed. 1884, § 5334, and note; Matthews v. Thompson, 3 Ohio, 272; Huntington v. Finch, 3 Ohio St. 448; 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 51, 52, 61; Willis v. Louderback, 5 Lea, 561.

The appointment of Rochester as receiver had no effect whatever upon the note of the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, held by the Commercial National Bank, nor upon the power of attorney contained in that note authorizing the confession of the judgment here sued on.

Mechem, Agency, §§ 206, 221, 241, 264, 265; Wait, Insolvent Corp. §§ 208, 215; Pringle v. Woolworth, 90 N. Y. 502; Kain v. Smith, 80 N. Y. 469; Kincaid v. Ducinello, 59 N. Y. 548; High, Receivers, §§ 204, 318.

A corporation is not disabled to discharge its corporate duties, or exercise its corporate powers, nor relieved from the effect of judicial proceedings against it, as long as it is a going concern, even though it is in fact insolvent.

Moseby v. Williamson, 5 Heisk. 278; Comfort v. McTeer, 7 Lea, 660; City Savings Bank v. North Alabama Lumber & Mfg. Co. 91 Tenn. 12.

Proceedings in bankruptcy are ineffective as against attaching creditors, until they are either adopted by domestic process, or the property is realized by the assignee.

Wharton, Conf. L. §§ 799, 800; Allen v. Bain, 2 Head, 100.

The receiver has no extraterritorial jurisdiction, or power of judicial action, and cannot go into a foreign state, or jurisdiction, and there institute a suit for the recovery of demands due the person or estate, subject to his receivership.

High, Receivers, § 239; Booth v. Clark, 58 U. S. 17 How. 822, 14 L. ed. 164; Johnson v. Powers, 139 U. S. 156, 35 L. ed. 112; Cagill v. Woodrige, 8 Baxt. 580, 35 Am. Rep. 716; Wait, Insolvent Corp. §§ 189, 234; Day v. Postal Teleg. Co. of Baltimore, 66 Md. 360; Taylor v. Columbian Ins. Co. 14 Allen, 353; Dunlop v. Paterson F. Ins. Co. 12 Hun, 627; Dunlop v. Patterson, F. Ins. Co. 74 N. Y. 145, 30 Am. Rep. 283; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 958, 960, 964, 965; Talmadge v. North American Coal & Transp. Co. 3 Head, 337.

The Matherwell Iron & Steel Company made no voluntary conveyance or transfer of its property. This case comes within the rule of Green v. Van Buskirk, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 810, 18 L. ed. 600, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 189, 19 L. ed. 109; Hervey v. Rhode Island Locomotive Works, 98 U. S. 664, 23 L. ed. 1008; and Walworth v. Harris, 129 U. S. 365, 33 L. ed. 715.

The Statute, Code, § 5040 (4297) is not limited to citizens of the state.

Lisendes v. Holt, 1 Sneed, 42.

If we were to concede that the order of judgment of the court of common pleas of Hocking county, appointing Rochester receiver, and dissolving the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, as a corporation, had the effect of a conveyance or transfer by the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company to Rochester, which we do not, still those orders or decrees, to be valid and effectual in Tennessee, as against the Commercial National Bank's lien, or attachment, were required to be recorded in the register's office of Shelby county.

Code, §§ 2837 (2030), 2890 (2075); Hervey v. Champion, 11 Humph. 569; Boyd v. Roberts, 10 Heisk. 474; Hadley v. Freedman's Sav. & T. Co. 2 Tenn. Ch. 122.

A foreign creditor, rightfully in a court of the state pursuing a remedy given by the statutes of the state, may enforce that remedy to the same extent, in the same manner, and with the same priority of lien, as a citizen.

Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 367, 88 Am. Rep. 518; Re Waite, 99 N. Y. 433; Paine v. Lester, 44 Conn. 196, 26 Am. Rep. 442; Rhawn v. Pearce, 110 Ill. 850, 51 Am. Rep. 691.

It is only those judgments of the courts of other states which are complete and final in themselves that will support an action or a defense outside the state.

Sadler v. Robins, 1 Campb. 253; Whart. Conf. L. §§ 646, 647; Whart. Ev. §§ 763, 781, 801; Brinkley v. Brinkley, 50 N. Y. 185, 10 Am. Rep. 460; Webb v. Buckelew, 82 N. Y. 555; 2 Black, Judgm. §§ 509, 845, 867, 959; 1 Black, Judgm. §§ 44, 45; Clafin v. McDermott, 12 Fed. Rep. 875; Walseer v. Seligman, 13 Fed. Rep. 415; Thorner v. Batory, 41 Md. 593, 20 Am. Rep. 74; Pana v. Bowler, 107 U. S. 545, 27 L. ed. 480; Hart v. Sansom, 110 U. S. 151, 28 L. ed. 101; National Tube Works Co. v. Ballou, and Globe Rolling-Mill Co. v. Ballou, 42 Fed. Rep. 749; Davis v. Bruns, 23 Hun. 648; Tarbell v. Griggs, 3 Paige, 207, 3 L. ed. 119, 83 Am. Dec. 790; Guillander v. Howell, 85 N. Y. 657; Warner v. Jaffray, 96 N. Y. 248, 48 Am. Rep. 616; Schindehols v. Oullum, 55 Fed. Rep. 885.

A foreign bankrupt assignment will not be permitted to transfer property, whether movable or immovable, as against domestic attaching creditors.

Whart. Conf. L. § 890.

The fact that a bank has been declared judicially insolvent in Rhode Island, where it is chartered, and its effects passed into the hands of a receiver, does not preclude an attachment in Illinois by a creditor of the property of the bank situated in Illinois.

City Ins. Co. v. Commercial Bank of Bristol, 68 Ill. 843; Taylor v. Columbian Ins. Co. 14 Ala. 353; Willits v. Waite, 25 N. Y. 577; Hooper v. Tuckerman, 3 Sandf. 811; Moseby v. Burrow, 53 Tex. 396; Farmers & Merchants Ins. Co. v. Needles, 53 Mo. 17; Hunt v. Columbian Ins. Co. 55 Me. 298, 92 Am. Dec. 592; Kelly v. Crapo, 45 N. Y. 86, 6 Am. Rep. 35.

The law of one state dissolving an attachment of the debtor's property where he makes an assignment under the insolvent laws for the benefit of all his creditors, does not affect an attachment of the debtor's personal effects in another state by one of his creditors.

South Boston Iron Co. v. Boston Locomotive Works, 51 Me. 585; Upton v. Hubbard, 28 Conn. 274, 78 Am. Dec. 670; Whart. Conf. L. §§ 347, 364, 808.

It is immaterial that the attaching creditor does not reside in the state.

Paine v. Lester, 44 Conn. 196, 26 Am. Rep. 29 L. R. A.

442; Willits v. Waite, 25 N. Y. 577; Keller v. Paine, 107 N. Y. 83.

Messrs. Taylor & Carroll for appellees.

McAllister, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This bill was filed in the chancery court of Shelby county by the Commercial National Bank, located at Columbus, in the state of Ohio, to enforce the collection of a judgment obtained by it in the state of Ohio against the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, a corporation also domiciled in the state of Ohio. The defendant C. Mundinger was the agent at Memphis of the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, the judgment debtor, and had in his possession certain property which complainant sought to subject to the payment of its judgment. The bill alleged that the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company was insolvent, and that the judgment could not be collected in the state of Ohio, where it was rendered; that execution had issued, and was returned by the proper officer unsatisfied. In accordance with the prayer of the amended bill, an attachment issued, and was levied upon certain goods, wares, and merchandise in the hands of Mundinger, as the agent of the defendant company at Memphis. The Matherwell Iron & Steel Company filed an answer to the original and amended bills, in which it was averred that prior to the rendition of the judgment in Ohio, where both corporations were domiciled, certain creditors filed their petition against it in the court of common pleas of Hocking county, Ohio, to have it dissolved as a corporation, and its affairs administered under the statutes of Ohio; that, in pursuance of such proceedings, the court, on the 6th of July, 1892, made an order appointing one Frank C. Rochester temporary receiver, with authority to take charge of all the property, of every kind and description, belonging to said corporation. The judgment in favor of the Commercial National Bank against the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, for the sum of $5,000, was confessed on the 20th of July, 1892, in the court of common pleas for Peckaway county, Ohio, in pursuance of a warrant of attorney embodied in the note. It further appears that on the 13th of October, 1892, the Hocking county court of common pleas pronounced a decree dissolving the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company as a corporation, and appointed Rochester permanent receiver, to wind up its business and distribute its assets among its creditors. Rochester qualified, and entered upon the discharge of the duties pertaining to his receivership. It is claimed by defendant that the confession of the judgment without notice to the receiver, and the prosecution of the present suit, are an attempt to evade the laws of Ohio, and to acquire for the Commercial National Bank a priority to which it is not entitled, and that, complainant and defendant being residents of the state of Ohio, the court will not lend its aid to such purpose. Defendant further insists that said confessed judgment was an absolute nullity in the state of Ohio, where rendered, and is therefore of no extraterritorial validity. Said contention is based upon section 5661 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, regulating insolvent corporations, to wit: "All sales, assignments, transfers, mortgages, and conveyances of any part of the estate, real or personal, including things in action, of every description, made after the petition for the dissolution of the corporation is filed, in payment of or as security for any existing or prior debt or for any other consideration, and all judgments confessed by such corporation after that time shall be absolutely void as against the receiver appointed on such petition, and as against the creditors of the corporation."

It further appears that on the 28th of February, 1893, Frank C. Rochester, the Ohio receiver, filed his bill in the chancery court of Shelby county against the Commercial National Bank and McLendon, the sheriff of said county. The bill recites in full the proceedings in the state of Ohio for the dissolution of the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company as an insolvent corporation, and his appointment as temporary receiver. It also exhibits the decree of October 12, 1892, dissolving the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company as a corporation, and the appointment of complainant as permanent receiver. The bill then claims that the judgment rendered in Ohio was void, for the reason that the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company was then in the hands of complainant, as receiver. The bill further charges that, at the date of the filing of its bill, the Commercial National Bank and its officers knew of the proceedings in Ohio to wind up the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, and that complainant had been appointed receiver, and directed to take charge of all the assets of the company, and had entered upon the discharge of his duty. It is then stated that, by the laws of the state of Ohio, all creditors are required to come in and present their claims to receive pro rata distribution, and that by such laws, after the filing of such petition, one creditor could not obtain priority over others, but each and all were required to fare alike. The prayer of the bill is that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the goods in Memphis, and sell them, or that they be turned over to complainant, under his appointment as receiver in the state of Ohio; so that in either event he may realize the proceeds thereof, and take them to Ohio. Answer was filed by the Commercial National Bank, in which it relied upon the validity of its judgment recovered in Ohio. It submits that the appointment of Rochester as receiver in Ohio gave him no title to or right to the possession of the property of the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company in Tennessee, and avers the fact to be that Rochester had not taken such property into possession, and had not assumed any control of it, when the judgment was recovered in Ohio, and when the bill was filed in Tennessee, and the property attached by the Commercial National Bank. The answer then denies that the courts of Tennessee have any jurisdiction to administer the laws of Ohio with reference to its corporations, and insists that in Tennessee the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, at the bringing of this suit, was only an individual, owning the property in the hands of Mundinger as an individual could own it.

On the 29th of March, 1893, after the last bill was filed, a decree was entered in both suits, by agreement of parties, that all the property in controversy in Tennessee be turned over to Rochester, the Ohio receiver, to be sold by him for the best price possible, and that the fund arising from the sale be held by him as a separate fund, to be disposed of according to the final decree made by the court on the two suits. The two causes were heard together, and the chancellor decreed: First. The confession of the judgment by the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company in the state of Ohio on the 20th of July, 1892, in favor of the Commercial National Bank, was by the laws of Ohio absolutely void as against Rochester, the receiver; and he accordingly dismissed the bill of the Commercial National Bank. Second. That Rochester, as receiver of said defunct corporation, have and retain possession of said property, to be administered by him as directed by the proper court in the state of Ohio. The Commercial National Bank appealed, and has assigned errors.

The insistence of complainant is that, by virtue of its original and amended bills and the attachment sued out thereunder, it acquired a lien upon the property in controversy, and that such lien is superior to any claim or title of Rochester, the Ohio receiver. Complainant bases its remedy upon section 5040, Milliken & Vertrees' Code, viz.: "When a judgment has been recovered in any other state against a resident of such state, and the creditor has exhausted his legal remedy, the real or personal property of the debtor in this state may be subjected to the satisfaction of such debt by bill stating the facts under oath, and filed in the court of the district in which the property is situated." Taylor v. Badoux, 92 Tenn. 249. It will be remembered that one of the present bills was filed by the receiver, in which he prays that said goods be turned over to him under his appointment as receiver in the state of Ohio, or that a receiver be appointed to take charge of and sell the goods, so that in either event he may realize the proceeds of the goods, and take them to Ohio, to enable him to administer his trust, to the end that the assets of the corporation may be divided pro rata among all its creditors. This bill cannot be maintained for any purpose, for want of authority in the receiver to institute an action in a jurisdiction beyond that of his appointment. Says Mr. High in his work on Receivers (sec. 289), viz.: "Upon the question of the territorial extent of a receiver's jurisdiction and powers for the purpose of instituting actions connected with his receivership, the prevailing doctrine established by the Supreme Court of the United States, and sustained by the weight of authority in various states, is that the receiver has no extraterritorial jurisdiction, and cannot . . . go into a foreign state or jurisdiction and there institute a suit for the recovery of demands due the person or estate subject to his receivership. His functions and powers for the purposes of litigation are held to be limited to the courts of the state within which he was appointed, and the principles of comity between nations and states which recognize the judicial decisions of one tribunal as conclusive in another do not apply to such a case, and will not warrant a receiver in bringing an action in a foreign court or jurisdiction." Booth v. Clark, 58 U. S. 17 How. 322, 15 L. ed. 164; Beach, Receivers, §§ 680, 681. We think, therefore, the chancellor was in error in recognizing the right of the Ohio receiver to sue in a Tennessee court to recover property which had never been in his possession. Capill v. Woodridge, 8 Baxt. 580, 35 Am. Rep. 716.

The next question presented is whether, in view of the proceedings in Ohio and the laws of that state, where both of these corporations are domiciled, the Commercial National Bank is entitled to enforce its judgment against the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company in the courts of Tennessee, and to subject to the satisfaction thereof property belonging to the latter in this state. It will be observed that the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company made no voluntary conveyance or transfer of its property in Ohio. The proceedings against it in Ohio were in invitum, and under statutes authorizing the dissolution of insolvent corporations. This fact must be kept in view, for it will be found to be the differential feature that marks two distinct lines of decisions.

In Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 129, 33 L. ed. 538, 547, and in Barnett v. Kinney, 147 U. S. 476, 481, 37 L. ed. 247, 249, the Supreme Court of the United States points out the difference between a voluntary transfer of property out of the jurisdiction and the transfer of such property as the result of legal proceedings at the place of his domicile, saying, viz.: "Although in some of the states the fact that the assignee claims under a decree of a court or by virtue of the law of the state of the domicile of the debtor and the attaching creditor, and not under a conveyance by the insolvent, is regarded as immaterial, yet in most the distinction between involuntary transfers of property, such as work by operation of law, as foreign bankrupt and insolvent laws, and a voluntary conveyance, is recognized. The reason for the distinction is that a voluntary transfer, if valid where made, ought generally to be valid everywhere, being the exercise of the personal right of the owner to dispose of his own, while an assignment by operation of law has no legal operation out of the state in which the law was passed." Says Mr. Wharton in his Conflict of Laws (secs. 799, 800), viz.: "With regard to proceedings in bankruptcy or insolvency of the courts of the several states in invitum, the universal rule is that such proceedings are ineffective as against attaching creditors until they are either adopted by domestic process or the property is realized by the assignee. Local lien creditors, whose liens are prior to the actual arrest under local process, unquestionably have precedence. The question of priority between them and the bankrupt assignee is one of which the lex rei sita is the sole arbiter." The author in the text is speaking of state bankrupt or insolvent laws, and not in respect of national bankruptcies. In Reynolds v. Adden, 136 U. S. 348, 34 L. ed. 360, Mr. Justice Bradley referred to the same distinction, viz.: "Every state exercises to a greater or less extent, as it deems expedient, the comity of giving effect to the insolvent proceedings of other states, except as it may be compelled to give them full effect by the Constitution of the United States. Where the transfer of the debtor's property is the result of a judicial proceeding, as in the present case, there is no provision of the constitution which requires the courts of another state to carry it into effect, and, as a general rule, no state court will do this, to the prejudice of the citizens of its own state." Our statute (Milliken & Vertrees' Code, § 5040) is not limited to citizens of this state; but, as held by this court in Taylor v. Badoux, supra, a citizen of another state is entitled to pursue the remedy it affords. Lienbee v. Holt, 1 Sneed, 42, 51. It was held by the court of appeals of New York in Hibernia Nat. Bank v. Lacombe, 84 N. Y. 867, 38 Am. Rep. 518, that an assignment by virtue of or under a foreign law does not operate upon a debt or right of action as against a person in that state, and that a foreign creditor rightfully in a court of that state, pursuing a remedy given by the statutes of that state, may enforce that remedy to the same extent, in the same manner, and with the same priority of lien, as a citizen. In that case it appeared that the plaintiff, a national bank, organized and having a place of business in New Orleans, purchased for value of defendant the Mechanics' & Traders' Bank, a Louisiana corporation, a draft drawn on bankers in the city of New York for $10,000, payable to plaintiff's order. The draft was duly presented to the payors in New York, and payment refused. It was duly protested, and notice given to the drawer. It further appeared that, after the delivery of the draft to plaintiff, the Mechanics' & Traders' Bank was placed in liquidation, under the laws of Louisiana, and commissioners were appointed to take possession of and administer its assets. The plaintiff afterwards commenced an attachment suit in the supreme court of New York, which was served on M. Morgan's Sons, bankers of New York, who had funds of the Mechanics' & Traders' Bank of New Orleans in their hands. It was held that the statute of New York authorized the proceeding, and that neither the law of Louisiana nor the adjudication of that state under which the commissioners were appointed could have any operation here to defeat or affect the lien of plaintiffs' attachment. The court said, viz.: "The remaining question relates to the claim made by the commissioners appointed by the court in Louisiana. Neither the law nor the adjudication under which they were appointed can have any operation here. They are strictly local, and affect nothing more than they can reach; for the rule, as we conceive, is well settled that an assignment by virtue of or under a foreign law does not operate upon a debt or right of action as against a person in this state. The plaintiff, as we have seen, although a foreign creditor, is rightfully in our courts, pursuing a remedy given by our statutes. It may enforce that remedy to the same extent and in the same manner and with the same priority as a citizen. Any other construction would make the permission of the statute a form without benefit, a formality, and not matter of substance; a mere delusion. Once properly in court, and accepted as a suitor, neither the law nor court administering the law will admit any distinction between the citizen of its own state and that of another. Before the law and in its tribunals there can be no preference of one over the other. It follows that, however fatal the adjudication in Louisiana may be to the existence of the defendant corporation in that state, it cannot deprive its creditors of the remedies afforded by other forums against its property. This action was commenced before the intervention of the commissioners, and to it they have established no defense, nor shown sufficient reason for defeating the priority of lien acquired by the proceedings therein. Willits v. Waite, 25 N. Y. 586; Polger v. Columbian Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 267, 96 Am. Dec. 747. If the plaintiff has by its proceedings obtained an advantage against the law and adjudications of Louisiana, it is a resident of that state, and, as such, the appellant's counsel contends, may there be overhauled and made to account for what it has gained here. To that remedy, if it exist, the defendants may properly be remitted." In the later Case of Waite, reported in 99 N. Y. 448, the court of appeals of that state held that, where neither the rights of domestic creditors nor of foreign creditors proceeding against the property under state laws were involved, the foreign assignees may be permitted to sue in their courts for the benefit of all the creditors, on principles of national comity, without a surrender of the principle that a foreign statutory assignment does not operate as a transfer of the property in that state. It was distinctly held in that case that a statutory title of foreign assignees can have no recognition in that state solely by virtue of the statute. The case of Cole v. Cunningham, 133 U. S. 107, 33 L. ed. 588, is not an authority against the principles already announced. It appeared in that case that all the parties were domiciled in the state of Massachusetts. The debtor had made a general assignment of all his property for the benefit of all his creditors, as required by the laws of that state. A creditor was proceeding in a foreign jurisdiction to subject property of his insolvent debtor situated in the sister state to the satisfaction of his claim. Upon bill filed in the state of Massachusetts, where all the parties resided, the creditor was enjoined from proceeding further with the prosecution of his suit to obtain preference in property situated in such foreign jurisdiction. It is obvious that case is entirely dissimilar in its facts to this case. We have also carefully examined the case of Bagby v. Atlantic, M. & O. R. Co., 86 Pa. 291, cited in the brief of defendants' counsel; and, while it supports his contention, the case, in our opinion, is opposed to the great weight of authority on the subject. The other case, Hadley v. Freedmans Sav. & T. Co., 2 Tenn. Ch. 122, we do not think apposite.

It is contended, however, on behalf of defendants, that complainant's judgment cannot be enforced in the state of Tennessee, because it was void in the state of Ohio, where rendered. This contention is based upon the statute of that state, which provides, viz.: "And all judgments confessed by such corporation (after the petition for the dissolution of the corporation is filed) shall be absolutely void as against the receiver appointed on such petition and as against the creditors of the corporation." It will be observed that the statute does not in terms declare that the judgment shall be void as against the corporation, nor does it undertake to vest the receiver with the title to property belonging to the insolvent corporation situated beyond the limits of that state. The statute only provides that such judgment shall be void as against the receiver, and the creditors of the corporation. The decree dissolving the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company was not rendered in Ohio until the 12th day of October, 1892; and until that time the corporation was a going concern, with the right to exercise its corporate functions, and was, of course, subject to be impleaded at the suit of any creditor. Moseby v. Williamson, 5 Helsk. 278; Comfort v. McTeer, 7 Lea, 660; City Savings Bank v. North Alabama Lumber & Mfg. Co. 91 Tenn. 12; Walt, Insolvent Corp. § 372; Central Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 73, 26 L. ed. 693, 701; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 1010. It is true, the petition for the dissolution of the corporation was filed on the 6th of July, 1892, and this judgment was confessed afterwards, to wit, on the 20th of July. It is only against the receiver and creditors of the corporation that such judgment is by the statute declared void. We are of opinion that this statute is only operative in Ohio in favor of the receiver, and in respect of property situated in that state. The chattels in controversy were in the state of Tennessee, and subject to its laws, when these attachment proceedings were begun, and, being the property of the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company, were subject to complainant's judgment, and the lien of complainant's attachment is in no wise affected by the proceedings that transpired in Ohio.

Finally, it is insisted by counsel for defendants that it does not appear that complainant has exhausted its legal remedy in the state of Ohio. This contention is based upon the language of section 5040, Milliken & Vertrees' Code, viz.: "When a judgment has been recovered in any other state against a resident of such state, and the creditor has exhausted his legal remedy," etc. It is claimed on behalf of defendants that up to the date of filing the amended bill in this cause, as shown by the record, the only execution that had issued on said judgment was levied upon property of defendants, or some of them. The proof in the record shows that the property levied on was either released or subject to prior liens, and that nothing could be made in satisfaction of the judgment. It is, moreover, a conclusive answer to this position that, at the date of the rendition of complainant's judgment in Ohio, all the property of the Matherwell Iron & Steel Company was and has continued to remain in the hands of Rochester, receiver; and complainant absolutely had no remedy in the state of Ohio for the collection of its judgment. It had to all intents and purposes, in the language of the statute, exhausted its legal remedy. Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 479, 87 L. ed. 818; Turley v. Taylor, 8 Lea, 178; Montgomery v. McGee, 7 Humph. 234; Cass v. Beauregard, 101 U. S. 690, 25 L. ed. 1004.

It results that the bill of Rochester, receiver, filed herein, must be dismissed, and complainant will be entitled to a decree for the amount of its judgment and interest, and to subject the property herein attached, or its proceeds, to the satisfaction of said decree.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Stephen A. BROWNELL et al.

v.

OLD COLONY R. CO. et al.

(.....Mass.....)

1. A railroad company owning a ferry franchise which runs a ferry as part of its line cannot while operating the rest of its line discontinue the ferry because it is not profitable and refuse to obey a legislative requirement to operate it.
2. An order by the court to operate a ferry may be in the first instance to provide a suitable ferry without definitely deciding what kind of a ferry is suitable.
3. Special mention of a ferry franchise is not necessary to convey it in a transfer of a railroad of which the ferry is practically an extension.
4. Acquiescence by the state in the abandonment of a ferry is not shown by mere failure of officers to take action to compel its operation.
5. Duty to operate a ferry under a franchise may be specifically enforced by a suit in court authorized by statute, and the forfeiture of the charter is not the only remedy.
6. The enforcement of a penalty due to the state under Stat. 1894, chap. 362, for failure to operate a ferry cannot be had in a suit on petition of individuals to compel the operation of the ferry.

(June 19, 1895.)

CASE reserved by the Supreme Judicial Court for Bristol County for the opinion of the full court in a proceeding to compel defendants to operate a ferry between Fairhaven and New Bedford and to enforce the statutory penalty for their refusal to do so. Decree in favor of complainants.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. T. M. Stetson and L. Le B. Holmes, for plaintiffs:

Statute 1882, chapter 80, authorizes union of Old Colony Railroad and said Boston, Clinton, Fitchburg & New Bedford Railroad, under the name of Old Colony Railroad Company, which shall enjoy all the franchises and property belonging to both, and shall assume all the duties of said corporations.

The Old Colony Railroad votes union and to be subject to all the duties of a railroad which in its title deed of ten years before was expressly and in terms bound to this ferry duty and powers, "as fully and amply as if they had first been granted directly to said New Bedford Railroad Company." The Old Colony Railroad was inexcusable if it did not know what the title deed of its grantor set forth. But whether it knew or not, its duty to the public was the same.

And that river crossing was just as much its duty as to maintain the railroad to Taunton, or any bridge.

Wheeler v. San Francisco & A. R. Co. 81 Cal. 68, 89 Am. Dec. 147.

A consolidation "subjects to all the duties of both"—defendant became liable not only to duties owed the public, but even to existing tort damages.

John Hancock Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Worcester, N. & R. R. Co. 149 Mass. 214; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 969, 942-957.

A privilege is a duty: if a charter is a contract, then the railroad owes the consideration, i. e., burdens for the privileges granted it.

Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp. 2 Gray, 64.

This ferry was more than an appendage, it was the railway itself. By Act of 1854, "it shall exist and be known as the Fairhaven Branch Railroad."

Fitch v. New Haven, N. L. & S. R. Co. 8 Conn. 38; Cohen v. Wilkinson, 12 Beav. 125; Wheeler v. San Francisco & A. R. Co. and Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp. supra.

By virtue of this deed the Old Colony Railroad owns the Fairhaven Branch Railroad, including the ferry. Its answer says it owns the said Fairhaven Branch Railroad. It shall not be permitted to say, "We have violated our duty, and so should not be held to such duty." The grantee of a charter cannot relieve himself by violation. That is not his right.

Barker v. Barrows, 188 Mass. 580; Hawson, v. Uzbridge School Dist. No. 5, 7 Allen, 127, 83 Am. Dec. 670; Sohier v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 1; Packard v. Ames, 16 Gray, 827; Episcopal City Mission v. Appleton, 117 Mass. 826.

Throughout the chain of deeds it was not necessary ever to use the word "duties."

Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp. 2 Gray, 61.

A mere transfer of a franchise carries its duties, as well as its privileges, without any other words.

Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp. 2 Gray, 65.

NOTE.—In connection with the above case, see note to State v. Dodge City, M. & T. R. Co. (Kan.) 24 L. R. A. 564, on mandamus to compel operation of railroad.

30 L. R. A.

A Massachusetts franchise cannot be ended by "abandonment."

Boston Glass Manufactory v. Langdon, 24 Pick. 49, 85 Am. Dec. 292; Russell v. McLellan, 14 Pick. 63; 2 Kent, Com. *305, note, 811 812.

The commonwealth's remedy is not limited to a forfeiture of charter. Enforcement of chartered duty has always been law, by mandamus, injunction, indictment, action or tort for penalty, etc.

2 Kent, Com. *290, note; Riddle v. Proprietors of Locks & Canals, 7 Mass. 187; Mower v. Leicester, 9 Mass. 250, 6 Am. Dec. 63; Morawetz v. Priv. Corp. §§ 10755, 1076, 1182, 1183; Keene v. Eastern R. Co. 103 Mass. 259; Re Fencing, Pub. Stat. chap. 112, § 115; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Grand Junction Railroad & Depot Co. 4 Allen, 205; Roxbury v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 6 Cush. 436.

Or by indictment.

2 Kent, Com. *290, note; Com. v. Hancock Fries Bridge Corp. 2 Gray, 67.

No limitation runs against the commonwealth unless expressly so provided.

Stoughton, Sharon & Canton v. Baker, 4 Mass. 528, 3 Am. Dec. 286; Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 100; United States v. Hoar, 2 Mason, 818; Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70; People v. Gilbert, 18 Johns. 227; United States v. Thompson, 98 U. S. 486, 25 L. ed. 194; Com. v. Alburger, 1 Whart. 469; Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Coal Valley Mtn. Co. 68 Ill. 489; United States v. Alexandria, 19 Fed. Rep. 611; United States v. Nashville, O. & St. L. R. Co. 118 U. S. 125, 80 L. ed. 88; Com. v. Allen, 128 Mass. 810; Charles River Bridge Proprs. v. Warren Bridge Proprs. 36 U. S. 11 Pet. 544, 9 L. ed. 822.

Acceptance by stockholders of Act of 1894, or similar mandatory acts, is absurd.

Com. v. Eastern R. Co. 103 Mass. 257, 4 Am. Rep. 555; Worcester v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 109 Mass. 108; Atty-Gen. v. Old Colony R. Co. 22 L. R. A. 112, 160 Mass. 96; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Grand Junction Railroad & Depot Co. supra; Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 559; Gouven v. Penobscot R. Co. 44 Me. 145; State v. New Haven & Northampton Co. 48 Conn. 351; Eastern R. Co. v. Boston & M. Railroad, 111 Mass. 129, 15 Am. Rep. 13.

Profit and loss are not important where there is a legislative act.

A ferry is part of a unit, like a bridge, or rock cut.

Com. v. Eastern R. Co. 103 Mass. 257, 4 Am. Rep. 555; Parker v. Metropolitan R. Co. 109 Mass. 506; Woodruff v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 59 Conn. 64; Worcester v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 109 Mass. 108; Metropolitan R. Co. v. Highland Street R. Co. 118 Mass. 293.

The lessor is the one to proceed against.

Braslin v. Somerville Horse R. Co. 145 Mass. 67; Nelson v. Vermont & O. R. Co. 26 Vt. 721, 62 Am. Dec. 614; Bower v. B. & S. R. Co. 42 Iowa, 548; Singleton v. Southwestern Railroad, 70 Ga. 465, 48 Am. Rep. 574; Central & M. R. Co. v. Morris, 68 Tex. 49; Worcester v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 109 Mass. 108; New Bedford R. Co. v. Old Colony R. Co. 120 Mass. 899; Com. v. Tenth Massachusetts Turnp. Corp. 5 Cush. 509; Langley v. Boston & M. Railroad, 10 Gray, 108; Davis v. Providence & W. R. Co. 121 Mass. 184; Ingersoll v. Stockbridge & P. R. Co. 8 Al-29 L. R. A.

len, 439; Notice in hac, Pub. Stat. chap. 105, § 87; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Crane, 113 U. S. 424, 28 L. ed. 1064; Bouknight v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 41 S. C. 415; Balsley v. St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. 119 Ill. 68, 59 Am. Rep. 784; Chollette v. Omaha & R. V. R. Co. 4 L. R. A. 135, 26 Neb. 168; Macon & A. R. Co. v. Mayes, 49 Ga. 355, 15 Am. Rep. 678; Harmon v. Columbia & G. R. Co. 28 S. C. 401; Gale v. Troy & B. R. Co. 51 Hun, 470.

If a railroad attempts to divest itself generally of its personal property, or the bulk of its property, the act is ultra vires and void.

Central Transp. Co. v. Pullman's Palace Car Co. 189 U. S. 49, 35 L. ed. 64; Branch v. Jesup, 106 U. S. 468, 27 L. ed. 279; 2 Kent, Com. *314, and notes.

Act of 1894, chapter 892, is valid by legislative competence and power, without any previous duty.

Massachusetts General Hospital v. State Mut. L. Assur. Co. of Worcester, 4 Gray, 227; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Grand Junction Railroad & Depot Co. 4 Allen, 205; Worcester v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 109 Mass. 108; Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Steiner, 61 Ala. 559; Railroad Comrs. v. Portland & O. Cent. R. Co. 63 Me. 269, 18 Am. Rep. 208; Gouven v. Penobscot R. Co. 44 Me. 145; State v. New Haven & Northampton Co. 48 Conn. 351; State v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 538; Boston & M. R. Co. v. York County Comrs. 79 Me. 886; Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164, 24 L. ed. 97; Crawford v. Branch Bank of Alabama at Mobile, 48 U. S. 7 How. 282, 12 L. ed. 702; People v. Boston & A. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 569; Parker v. Metropolitan R. Co. 109 Mass. 506; Metropolitan R. Co. v. Highland Street R. Co. 118 Mass. 298; Re Northampton's Petition, 158 Mass. 301; Norwood v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 161 Mass. 264; Woodruff v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 59 Conn. 63; Keene v. Eastern R. Co. 103 Mass. 259.

Mr. J. H. Benton, Jr., for defendant.

Mr. H. M. Knowlton, Atty-Gen., for the Commonwealth.

Allen, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

By Statute 1854, chapter 124, the proprietors of the New Bedford & Fairhaven Ferry were authorized to transfer their charter to the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company by deed, which should vest in the latter company all the rights and powers conferred by said charter, with a provision that the latter company should be held to perform all the duties prescribed thereby, and that from and after the execution and delivery of the deed the name of the ferry company should be changed, and that the said corporation should afterwards exist and be known by the name of the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company, and should not be required to hold separate meetings as a ferry company, but that all acts needful and proper to be done should be done at regular or special meetings of the railroad corporation, or by the directors thereof. The deed which was executed under the above statute was expressed to be upon the condition that the railroad company and their successors should at all times discharge the duties, and become and remain subject to the liabilities, prescribed and set forth in the charter of the ferry company, and also in Stat. 1854, chap. 124. Various intermediate transfers were made, until, in 1883, by virtue of Stat. 1883, chap. 80, the Old Colony Railroad Company succeeded to all the franchises and property which had belonged to the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company. The evidence in the case leaves no doubt, and it is conceded, that after the deed to the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company the railroad of that company and the ferry became one line, and were operated as such for a number of years. It was the same in effect as if the railroad company, by its original charter, had been authorized to establish and operate the ferry as a part of its line. The ferry became practically an extension of the railroad, just as if the railroad had been extended over a bridge. The railroad line having been thus extended and operated until 1873, the ferry was in that year discontinued as unprofitable; and by Stat. 1894, chap. 392, the Old Colony Railroad Company was expressly required to provide and operate a suitable ferry in accordance with the provisions of the original ferry charter and of Stat. 1854, chap. 124.

The first question which we have to determine is whether this statute is within the legislative power; that is to say, whether a railroad company, which runs a ferry as a part of its line, and which is operating the rest of its line, can discontinue the ferry, and refuse to obey a legislative requirement to operate it. A railroad company has by no means an absolute power to determine what parts of its line it will operate. Its franchises are granted for the public good, and in exercising them it is largely subject to the control and direction of the legislature. Either by virtue of the police power or of the reserved power to alter charters, many acts may be required which involve expense, and which a railroad corporation, or other corporation to which like rules would apply, would not, if left to itself, undertake. Numerous illustrations of this are found in the decisions of this court, as well as in those elsewhere. Roxbury v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 6 Cush. 424; Com. v. Hancock Free Bridge Corp. 2 Gray, 58, 64; Fitchburg R. Co. v. Grand Junction Railroad & Depot Co. 4 Allen, 198; Com. v. Eastern R. Co. 103 Mass. 254, 4 Am. Rep. 555; Commissioners on Inland Fisheries v. Holyoke Water Power Co. 104 Mass. 446, 6 Am. Rep. 247; Worcester v. Norwich & W. R. Co. 109 Mass. 103; Re Northampton's Petition, 158 Mass. 299, 301; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 843, 23 L. ed. 428; Railroad Comrs. v. Portland & O. Cent. R. Co. 63 Me. 277, 18 Am. Rep. 208; State v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 29 Conn. 538; People v. Albany & V. R. Co. 24 N. Y. 261, 32 Am. Dec. 295; People v. Boston & A. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 569; Monclair Top. v. New York & G. L. R. Co. 45 N. J. Eq. 436; People v. Louisville & N. R. Co. 120 Ill. 48; State v. Iowa Cent. R. Co. 83 Iowa, 720. The present case is merely an instance of compelling a railroad company to operate its entire line. The legislature has seen fit to pass an imperative statute to this effect. In 29 L. R. A.

view of this statute, it is not open to the railroad company to determine that the ferry should be discontinued while all the rest of its various lines are operated. The defendant appears to rely on Com. v. Fitchburg R. Co., 12 Gray, 180, as sanctioning a contrary doctrine; but in that case there was no statute requiring that the railroad company should run the unprofitable trains. There is nothing in the decision which declares or implies that the legislature might not have imposed this as an absolute duty. The same thing may be said of People v. Rome, W. & O. R. Co., 108 N. Y. 95, and People v. New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. 104 N. Y. 58, 58 Am. Rep. 484.

The defendant contends that Stat. 1894, chap. 392, did not impose a new obligation on the defendant, but only required the defendant to perform such obligation as the ferry company would have been under to maintain and operate the ferry, if it had not transferred its charter in 1854; and an elaborate argument is made to show that the original ferry company was not bound to maintain the ferry for all time. But, whatever may have been the obligation of the original ferry company, the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company, when it made the ferry a part of its line, no longer had the power to discontinue the ferry, provided the legislature expressly required that it should be operated. And we are unable to give to the Statute of 1894 the construction suggested by the defendant. This statute makes it the imperative duty of the defendant to operate the ferry, whether it is profitable or not. The defendant contends that the statute requires it to provide and operate a "suitable" ferry, and that there is no proof before the court upon which it can be definitely decided what kind of a ferry is suitable. We think, however, that an order to provide a suitable ferry is sufficient in the first instance, and that, if complaint is made that a ferry boat which may be provided is not suitable, a further application may be made to the court.

The defendant further contends that the requirement to operate a ferry forces it into a new business, and that, if the legislature can require it to operate a ferry for a mile, it could also require it to maintain a line of steamboats to Nantucket. The only answer which needs to be given to this argument is that the ferry, by legislative authority, was adopted by the railroad company as a part of the line of the railroad, and that its subsequent maintenance is no more outside of the business of the railroad company than the maintenance of any other part of the railroad line.

The defendant further contends that the only liability of the defendant for failure to operate the ferry is a liability to forfeit the ferry charter. This argument cannot prevail, since the blending of the ferry franchise with that of the railroad company.

The defendant also contends that it has never acquired the franchise to maintain the ferry. The ground of this argument is that the deed of the ferry franchise to the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company was upon condition, and that the deed became void by the failure to perform the duties required by the condition; and, moreover, that in the recent transfers no express mention has been made of the ferry franchise. But the deed of the proprietors of the ferry to the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company cannot be considered as technically a deed upon condition subsequent. No clause of re-entry for breach of condition was inserted, and the purpose of the proviso was rather to show that the grantee was to assume and perform the duties prescribed and set forth in the charter. Rawson v. Uxbridge School Dist. No. 5, 7 Allen, 125, 88 Am. Dec. 670; Sohier v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 1, 19; Episcopal City Mission v. Appleton, 117 Mass. 386. No conveyance upon condition subsequent was contemplated by Stat. 1854, chap. 124, or by the vote of the stockholders of the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company to make the purchase. The effect of the transaction was to transfer the duties from one corporation to another, after which the original corporation had no further interest in the matter; but the railroad company was bound by law to perform all and singular the duties of the ferry company. The ferry company was not authorized to make a conditional transfer. By section 8 of the statute, its only existence after the transfer was as the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company. Moreover, an estate on condition subsequent is not defeated except by re-entry for breach of condition. No such re-entry has been made in this case, nor is it easy to see how it could be, since the ferry company, as a separate corporation, has ceased to exist. In reference to the suggestion that no special mention of the ferry franchise has been made in the recent conveyances, it may be said that none need be, since the provisions of Stat. 1854, chap. 124, and the delivery of the deed thereunder. Since that time the ferry corporation has existed and been known by the name of the Fairhaven Branch Railroad Company, and has been included in all transfers of that company.

The defendant further contends that it cannot be required to maintain the ferry during the term of the lease of its railroads and property to the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Company. This lease was not pleaded in defense, and we have no reason to suppose that the omission was through inadvertence. Its admission in evidence was objected to as incompetent, and not open, and no motion was made to amend the answer by pleading it. We therefore have no occasion to consider whether the existence of the lease would exonerate the defendant as lessor from its obligations to the commonwealth, respecting which, however, see Braslin v. Somerville Horse R. Co. 145 Mass. 64; Davis v. Providence & W. R. Co. 121 Mass. 184.

The defendant also suggests that any obligation to the commonwealth to operate the ferry was waived by the acquiescence of the commonwealth in its abandonment for a period of twenty years after 1878, and also by legislation subsequent to the abandonment in 1878, by which the railroads were permitted to lease and consolidate upon the basis of such abandonment. But no such waiver on the part of the commonwealth is to be presumed without the use of language in some statute clearly expressing or implying it. The omission by officers of the commonwealth or by others to take steps earlier for enforcing the duty signifies nothing. No statute has been pointed out showing an intention on the part of the legislature to waive the performance of it.

The defendant contends that the legislature could not provide for the specific enforcement of the obligation to maintain the ferry by a suit in court, such as is provided for in Stat. 1894, chap. 392. The numerous cases already cited in which resort has been had to the courts for the enforcement of similar obligations and duties show to the contrary, and that the forfeiture of the charter is not the only remedy.

Finally, it is contended that the penalty of $100 a day for each day's delay in operating such ferry cannot be enforced in this suit. Upon this point the statute is not clear, but we have come to the conclusion that the better construction of the statute is as the defendant contends. The principal reasons supporting this view are as follows: The forfeiture of the sum prescribed is to the commonwealth, but the statute contains no provision making the commonwealth or any one of its officers a party to the suit which ten or more citizens may bring to enforce the provisions of the act. The maintenance of the ferry is for the peculiar benefit of New Bedford and Fairhaven, but the citizens of those places have no special interest in the enforcement of the penalty. The legislature can hardly have intended that the penalty should be paid to the ten or more citizens who are authorized to file a petition in equity to enforce the provisions of the statute, yet nobody else is required to be a party plaintiff. The plaintiffs have made the attorney-general a party to represent the commonwealth; but he is not a financial officer of the state, and we are at a loss to see how he can properly be made a party, or be entitled to appear in his own name to represent the pecuniary interest of the commonwealth under this statute. The ordinary way of enforcing a penalty which is to go to the commonwealth is by proceeding in the name of the commonwealth, unless some other mode is enacted by statute or established by custom. We have a difficulty in inferring that the legislature intended that a heavy pecuniary penalty inuring to the commonwealth should be enforceable by a suit or petition in equity in this court, which suit is instituted, managed, controlled, and subject to be discontinued solely by private citizens, who have no interest in such penalty. The provision of the statute that this court should have jurisdiction in equity upon the petition of ten or more citizens of New Bedford or Fairhaven to enforce the provisions of this act is satisfied by holding that it means the provisions requiring the Old Colony Railroad Company to provide and operate a suitable ferry. These citizens may maintain a petition in equity to enforce so much of the statute as concerns the citizens of New Bedford and Fairhaven. The commonwealth may enforce the penalty which inures to its benefit. This view derives some confirmation from Pub. Stat., chap. 217, § 2, providing that "all fines and forfeitures . . . expressly appropriated to the use of the commonwealth . . . may, unless otherwise expressly provided by law, be prosecuted for and recovered by indictment in the superior court . . . or the same may be recovered in an action of tort.

The result is that the plaintiffs are not entitled to a decree for enforcing the forfeiture of $100 a day to the commonwealth, but, in the opinion of a majority of the court, they are entitled to a decree requiring the defendant to provide and operate a suitable ferry.

Ordered accordingly.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

E. E. ELLSWORTH

v.

CHICAGO, BURLINGTON & QUINCY
R. CO., Appl.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. The clause "continuous passage within one day of date of sale" on a railroad ticket does not make the ticket invalid on the day of sale because it bears a prior date.
2. Failure to pay for a ticket when purchased because of haste to catch a train, and the acceptance of a promise to pay on return, will not defeat the right of the passenger to recover damages for ejection because the ticket bears a prior date.
3. A passenger is not called upon to submit to a wrongful ejection for the purpose of economizing the damages to be recovered, but may make any resistance not amounting to a criminal disturbance of the peace.
4. Exemplary damages may be recovered by a passenger for an ejection which was malicious as well as wrongful.

(May 23, 1893.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court for Adams County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for plaintiff's alleged unlawful ejection from defendant's train. Affirmed.

Statement by Granger, J.:

On the morning of September 27, 1893, the plaintiff procured a ticket on defendant's line of road from Prescott to Corning, a distance of seven and one third miles. Because of the fair at Corning, the company was selling round-trip tickets at reduced rates, which tickets had to be filled in with a pen. The plaintiff was late reaching the depot at Prescott, so that there was no time to fill up a round-trip ticket, and he told the agent to give him a "straight ticket." The train was moving, and plaintiff took the ticket handed him, and caught the train, and got onto the rear platform. Because of his haste, he did not pay for the ticket, but said to the agent that he would pay on his return, to which the agent assented. By a rule of the company, tickets must be used on the day they are purchased, and, if not so used, they may be returned, and the purchase money will be refunded. The ticket given plaintiff was dated September 24, 1893, instead of the 27th, the day on which it was handed to plaintiff. The delivery of the ticket to plaintiff was a mistake, it having before been sold, and not used, and then redeemed, as above stated. The redemption was by the night agent at Prescott, who put it in the drawer in the ticket office, and the day agent, without noticing the date, gave it to plaintiff. When a short distance from Prescott, the conductor asked for plaintiff's ticket, and the ticket in question was handed him, which, because of its date, he refused, and demanded the fare. The regular fare to Corning is twenty-two cents, and by the rules of the company, authorized by the laws of the state, ten cents above the regular fare is collected by conductors when the ticket office has been open for a reasonable time before the departure of trains, and tickets are not secured. After the refusal of the conductor to receive the ticket, plaintiff offered to pay the regular fare, but refused to pay the additional ten cents. The train was stopped, and plaintiff ejected, and this action is for damages. There was a verdict and judgment for the plaintiff, and the defendant appealed.

Mr. Smith McPherson for appellant.

Messrs. Davis & Wells, for appellee:

A passage ticket in the ordinary form is merely a voucher taken or receipt adopted for convenience to show that the passenger has paid his fare from one place to another, and does not constitute the contract of carriage; although it may and often does have upon it some condition or limitation which enters into and forms a part of the contract, accordingly it is admissible to prove by parol evidence the terms of the contract in fact entered into between the carrier and the passenger.

Burnham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 68 Me. 298, 18 Am. Rep. 220; Johnson v. Concord R. Corp. 46 N. H. 213, 88 Am. Dec. 190; Logan v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 77 Mo. 668; Lewis v. New York Sleeping Car. Co. 143 Mass. 1267, 58 Am. Rep. 185; Frank v. Ingalls, 4 Ohio St. 560; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Campbell, 36 Ohio St. 647, 38 Am. Rep. 617; Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 34 Mich. 631; Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. v. Dougherty, 86 Ga. 744;

NOTE.—The present case seems to be one of first impression in regard to the effect of the words "day of date of sale" on a railroad ticket.

As to ejection of passenger for refusal to pay fare, see also Peabody v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Or.) 13 L. R. A. 822, and note.
39 L. R. A.

See also 30 L. R. A. 730.

Georgia Railroad v. Olds, 77 Ga. 678; Pennsylvania Co. v. Bray, 125 Ind. 229; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Rice, 64 Md. 68; Murdock v. Boston & A. R. Co. 187 Mass. 298, 50 Am. Rep. 807; Bradshaw v. South Boston R. Co. 185 Mass. 407, 46 Am. Rep. 481; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Rather, 8 Tex. Civ. App. 77.

A passenger is under no obligation in order to avoid wrongful expulsion from a train to pay an extra fare demanded, and then sue to recover it back.

Texas & P. R. Co. v. Dennis, 4 Tex. Civ. App. 90; Jeffersonville R. Co. v. Rogers, 28 Ind. 1, 92 Am. Dec. 276; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Graham, 8 Ind. App. 28; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Conley, 6 Ind. App. 9; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Fix, 88 Ind. 387, 45 Am. Rep. 464; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Holdridge, 118 Ind. 281; Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Cope, 86 Ill. App. 97; Georgia Railroad v. Olds, supra; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 148 U. S. 71, 86 L. ed. 79; Palmer v. Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. 8 S. C. 580; Burnham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 63 Me. 299, 18 Am. Rep. 220; Murdock v. Boston & A. R. Co. 187 Mass. 298, 50 Am. Rep. 807; Arnold v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 115 Pa. 185; English v. Delaware & H. Canal Co. 66 N. Y. 454, 23 Am. Rep. 69; Brown v. Memphis & C. R. Co. 7 Fed. Rep. 51; Louisville, N. A. & O. R. Co. v. Conrad, 4 Ind. App. 83.

Granger, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The court gave the jury the following instruction: "The ticket introduced in evidence, and which is admitted as the one purchased by plaintiff of defendant's agent, is dated September 24, 1893, and contains the following clause: 'Continuous passage within one day of date of sale. You are instructed that said clause is a limitation of the time on which said ticket will be honored, and, as such, is a reasonable limitation and rule. You are further instructed that, presumptively, the date of the ticket was the day of its sale. But if, as a matter of fact, the day of the sale differs from the date of the ticket, yet the said ticket by its express terms was good from the date of sale, and if you find from the evidence that said ticket was purchased by plaintiff on the 26th or 27th day of September, 1893, and was presented within one day from the actual date of such sale, it was good for such passage between the points named, to wit, Prescott and Corning.'" The instruction is said to involve error because it treats the transaction between the agent and plaintiff as a sale of the ticket, when it appears that the ticket was not paid for on delivery, but it was paid for afterwards on the same day. On that branch of the case the court gave the following instruction: "In the case at bar it is admitted that plaintiff procured a ticket from the defendant's agent at Prescott before entering defendant's cars. It is also admitted that payment was not made until thereafter. On this branch of the case you are instructed that a neglect of plaintiff to pay for the same at that time, under the circumstances shown on the trial of this case, would not alone, or for that reason, invalidate the ticket; and 29 L. R. A.

an acceptance on the part of the agent of plaintiff's promise to pay therefor on his return, and a payment thereafter, constitute a valid consideration and payment therefor." It seems to us that that is the correct rule. Had there been a refusal to accept the ticket because not paid for, the question might be different. It is not what could be called a credit sale, nor was it intended as such, but only a delay in payment because there was not time to pay and get the train, and payment was expected the same day, and so made.

2. There is a further complaint of instruction No. 6 because, notwithstanding the clause, "continuous passage within one day of date of sale," it holds the ticket good if presented "within one day from the actual date of such sale." This contention means that the validity of the ticket for the passage depended upon its date rather than the fact as to the sale. We cannot concur in that view. It is not to be believed that the company ever intended to sell a ticket that should not be honored for a passage on the day of the actual sale. It is true that the intent is, in such cases, to have the two dates concur, but no company or person would ever design that its mistake in such a way should be to the prejudice of a purchaser of a ticket. It is not to be doubted that both the company and the plaintiff intended that the ticket in question should be good for a passage on the train on which it was offered. The facts admit of no other conclusion. It is equally true that the plaintiff was, as between himself and the company, entitled to passage on that train, and that his ejection from it was wrongful. The more difficult question is as to his remedy for the wrong done him; that is, when the conductor refused to accept the ticket because of its date, had the plaintiff the legal right to insist on a passage on that train, and resist removal therefrom, or should he have paid his fare, as demanded, and sought redress from the company on that basis, or, not wishing to do that, should he, on request of the conductor, to avoid damage, have left the train without resistance, and based his damage on the mistake in selling him the ticket? Authorities on this question are far from being harmonious. Other courts have, and this court should, in determining these questions, keep in mind the difficulties to be met with and overcome in a successful management of the railway passenger traffic of the country, both as to the public and the carriers. To such an end it is clearly important that there shall be rules for the guidance of employes in the different parts of the service, and that such rules should be conclusive as to their course of conduct, even though at times the rule may operate to the prejudice of an individual passenger. We may instance a case or two as illustrative of it, as when a person who has purchased a ticket loses it. All will at once see that, although he has paid for the passage, he is not entitled to it on the lost ticket, because the only evidence to show the conductor that he has purchased a ticket is his word, and the confusion and consequences to result from such a system of management are too manifest to deserve comment. Take, also, a case in which a ticket is paid for, but no ticket handed to the passenger, through the neglect of the agent, and the passenger boards the train with no evidence of a right to a passage. The equitable status of the passenger in this case is somewhat stronger than in the other, but the importance of a rule of conduct for the conductor is equally strong. In such a case there is no harshness in the rule requiring him to seek his damage, if any, on the basis of a failure to deliver the ticket, and which excludes him from any rights on the train because of his payment for the ticket. It is safe to state, as a rule of passenger traffic, that no person has a right to passage on a train without paying fare, unless a ticket or other evidence of a right to transportation is presented to the conductor. This holding, at the outset, puts us to that extent in line with the authorities on the subject, a number of which are cited by appellant in support of its contention in this case. A case relied on by appellant is Frederick v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co., 87 Mich. 343, 26 Am. Rep. 531. We have examined the case with care. In that case it was claimed by plaintiff that he called and paid for a ticket from Ishpeming to Marquette, and, by mistake, the conductor gave him one to Morgan, an intermediate station. He rode to Morgan on the ticket, and, refusing to pay his fare to Marquette, he was ejected from the train, because of which he brought the action. In that case it will be seen that the passenger had no ticket from Morgan to Marquette, a fact known to him before reaching Morgan. The case in this respect is quite in line with the rule we announce, and, in this respect, unlike the case at bar. The opinion in that case deals somewhat elaborately with the importance of rules to guide conductors, and of the conclusiveness of the ticket as to his duty. In the opinion in that case it is said: "As between the conductor and passenger, the ticket must be the conclusive evidence of the extent of the passenger's right to travel. No other rule can protect the conductor in the performance of his duties, or enable him to determine what he may or may not lawfully do in managing the train or collecting fares." With the proposition we do not differ, for, as between the conductor and passenger, no other rule can well obtain, but that is not to say that a passenger may not have rights on a train that a conductor, observing his instructions, may not violate so that the company will be liable. The reasoning in that case would carry the effect of the rule further than we indicate our approval. It treats of the duties of passengers, even when entitled to a passage on a ticket, and the right is denied by a conductor, and when a wrong ticket is issued by mistake of the agent, so that he has not the ticket he should have, and it favors a yielding on the part of the passenger to the claims of the conductor in either case, and his seeking a remedy otherwise than for an ejectionment from the train. The force of that case as an authority in the respects stated is much lessened, if not entirely lost, from the fact that, of the four judges, two of them place their concurrence in an affirmation on a different ground, and it does not appear that the reasoning referred to is approved by them. In a later Michigan case, that of Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., 53 Mich. 118, the language of the Frederick Case, that we approve, is in substance stated and approved. In the latter case the ticket purchased was a part of an excursion ticket that had, in part at least, been canceled, and this was apparent on the face of the ticket. The agent, when shown the ticket by the purchaser, said it was good, but it really was not. In that case, to prevent ejectionment from the train, the passenger paid the fare, and the action was for damages because the conductor laid his hand on him to put him off, and took hold of the bell rope to stop the train for that purpose. It is not necessary for us to say whether or not we concur in the holding in that case, for we understand that court to rest its holding on the apparent invalidity of the ticket on its face, it having been canceled. It is said in that opinion: "But we are all of the opinion that, if the plaintiff's ticket was apparently good, he had a right to refuse to leave the car." That is what we regard as the situation in this case. Plaintiff's ticket was apparently good on its face. It should have entitled him to one first-class passage from Prescott to Corning. The fact rendering it not good was a rule of the company as to the time in which it could be used. These rules are changeable at the pleasure of the company, and when a ticket is purchased from one station to another, and on its face it indicates a right to that passage, no rule or regulation of the company should be permitted to defeat that right. A passenger has a right to assume that an agent placed at a station will observe the rules with reference to such matters as dates in or on a ticket. What may be the rule to-day may not be to-morrow. Conceding plaintiff to have known of the rule previously, he was not called upon to question the act of the agent as to the rule on the day he bought the ticket. It is neither reasonable nor practicable for passengers to take notice of such matters, or attempt to correct agents in regard to them. With a ticket that expressed his right to a passage to Corning, he was not required to look behind it for the authority of the agent to issue it. We do not understand that the supreme court of Michigan would apply the rule as to yielding to the directions of a conductor to a case like this, where the ticket is apparently good, but, even if otherwise, we cannot so hold. It would be doing too much in favor of a party in the wrong merely to subserve a public convenience, for which much is claimed. A thought in argument is, and some language of the opinions referred to seems to favor it, that it is the duty of the passenger to not enhance damages by resistance, because it is of no use, but that he should submit quietly to ejectionment, and then seek his damages. To say the least, we think he may make any resistance, not amounting to a criminal disturbance of the peace, as was done in this case and that he is not called upon to submit to a wrongful ejection for the purpose of economizing the damages to be recovered.

Townsend v. New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 56 N. Y. 295, 15 Am. Rep. 419, is another case cited and relied upon by appellant. In that case the passenger had surrendered his ticket to a conductor on another train. He changed trains, as was necessary, to reach his destination, but he had no evidence whatever of a right to a passage on that train. He claimed to the conductor that he had purchased a through ticket, and that the other conductor had taken it, and not given it back. For a refusal to pay, he was ejected, and a recovery had in the lower court. The case was reversed on two grounds, the latter ground being the part of the opinion relied on by appellant. The rule of the case is that the remedy was an action for the wrongful act of the first conductor in taking his ticket; that the act of the first conductor did not justify the violation of the lawful regulations of another train; that he should have left the train without resistance, and if he invited force, by resistance, the company was not liable for it. The rule is not against our conclusions. The conductor was right in refusing the passage without a ticket. In such a case the passenger must pay or leave the train. If he does not he is in the wrong. But even in that case two of the judges based their concurrence on the first ground, and one on the last.

The case of Hufford v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., cited above, was appealed a second time and is reported in 64 Mich. 631, it will be remembered that it is the case where the canceled ticket was sold and refused by the conductor. As bearing upon the effect of such a ticket when presented this language is used: "The ticket given by the agent to the plaintiff was the evidence agreed upon by the parties, by which the defendant should thereafter recognize the rights of the plaintiff in his contract; and neither the company, nor any of its agents, could thereafter be permitted to say that the ticket was not such evidence, and conclusive upon the subject. Passengers are not interested in the internal affairs of the companies whose coaches they ride in, nor are they required to know the rules and regulations made by the directors of a company for the control of the actions of its agents and the management of its affairs." The case holds that even the canceled ticket, because issued for a passage, was good and conclusive. In Georgia & B. R. Co. v. Dougherty, 86 Ga. 744, which was an action by a colored woman for being ejected from a train, where there was a mistake, her ticket being to Asheville, N. C., instead of Atlanta, Ga., as she supposed, in the opinion it is said: "We think she had a right to rely on the ticket she had purchased from the agent of the railroad company as being a proper one, without an examination of the same; and, nothing else appearing, there being no intervening circumstances which required her to look at the ticket, if she could have read the same, such conduct upon the part of the railroad company and its agents authorized her to recover damages. See Georgia Railroad v. Olds, 77 Ga. 673; New York, L. E. & W. R. Co. v. Winter, 143 U. S. 60, 36 L. ed. 71; Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Rze, 88 Ind. 381, 45 Am. Rep. 464; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Holdridge, 118 Ind. 281; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Rice, 64 Md. 63; Murdock v. Boston & A. R. Co. 137 Mass. 293, 50 Am. Rep. 307; Burnham v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 63 Me. 298, 18 Am. Rep. 220.

Some importance is attached to the fact that the plaintiff acquiesced in the demand of the conductor by offering to pay the regular fare, and only objected to the extra ten cents, but we do not see how that makes a difference as to his right of recovery. It is not to be questioned but that he claimed his right to a passage on the ticket, and made the offer to avoid ejection from the train. As he had a ticket, he felt that he should not be called upon to pay a penalty for a neglect of which he was not guilty. We cannot see how an offer to pay that was not accepted could excuse his ejection from a train on which he was entitled to be.

The court authorized the jury to find exemplary damages, if it found that the act of defendant was malicious. Complaint is made of the instruction under the evidence, but it was warranted. There was evidence of the previous bad feeling and threats which, with what was done at the time of the ejection, made the question one for the jury.

The judgment is affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

John M. WOHLFORD et al., Appts.,
v.

CITIZENS' BUILDING, LOAN & SAV-INGS ASSOCIATION.

(.....Ind.....)

1. Sustaining a demurrer to one paragraph of an answer is not cause for reversal if the appellant could avail himself of the same defense under the paragraphs remaining.
2. An assessment to cover losses and equalize members is properly made by the board of directors of a building and loan association, instead of by the association as a whole, under a statutory provision that the business of the association shall be managed by a board of directors.
3. An assessment on stock in a building and loan association for the purpose of covering losses and equalizing the members so that they may all go out at the final close on an equal footing, is within the liabilities of a member upon a note and mortgage which include a provision for the payment not only of installments of dues, but of any fees or assessments.
4. A formal acceptance in writing of the provisions of the Act of 1885, which expressly grants to building and loan associations power to make assessments on stock calls to cover losses is not necessary in order that such an association may exercise the enlarged powers granted by that statute, including the power to make an assessment to cover losses, and thereby equalize members so that all at the close may go out on an equal footing.

(April 26, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Huntington County in favor of plaintiff, in an action brought to enforce payment of a note given by defendants to plaintiff and to foreclose a mortgage securing the same. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Meurs. J. M. Hatfield, M. L. Spencer, and W. A. Branyan, for appellants:

Section 8419, Rev. Stat. 1881, says: "All such associations shall have power to assess" 25 cents per month for expenses. In this law no other power is given to make assessments, and here it must be made by the association, not by the board of directors, president, secretary or any set of officers.

Section 851 of Elliott's Supplement says: "All such corporations shall have power" to make assessments of 25 cents per month to pay expenses, and adds the further authority "to make assessments upon the capital stock to pay losses."

Section 145 of Morawetz on Private Corporations says: "A provision in a charter declaring that the corporation shall be authorized to levy assessments by vote, places the power in the hands of the majority in stockholders' meeting; under such a provision, the directors

NOTE.—Liability of advanced member of building and loan association to assessment for losses.

As to the method devised by some of the courts for settling this question, that of compelling the advanced members to repay their loans and then dividing the surplus assets equally among all the members, see note to Southern Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Anniston Loan & T. Co. ante, 120.

The tendency of the American cases is to treat the members of the association, advanced and unadvanced, as in the relation of partners, and to compel them to share equally in losses. The English cases, however, do not require this unless the rules of the association provide for it or it is necessary to protect strangers. Under the English conception of such associations, the advanced members bear no relation to them except as stated in their contracts. They can be required to make all the payments provided for, but no more, so far as their mortgage is concerned.

Decisions proceeding on the partnership theory.

The true indebtedness of a member of a building and loan association is not necessarily the difference between what he has received and what he has paid back. The very nature of such an institution involves a profit and loss account. And advanced or borrowing members as well as the rest hold a relation to that account which must be adjusted before they can repudiate their contracts and take leave of the association. As they take their chances for the profits in case of the early closing up of the concern, the rule of equity requires that they should incur the hazards fairly incident to the business, and bear their due proportion of the same. Patterson v. Albany Bldg. & Loan Assn. 63 Ga. 373.

In Rowland v. Old Dominion Bldg. & Loan Assn. 115 N. C. 325, it is said expenses and losses may not only destroy all hope of profits but may bring the deluded borrower to the necessity of paying back for the benefit of the creditors of the association the loan he borrowed after he had settled the debt, as he thought, by the payment of his monthly dues through all the tedious years of his bondage to the association, for however valid between the borrowing member or stockholder and the association may be their agreement that his debt shall be considered extinguished when he has paid in $100 per share, creditors of the association might rise up and object to the consummation of this arrangement upon the very plausible theory that the assets of the corporation should not be applied to the use of the stockholders until the creditors are paid in full.

While a person remains a member of the association he is under obligation to contribute his share of its expenses. Though as a mortgagor he will not be compelled to pay more than the sum actually borrowed by him with legal interest thereon; it was only as a member that he could claim a share of the profits of the association or any benefit in the payments made by others. If he should now set off against his mortgage a share of the profits made equal to the liability which he has incurred for expenses, he will, in effect, recover more than he has paid in, and will throw upon his associates the whole of the burden which, in truth, is his as well as theirs. That cannot be. The association has a right to treat his payments while his membership continues as a contribution, so far as they are needed to the discharge of the expenses incurred in the management of the enterprise in which he had a joint interest with others. Nor has he now any title to the premiums paid by the other borrowers. McGrath v. Hamilton Sav. & Loan Assn. 44 Pa. 383.

The inability of the association to proceed to its

and other agents of the company have no original authority to make assessments, and it seems that the power cannot be delegated to them by vote of the majority."

Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 556.

Section 854 of Elliott's Supplement, provided that associations organized prior to that date could have the advantage of its provisions and be subject to its requirements by filing a written acceptance, acknowledged by the president and attested by the secretary.

These powers could certainly not be exercised by associations organized prior to that date until the new law had been accepted as therein prescribed.

When appellee showed by its complaint that it was incorporated prior to the passage of the act, it was incumbent on appellee to prove, by proper averments, that it had done all that was necessary to authorize it to make an assessment to pay losses.

Cooper v. Arctic Ditchers, 56 Ind. 283.

It is claimed in the complaint that by the terms of said note it became due on the 12th day of November, 1891, and said note is therefore due and unpaid.

Supposing, at the time of the loan, the officers had said: "We will loan you $1,060 upon which you are to pay six per cent interest until November 12, 1891, pay $180 per year for eight years as dues, and pay all assessments that our board of directors may make and at the end of the time, November 12, 1891, you will owe us $2,000." No sane man would ever be caught borrowing money on such terms if they were made known to him.

The member had to pay to the association for the loan obtained as follows: Dues for eight years $1,040. Assessments for expenses for eight years $8.00. From February 5, 1885, to November, 1891, he paid six per cent interest on $1,060, although, he at no time, had more than $800 of the money of the association. Is it not about time that the note and stock were set off against each other?

The borrower who pays weekly dues and installments for a period of six years, discharges his obligation to the association.

Lime City Bldg. Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Wagner, 122 Ind. 78.

But if the board of directors had a right to make a binding assessment against appellants, was it done? The meeting was a special one called by the secretary, as the by-laws authorized, at which seven members attended.

The board was composed of nine directors. There is nothing said of notice being given the other two directors and it cannot be presumed that such notice was given.

In Doernbecher v. Columbia City Lumber Co. 21 Or. 578, it was held that where a board was composed of five directors, three could not meet in special meeting and transact the business of the company without giving notice to the other two.

Bank of Little Rock v. McCarthy, 55 Ark. 478; Paola & F. R. E. Co. v. Anderson County Comrs. 16 Kan. 309; Doyle v. Miser, 42 Mich. 832; Spelling, Priv. Corp. § 424; Orinwell's App. 100 Pa. 488; People v. Lowe, 117 N. Y. 175.

Long after this concern began business, the expected termination by reason of the impairment of its collectible loans is attributable alike to each stockholder. The officers of the association are their agents and the results of their investments are alike the fortune or misfortune of each stockholder whether it be borrower or non-borrower. When a condition thus brought about justifies equity in prematurely terminating the career of the association, the adjustment should be squarely upon the line of what would take place if the association lived out its life as possible. Towle v. American Bldg. Loan & Investment Soc. 61 Fed. Rep. 446.

Where the association could not close, as was contemplated, the court said the borrowing members now want their loans canceled and their liens satisfied, although their stock has not matured. This would let them out without having paid up in full and throw the whole loss on the non-borrowers. It needs no argument to show that this cannot be done. Booz's App. 18 W. N. C. 867.

Where the association was closed up before the shares had reached the amount contemplated by the scheme, the court held that, in distribution, each member, for each share held by him, was entitled to practically the same amount in the assets of the society. Those who were debtors, if they owed more than their distributive share, should pay the balance to the society and upon such payment should have such mortgages canceled. If they owed less than their distributive shares they should have their mortgages canceled and receive balance so as to make them equal with the creditor members. People v. Lowe, 117 N. Y. 175.

When stock matures, the holder is not entitled absolutely to its par value. From such value must necessarily be deducted any expenses or losses incurred in winding up the particular series. What the stockholders are entitled to is an equal division of the assets, less expenses and losses. Laurel Run Bldg. Assn. v. Sperring, 106 Pa. 330.

The mere fact that the assets of the association were sufficient to bring each share to par will not entitle a mortgagor to have his bond canceled and mortgage given up as a matter of course. Buist v. Fitzsimons (S. C.) 21 S. E. Rep. 610.

The original loan association theory.

If there is no provision in the article making an advanced member liable to contribute to losses and there are no creditors except ordinary creditors and the assets are insufficient, the members will be personally liable, whether advanced or unadvanced, and will be settled on the list of contributaries. This liability depends, not on the terms of the contract between the members, but on the fact of all members being principals and of the directors being their agents in relation to the necessary business of the society. In regard to money borrowed under a rule of the society the security of the lenders is the total amount of contributions of members and the creditors can have no recourse except against such funds and property. If the mortgage makes the advanced members liable for all sums of money payable according to the rules of the society he is not entitled to redeem his mortgage without providing for a liability to ordinary or loan creditors. The advanced members are not liable to make further contributions to the losses of the unadvanced in the absence of any contract by the rules or otherwise to that effect. Re West London & General Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. [1894] 2 Ch. 363.

Where an association was in process of liquidation, it was contended that the borrower must pay the full amount of his loan and leave the amount which he had paid on his shares to be dealt with in the liquidation. The lord chancellor said: "I am officers induced others, among them appellants, to buy stock and take out loans, holding out the inducements shown by a fair reading and interpretation of their by-laws, briefly to this effect: The stockholder should pay 25 cents per week on each share; this was to pay for the stock. No other provision of any sort is found anywhere nor any sort of notice that any other payment would be required except the fixed payment for expenses. The borrower would be charged only six per cent on the money actually borrowed, to be paid in weekly installments, and at the expiration of eight years from incorporation, if the borrower made these payments as required by the by-laws, it would pay his stock and his stock should cancel the note. Appellant did all of these things.

The contract of purchase was fixed by the law governing, such as it then was, the by-laws of the plaintiff and the acceptance of the shares by appellant on the terms so fixed.

Wohlford, then, has paid for his stock.

There were no losses and the appellee had a large amount of cash in excess of the debts. Why should Wohlford make up, not losses, not debts, not expenses, but a mere deficiency of anticipated, speculative profits?

Lime City Bldg. Soc. & Loan Assn. v. Wagner, 122 Ind. 78.

Messrs. J. B. Kenner and U. S. Lesh, for appellee:

All former legislation was repealed by the Act of 1885. An association organized before could act under the latter act. Section 857 of the Act of 1885 provides that they shall McLaughlin v. Citizens Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. 62 Ind. 264.

Just before the end of the eight years, when it was supposed the association would be closed out or wound up, it is discovered that the borrowers have received their $200 per share in full, but that there is not enough money left to pay off the non-borrowing stockholders in full, and other debts of the association. The corporation thereupon assesses each borrowing stockholder with a sum of money sufficient to equalize the borrowing and non-borrowing stockholders, or in other words calls for that further amount on his stock.

The association is insolvent.

The insolvency of the company puts an end to the operations as a building association; to a certain extent, it also ends the contract between it and its members respectively, and nothing remains but to wind it up in such a manner as to do equity to creditors, and between the members themselves. As regards the latter, care should be taken to adjust the burdens equally, and not throw upon either borrowers or non-borrowers more than their respective share. The result may be reached by requiring the borrower to repay what he actually received with interest. He would then be entitled, after the debts of the corporation are paid, to a pro rata dividend with the non-borrower for what he has paid upon his stock. He will then be obliged to bear his proper share of the losses. To allow him to credit upon his mortgage his payments on his stock would enable him to escape responsibility for his share of the totally at a loss, and have been throughout, how to understand the argument that you can cancel or treat as a nullity an actual payment on account of that transaction, merely because the society may have made bad investments and lost the money which had been paid." This gentleman, on paying the full amount of his shares, would do all which, as a contributor or otherwise, he could possibly be required to do. Brownlie v. Russell, 8 App. Cas. 235, 48 L. T. N. S. 881, 47 J. P. 757.

Borrowing members are entitled to have their securities discharged on the terms of the rules when there are no outside creditors and are not bound to remain members to bear a share of the losses incurred by the society. Toeh v. North British Bldg. Soc. 11 App. Cas. 496. In that case the lord chancellor quotes the language of Lord Selborne, in Brownlie v. Russell: "A fallacy which has pervaded much of the argument which has been offered to your lordships in support of the appeal, is that because the members of this society are associated together for a common purpose, therefore there must, in equity and reason and by implication from their contract, although not in terms expressed, be a right on the part of some of the members to hold all the others liable in contribution to them for any loss which, in the actual state of things, they may have sustained. It appears to me that such a result cannot be arrived at by presumptions or inferences from the law relating to companies of a different kind, but that we must look to this particular contract."

The advance made to a member of the society is not a loan to be repaid. It is a payment in advance of the amount to which he will be entitled at the end of his term. Should losses occur afterwards which were not foreseen when the advance was made, the claim of the society to make the advanced members contribute will be in effect, "We have advanced you too much; repay a portion of the advance." To increase the stipulated monthly payments which he must make to redeem the mortgage would only be a mode of effecting such repayment of part of the advance. But the ground of such a claim against an advanced member is not a mistake of fact; it is that losses have occurred after the advance which were not anticipated at the time. There is no equity arising from that fact which would found a claim for recovering any part of the advance. In the absence of a contract by the advanced member to contribute to the deficiency of funds to pay other members arising from losses incurred after the advance was made, it is difficult to see any principle on which such contribution could be claimed. Buckle v. Lordonny, 56 L. J. Ch. 437, 56 L. T. N. S. 273, 35 Week. Rep. 360, 51 J. P. 422.

Where the rules of the society did not make the advanced members liable to contribute to losses, he cannot be put on the list of contributors although his mortgage secured payment of all moneys whatsoever to be paid by the mortgagor, pursuant to the rules of the society, in respect to the shares received by him in advance or otherwise "in respect of his being a member of said society." Re Britania Permanent Ben. Bldg. Assn. 65 L. T. N. S. 198.

Where there was a surplus of assets at the time a winding up order, was passed it was held that the advanced members would be required to pay the amount of their arrearages at the time that the order was passed but could not be required to contribute anything beyond that date. Re Middleborough, R. & S. Bldg. Soc. 58 L. J. Ch. 771.

Where the rules of the society provided that when the amount paid by the borrower should equal the sum advanced, with interest and other charges thereon, he should be entitled to release, it was held that he could not be compelled to pay a call for the benefit of the other members although he might have been compelled to contribute losses, and throw them wholly upon the non-borrowers. In other words, the borrower would escape without loss. It will not do to administer the affairs of an insolvent corporation in this manner.

Strohen v. Franklin Sav. Fund & Loan Assn. 115 Pa. 273, approved in Callahan's App. 124 Pa. 139; Laurel Run Bldg. Assn. v. Sperring, 106 Pa. 384; Booz's App. 16 W. N. C. 365.

The holders of matured stock are not creditors, and can only share pro rata with the holders of unmatured stock, after the payment of the creditors of the corporation.

Criswell's App. 100 Pa. 488.

The same idea of equality is carried out in New York, when it was held that each member for each share held by him was entitled to the same amount, i. e. a proportionate share of the assets; if a debtor, and if he owed more than his distributive share, he was bound to pay the balance, and upon such payment was entitled to a discharge of his mortgage.

People v. Love, 117 N. Y. 175, reversing 47 Hun, 577. See also Everman v. Schmitt, 24 Ohio L. J. 56; McGrath v. Hamilton Sav. & Loan Assn. 44 Pa. 383.

To allow a member to retire and demand all he paid in, without contributing anything to losses which are manifest and impending, would be unjust towards his fellow members. And it would be bad faith in him. He has a right to share the profits while a member, and he must also bear his proportion of the losses.

Knoblanck v. Robert Blum Bldg. Assn. 25 Pittsb. L. J. 39.

A stockholder withdrawing from a building association must bear his proportion of losses sustained prior to notice of withdrawal.

Wittman v. Concordia Bldg. Assn. No. 4, 18 Phila. 95; Lime City Bldg. Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Wagner, 123 Ind. 78.

towards payment of the creditors had there been any. Re Doncaster Permanent Ben. Bldg. & Investment Soc. 15 L. T. N. S. 270, L. R. 3 Eq. 158, 15 Week. Rep. 102.

If there are outside creditors at the time of winding up an association, an advanced member will be placed on the list of contributaries as to the amount unpaid under the terms of his mortgage and compelled to pay the amount immediately, but when that is paid he will be free from all further liability to the society. London Provident Bldg. Soc. v. Morgan [1896] 2 Q. B. 266.

In Bowker v. Mill River Loan Fund Assn. 7 Allen, 100, it was held that the position of an advanced member of the association was merely that of a debtor for the full amount of his bond which remained unpaid.

Mortgages are not assets to be applied to the satisfaction of the claims of unpaid shareholders. Lister v. Log Cabin Bldg. Assn. 38 Md. 114.

Effect of rules or provisions in mortgage.

If the rules of the association provide that at the expiration of six years the stock shall be applied in cancellation of the loan, when the time arrives the borrower cannot be required to do more and his obligation to the association is extinguished. Lime City Bldg. Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Wagner, 123 Ind. 78.

Where the constitution of the association provides that "any stockholder desiring to settle a loan shall be charged with the actual amount loaned him together with all fines due and credited with the amount of dues paid in upon the stock on 29 L. R. A.

It is the duty of members to contribute to losses and expenses of the society.

Endlich, Bldg. Assn. §§ 88, 104-106; Robertson v. American Homestead Assn. 10 Md. 397, 69 Am. Dec. 145 and note; McGrath v. Hamilton Sav. & Loan Assn. 44 Pa. 383; United States Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Silberman, 85 Pa. 394.

Jordan, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was commenced by appellee against appellant and wife, in the court below, on January 14, 1892, upon a certain note and mortgage. A trial resulted in the former obtaining a judgment upon the note, and a decree of foreclosure upon the mortgage. Appellee is a corporation duly organized under the laws of this state providing for organization and operation of building, loan and savings associations, and its existence for doing business was, by its articles of association, limited to eight years from and after the date of its organization, which was November 12, 1883; and at the time of bringing this action it was engaged in winding up its business, under section 3006, Rev. Stat. 1881 (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 3429), which continued its existence for three years for that purpose. The association was composed of two classes of members; namely, "borrowers" and "non-borrowers." Appellant was a member of the association belonging to the first-mentioned class, and was a holder and owner of ten shares of the capital stock, of $200 each, which he obtained at the time he executed the note and mortgage in question. Under the law and constitution rules and by-laws governing the operation of appellee's association, the weekly payments on shares of stock, which are denominated "dues," which the loan has been made," any person meeting these conditions has a right to have his mortgage discharged, regardless of the conditions of the affairs of the association and his right with respect to the other members. Myers v. Schoyer, 9 Mackey, 254.

Clauses for the division of profits are not sufficient to establish the liability of advanced members. Re West Riding of Yorkshire Permanent Ben. Bldg. Assn. L. R. 43 Ch. Div. 407.

Where the mortgage provides for payment of whatever will become due under the rules and a rule provides that if there is a deficiency of income by which the society may be prevented from meeting its anticipated expenditures and liabilities, the amount of such deficiency is to be equitably and equally apportioned between the investing and borrowing members, any loss will be included which arises whereby the assets will be insufficient for the payment of investing members and the borrowing members are liable to contribute in favor of the investing members to the losses. Ibid.

Where the mortgage covenants to pay the weekly dues and fines until such time as the association might have a sufficient fund to pay all the holders of unredeemed shares of stock the sum of $100 per share clear of all losses and liabilities, the mortgagor can be required to contribute to losses and liabilities of the association only in case of its continued existence and operation and termination in regular course and mode, as provided in the articles of the association, and then only by the prolonged and extended payment of weekly dues. Low Street Bldg. Assn. No. 6 v. Zucker, 42 Md. 452.

were loaned to members, and the plan was to offer the money on hand each month to its members at a public bidding, for the privilege of obtaining the loan; and the stockholder offering the highest premium was granted the loan, provided he could give the required security. It appears, then, by this plan, that if a member is the owner of one share of stock of $200, and desires to procure a loan, he bids, say 20 per cent premium; or, in other words, offers to relinquish to the association $20 on each $100, or $40 on his share of $200. He, in this manner, only receives in money on his one share $160, and is required to execute his note for $200, and secure the same by a mortgage. It also appears from this mode of procedure that the borrowing member, including the amount which he bids as a premium, receives his full share in advance of the maturity of his stock. He and all other members are required to pay 25 cents per week on each share of stock, amounting to $13 per year, or during the period of eight years—the lifetime of the association—the amount so paid in dues would be $104 on his share of $200, which, in other words, would, at the end of eight years, leave unpaid upon it $96, provided he pays no further sum than the weekly dues of 25 cents. He also pays the interest weekly on his loan along with his stock dues.

In February, 1885, appellant seems to have borrowed from this association, by the plan above stated, $1,060, and executed to the corporation the following note or obligation, and also the mortgage to secure the same, in which he expressly agreed to pay the sum secured thereby: "$1,060.00. Huntington, Ind., February, 1885. For value received, I promise to pay to the order of the Citizens' Building, Loan & Savings Association, of Huntington, Ind., two thousand dollars, with interest on ten hundred and sixty dollars, eight years after the date of incorporation of said association, viz., November 12th, 1883, or whenever said association shall be declared by its board of directors legally ended; interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, payable in equal weekly installments on Saturday of each week. And I do further promise and agree that should the weekly installments of interest hereon as aforesaid remain due and unpaid for three months, or should my stock in said association be forfeited for the nonpayment of the weekly installments of dues, or for any fines or assessments thereon, or for the nonpayment of the taxes, ground rents, or fire insurance premium on the property mortgaged to said association to secure the payment of this note, for three months after the same becomes due, as provided by the constitution and by-laws of said association, then, and in either case, the whole amount of principal and interest of this note, together with all unpaid dues, fines, and assessments on the shares of stock of said association owned by me, and all ground rents, fire insurance premiums, and taxes paid or advanced by said association on said mortgaged premises, shall become immediately due and collectible; all without relief from valuation or appraisalment laws, with attorney's fees. No 17. John M. Wohlford." It appears from the claim made by appellee in its brief that, shortly prior to the end of its corporate existence, it was ascertained that its entire assets, accumulated from all sources, would not be sufficient to pay all of its debts, claims and losses; these, in the main, growing out of the fact that a portion of its stockholders, who were non-borrowers, had paid to the association their money during the entire period of eight years, but had

Change of rules.

Where the mortgage provided that the borrower should be governed by the rules which should be made by the society from time to time, he will be bound by a rule that requires the borrower to contribute to the payment of losses of the society. Wilson v. Miles Platting Bldg. Co. L. R. 22 Q. B. Div. 351, note; Rosenberg v. Northumberland Bldg. Soc. Id. 375.

Although the mortgage does not provide for submission to change of rules, yet the member is subject to them as stockholder and if, after his mortgage is executed, the rules are changed so as to make him subject to a levy for losses, he will be bound to pay them. Bradbury v. Wild [1898] 1 Ch. 383.

In Re Norwich & Norfolk Provident Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 1 Ch. Div. 481, 45 L. J. Ch. 143, 24 Week. Rep. 103, it was held that where the rules at the time the advance was made did not provide for the contribution by advanced members to losses, the rules could not be changed so as to make him liable, although his mortgage makes him liable to the rules, "for the time being."

Liability as members after release of mortgage.

If the mortgagor redeems his mortgage, his liability as shareholder may be retained. Henninghausen v. Tischer, 50 Md. 553.

If when the time is reached for the dissolution of the association, enough has not been obtained to pay all members the full value of their stock, the borrowing members are entitled to redeem from 30 L. R. A.

their mortgages but their liability continues to pay their monthly dues until the shares reach par. Farmer v. Smith, 5 Jur. N. S. 533, note, 4 Hurlst. & N. 193, 23 L. J. Exch. 223.

In Sparrow v. Farmer, 26 Beav. 511, 5 Jur. N. S. 530, 23 L. J. Ch. 537, 33 L. T. 216, a rule of the association provided that a borrower may redeem upon the subscriptions that would have become due on the shares up to the end of the thirteen years, and the court held that upon paying the amount the mortgage must be satisfied, although the obligation of the member to continue the payment of dues might not then terminate. And the same ruling was made in Handley v. Farmer, 29 Beav. 302.

If the loan has been repaid and the borrower has received a receipt and withdrawn from the association, he cannot be made to contribute to losses subsequently ascertained. Re West Riding of Yorkshire Permanent Ben. Bldg. Soc. L. R. 45 Ch. Div. 463.

But the equities between the members of the association will not allow a borrowing member to escape his share of the common burdens by shielding himself behind an improvident and mistaken discharge of his mortgage. Callahan's App. 124 Pa. 120.

Statutory provisions.

In Ohio the borrowers are required by statute to share their proportion of the losses of the association. Everman v. Schmitt, 24 Ohio L. J. 56.

H. P. F.

received nothing in return upon their stock, and that they will not, under the circumstances, receive anything unless each member is compelled to pay, in addition to what he has paid, a sum sufficient to equalize all, so, at the close of the association, the non-borrower may be on an equality with the borrower, and all go out alike. In order to effectuate this, appellee's board of directors convened in special session on July 28, 1891, and adopted the following resolution, levying an assessment on each share of stock: "Whereas, the legal limit of the Citizens' Building, Loan and Savings Association ends November 12, 1891; and whereas, at that date, the dues, interest, and accumulations from every source will not pay every share of stock out in full; and whereas, the borrowing members have received the amount of two hundred dollars on each share by them borrowed on, but the non-borrowers have not, and there will not be realized from the dues, interest and all other sources, a sufficient sum of money to pay all stockholders an equal sum with the borrower and other debts of the association, except by an assessment: Therefore, be it resolved that this association levy an assessment of 22 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent on each dollar of stock outstanding, for the purpose of paying all members equally on their stock, at the expiration of the association. Resolved, that the secretary of this association is hereby ordered to notify each stockholder of this assessment, and said notice shall contain the amount due from each."

The principal assignments of errors, and the only ones that we deem necessary to consider, are: "(1) Overruling the demurrer to the complaint; (2) sustaining a demurrer to the fifth and sixth paragraphs of answer; (3) overruling motion for a new trial." We think the complaint is substantially good. One similar was held sufficient by this court in Borchus v. Huntington Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. 97 Ind. 180.

There was no error in sustaining the demurrer to the fifth paragraph of the answer, even if we could hold that the facts therein set up constituted a defense to the action, for the reason that appellant could avail himself of the same defense under other remaining paragraphs of his answer. By the sixth paragraph of the answer, appellant attempted to set up, as a defense to the action, that the assessment in suit was made by the board of directors, instead of the association as a whole. There was no error in sustaining a demurrer to this paragraph. Section 3408, Rev. Stat. 1881 (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4445; Elliott's Supp. 841), provides "that the business of the association shall be managed by a board of directors." And section 14 of appellee's constitution provides "that the directors shall meet at a time stated therein for the transaction of the business of the association." Where it is provided by the statute under which a corporation is organized that the business thereof shall be managed by its directors, the provisions must be construed to vest in them full authority to act for the corporation in all ordinary matters within the scope of its powers. Beach, Priv. Corp. §§ 227, 232. The as-essment against appellant upon his stock, made by virtue of the aforesaid resolution, amounted to $450.20. This he refused to pay, which refusal upon his part resulted in this action being instituted upon the note and mortgage heretofore mentioned.

The remaining and in fact the controlling question in the case to be determined is this: Was appellee authorized to make the assessment call in controversy upon appellant's stock, and, upon his refusal to pay the same, proceed to collect it by suit upon the note and mortgage? The contentions of the learned counsel for the appellant upon this proposition are: First. That the debt embraced in the note, and secured by appellant's mortgage was wholly paid by him before the commencement of the action, inasmuch as appellee's by-laws provided that all loans should become due in eight years, and at the end of that time the note and stock should be set off against each other. Second. That the statute (Rev. Stat. 1881, § 8419) limits assessments to 25 cents per month, to be collected with other installments for expenses; and inasmuch as appellee had not accepted the provisions of the Act of 1885 (Acts 1885, p. 81), as provided by section 15 of said Act (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4458), it could not be held to be authorized under this Act to make assessments to pay losses. Third. That the note in suit does not include assessments to pay losses, debts, and expenses. While, on the other hand, the learned counsel for appellee contends that its association had full power and authority to make the assessments upon its stockholders for the purpose of closing up its business, paying its debts and losses, and adjusting matters among its members, in order that the "borrowers" and "non-borrowers," at the winding up of the corporation, might stand on an equality with each other.

The determination of these important questions, which are new, as far as the decisions of this court are concerned, require a careful examination and consideration of the statutes pertaining to building and loan associations. In our opinion, neither of the contentions of the learned counsel for appellant can be sustained. It is evident, as a legal proposition, that when appellant became a borrowing member of this corporation, he did so subject to its by-laws, rules and regulations, and also to the express and implied powers with which it was invested by law. Section 80 of appellee's by-laws, among other things, provides "that the notes and mortgages given by members who receive loans must secure the repayment thereof, interest and premium thereon, with all weekly dues, together with all fines and assessments on stock held by the member," etc. It would seem that this by-law contemplated that assessments upon stock might and would be made, and therefore provided that payment of the same should be covered by the borrower's note, secured by his mortgage. By an examination of the several sections of the Act of 1875, under which appellee was organized, it will be found that section 4 (being section 8410, Rev. Stat. 1881) provides "that every share of stock shall be subject to a lien for the payment of unpaid installments and other charges incurred therein, under the provisions of the constitution and by-laws." Again, in section 8413, Rev. Stat. 1881, it is stipulated that "good and ample real estate or personal security, as prescribed by the by-laws of the corporation, shall be given by the borrower to secure the repayment of the loan, with interest, and also for the payment of the dues, fines and assessments that may be assessed on his share of stock, upon which the loan is made." Section 8418 provides "that a borrower who is not in arrears for dues, interest, fines or assessments, may pay his loan at any time, and withdraw from the association," etc. Section 8419 reads as follows: "All such associations shall have power to assess, in addition to section four of this Act [section 8410] . . . and shall also have the power to provide in their by-laws for the assessment of fines and penalties, . . . interest, installments and assessments." It is manifest, we think, that, giving a reasonable interpretation to these several sections, we must conclude that assessments such as the one in question were intended to be and are authorized to be levied by these corporations upon the unpaid capital stock of their members. But, if we are wrong in this conclusion, the law must still be held to be with appellee upon the proposition in controversy. Under and by virtue of section 13 of the Act of 1885, being section 4455, Rev. Stat. 1894, which is similar in some respects to section 8419, Rev. Stat. 1881, an express warrant is granted therein to these associations to make an assessment or stock call to cover losses. This section in part reads as follows: "All such corporations shall have power to charge, in addition to the amount heretofore provided by this Act, a sum not exceeding twenty-five cents per month upon each share of stock, for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the association, which sum shall be payable with the regular installments; to make assessments upon the capital stock to cover losses." etc. But it is insisted by appellant that appellee has no right to exercise any powers under this last-mentioned Act, for the reason that it is not shown that it filed its written acceptance of the provisions thereof, as provided by section 854, Elliott's Supp. (Rev. Stat. 1894, § 4458). This contention, in view of the interpretation of the Act of 1885 by this court, cannot be upheld.

In the case of Hatfield v. Huntington City Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. 182 Ind. 149, this court, in passing upon this question, said: "Nor do we think it was necessary to allege that the appellee had filed a written acceptance provided for by section 854, Elliott's Supp. It is evident from the reading of the entire Act, of which that section constitutes a part, that it was not the intention of the general assembly to dissolve or abolish existing building and loan associations, or to deprive them of any of the rights they possessed under the laws then in existence. It was its purpose to enlarge, rather than to restrict, their powers and privileges." See also McLaughlin v. Citizens' Bldg. Loan & Sav. Assn. 62 Ind. 264, and section 4461, Rev. Stat. 29 L. R. A.

1894. We concur in this construction placed upon the Act of 1885, and, in our opinion, it was not necessary for appellee to formally accept in writing the provisions of this Act, in order that it might exercise the enlarged powers granted to it thereunder. It, therefore, follows from this conclusion that it must be held that appellee, by section 4455, supra, was given the right and power to make the assessment upon appellant's stock, for the purpose of covering losses, and thereby equalizing its members; so that, at the final close, all might go out on an equal footing.

Appellant, in support of his first contention, relies upon the case of Lime City Bldg. Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Wagner, 122 Ind. 78. It is true that, in that case, on the question therein involved, this court held, under a by-law of the association which provided that all loans should become due in six years from the date of incorporation, or upon the stock of the association becoming of par value, and that then the stock and note of the borrower might be set off against each other, that a borrower who had paid his weekly dues and installments for a period of six years discharged his obligation to the association. This was upon the theory of the by-law that, by paying the required dues and installments for that period, he would and had paid the equivalent of the loan which he obtained. The rule thus stated by the learned judge in the opinion in that case, under the facts and issues in the case at bar, is not applicable to the determination of the question now before this court. While it appears that the by-law in the Wagner Case, supra, was identical, except as to time, with the one relied upon by appellant, however, the point in controversy in the Wagner Case was as to the right of the corporation to exact the payment of the weekly dues and interest from the borrower after the expiration of the legal limit of the association. It did not appear in that case, as it does in this, that the corporation was insolvent, and that, prior to the termination of its existence, the borrowing member was in arrears upon his stock assessment, made for the purpose, as was the one now in question. Had the same facts and theory been involved, a different question would have necessarily arisen. It is apparent, therefore, that the principle of law therein enunciated must be distinguished from the one now involved, and that appellant, under the facts herein, is not in a position to invoke that decision to sustain his contentions. The case of Lister v. Log Cabin Bldg. Assn. 88 Md. 115, and other authorities cited by the court in support of the rule laid down in the Wagner Case, do not sustain the theory of appellant's defense,—namely, that his membership had ceased, and that he was under no obligation to pay his proportion of the losses; but, upon the other hand, they tend to support the claim of appellee. Appellant was, under the law, entitled, with all the other members of this association, borrowers and non-borrowers, to share in the common gains and profits of the enterprise, in the direct ratio of his interest therein; and was also, in our judgment, liable to contribute, in the same proportion, to the payment of the losses and debts incident to the operation of the business of the association; and this obligation he could not evade during his membership, when such arrears stood against him, by a transfer of his stock or a withdrawal from the corporation. Section 8418, supra, and see authorities cited in 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 618, 622.

Appellee was a corporation organized, as are others, for the purpose of profit and gain, and, near the close of its existence, it is discovered that it is virtually in a state of insolvency, and that a certain sum is necessary to liquidate losses and debts, and settle and adjust affairs among its stockholders. Why, then, can it be said that it must be denied the right, under the law, to levy an assessment upon the unpaid stock of its members for that purpose? We can see no reason why this may not be done under the statutes to which we have referred, in like manner as is done by other corporations that are organized for manufacturing or other purposes. It is, perhaps, true that the unfortunate business affairs of appellee, which seemed to have led to its insolvency, and forced it to take the action which it did, will, as contended, result in a hardship upon its members. But we must presume that all who embarked in this common scheme did so upon their own volition and for the purpose of pecuniary benefit; and appellant cannot now be heard to complain because the equities of the law will not permit him to escape liability, and cast the whole burden of sustaining the losses in question upon his non-borrowing associates. This the law will not tolerate. It appears that the note in suit contained the stipulations provided for by the by-law and the statute, and that appellant thereby expressly agreed to pay any assessment that might be made upon his stock. Assessments or demands authorized by the charter or by-laws of a building association may be included in and covered by the note and mortgage of a borrowing member, executed by him upon the loan obtained, and in addition thereto; and, in default of payment, an action may be instituted thereon for the recovery thereof. See 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 688, and other authorities hereinafter cited.

It follows from the conclusion reached and it is so adjudged, that appellee was authorized, under the law, to make the assessment for the purpose aforesaid, and that appellant was liable upon his note and mortgage for the payment of the same. In support of the rule which we have stated, see the following authorities: Strohen v. Franklin Sav. Fund & Loan Assn. 115 Pa. 278; Callahan's App. 124 Pa. 188; Laurel Run Bldg. Assn. v. Sperring, 106 Pa. 384; Criswell's App. 100 Pa. 488; People v. Lowe, 117 N. Y. 175; McGrath v. Hamilton Sav. & Loan Assn. 44 Pa. 383, and authorities cited in note in Robertson v. American Homestead Assn. 69 Am. Dec. 150; Parker v. United States Bldg. Land & Loan Assn. 19 W. Va. 769; Everham v. Oriental Sav. & Loan Assn. 47 Pa. 352; Pattison v. Albany Bldg. & Loan Assn. 68 Ga. 378; Endlich, Bldg. Assn. 2d ed. §§ 78, 79, 104 and 523.

The court did not err in denying appellant's motion for a new trial.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

George H. EVERSMANN, Receiver of New Ohio Building Association, Plff. in Err.,

v.

Maria Theresa SCHMITT.

(82 Ohio St. —.)

1 The members of a building association, whether borrowers or non-borrowers, have a mutual interest in its affairs; and sharing alike in its earnings, must assist alike in bearing its losses.

2. A borrowing member is one who receives in advance the par value of his shares and agrees, in consideration of such advance, to pay the weekly dues on the shares and the interest on the loan, until the dues paid and the dividends declared and not paid, are equal to the par value of his shares. He then ceases to be a member and is entitled to a cancellation of the mortgage given to secure the obligations arising from the loan.

3. The mortgage executed by a bor-

*Headnotes by the COURT.

NOTE.—As to liability of advanced member of building and loan association to assessment for losses, see note to case immediately preceding this one.

29 L. R. A.

rowing member of a building association contained, among other conditions, a stipulation for the payment of such "assessments" as might be levied on him as a member. Losses occurred and the association became insolvent, whereupon a receiver was appointed to wind up its affairs, who ascertained the "shortage" in the assets, and made a pro rata assessment on the members to meet the same. Held, that an assessment for such purpose is within the above stipulation of the mortgage, and that the member is not entitled to its cancellation until paid. Held, further, that, in such case, the receiver is the proper person to ascertain the amount of the losses and make an assessment on the members to meet the same.

(June 11, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hamilton County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in favor of defendant in an action brought to foreclose a mortgage to secure payment of an assessment upon stock in an insolvent building association. Reversed.

Statement by Minshall, Ch. J.:

George H. Eversmann, Receiver of the New Ohio Building Association, an insolvent corporation, on March 10, 1890, brought suit in the Hamilton Common Pleas to foreclose a mortgage that had been given it by the defendant below, Maria T. Schmitt. The defendant being a member of the association, and the owner of twelve shares of the aggregate value of $3,000, when paid up, on May 1, 1890, had received an advanced loan of that amount, bidding therefor $240. To secure the obligation to the association arising from the loan, she executed and delivered a mortgage to it, on definitely described property. The defeasance clause of the mortgage is contained in the finding of facts, hereinafter inserted. Among other conditions, it stipulates for the payment of the dues on the stock and interest on the loan "until such time as the weekly dues paid and dividends declared and unpaid, shall amount to the said sum of three thousand dollars," and the payment of such assessments as may be levied upon her as a member of the association.

The petition avers that by reason of the payment of dividends that had not been earned and the misappropriation of funds by its treasurer, the capital of the association had become impaired to the extent of thirty-one and a fraction per cent; that the defendant had participated in the receipt of these unearned dividends, that the plaintiff had been appointed as a receiver to wind up the affairs of the association; and, as such receiver, had made an assessment on the stock of the members to meet the losses, that against the defendant amounting to the sum of $984.17, which she refused to pay. The defendant claimed to have paid in dues the full amount of her loan, $3,000, and all the interest thereon, and had performed all the requirements of the mortgage according to the constitution and by-laws, and was entitled to its cancellation, and prayed accordingly.

Issues having been made up, the case was tried in the common pleas, and both parties appealed from the judgment to the circuit court.

The circuit court made a finding of facts which is as follows:

"The New Ohio Building Association is an insolvent corporation. Its insolvency is due partly to the over-payment of dividends by its secretary, George R. Topp, and partly to a misapplication of its moneys by its treasurer, William Peters. The amount of the shortage, as determined by the receiver, is about thirty-one per cent. George H. Eversmann is the receiver of the company, and is engaged in winding up its affairs. The receiver was appointed December 5, 1889. Maria Theresa Schmitt became a member of the corporation May 5, 1890, and subscribed for twelve shares of its stock ($250.00, each) and bid for a loan of money for the amount of her shares, three thousand ($3,000.00) dollars. This sum was advanced to her, and she gave to the company her mortgage on certain real estate in Cincinnati, described in the petition in this case. This mortgage was duly recorded May 6, 1890. The clause of defeasance provided: 'That if said Maria Theresa Schmitt, who has become a member of said building association and subscribed to twelve shares therein and received in advance from said association said sum of three thousand ($3,000.00) dollars, the par value of said shares, shall pay or cause to be paid to the said building association, without demand therefor, according to its constitution and by-laws, until such time as the weekly dues paid and dividends declared and unpaid, shall amount to said sum of three thousand ($3,000.00) dollars, or, in case of the dissolution of said association, until, within the meaning of the constitution and by-laws of said association, she shall be released therefrom:

"1. The sum of six dollars per week from the date hereof, the same being the dues on said twelve shares;

"2. The sum of six per cent interest upon said three thousand ($3,000.00) dollars, payable pro rata in weekly payments, subject to rebatement every corporate year;

"3. The sum of six ($6.00) per week from the date hereof for a period of forty (40) weeks, the same being in payment of the premium of two hundred and forty dollars bid on said twelve shares;

"4. All fines, assessments, and penalties which the said Maria Theresa Schmitt shall incur, and which may be levied upon her as a member of said association, and in accordance with its constitution and by-laws;

"5. All rents, taxes, assessments, and premiums of insurance upon the said mortgaged premises, in accordance with the constitution and by-laws of said association; then this instrument to be null and void."

The constitution of said association contains the following sections:

"ARTICLE XI.

"1. All members shall pay for every share fifty (50) cents initiation fee, and an installment of fifty (50) cents per week.

"ARTICLE XII.

"1. Every shareholder shall be entitled to a sum equal to the amount of $250.00 for each share.

"2. Every share for which the money has been drawn shall be considered as a 'paid-out' share, and shall bear six per cent interest (6 per cent) annually, and the premium must be paid in weekly rates. The interests and premiums shall be payable 'pro rata,' as soon as any part of the money is ready to be paid out. Interest will only be charged on the amount remaining due at the beginning of each year.

"3. Every member, who wishes to draw the amount of his or her shares, shall secure the payment by the executing of an acceptable mortgage on real estate, and this mortgage shall remain in force until the weekly dues and undrawn dividends make up the sum of $250.00 on each share, the mortgage shall then be canceled, and such a member shall then cease, on the ground of such shares, to be a member.

"Those members who have not yet drawn money can have their dividend paid to them; they may also draw their money before six months without the dividends.

"Maria Theresa Schmitt was a stockholder, and shared equally with the others in the profits of the company, and withdrew the same from time to time. She withdrew dividends from time to time as they were declared, amounting to nine hundred and ninety-five and 92-100 ($995.92) dollars, with the consent of the association.

"Maria Theresa Schmitt made the last payments in her book on November 27, 1889, which was the last regular meeting night but one before the receiver was appointed, and demanded cancellation of her mortgage, which was refused.

"The last payment of dues with the other payments of dues made the entire amount paid in by her, as dues, the sum of $3,000.00. In addition to the dues, defendant paid interest and premium in full. The losses occurred during her membership. The assets of the company are mortgages. The liabilities are to members only.

"The entire premium of $240.00 due under said mortgage was paid by Maria Theresa Schmitt, at the time she became a member of the association, to wit, May 5, 1880. The dues and interest called for by the mortgage were paid regularly and according to the terms of the mortgage.

"The court finds that the proceedings in the superior court of Cincinnati, in which plaintiff was appointed receiver, were for the dissolution of the association; and that the assessment set up in the petition herein was made by the said receiver; that there are a great number of members of said association, both borrowing and non-borrowing, and that none of said members, including the defendant, were parties to said case in which the receiver was appointed, nor were they, or this defendant, given an opportunity to be heard in reference to said assessment; that there were a large number of members of said association, both borrowing and non-borrowing, who were members thereof during the time said losses set up in the petition occurred, and who withdrew from said association prior to the time said association went into the hands of the receiver, and that none of said parties have been brought into said suit in the superior court of Cincinnati, nor have the liabilities of said parties been considered in making said assessment."

The court found and adjudged that the defendant was liable as a member for her proportion of the losses, but held that the condition of the mortgage had been performed and that she was entitled to have it canceled, and decreed accordingly.

The plaintiff in error claims that the judgment, ordering a cancellation of the mortgage is not sustained by the findings, and asks to have it reversed.

Messrs. Huntington & Holmes, for plaintiff in error:

Borrowers and non-borrowers of a building association are stockholders.

The weekly payments made by stockholders are payments on "stock or shares subscribed." They are not payments on the mortgage.

Sabel v. Victoria Bldg. Assn. 48 Ohio St. 373.

Where they share equally in the profits they must share equally in the losses.

29 L. R. A.

Ibid.

Payments on "stock or shares subscribed" are subject to the payment of the expenses incident to the management, and to losses of any kind.

Being equally entitled with all the others in the direct ratio of his interest in the society to share in the common gains of the enterprise, every member is liable to contribute, in the same proportion in which he expects to profit, to the losses and expenses incident to its management.

Endlich, Bldg. Assn. § 104; McGrath v. Hamilton Sav. & Loan Assn. 44 Pa. 383.

He cannot evade such liability by a transfer of his stock without the consent of the corporation, nor can he be allowed to withdraw from the association for the purpose of escaping his proportion of the common burden.

Endlich, Bldg. Assn. § 104; Eberhart v. Westchester & P. R. Co. 28 Pa. 339; McGrath v. Hamilton Sav. & Loan Assn. supra.

The society may assess the loss on each share pro rata.

Endlich, Bldg. Assn. § 105; United States Bldg. & Loan Assn. v. Silverman, 85 Pa. 390; Wittman v. Building Assn. 7 W. N. C. 84; Knoblanck v. Robert Blum Bldg. & Loan Assn. No. 2, 8 Pittsb. L. J. N. S. 39; Paffert v. Paffert, Id. 40.

Messrs. Tugman & Baker for defendant in error.

Minshall, Oh. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Mutuality is the essential principle of a building association. Its business is confined to its own members; its object being to raise a fund to be loaned among themselves, or such as may desire to avail themselves of the privilege. This is done by the payment, at stated times, of small sums in the way of dues, interest on loans and premiums for loans. Each shareholder, whether a borrower or non-borrower, participates alike in the earnings of the association and alike assists in bearing the burthen of losses sustained. It has what is called a capital stock. But this is only true in a modified sense. Unlike other corporations for profit, a share in a building association has, at the inception, only nominal value. Its value is expected to increase by the lapse of time and the success of the association. It is contrary to the purpose and genius of a building association that a share in it should be paid up at the time of the subscription. This is done by the payment of small dues and the crediting, at stated times, of the earnings in the way of dividends. When the aggregate dues, with the credited earnings, equal in amount the par value of a share of stock, it is paid up, and the owner, for that share, ceases to be a stockholder. He is entitled to the par value of his stock, but can no longer participate in the earnings of the association. His relation, then, becomes simply that of a creditor, until he is paid. Of course what is here said, is subject to the qualification, that no losses have been sustained. Losses are incident to the most careful management of men; they cannot be wholly avoided; though it is worthy of note that the smallness of the losses in the management of building associations, compared with that of other monied institutions, is remarkable. Still, agents may prove unfaithful and bad loans be made. When this happens, the mutual character of the association prescribes that the burthen must be sustained by the stockholders, according to the amount of their stock; for he who participates in the benefit of a business must assist in bearing the burthen.

As before observed, borrowers and non-borrowers participate alike in the earnings of a building association. The difference between them is simply in the time at which each class is paid the par value of his shares. A borrower, before his stock is paid up, receives from the association the par value of his shares, in the nature of an advance loan. For this, he agrees to pay the premium, if any, for the privilege, the interest on the money advanced, subject to abatements to be made at stated times, and the dues on his stock until it matures. In other words, he agrees to keep up and pay out his stock, as if he were a non-borrower, in consideration of the amount being advanced to him before that time. Hence the borrower remains a stockholder and participates in all the privileges and benefits of a stockholder: has a voice in the management of the association and participates in its earnings. The latter go toward discharging his obligations arising on the loan, and to shorten the time in which he will be fully discharged therefrom. For, taking all losses into account, whenever the shares of a borrower have reached their par value by the payment of dues and the apportionment of earnings, the loan is liquidated and he ceases to be a member, as he would, if he had not borrowed at all. In other words, with his shares paid up, he discharges his obligations as a borrower. And the exact test of his right to call for a cancellation of the mortgage given to secure his obligations as a borrower, is the inquiry whether he would have been entitled to receive from the association the par value of the shares on which the loan was made, had he not become a borrower.

In this case, Mrs. Schmitt subscribed for twelve shares, and received from the association their par value, $3,000, as an advanced loan, at a premium of $240. She paid the premium, and agreed to pay the dues thereon, $6,00 per week, and interest at the rate of six per cent, subject to an annual abatement, "until such time as the weekly dues paid and dividends declared and unpaid shall amount to the sum of three thousand dollars," and all "assessments" that might be levied upon her as a member of the association. She paid the premium, the dues, $3,000, and the interest on the loan to the appointment of the receiver. These facts, standing alone, would satisfy the mortgage. But it is further found that the association is insolvent; that its capital is impaired to the extent of about thirty-one per cent, for which the receiver has made an assessment on the members, including the defendant; that the losses occurred during her membership; were caused by the payment of dividends that had not been earned, and the misapplication of mon-neys by the treasurer; and that she had withdrawn $995.92 of these unearned dividends, although the right to draw earned dividends was limited by the constitution to those members who had not "drawn money." Can, then, a borrower, under these circumstances, claim the cancellation of his mortgage? We think not. To do so would, as we have shown, undermine the principles upon which these associations are organized. By the terms of the constitution of the association, on the cancellation of the mortgage, the borrower ceases to be a member, and all liability to it is at an end. We see no reason why the remaining members should be left to bear all the burthen, resulting from losses, for which they are no more to blame than she is. It is wholly unlike a savings society where the borrower is not a member or otherwise interested in its business. Having no voice in the management nor interest in the earning of the society, the borrower and it sustain the simple relation of debtor and creditor. Here, as shown, the borrower is also interested as a creditor. The loan is for no definite period of time. It depends upon the management of the association, in which he continues as a member and has a voice. It is in view of the relation of the borrower to the association and the possibility of losses, that the mortgage stipulates that, in addition to the specific conditions mentioned, the borrower shall pay all "assessments" that may be levied on him. The fourth section of the twelfth article of the Constitution, on which much stress is laid, simply expresses what would be true in a safely conducted association. It does not include nor apply to the case where there are no earnings, and losses have to be met and borne. This was wisely provided for in the mortgage. It was a matter about which the parties could and have contracted. There is no suggestion of fraud or mistake in its execution, and their rights must be determined by its stipulations, conforming as they do to the equity and justice of the case. She has received from the association, in the way of unearned dividends, a sum greater than the assessment that has been made on her.

But it is insisted that Mrs. Schmitt and the other members were not parties to the suit in which the receiver was appointed and that he had no power to make the assessment and it is not binding upon them. This objection is without weight. It is not necessary that the members should, as individuals, have been made parties to that suit. They were parties in their corporate name and capacity, and, for the appointment of a receiver, that was sufficient. We will presume that the receiver was duly appointed, as there is nothing to the contrary. As receiver, it was his duty to collect the assets and wind up the affairs of the association. This could only be done by ascertaining the loss and making an assessment on the members to meet it. It was simply a matter of calculation, involved no matters of personal confidence, and could, therefore, be made by the receiver as well as by the members themselves or their chosen agents. Moreover, these had been displaced by the appointment of the receiver, and could not act in the premises.

It is, however, found that a large number of members, borrowing and non-borrowing, who were such during the time the losses occurred, had withdrawn prior to the time the association went into the hands of a receiver. This does not affect the question here. In the absence of bad faith, such persons as had, according to the constitution and by-laws of the association, withdrawn and ceased to be members, cannot again be brought into the association for the settlement of losses. Waggoner v. Aspell, 47 Ohio St. 250, 261. The withdrawal being an executed transaction, can only be recalled by the association, and a remedy had, in conformity to the rules of equity jurisdiction.

It follows, as we think, that the judgment of the Circuit Court, dismissing the petition of the receiver, should be reversed, and judgment entered upon the findings as prayed for in the petition.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, SIXTH CIRCUIT.

City of FINDLAY, Plff. in Err.,

v.

John W. PERTZ et al.

(66 Fed. Rep. 427.)

1. Forty days after the expiration of the trial term may be allowed by the court at such term for filing a bill of exceptions.
2. A bill of exceptions embodying the charge and immediately following it stating that one of the counsel said "the defendant excepts," with the ground of exception, including a refusal to charge as requested and an exception to the charge as delivered, sufficiently shows that exceptions to the charge were seasonably taken.
3. The right of a city to rescind a sale to it because a commission was paid to its officer through whom it was made, is not affected by the fact that the seller did not know that the city was ignorant of the double relation of such officer and supposed that he would give the city credit for the commission.
4. A contract for the sale of property to a city through one of its officers who receives a commission from the other party for effecting it, is illegal and void both at common law and under Rev. Stat. § 6900, declaring it a penal offense for any public officer, agent, servant, or employé to be directly or indirectly interested in any contract for the purchase of any property of the state, county or municipality.
5. A city, upon discovering that its agent was paid a commission upon a sale to it, may either repudiate or ratify and affirm the contract, as it elects.
6. The use by a city of gas separators sold to it for two months after discovering that its agent was paid a commission upon the sale, is not so conclusive of ratification of the sale as to take that question from the jury.
7. Ratification of a sale to a city, notwithstanding a commission paid to its agent by the seller confirms it, subject to the warranties made, and that the city may, when sued for the purchase price, recoup to the extent of any damage sustained by the breach of any warranty.

(February 25, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Ohio

NOTE.—In respect to the conflict of interests or double capacity of officers contracting with themselves, see note to Tippecanoe County Comrs. v. Mitchell (Ind.) 15 L. R. A. 520.

29 L. R. A.

to review a judgment in favor of plaintiffs in an action brought to recover the price of certain gas separators alleged to have been sold and delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant city. Reversed.

Statement by Lurton, Circuit Judge:

The facts necessary to be stated to an understanding of the legal questions to be decided are substantially these:

The plaintiff in error is a municipal corporation of the state of Ohio. It owned and operated a plant for the distribution of natural gas to consumers within the city. This plant was under the control of an arm of the city government called the "board of gas trustees," composed of five members, elected annually by the qualified voters of the city. That board had authority to employ a superintendent, whose duty it was to maintain and operate the plant, make all necessary improvements and repairs, collect the dues from consumers, and render all other necessary services, under direction and supervision of the board of gas trustees, as might be required for a successful operation of a natural gas system. The duties of the superintendent were such as to require an expert in the boring and management of gas wells and in the safe and economical distribution of the gas to consumers. The position was that of an employé of the city government, and was one involving expert knowledge and a considerable degree of trust and confidence. The defendants in error were partners, doing business under the firm name of Pertz & Stewart, at Kokomo, Ind., and as such were patentees and manufacturers of a machine called an "automatic separator." These machines were adapted to be attached to the orifice of a natural gas well and purported to separate the oil or water which came to the surface intermingled with the gas and were represented to operate automatically. This firm had in their service one Melvin M. Brooks, who acted as their agent in Indiana for the sale of their separators, upon a commission. In the spring of 1890, this agent went into the Findlay, Ohio, oil field, for the purpose of selling separators for the said Pertz & Stewart. While in that field as the agent of defendants in error, he was chosen superintendent of the gas plant owned and operated as aforesaid by the city of Findlay. July 12, 1890, Brooks wrote to defendants in error a letter concerning separators for use on the city wells. That letter is not produced by them. Mr. Stewart states that the letter was one of inquiry as to how the separators would work on oil wells. The answer to that letter was dated July 16, 1890, and was in these words: "Pertz & Stewart, Manufacturers of Automatic Gas Separator and Drip.

"Kokomo, Ind., July 16, 1890.

"Mr. M. M. Brooks, Findlay, Ohio—Dear Sir: Your favor of the 12th received. We will be glad to furnish you any number of separators you may desire. You may connect them to a well producing oil with the gas, and rest assured that they will separate the oil just as readily as the water; but, when you desire to connect to a well producing oil, please so state in your order, for the reason that we make the valve a little larger for oil than we do for water. We sell them with the same guaranty for separating oil as we do for water. Hoping to hear from you soon,

"Yours very truly, Pertz & Stewart."

The board of gas trustees, upon representations of Brooks, authorized him to purchase for the city of Findlay three of these automatic separators. This was done by a letter dated July 22, 1890, in these words:

"Findlay, Ohio, July 22nd, 1890.

"Pertz & Stewart, Kokomo, Ind.—Gentlemen: Please ship us at once to Stewartsville, Hancock County, Ohio, 3 separators for oil and gas, and 1 for water and gas. Stewartsville is on the Nickel Plate Railroad.

"Yours truly, The City Gas Works."

This letter was written by Brooks, and defendants in error admit that, when received, they recognized it to have been written by him.

August 11, 1890, Brooks ordered sixteen other separators, by letter in these words:

"Findlay, Ohio, August 11th, 1890.

"Messrs. Pertz & Stewart, Kokomo, Ind.—Gentlemen: Please ship to Stewartsville, Ohio, via Nickel Plate R. R., 10 automatic separators, and to Van Buren 6 of the same. The latter is a station on the Toledo, Columbus & Cincinnati R. R., a short distance north of Stewartsville. If you cannot ship the entire order at once, please ship to Stewartsville first. I think that oil is the . . . likely to come first in these wells. I examined the ones sent, but can't detect any difference in them.

"Truly yours,

"The City Gas Works,

"By M. M. Brooks, Supt."

On September 7, 1890, Brooks again made an order for thirteen additional machines, by the following letter:

"Findlay, Ohio.

"Pertz & Stewart, Kokomo, Ind.—Gentlemen: Please ship separators as follows: 5 to Stewartsville; 8 to Findlay. I had discovered the error in your invoice of Aug. 22d and had it corrected. Please send them forward as soon as possible.

"Truly yours, M. M. Brooks, Supt."

The first three separators were billed at $105 each, and on September 12, 1890, a 29 L. R. A.

remittance in full of bill was made by the following letter:

"Findlay, Ohio, September 12, 1890.

"Pertz and Stewart, Kokomo, Ind.—Gentlemen: Inclosed find New York Exchange No. 87,568, for three hundred and fifteen dollars, same being on account. Please acknowledge receipt of same.

"Respectfully yours,

"The City Gas Works,

"Per C. K. Beach, Sec'y."

As these separators were delivered, they were attached to the gas wells operated by the gas trustees, by their superintendent, Melvin M. Brooks. November 1, 1890, defendants in error rendered an account for the 29 separators which had been ordered by the letters of August 11th and September 7th. This account was in these words and figures:

"Kokomo, Ind., November 1, 1890.

"City Gas Works, Findlay, Ohio, In Account with Pertz & Stewart, Proprietors of John W. Pertz Automatic Separator.

Aug. 20	To Mds.	$315 00
" 22	"	630 00
" 22	"	105 00
Sept. 4	"	680 00
" 16	"	840 00
" 22	"	525 00
		$3,045 00

"Please remit. Unless otherwise advised, will draw for $1,050 on the 10th inst. Please honor draft, and oblige."

To this the following reply was made:

"Findlay, Ohio, November 6, 1890.

"Messrs. Pertz & Stewart, Kokomo, Ind.—Gentlemen: Please do not draw on us. We note you have billed the separators at the gross price. Please send credit memoranda of the discount by return mail. We understand the discount is ten per cent on a sale of four. We presume a greater discount will be allowed on the number we have purchased. Your reply by return mail will oblige,

"Yours respectfully,

"The City Gas Works,

"Chas. K. Beach, Secy."

The gas trustees denied that they had authorized the purchase of the twenty-nine separators ordered by the letters of Brooks above cited, and, suspecting that the price charged was excessive, began to make inquiry. Brooks, when approached on the subject, said $105 was the net price, and that no commission or discount was allowed; upon being pressed about the matter and confronted with evidence that a discount or commission had been allowed other purchasers, admitted that he was the agent of Pertz & Stewart, and that they had allowed him a commission of $10 on each of the separators purchased for the city of Findlay. He admitted that he had received $30 as commission on the three separators bought by direction of the trustees, and offered to turn it over to the city. He admitted that he would receive $290 on the other purchases, and proposed that these commissions should be credited to the account against the city. Upon these admissions he was immediately discharged from his position.

November 17, 1890, the defendant in error and that defendant have judgment for $315, and for other proper relief. The reply to this answer admitted that Brooks had acted as their agent in Indiana, and that, in 1890, he went to the Findlay oil fields for the purpose of selling separators; that the first they heard from him was when they received from him the orders heretofore set out. They admitted that they had sent him a commission on the separators first ordered. They say that they did not know that the gas trustee of Findlay were ignorant of the relations between Brooks and the plaintiffs, and supposed the commissions allowed Brooks "would eventually be credited to the city." They insist that they acted in good faith, and without collusion or purpose to defraud defendants; that the invariable price of the separators was $105, with an allowance of $10 on each sold through their agents; that, at the request of Brooks, they had finally credited the city with the commissions he had earned. They further insisted that the said separators were attached to the gas wells at the time the defendants repudiated the contract, and that defendants had continued to use them, and were using them when suit was begun; that the use which had been made of them had made them unmarketable by wear and exposure, and that they could not be disposed of except at a considerable sacrifice. There was a jury, and verdict for the full amount claimed by defendants in error. From the judgment thereon, a writ of error was sued out by the city of Findlay, and errors have been assigned upon the charge and for refusal to charge as requested.

Before Taft and Lurton, Circuit Judges, and Severens, District Judge.

Mr. Jason Blackford for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Harvey Scribner and Blackledge, Shirley & Moon for defendants in error.

Lurton, Circuit Judge, delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The objection that the bill of exceptions was not filed during the term is not well taken. During the term at which the judgment was rendered, and on the 19th of September, 1893, leave was granted to file a bill of exceptions within forty days. By an order made December 13, 1893, it was recited that a bill of exceptions had been allowed and signed and filed on the 24th of October, 1893. This was within the time allowed by the order made during the trial term, and was entirely within the power of the court to permit.

2. The objection that the bill of exceptions does not show that exceptions to the charge of the court were taken before retirement of the jury is equally groundless. The charge is made a part of the bill of exceptions, and follows the evidence, being preceded only by a request made for a peremptory charge for plaintiff, and by two requests for special charges by defendant. Immediately following the charge there follows: "Mr. Blackford [one of the attorneys representing the plaintiff in error]: The defendant excepts," etc. Then follows the ground of exception including the refusal to charge as requested and exceptions to the charge as delivered. We think it sufficiently appears that exceptions to the charge were seasonably taken. The learned trial judge took from the jury all consideration of the defenses presented by the plaintiff in error, and instructed them that the only issue for their determination was to determine the reasonable market value of these separators when delivered. As the proof was uniform that the patentees and makers had but one price, and that they were to be obtained only from them and at their price, the instruction was equivalent to a peremptory instruction for the full amount of the account sued on. This view of the court seems to have been in a large part due to the evidence tending to show a continued use of these machines after the discovery of the alleged dual relation occupied by its superintendent, Melvin M. Brooks. He seems also to have attached great weight to the fact that the defendants in error had not especially induced or procured Brooks to influence this particular sale. The latter consideration seems to us not at all important. There was evidence tending quite strongly to establish the fact that defendants in error regarded Brooks as having acted for them in procuring the order forwarded by him for these separators.

In support of the defense there was evidence: First. That Brooks had acted as their (Pertz & Stewart's) agent on commission for a long time before going to the Findlay gas district, and that he had gone into the Findlay district for the purpose of continuing the sale of these separators. Second. The separators delivered to the city were all billed at $105 each, and no discount or credit was proposed, allowed or mentioned as due to the city by virtue of the relation its superintendent bore to them. Third. They remitted to Brooks personally a commission on the first order, and gave the city no notice of this fact, and held themselves liable to Brooks for commissions on his subsequent orders, as soon as their account was paid. Fourth. When the city discovered the commission allowed its superintendent, and when that superintendent directed the defendants in error to allow the city, a credit for these commissions, then and only then did they propose such a credit.

Another undisputed fact is that Brooks concealed his relation to the sellers, and concealed his receipt of a commission, and, when confronted with the charge, utterly denied that he had been allowed any commission or discount on the sale or that the separators could be bought with a discount off the market price. The answer suggested by defendants in error to all this was that the sellers did not know that the buyer was ignorant that its agent was likewise the agent of the sellers, and supposed that eventually this double agent would give the buyer for whom he bought, the benefit of the commission paid him by the sellers for whom he sold. This defense is absolutely frivolous. Undoubtedly there are circumstances under which the same person may act as the agent of two distinct principals and in regard to transactions and dealings between the principals. As said by Campbell, J., in Adams Min. Co. v. Senter, 26 Mich. 76: "The authority of agents may, where no law is violated, be as large as their employers may choose to make it," etc. "There can be no presumption that the agent of the two parties will deal unfairly with either. And when they both deliberately put him in charge of their separate concerns and there is any likelihood that he may have to deal with the rights of both in the same transactions, instead of lessening his powers, it may become necessary to enlarge them far enough to dispense with such formalities as one man would use with another, but which could not be possible for a single person to go through with alone." It is most obvious that in all such cases of a double agency it is absolutely essential that both principals shall know of and assent to the dual character. Capener v. Hogan, 40 Ohio St. 208; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 34 Ohio St. 450, 32 Am. Rep. 380; Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 400, 41 Am. Rep. 528; Mechem, Agency, § 67.

The evidence we have recited, to say the least of it, strongly tended to establish the fact that Brooks understood himself to have an arrangement with the defendants in error by which he would be allowed personally a commission on each separator which he, as an employé of the plaintiff in error, should buy from the defendants in error, and it tends with equal force to establish the fact that the defendants in error recognized that Brooks was personally entitled, under an existing arrangement with them, to demand and receive the same commission he would have earned by a like sale to any other customer. There was, therefore, evidence entitling the plaintiff in error to go to the jury upon the defense of fraud invalidating the contract of sale.

Any agreement or understanding between one principal and the agent of another, by which such agent is to receive a commission or reward if he will use his influence with his principal to induce a contract or enter into a contract for his principal, is pernicious and corrupt, and cannot be enforced at law. This principle is founded upon the plainest principles of reason and morality, and has been sanctioned by the courts in innumerable cases. "It has its foundation in the very constitution of our nature," says Judge Dillon, "for it has authoritatively been declared that a man cannot serve two masters, and is recognized and enforced wherever a well-regulated system of jurisprudence prevails." 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 444. "An agent cannot be allowed to put himself in a position in which his interest and his duty will be in conflict." Leake, Cont. 3d ed. 409. The tendency of such agreement is to corrupt the fidelity of the agent, and is a fraud upon his principal, and is not enforceable, "even though it does not induce the agent to act corruptly." "It would be most mischievous to hold that a man could come into a court of law to enforce such a bargain on the ground that he was not, in fact, corrupted. It is quite immaterial that the employer was not damaged." Wald's Pollock, Cont. 245, 246, note citing Harrington v. Victoria Graving Dock Co. L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 549, and other cases. Tausig v. Hart, 58 N. Y. 425; United States Rolling Stock Co. v. Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. 34 Ohio St. 450-480, 32 Am. Rep. 380; Smith v. Sorby, L. R. 3 Q. B. Div. 552; Young v. Hughes, 32 N. J. Eq. 372; Yeoman v. Lasley, 40 Ohio St. 190. Such agreements are a fraud upon the principal, "which entitle him to avoid a contract made through such agency." Leake, Cont. 409; Panama & S. P. Teleg. Co. v. India Rubber Gutta Percha & Teleg. Works Co. L. R. 10 Ch. 526. "Where there are a principal, an agent and a third party contracting with the principal, and cognizant of the agent's employment, and there are dealings between the third party and the agent which gives the agent an interest against his duty, then the principal, on discovering this, has the option of rescinding the contract altogether." Wald's Pollock, Cont. 247. "Any profit made by an agent in the execution of his agency must be accounted for to the principal, who may claim it as a debt for money received to his use. A gratuity given to an agent for the purpose of influencing the execution of his agency vitiates a contract subsequently made by him, as being presumptively made under that influence; and a gratuity to an agent, after the execution of the agency, must be accounted for to his principal; as in the case of a servant employed to make payments accepting discounts or presents from the creditor." Leake, Cont. 409. The same author says: "If an agent stipulates with a contractor for a commission upon the work to be done for his principal, he must account for the commission, and it is good ground for his dismissal." Page 410; Boston Deep Sea Fishing Ice Co. v. Ansell, L. R. 39 Ch. Div. 339; Stoner v. Weiser, 24 Iowa, 434; Bell v. Bell, 3 W. Va. 183; Moore v. Mandelbaum, 8 Mich. 433. The principle which prevents an agent from contracting with himself, or from entering into any agreement which gives him an interest conflicting with his duty, applies more strongly to the officers, servants, and agents of a municipal government than to private parties. 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 444.

Brooks, as we have already stated, was an employé of the city of Findlay. This Pertz & Stewart knew. The letter heads and his official signature fully advised them that he was the agent of a public corporation. Now, if with this knowledge, they dealt with the city of Findlay, knowing the relation which he bore to them, they knew that his interest in making a sale for them conflicted with his duty and fidelity as a public agent. The agency of Brooks for the city was one which required expert knowledge, and involved a considerable degree of trust and confidence. His duty was to give to the public service the full benefit of a disinterested judgment and the utmost fidelity. Any agreement or understanding by which his judgment or duty conflicted with his private interest was corrupting in its tendency. We know of no more pernicious influence than that brought about through a system of commissions paid to public agents engaged in buying public supplies. Such arrangements are a fruitful source of public extravagance and speculation. The conflict created between duty and interest is utterly vicious, unspeakably pernicious, and an unmixed evil. Justice, morality, and public policy unite in condemning such contracts, and no court will tolerate any suit for their enforcement.

The forcible language of Mr. Justice Field, in speaking for the court in Providence Tool Co. v. Norris, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 45, 17 L. ed. 663, and repeated in Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. 103 U.S. 274, 26 L. ed. 545, is quite as applicable to the debauchery of the agent of a municipal corporation as it was when the interests of the Federal government were sought to be affected by the same kind of pernicious influence. In the case cited the learned justice said, concerning such contracts: "Considerations as to the most efficient and economical mode of meeting the public want should alone control in this respect the action of every department of government. No other consideration can lawfully enter into the transaction so far as the government is concerned. Such is the rule of public policy, and whatever tends to introduce any other element into the transaction is against public policy. That agreements like the one under consideration have this tendency is manifest. They tend to introduce personal solicitation and personal influence as elements in the procurement of contracts, and thus directly lead to inefficiency in the public services and to unnecessary expenditures of the public funds. . . . All agreements for pecuniary considerations to control the business operations of the government, or the regular administration of justice, or the appointments to public offices, or ordinary course of legislation, are void as against public policy, without reference to the question whether improper means are contemplated or used in their execution. The law looks to the general tendency of such agreements, and it closes the door to temptation by refusing them recognition in any of the courts of the country." Oscanyan v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co. supra.

This principle of public policy finds full recognition in section 6969 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, by which it is provided that any public officer, agent, servant, or employé who, while acting as such public officer, agent, or employé, shall become directly or indirectly interested in any contract for the purchase of any property for the state, county, or municipality, shall be guilty on conviction of a penitentiary offense. This statute has been construed as applying to the agents, officers, and employés of towns, villages, and cities of the state, and as a prohibition upon all contracts between such a municipality and an agent or servant interested therein. Doll v. State, 45 Ohio St. 445.

The contract or arrangement between defendants in error and Brooks, the servant of the plaintiff in error, was no more illegal after this statute than it was under common-law principles before the statute. What was the effect of that arrangement or contract on the contract with plaintiff in error? We must distinguish between the bargain for a commission between the defendants in error and the agent of the city, and the contract between the two principals. The first was clearly illegal and incapable of enforcement; the latter was, on its face, altogether within the contracting power of the parties, was free from any immorality, and altogether legitimate. The means by which the city may have been induced to enter into it was the vicious element in the trade. The board of gas trustees had no intention to deal with Brooks or any one else incapacitated under the Ohio statute, or under principles of public policy, from contracting with the city. That board was wholly ignorant of the secret arrangement between its agent and the persons with whom it proposed to bargain. Neither that board nor the city council knew of the double agency of Brooks. Undoubtedly, upon the authorities we have already cited, the city, upon discovery of the dealings between its agent and the defendants in error, had a right to repudiate the contract, and sue for damages sustained by the fraud. So, upon the other hand, if the buyer had been a private party or a business corporation, the fraud might be waived, and the contract affirmed, notwithstanding the corruption of the agent through whom it had been made. But it has been pressed upon us that, inasmuch as the agent corrupted was a public agent, the contract made through his corruption was absolutely void and incapable of ratification, and that no subsequent conduct of the plaintiff in error in retaining and using the machines bought can furnish a basis upon which the guilty party can maintain a suit founded upon the corrupt contract. It seems to us that this argument confounds the corrupt agreement between the agent of the city and the other principal with the contract between the principals. There can be no question about the ratification of the arrangement for a commission. No one pretended to act for the city in bargaining for or receiving an illicit commission. "The principle of ratification only applies where the agent had professed to contract for the person who afterwards ratifies." Leake, Cont. 391.

The question we have to deal with is this: Can the city, notwithstanding the surreptitious dealing between its agent and the seller, waive the fraud as a private individual might and ratify the purchase? This is not a purchase of property from an agent or officer of the city. Neither is it a purchase of property in which any such agent or officer has an interest. It is simply a case of where an agent for the purchase of property from one capacitated to deal with the city, is given a gratuity, reward, or commission by the seller, which tended to give that agent an interest conflicting with fidelity to his principal. Upon this discovery of the improper inducement operating upon its agent, the city had a right to repudiate the purchase and return the property bought. This right it might exercise without regard to any actual injury it had sustained, and without regard to the effect of the allowance of the commission upon the integrity of its agent. Harrington v. Victoria Graving Dock Co. cited above, and Lister v. Stubbs, L. R. 45 Ch. Div. 1. Under such circumstances, a contract, neither immoral nor prohibited, between private parties, would not be incapable of affirmance and enforcement by the principal who had been defrauded. The innocent principal would have an option to affirm or avoid it, on discovery of the facts. The authorities upon this are clear and numerous. Wald's Pollock, Cont. 247; Leake, Cont. 409.

The learned trial judge was of opinion, and so instructed the jury, that, upon discovery of the improper dealing with its agent, the city might repudiate or affirm the contract as it should elect. We entirely agree with him in this. The contract it made was neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. No question of public policy is involved by a ratification of the bargain. That involves no affirmance or adoption of the corrupt agreement for illicit commissions. Upon the contrary, it would have the right to hold the agent liable as for money had and received to its use. It might go still further and sue the seller for the fraud and recover all damages consequent upon an improper dealing with the buyer's agent. It would be no answer to a suit by the city for a breach of the contract, as to the automatic operation of these separators, to say that the agent of the plaintiff had been corrupted by the defendant, and induced to make the contract through improper considerations. The buyer, not being a party to the corruption of its own agent, has the undoubted right to enforce the contract. Clearly, the court would not be aiding in the enforcement of an illegal or corrupt contract if the city was not in pari delicto and the agreement in itself was unobjectionable. The fact that unlawful means were adopted to induce a contract which is lawful itself and capable of being lawfully performed, does not, of itself, make the contract unlawful as to the innocent party, nor does any principle of public policy forbid the enforcement thereof by the defrauded principal. The unlawful means by which the seller induced the buyer to deal with him is a matter collateral to the principal agreement. We recognize the general rule that money or property paid or delivered on an unlawful agreement cannot be recovered back. That principle, as stated by Lord Mansfield, in Holman v. Johnson, 1 Cowp. 343, is this: "Ex dolo malo non oritur actio." No court will lend its aid to a man who founds his cause of action upon an immoral or illegal act. If from the plaintiff's own stating, or otherwise, the cause of action appears to arise ex turpi causa, or the transgression of a positive law of this country, there the court says he has no right to be assisted. It is upon that ground the court goes; not for the sake of the defendant, but because they will not lend their aid to such a plaintiff. So, if the plaintiff and defendant were to change sides, and the defendant was to bring his action against the plaintiff, the latter would then have the advantage of it; for, where both are equally in fault, "potior est conditio defendentie." "

29 L. R. A.

"The test for the application of this rule is whether the plaintiff can make out his case otherwise than through the medium and by the aid of an illegal transaction to which he was himself a party." Wald's Pollock, Cont. 332.

This principle has no application here. The city was not a party to any illegal or unlawful or immoral agreement. If it were a plaintiff suing upon a breach of warranty contained in the contract in question, it would not be obliged to make out its case "through the medium and by the aid of any illegal transaction to which it itself was a party." The contract between the city and the sellers of these chattels was neither malum in se nor malum prohibitum. It is, therefore, enforceable by either party, unless the unlawful dealings between the agent of one of the parties and the other principal is a ground for rescission. If the contract was one which the city could have lawfully made or authorized in the first instance, then it is one which, if made by an unauthorized agent or through the fraud of its agent, to which the other party was alone privy, it may ratify upon full knowledge of all the facts. State v. Butiles, 3 Ohio St. 309. The case last cited affords an interesting instance of the power of a principal to ratify an act of an agent wholly unauthorized, and which the agent was by law prohibited from doing. Certain agents for the state of Ohio had loaned the state's money, and taken a bond therefor, payable to them as agents for the state. The lending of the state's money was prohibited under a penal statute. The state, through its legislature, ratified this unlawful act, and sued at law on the bond. The opinion was by Ranney, J., who, among other things, said that the state had a perfect right to waive the wrong and adopt the contract made in her name: "If, when adopted, the consideration upon which it was made, or its performance by the other party, is found to be illegal or immoral, it will no sooner be enforced for her than for the most obscure citizen; but, if it then stands without objection in both these particulars, it is no defense to say she was wronged by her agents, when they assumed, without authority, to act in her name. That is a matter between her and her agents. The option whether she will make herself a party to their acts, and be bound by the contract they have made, belongs to her, and not to those who have not and could not have been injured. In short, any contract that an individual or body corporate or politic may lawfully make, they may lawfully ratify and adopt, when made in their name without authority; and, when adopted, it has its effect from the time it was made, and the same effect as though no agent had intervened. The state could lawfully have loaned this money, and the defendant's testator could lawfully have bound himself to repay it. If the contract has been ratified and adopted by the state, in judgment of law, the state did loan the money, and the defendant's testator did promise the state to repay it." State v. Butiles, 3 Ohio St. 323, 323.

The case of Milford v. Milford Water Co. 124 Pa. 610, 3 L. R. A. 122, has been cited as entertaining an opposing doctrine. Rightly understood, it has no very forcible bearing upon this case. A statute of the state absolutely prohibited any municipality from entering into any contract in which members of the city council were concerned, and made participation in such a contract by members of the city government a penal offense. The city council contracted with a water company for a supply of water for a term of years. A majority of the council constituted a majority of the directors of the water company. Subsequently, when the council contained none of the directors of the water company, rents were paid, and use of the water continued. The water company relied upon this as a ratification, and sued for other rents. It was held that the contract was void and incapable of ratification. The case seems to stand upon the principle that the party to be held by ratification must be capable, not only of doing the act at the time it is ratified, but at the time the act ratified was done. Wald's Pollock, Cont. 108; Cook v. Tullis, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 338, 21 L. ed. 936. "Ratification relates back to the original making of the contract, and confirms it from that time." Leake, Cont. 393. The town was incapable of making a contract with that water company when it was made, and while it might, at the date of ratification, have made a new contract, it was held incapable of confirming the old one.

We do not agree with the trial judge that the evidence of ratification, after full discovery of the fraud, was so clear as to leave no issue for the jury. The city did, by letter, repudiate the agreement, and notify the sellers to remove the machines. This it had a clear right to do. But it is said that, while the city said it would not be bound by the bargain, its acts in retaining and using them thereafter was inconsistent with rescission, and amounted to ratification. Undoubtedly, the subsequent retention and use of these machines was evidence tending to contradict the letter repudiating the purchase. Dodsworth v. Hercules Iron Works (Feb. 5, 1895) 66 Fed. Rep. 483. In the case last cited, a like repudiation of an agreement for failure of machinery to comply fully with precedent conditions was held to have been rendered nugatory by subsequent conduct. But, in that case, there was a subsequent continued use for more than two years, in the ordinary course of the buyer's business, which was held such clear evidence of an intention to accept as to leave no issue of fact for the jury. The city could not be held estopped by ratification until after full discovery of the fraud. A mere suspicion was not enough to put it to an election. Mudell Min. Co., Limited v. Watrous, 9 O. C. A. 415, 61 Fed. Rep. 163. The letter of November 18, 1890, was written as soon as any satisfactory evidence of the improper dealing with its agent came to its knowledge. There was evidence tending to show that between that date and the bringing of this suit (January 16, 1891) the city had continued to use at least some of these machines. Such use would, of course, be evidence of an intention to affirm a contract otherwise avoidable for fraud. But this use was for less than two months, and falls, in that respect, far short of a like retention and use held to be conclusive in Dodsworth v. Hercules Iron Works, which we have before cited, and was not an act determining the intention to ratify so conclusively as to leave no question for the jury. Slight acts of use will not bar rescission. Bigelow, Frauda, 434, 435. In a case of this kind, where a public municipality has been defrauded, there ought to be, where mere acts are relied upon as evidence of ratification, such clear evidence of an intentional exercise of the right of ownership as would be inconsistent with any other theory than that of an intention to waive the right of rejection. The question of ratification should have been submitted to the jury.

Finally, if the city is found to have ratified the contract, it would operate as a confirmation of the trade, as originally made. If representations were made by Brooks as to the automatic operation and general capacity of these machines to perform the work needed, and thus induced the purchase, these representations, in case a right to rescind is found to have been waived, may be treated as warranties made by the agent of defendants in error. Ratification operates as an adoption of the entire agreement and all of its parts. If the sale was upon a guaranty, or under representations amounting to a warranty, ratification confirms it subject to the guaranties of warranty, and the buyer may, when sued for the purchase price, recoup to the extent of any damage sustained by breach of the contract with respect to any warranty concerning the capabilities of the machine. The case of Dodsworth v. Hercules Iron Works, heretofore cited, controls this aspect of the case.

For the error indicated, the judgment must be reversed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

LAKE SHORE & MICHIGAN SOUTH-ERN R. CO., Appt.,
v.

City of GRAND RAPIDS et al.

(108 Mich. 374.)

1. The special exemption of a railroad

NOTE.—See, on the subject of the above case, the recent note to Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Milwaukee (Wis.) 23 L. R. A. 249.

29 L. R. A.

from taxation by its charter does not extend to lines which it operates under a lease and which were organized under the general laws of the state.

2. A tax on a railroad "in lieu of all other taxes" does not exempt it from assessments for local improvements.

3. The sale of the freight house and a portion of the right of way and tracks of a railroad, although at its terminus, cannot be sustained as a mode of collecting an assessment for local improvements.

(November 7, 1894.)

APPEAL by complainants from a decree of the Superior Court of Grand Rapids refusing to enjoin defendants from enforcing an assessment for street improvement by sale of complainant's property. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Francis A. Stace, with Messrs. C. E. Weaver and Fitzgerald & Barry, for appellant:

Complainant, as now organized, is taxable only under the provisions of the charter of the Michigan Southern Railroad Company (Laws 1846, p. 170) and the act under which that company and the Northern Indiana Railroad Company were consolidated. Laws 1855, p. 300.

State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224.

The provision of the charter exempts the property and effects of the complainant "from all and every other tax, charge or exaction by virtue of any laws of this state now, or hereafter to be, in force, except penalties by this act imposed."

The words, "tax, charge, or exaction" cover every kind of assessment which can be made under the taxing powers of the government.

Olive Cemetery Co. v. Philadelphia, 93 Pa. 129, 39 Am. Rep. 732; Washington Avenue, 69 Pa. 852, 8 Am. Rep. 255; McMasters v. Com. 3 Watts, 292.

Assessments have uniformly been regarded and treated as taxes, and the power to make such assessments is referred to the power of taxation.

Hoyle v. East Saginaw, 19 Mich. 89; Mots v. Detroit, 18 Mich. 495; Whitney v. Hudson, 69 Mich. 189; Lyon v. Grand Rapids, 80 Mich. 253; Grand Rapids School Furniture Co. v. Grand Rapids, 92 Mich. 564; Davies v. Saginaw, 87 Mich. 489; Auditor General v. Maier, 95 Mich. 127; Big Rapids v. Mecosta County Suprs. 99 Mich. 351.

The words in a charter, "shall not be subject to taxes and assessments," are held to exempt the corporation from assessments for opening, curbing and flagging a street.

State v. Newark, 36 N. J. L. 478, 13 Am. Rep. 464. See also Codman v. Johnson, 104 Mass. 491; Blake v. Baker, 115 Mass. 188; LeRoy v. East Saginaw City Railway, 18 Mich. 284, 100 Am. Dec. 162; Brightman v. Kirner, 29 Wis. 54.

The charter of the complainant is a contract made by it with the state, and the state cannot, by any subsequent legislation, change its terms without the consent of the complainant.

New Jersey v. Yard, 95 U. S. 104, 24 L. ed. 352; Dartmouth College Trustees v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 4 L. ed. 629.

Under the general railroad laws of this state, the complainant cannot be taxed for municipal improvements of this character.

The per centage directed to be paid to the state treasurer "in lieu of all other taxes" precludes the levying of the assessment in question.

St. Paul & P. R. Co. First Div. v. St. Paul, 21 Minn. 526; St. Paul v. St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. 23 Minn. 469.

29 L. R. A.

A railroad is a public highway and the land occupied by it and used solely for its franchises, is taken and used for public use and it is against public policy to tax one public highway for the support of another.

Philadelphia v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. 88 Pa. 41; Junction R. Co. v. Philadelphia 88 Pa. 424; Worcester v. Western R. Corp. 4 Met. 564; State v. Middle Twp. Collector, 38 N. J. L. 270; Detroit Union R. Depot & Station Co. v. Detroit, 88 Mich. 347.

A railroad is an entirety and cannot be cut up and taxed and sold for taxes in parcels.

2 Rorer, Railroads, 1499, § 14; Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 76 Mich. 421; Huckley v. Mack, 60 Mich. 591; Applegate v. Ernst, 3 Bush, 648, 96 Am. Dec. 272; Georgia v. Atlantic & G. R. Co. 3 Woods, C. C. 434; Porter v. Rockford, R. L. & St. L. R. Co. 76 Ill. 561; Big Rapids v. Mecosta County Suprs. 99 Mich. 351; Worcester County v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 193, 17 Am. Rep. 159; Polk County Sav. Bank v. State, 69 Iowa, 29; New York & H. R. Co. v. Morrisania Trustees, 7 Hun, 652.

The land being occupied by complainant solely in the exercise of its franchises is not susceptible of benefit by the paving of the street.

Philadelphia v. Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co., Junction R. Co. v. Philadelphia, and New York & H. R. Co. v. Morrisania Trustees, supra; New York & N. H. R. Co. v. New Haven, 42 Conn. 279, 19 Am. Rep. 534; State v. Jersey City, 36 N. J. L. 56; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Decatur, 1 L. R. A. 613, 126 Ill. 92; Bridgeport v. New York & N. H. R. Co. 36 Conn. 255, 4 Am. Rep. 63.

Mr. William Wisner Taylor for appellees.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On April 24, 1891, the common council of the city of Grand Rapids determined, by resolution, to pave a part of West Bridge street, including the part which passes the complainant's railroad and freight house. The pavement was constructed, and on January 11, 1892, the common council designated the district benefited, which included the north 100 feet of complainant's premises, and assessed complainant for benefits therefor the sum of $846.50; the premises being valued at $1,500. From this assessment complainant appealed to the common council, on the ground that its lands were not liable to assessments for such improvements. This claim was denied by the common council, and the assessment was confirmed on March 21, 1892. The assessment was to be paid in five annual installments. The first was not paid, and the land was sold by the city marshal for the amount of the tax and costs of sale, on November 4, 1892. The second installment not being paid, it was returned by the treasurer to the city clerk. The city charter provides (title 6, §§ 33, 41) for the execution of a deed by the mayor at the expiration of one year from date of sale. This bill was filed September 29, 1893, for the purpose of vacating the assessments as illegal, on the ground that the complainant is not liable to assessments for this municipal street improvement, and that its premises are not benefited or susceptible to benefit thereby, and to enjoin the mayor from executing a deed on the first assessment, and the marshal from selling on the second. The defendants demurred generally to the bill. The court sustained the demurrer and dismissed the bill. The contentions of the complainant are (1) that, under the special acts of the legislature by which it is incorporated, it cannot be assessed nor taxed for municipal street improvements; (2) that, under the general railroad law, it cannot be assessed nor taxed; (3) that the charter of the city of Grand Rapids does not authorize the assessment of such tax on the lands of complainant used and operated in the exercise of its franchise; (4) that the lands of complainant so used are not susceptible of benefit from a street improvement, and for that reason cannot be assessed.

The Michigan Southern Railroad Company was originally organized under a special charter. Laws 1846, p. 170. By its charter it is provided: "The said company shall pay to the state, on demand, an annual tax of one half of one per cent upon the capital stock paid in, including the five hundred thousand dollars of purchase money paid or to be paid to the state, until the first day of February, 1851, and thereafter an annual tax of three fourths of one per cent upon its capital stock paid in, including the five hundred thousand dollars purchase money aforesaid, and also upon all loans made to said company for the purpose of constructing said railroad, or purchasing, constructing, chartering or hiring of steamboats authorized by this act to be held by said company, which tax shall be paid in the last week in January in each year to the state treasurer, and the property and effects of said company, whether real, personal or mixed, shall, in consideration thereof, be exempt from all and every other tax, charge or exaction by virtue of any laws of this state now or hereafter to be in force, except penalties by this Act imposed." Afterwards, in the year 1855, an Act was passed by the legislature to authorize the Michigan Southern Railroad Company to consolidate with the Northern Indiana Railroad Company. Laws 1855, p. 800. This Act contains the following provision: "The said corporation to be organized by virtue of this Act shall continue subject to the same rate of tax as though such consolidation should not take place, and the amount of its capital and loans hereafter upon which such taxation shall be paid shall be such portion of the whole of its capital and loans as is actually employed in the state of Michigan." It is contended that the words "tax, charge or exaction," employed in the statute, cover every kind of assessment which can be made under the taxing power of the state, and that, under this special Act by which complainant was incorporated, it cannot be assessed nor taxed for municipal street improvement. The Act of 1846, for the organization of the Michigan Southern Railroad Company, also provided for the sale of the Southern Railroad, and for the right of the newly organized company to purchase it. The new company was authorized to build a road from the city of Monroe, passing through Petersburg, Adrian, Hillsdale, thence to Coldwater, and thence to Lake Michigan, on the line theretofore established as the line of the Southern Railroad by the state, or anywhere further southward than said line; and also from the junction of the Tecumseh branch with the Southern Railroad, to pass through the villages of Tecumseh and Clinton, to the village of Manchester in the county of Washtenaw. The Michigan Southern Railroad was to construct and put in operation its road from Hillsdale to Coldwater within four years, and from Coldwater to St. Joseph river within four years, and from St. Joseph river to Niles within twelve years, and within three years put in operation the Tecumseh Branch to the village of Jackson, along the line of railroads formerly authorized to be constructed by the Jacksonburg & Palmyra Railroad Company. The act further provided that the line of railroad thus completed should constitute a continuous line of railroad from the waters of Lake Erie, in the city of Monroe, to Lake Michigan. The scope of the Act, therefore, was to build a line of railroad across the state from east to west, through the several places named, and to complete the branch from Tecumseh to Jackson. It was this company, organized to construct and operate this road, to which the Act of 1846 applies. The Act of 1855 authorizes the Michigan Southern Railroad Company to consolidate with the Northern Indiana Railroad Company, but in no manner changed the rate of taxation. State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224. Afterwards, the consolidated company organized under the name of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company. Thereafter the complainant company leased or otherwise acquired the control of the railroad extending from White Pigeon, St. Joseph county, to the city of Grand Rapids, and has since operated it in its own name. It was no part of its original line, and it is not disputed that the portion from Kalamazoo to Grand Rapids was originally known as the "Gardner Road," and was organized under the general law of this state.

Whatever the rights of the complainant company may be under the Act of 1846 as to taxation, that Act cannot be made applicable to this leased road, it being organized under the general railroad law. The exemption from taxation under the Act of 1846 was a special privilege granted to the Michigan Southern Railroad Company, but it cannot be extended to such lines as that company might thereafter lease and operate, which were organized under the general railroad laws of the state. In fact, the rule seems to be much narrower than this; that is, that the exemption from taxation must be construed to have been the personal privilege of the very corporation specifically referred to. In a note to Cooley on Taxation, 2d ed. p. 212, it is said: "This statutory rule of interpretation is founded upon an obvious public policy, which regards such exemptions as in derogation of the sovereign authority and of common right, not to be extended beyond the exact and express requirement of the grants construed strictissimi juris." In Memphis [^]

L. R. R. Co. v. Berry, 112 U. S. 609, 28 L. ed. 887, it appears that the railroad company, exempt from taxation, had attempted to transfer its franchises to another corporation, which therefore claimed the exemption, and filed its bill to restrain taxation. The bill was dismissed, the court saying: "The exemption from taxation must be construed to have been the personal privilege of the very corporation specifically referred to, and to have perished with that, unless the express and clear intention of the law requires the exemption to pass as a continuing franchise to a successor." No such intention can be found in the Statute of 1846.

It is claimed, however, that, under the general railroad law of this state, this property cannot be made liable for local improvements of this character. It is provided by the general railroad law (How. Anno. Stat. § 3360) that a tax shall be paid by every railroad company to the state treasurer, based upon a percentage of the gross income of the company, and that "the tax so paid shall be in lieu of all other taxes upon the properties of such companies, except such real estate as is owned and can be conveyed by such corporation under the laws of this state and not actually employed in the exercise of its franchises and not necessary or in use in the proper operation of its road." It is contended that the words "in lieu of all other taxes" preclude the levying of such assessment for local improvements. We are satisfied that this contention cannot be sustained. As said by Mr. Justice Cooley: "It is a very just rule that, when an exemption is found to exist, it shall not be enlarged by construction. On the contrary, it ought to receive a strict construction; for the reasonable presumption is that the state has granted in express terms all it intended to grant at all, and that, unless the privilege is limited to the very terms of the statute, the favor would be extended beyond what was meant." Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed. p. 205. Speaking of local assessments, the learned author says, on page 207: "The most striking illustration of the rule of strict construction of exemptions is seen in the case of special assessments for local improvements, such as the paving and repair of streets, etc. It is almost universally held that a general exemption from taxation will not extend to such assessments. In the leading case, the words of the exemption were that no church or place of public worship should be taxed by any law of this state. Upon this the court remarked: 'The word "taxes" means burdens, charges or impositions put or set upon persons or property for public uses, and this is the definition which Lord Coke gives of the word "tallage" (2 Inst. 232); and Lord Holt, in [Brewster v. Kingell], Carth. 438, gives the same definition, in substance, of the word "tax." The legislature intended by that exemption to relieve religious and literary institutions from these public burdens, and the same exemption was extended to the real estate of any minister, not exceeding in value $1,500. But to pay for the opening of a street in the ratio of the benefit or advantage derived from it is no burden. 39 L. R. A.

It is no "tallage" or "tax," within the meaning of the exemption, and has no claim upon the public benevolence." Judge Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, speaking of the strictness with which these statutes are construed, says: "Although an assessment is in the nature of a tax, and is authorized by or is a branch of the taxing power, yet a general statute exempting certain property—for example, churches—from taxation 'by any law of the state' does not exempt it from liability for a street assessment." Re Improvement of Nassau Street, 11 Johns. 77. It was held in State v. Newark, 27 N. J. L. 185, that a railroad charter exempting the company, in consideration of the payment of a certain tax, from "any other or further tax or imposition upon it," does not exempt it from liability for an assessment upon houses and lots owned by it, and benefited by the opening and widening of a street; but the corporation cannot, for such a purpose, be assessed without reference to the special benefit conferred upon property owned by it, and such an assessment would be, in fact, a tax from which it is exempt. See also, New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. New Britain, 49 Conn. 40; Ludlow v. Cincinnati Southern Railway's Trustees, 78 Ky. 357. But Judge Dillon says (sec. 778): "Aside from the rule of strict construction which applies to exemptions from taxation, the cases cited in this and in the previous section will show that there is, in their ordinary use, a recognized difference between the words 'tax' and 'assessments,' and that the one does not always include the other. Thus, a constitutional provision that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the state does not apply to local assessments upon private property to pay for local improvements. So, a provision of the constitution of a state which requires 'the rule of taxation to be uniform,' in connection with another provision that 'it shall be the duty of the legislature to provide for the organization of cities, and to restrain their power of taxation, assessments,' etc., so as to prevent abuses in assessments and taxation, is construed not to apply to special assessments by municipal corporations made by authority of the legislature for local improvements,"—citing Weeks v. Milwaukee, 10 Wis. 186. It is evident that the great weight of authority upholds the doctrine that assessments for local improvements are not within the general exemption from taxation. Under the general railroad law of this state, the taxes mentioned are such burdens, charges or impositions put or set upon persons or property for public uses; and this law has no reference to special assessments for local improvements in the ratio of the benefit or advantage to be derived from them. It is apparent from the statements in the bill that certain benefits are derived to this property by the improvements made. The proportion of these benefits are determined by the local officers.

But a more serious question is raised by counsel for complainant. It is insisted that the mode of collection of the tax fixed by the charter cannot be adopted and carried out as against the complainant, a railroad corporation. The proceedings prescribed by the charter for the collection of the taxes are as follows: After the assessment roll has been made and confirmed by the common council, it shall be delivered to the city clerk or the treasurer of the city. Ninety days after the receipt of the assessment roll, the treasurer shall return it to the city clerk, with the list of the real estate on which the assessment has not been paid, stating the amount of the tax and collection fees on each parcel, and the names of the persons to whom assessed. Within thirty days after the return of such list, the clerk shall cause the list to be published in a newspaper, with a notice of sale. The marshal shall attend the sale, and act as auctioneer. If no person bids the amount of the assessment, the lands shall be struck off to the city of Grand Rapids. No bids for less than the assessment, fees, and expenses, with interest, shall be received; and the land may be redeemed within one year on payment of the amount for which it was sold, with interest from date of sale, at 25 per cent. If not redeemed, the mayor shall execute a deed to the purchaser. The city is empowered to hold, occupy, enjoy, use and possess, lease, incumber, and convey lands bid off to it at such sales as fully and completely as a natural person. At the time of this assessment, no other means were provided by the charter for the collection of such assessments. It is claimed by counsel that a railroad is an entirety, and cannot be cut up and taxed and sold for taxes in parcels; that such a proceeding would result in a destruction of the franchises, and destroy the availability of the road to the public, who are entitled to its benefits as a means of transportation. In Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 76 Mich. 421, it was said: "But these tracks are only special adaptations for a particular use of the surface of the public highways; and, under our laws concerning levy and sale on execution, each track would be sold as a whole to the bidder for the shortest term of years to collect taxes for the use of it. The right to use the tracks is inseparable from the franchise, and, it not being taxable as land, it should properly be taxed as an entirety to the corporation." In Hackley v. Mack, 80 Mich. 591, it was said: "We have no law that we have yet discovered, and certainly none has been pointed out to us, which authorizes the sheriff to levy upon the track or roadbed of a railway, even against the corporation. If any levy can be made upon the property of the company, aside from such goods and chattels as may be found and seized and taken into custody by the sheriff, it is only on the franchise of earning tolls, as provided by the corporation laws." In Applegate v. Ernst, 8 Bush, 648, 96 Am. Dec. 273, the court said: "The railroad, from one end to the other, is an entirety, and as a whole only may be subject to taxation or coercive sale. Fragmentary taxations or sales might be unjustly vexatious and injurious to the owners, pervert the destination of the road, and disturb the public use and interest. To avoid such evils and absurdities, the law treats a railroad and all its appurtenances as one entire thing, not legally subject to coercive severance or dislocation. In that consolidated character it must be taxed for state revenue, and cannot be a fit subject for taxation by the separate counties through which it runs." In the case of Georgia v. Atlantic & G. R. Co. 8 Woods, C. C. 484, Fed. Cas. No. 5,351, Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking in reference to a tax levy made on the depots, freight houses, passenger houses, and offices of the company for taxes due the state, says: "It cannot be supposed that the legislature, in authorizing its construction, and granting peculiar franchises for its operation and use, ever intended that execution creditors might levy upon parcels of it, and cut it up into sections, and destroy it as a great public thoroughfare. Such a proposition is preposterous. Suppose a mile of the road should be levied on and sold. Would the purchaser have the right to fence it in, and take up the rails and cross-ties, and plant it, and thereby destroy the railroad? Could this be done without contemplating the power of the state by which it was created and made a public highway? We think not." In Porter v. Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. 76 Ill. 561, it was held that, if a railroad was to be assessed at all, it must be as an entirety. These cases arose under a claimed power of taxation by the state or counties, or attempted liens under executions, and not for local assessments; but the reasoning against sales for local assessments is equally applicable where the attempt is made to collect by sale of the roadbed, or, as in this case, the freight house, roadbed, and right of way. It is said, however, that this was a terminal of the road, and the rights of the public could not be affected by sale of such terminal. We cannot accede to this. The freight houses and terminal of right of way and tracks might seriously affect the business of the company and the rights of the public. In New York & H. R. Co. v. Morrisania Trustees, 7 Hun, 652, assessment was made upon a part of the roadbed of plaintiff for benefits in opening a street. Proceedings were had to set aside the assessment; and it was held that the trustees could not sell the entire roadbed, nor any lands necessarily used by it for the purpose of its franchise. The case was, however, ruled as coming within section 50, chapter 277, Laws 1864, defining and limiting the powers of the trustees.

It is suggested, though not strenuously contended, by counsel for defendants, that though no sales may be made of the real estate assessed, for the purpose of paying this tax, yet the assessment against the property is valid, and may now be collected from the personal property of the defendant, under and by virtue of the amendment to the city charter in 1893, contained in title 6, section 10, Local Acts 1893. That section provides: "At the time of the delivery of the assessment roll to the city treasurer, the mayor shall attach his warrant thereto commanding him to collect the assessment therein contained, together with the fees hereinbefore prescribed, within ninety days from the date thereof; and further commanding and authorizing said treasurer, when he may deem it necessary so to do, to levy and collect the same by distress and sale of any personal property upon such premises belonging to the premises, chargeable to such assessment." Just what personal property there may be upon such premises, belonging to the premises chargeable to said assessment, it is difficult to perceive; or just what this provision means, is difficult of ascertainment. If there were a general clause in the charter authorizing the collection from the personal property of the corporation, we could see no difficulty in enforcing the collection, as we are of the opinion that though the lands and premises assessed cannot be sold for the tax, for the reason before stated, yet the assessment for the local improvement is valid. The only question in this case is the mode of collection. Whether there is any law under which the city can now proceed for the enforcement of the payment of the tax is doubtful. None has been pointed out, and it may need further legislation on the subject to enable the city to collect.

The decree of the court must be reversed, and decree entered here in favor of complainant, setting aside the sales of the premises, and releasing the levies under the tax warrant as to the other years. The assessments for benefits will not be disturbed, but will stand as valid and subsisting assessments upon the properties for the improvements thus made. The relief granted is without prejudice to the defendant to proceed to the enforcement of the assessment in such mode as it may deem best.

Montgomery, J., did not sit. The other Justices concurred.

Rehearing denied.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Missouri, Resp't.,

v.

Charles C. BISHOP, Appt.

(.....Mo.....)

1. A labor union may be protected by appropriate state legislation in the use of a label for the designation of articles manufactured by its members and use of the label prohibited to persons other than members of the union or persons who employ such members.

2. Labels, symbols or advertisements adopted by any association or union of workmen as a trade-mark to distinguish articles manufactured by their members from those manufactured by other persons are protected by Laws 1898, p. 280, when they are adopted in accordance with its provisions.

NOTE.—Protection of trade union labels or trade-marks.

I. In general.

II. Contents of label.

III. Effect of statutes.

I. In general.

The leading cases on the question of the right of a trade union, such as a cigar makers' union, to protection in the exclusive use of a label which it adopts, have been reported in this series. The cases in the courts of last resort have generally but not quite unanimously agreed in denying that a trade-union label could be protected as a trade-mark on goods which did not belong to the union but were manufactured by the members of the union. But quite a large number of lower court cases have sustained such labels. In the case of Allen v. McCarthy, 37 Minn. 349, the court was equally divided on the question.

But in Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conhaim, 3 L. R. A. 123, 40 Minn. 243, the court, by a bare majority, decided that a cigar makers' union was not entitled to protection in the use of the trade-mark.

To the same effect were the decisions in Weener v. Brayton, 3 L. R. A. 640, 152 Mass. 101, and McVey v. Brendel, 13 L. R. A. 377, 144 Pa. 235.

In Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391, a suit by three members of a cigar makers' union on behalf of their fellow members, as well as themselves, to restrain the use or imitation of their alleged trade-mark, was denied, because they did not show any property in the label or mark, or any application of it to goods actually on the market of which the complainants were the owners or in which they traded.

But in Carson v. Ury, 5 L. R. A. 614, 39 Fed. Rep. 777, it was held that while the label of the cigar makers' union was not a valid trade-mark, the fraudulent use of such label by a person who had no right to it was held to be a wrong which equity could prevent at the suit of a member of the union who was actually selling cigars of his own manufacture with such label thereon, and whose business was injured by the fraudulent use of the label by the defendant.

In Weener v. Brayton, supra, the suit to enjoin an alleged unlawful use of a cigar makers' trade-mark was brought by officers and members of the union, but there was no allegation that the plaintiffs were themselves, on their own account or with others, manufacturers or dealers in cigars as a business, or even actually employed by others in their sale or manufacture, or that the union of which they were members and officers was engaged in any business of that description, or that they had applied the label to any vendible commodity of which they were the owners or manufacturers, or in which they dealt. For this reason the court denied the applicability of the principle on which the injunction was granted in Carson v. Ury, saying, "whether, if the bill had contained allegations similar to those which were found in the case of Carson v. Ury (supra), it might have been maintained, we have no occasion now to consider."

In McVey v. Brendel, supra, it was said that the plaintiffs represented neither the cigar makers' international union, the alleged owners of the label, nor the officer whose name appeared upon it, but a subordinate local organization which did not devise or register the label, and did not claim to own it. The decision was that the local union could not maintain a bill to protect the label which belonged to the national union, but the court went further and declared that the national union was not a trader, manufacturer or dealer so as to be entitled to protection in the use of a trade-mark.

In Bloete v. Simon, 19 Abb. N. C. 83, a complaint by members of a cigar makers' union on behalf of

3. A statute providing for the protection of trade-marks adopted by associations or unions of workmen is not void as class legislation or as granting special privileges or immunities.

4. Exclusive ownership of a label need not be alleged in an information under a statute making it a misdemeanor to vend or keep for sale goods upon which any forged imitation or counterfeit label shall be placed to represent the goods as those of some other person, association or union of workmen.

5. Proof of guilty knowledge is necessary to sustain a conviction under Act of 1893, p. 260, making it a misdemeanor to have for sale goods bearing counterfeit labels representing that they were made by a certain person, association or union of workmen.

(May 21, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the St. Louis Court of Criminal Correction convicting him of selling cigars with a counterfeit label, contrary to the provisions of the statute. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Eugene McQuillin, for appellant:

The label of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America is not a trade-mark, and is, therefore, not entitled to protection under the laws of Missouri relating to the registration and piracy of trade-marks.

McVey v. Brendel, 18 L. R. A. 377, 144 Pa. 235; Weener v. Brayton, 8 L. R. A. 640, 152 Mass. 101; Schneider v. Williams, 44 N. J. Eq. 391; Carson v. Ury, 5 L. R. A. 614, 39 Fed.

Rep. 777; Trask Fish Co. v. Wooster, 28 Mo. App. 408; Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. v. Sam. Reid Tobacco Co. 104 Mo. 53.

Because, 1. The cigars are not "manufactured or prepared" by the union as an organization.

Mo. Laws, 1893, § 1, p. 260.

(a) The union is not a manufacturer or dealer in cigars, or engaged in trade or commerce of any kind; and the right to a trade-mark cannot exist as a mere abstract right, independent of, and disconnected from, a business. It is not property as distinct from, but only as incident to, the business.

Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conhaim, 3 L. R. A. 125, 40 Minn. 243; St. Louis Piano Mfg. Co. v. Merkel, 1 Mo. App. 305; Skinner v. Oakes, 10 Mo. App. 45.

(b) There is and can be no trade-mark in labor, either at common law or under the Missouri statute.

2. It does not point out the source and origin of the cigars, the place of manufacture, the name of the manufacturer or dealer, nor the name of the maker.

Filley v. Fassett, 44 Mo. 168, 100 Am. Dec. 275; Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co. v. Sam. Reid Tobacco Co. supra.

3. Our statute does not protect labels, etc., as such, but only such names terms, devices, etc., as may be adjudged to be trade-marks. It is designed to protect "trade-marks" as contradistinguished from mere names, terms, devices and labels.

Mo. Laws, 1893, § 1, p. 260; Alden v. Gross, themselves and their associates for an injunction against the wrongful use of a label on goods not manufactured by the union was sustained against demurrer. The court says: "We have admitted in the case at bar ownership by plaintiffs of the trade-mark or label as designating the cigars made by them and their associates; the general recognition of such trade-mark as guaranteeing that fact; the sale, limitation, and use of that trade-mark by defendant with fraudulent intent to induce purchasers to believe that the cigars sold had been made by the plaintiffs, whereas they had not been so made; and irreparable damage to plaintiffs therefrom." But it does not appear whether plaintiffs were the owners of or dealers in any goods on which such label was properly used, or whether they were merely employed by others in manufacturing. It would seem that their right to sue was sustained solely on the ground that they represented the union and not on the ground that they were manufacturers or dealers in cigars on which the label was used.

In Strasser v. Moonelle, 23 Jones & S. 197, a similar decision was made. The complaint alleged that plaintiffs were several cigar makers and members of the Cigar Makers' International Association, while the answer alleged that the plaintiffs were not manufacturers in a proprietary sense, or in any right of proprietorship and had no right of property, possession, or control in cigars made by its alleged members or otherwise. And in an affidavit read on a motion to continue an injunction, the defendant said that the plaintiffs were working cigar makers and that neither they nor the union had any factory or made any cigars except as workmen for others, and transacted no business or trade in cigars as makers, dealers or otherwise, but the court said: "I am of the opinion that the plaintiffs being members of a cigar makers' international union had an interest in the proper use of the label of the union, which might, upon sufficient grounds, be protected by injunction against the inequitable use of those labels." This was the language of the opinion at general term affirming the order of Dugro, J., at special term. In his opinion, which is included in the report, he says: "It needs no deep study to perceive that the laborer has the same valuable interest in the good-will of his labor as a manufacturer has in the good-will of his trade." He also says it is needless to discuss the question whether the label constitutes a trade-mark or not, as the right to its exclusive use may be sustained, although it fall to be a trade-mark, as the property right in the label is entitled to the protection of equity on the same principle as that upon which courts protect trade-marks and good-will.

The court of appeals in dismissing an appeal from an order granting a preliminary injunction in the above case on the ground that this was a discretionary matter which could not be reviewed, said that the denial of any proprietary interest by the plaintiffs in the cigars made and the allegation that their pecuniary interests were not affected by the use of the labels, presented a serious question of law which the court was not prepared to determine in this preliminary proceeding, and in the absence of findings of fact showing the particular grounds upon which the judgment was based. Strasser v. Moonelle, 108 N. Y. 611.

The right of a cigar makers' union to the exclusive use of its label has also been sustained in several other lower court decisions which do not seem to have been reported in law reports. In Moe v. Alter (Ohio C. P., Lucas County), as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of February, 1888, an injunction was allowed in favor of the plaintiffs, suing for themselves and other members of the union, against defendant's use of the label of the Cigar Makers' International Union, or any imitation thereof, or interfering with the rights of the 25 Mo. App. 123; Trask Fish Co. v. Wooster, 28 Mo. App. 408; Snodgrass v. Welle, 11 Mo. App. 590.

4. The right to use the label in question is not a property right, without which there can be no trade-mark.

(a) It is a mere personal privilege contingent upon membership in the union.

(b) Its object is simply to indicate membership in the union; when membership ceases, the personal privilege, the right to use the label, ceases.

Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 98 v. Conkaim, 3 L. R. A. 125, 40 Minn. 243.

5. There is no exclusive use in the label.

Rogers v. Taintor, 97 Mass. 291; Chadwick v. Cozell, 6 L. R. A. 839, 151 Mass. 190; Weener v. Brayton, 8 L. R. A. 640, 152 Mass. 101.

The Act of 1893 is illegal and void against the public policy of the state of Missouri, productive of oppression, illegal conspiracies, combinations and boycotts.

McVey v. Brendel, 18 L. R. A. 377, 144 Pa. 285.

The Act of 1893 is unconstitutional, is class legislation.

The Cigar Makers' International Union of America not being composed exclusively of citizens of Missouri, cannot, under our laws relating to the registration of trade-marks, acquire any rights in said label as against citizens of Missouri.

State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 187.

The information is insufficient because it fails to aver exclusive ownership of the label in question in the organization known as the Cigar Makers' International Union of America.

United States v. Braun, 39 Fed. Rep. 775.

Mr. R. F. Walker, Atty-Gen., for respondent:

It was held in Indiana, under a statute which limited the use of a label to citizens of that state, that a label may be adopted and registered by a trade union (the same as the one named in this proceeding) to indicate work done by those belonging to it, and although not a technical trade-mark, it will be protected in equity against those attempting to fraudulently use it without right.

Ind. Laws, 1891, p. 817; State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 187.

It has been held in Illinois, in construing a statute similar to the Missouri law now under consideration, that the punishment of imitators or counterfeiters of trade-marks may be provided for under an act to protect associations, unions of workmen and persons in their labels, trade-marks and forms of advertising.

Cohn v. People, 23 L. R. A. 821, 149 Ill. 486.

A term, name or device may be protected as a trade-mark by an express statute.

Falkinburg v. Lucy, 35 Cal. 52, 95 Am. Dec. 76.

The rule that a trade-mark must indicate origin and ownership does not require the proprietor's name or place of business to accompany the device, symbol or design.

Peurrung v. Compton, 6 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 488.

A statute which gives the right to a trade-union and its members or branches in the use of such label. It was found that the Cigar Makers' International Union had the sole and exclusive right to the use of the label.

In Renkert v. Bamberger (Ohio C. P., Hamilton County), as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of April, 1887, a similar injunction was granted in favor of plaintiffs suing for themselves and other members of the local union at Cincinnati. The court said: "It is not necessary that the plaintiffs have an exclusive right in the label. If they have a common property right with others the wrong done to them by the defendant is entire—at least so far as the right to an injunction goes. If the number of the members of the union is so great as that they cannot all be brought into court then the officers of the union can sue. . . . They say there is no property right here because the makers of cigars do not sell them and cannot have a property right in a label affixed to them. They claim that the label is only an incident to the cigars. That might be so if it was separate from the cigars and never applied to them at all. It is admitted that the union cigars are better than others. Suppose a union working together makes a large quantity of excellent cigars, sells them to a dealer, and he agrees to put its label on them. He disposes of them readily and at a profit to himself. Does not the label have a value? Yet the cigars belong to the dealer and the label to the union. If other dealers make an inferior cigar and sell them under a counterfeit label would it not injure the business of the unions and impair the chances of employment and of getting good wages? Therefore, while there may be no property right in the bare label which the court would be bound to protect yet when attached to an article of merchandise there might be separate interests which the court might protect. The fraud in this case is of the worst kind. It is like a counterfeit bill. The general public have such an interest in suppressing it that the court might almost do it on a mere information. The demurrer is overruled."

29 L. R. A.

In Todd v. Brener (Chancery Division Toronto, Canada), as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of March, 1891, the union was held to be within the provisions of the Trade-mark and Design Act (R. S. C. chap. 63) and entitled to relief under the Trade-mark and Offenses Act, section 23 (R. S. C.), and an injunction was granted, against the contention of the defendant that there was no ownership in the plaintiffs of the label as a trade-mark and that the Trade-mark and Design Act applies only to those who manufacture or sell, and that this association cannot be classed or described as manufacturers or vendors of cigars, but merely employes of manufacturers and vendors. The court said that if identity of proprietorship in the mark and the article to which it was affixed, or if identity in the quality of the goods were required to passport it as such, the plaintiffs had no cause of action because the international union neither manufactures or owns cigar labels, etc. The court said further: "It is admitted, however, that the association consists wholly of cigar makers, and, as I understand it, the word 'maker' means 'manufacturer,' and the word 'manufacturer' means 'maker,' or one who works raw material into wares suitable for use, or one who employs workmen for manufacturing; it includes both. In my opinion these cigar 'makers' are cigar 'manufacturers,'" etc. And further, "The conclusion I have come to is, that these plaintiffs, and the members of this association in behalf of whom these plaintiffs sue, have a property right in this label or trade-mark, and are entitled to apply to the court to interfere by injunction."

In Cigar Makers' Union No. 1 of Baltimore v. Link (Balt. C. Ct.), as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of November, 1893, Judge Phelps mark in a label adopted by any person, association or union of workmen, is not a local or special law granting special privileges, immunities or franchises, because it is not limited to associations of any particular class of persons.

Cohn v. People, 28 L. R. A. 881, 149 Ill. 486.

This court will presume that sufficient evidence was introduced to support the finding of the trial court.

State v. Pritterer, 65 Mo. 423.

When an inference of guilt can be reasonably drawn from the evidence, the verdict will not be disturbed on the ground of insufficiency of the testimony.

State v. Banks, 118 Mo. 117.

Burgess, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant was convicted and fined $100 in the St. Louis court of criminal correction under an information filed against him in said court by the assistant prosecuting attorney, charging him with having sold a box of cigars to one David Kreyling, on June 26, 1894, upon which there was a counterfeit label of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, contrary to and in violation of an Act of the general assembly of the state of Missouri entitled "An Act to Repeal Sections 8569, 8570, 8571, 8572, 8573, 8574, 8575, 8576, 8577, of the Revised Statutes of 1889, Entitled 'Trade-Marks,' and to Enact eight new Sections in Lieu thereof." Laws 1893, p. 260. The case is in this court on defendant's appeal.

Sections 1 and 4 of the Act under consideration are as follows:

"Section 1. Any Person may Adopt a Trade-Mark.—To be Recorded. If any mechanic, manufacturer, association or union of workmen, or other person, shall wish to adopt any particular name, term, design or device as his or their trade-mark, to designate, make known or distinguish any goods, wares or merchandise by him or them manufactured or prepared, he or they may write out a description of such name, term, design or device, describing the same accurately, and sign and acknowledge the same before some officer competent to take the acknowledgment of deeds, and file the same for record in the office of the secretary of state, by leaving two copies, counterparts or fac-similes thereof, with the secretary of state; said secretary shall deliver to such mechanic, manufacturer, association or union of workmen, or other person, so filing the same, a duly attested certificate of the record of the same, for which he shall receive a fee of one dollar; such certificate shall, in all suits and prosecutions under this Act, be sufficient proof of the adoption of such label, trade-mark or form of advertisement, and of the right of such mechanic, manufacturer, association or union of workmen, or other person, to adopt the same. No label, trade-mark or form of advertisement shall be recorded that in any way resembles or would probably be mistaken for a label or trade-mark already of record."

"Sec. 4. Penalty for Keeping or Selling granted an injunction in favor of the local union against unauthorized use of the union label. Since the opinion is an interesting one and is not found in other law reports, it is here quoted at length as follows:—

"There can be no doubt as to the right of the plaintiffs to maintain a proper bill, suing as well in their own behalf as in behalf of numerous other parties associated with them in a common interest. (Smith v. Swormstedt, 57 U. S. 16 How. 302, 14 L. ed. 948). The doctrine of representation so plainly applies, that the defendant's counsel conceded, in argument, that his demurrer could not be sustained either upon the ground that the International Cigar Makers' Union was a voluntary association unincorporated or that all its numerous members, amounting to several thousands, were not parties by name.

"Conceding that the plaintiffs have a standing in court, do they show such a property interest in themselves and their associates in the subject-matter as is entitled to the recognition and protection of a court of equity? Is this label and the right to use it a subject of property at all? It is objected that the parties drawing the benefit of the label are not manufacturers, but employés or laborers, not owners of the article upon which the label is permitted to be affixed, but simply hired to make it. And it is, therefore, contended that they and their label are not within the established principles which govern courts of equity in the application of the law of trade-marks and labels, heretofore exclusively applied, it is said, to the protection of the invested capital of manufacturers and merchants.

"Although the point thus raised is a novel and interesting one, but little difficulty should be found in disposing of it upon principle. The idea of property is necessarily a progressive one and is 29 L. R. A.

capable of development corresponding to the changes in the relations of men in a growing society. 'Distinct properties,' says Puffendorf, 'were not settled at the same time, nor by one single act, but by successive degrees, not in all places alike, but property was gradually introduced, according to either the condition of things, the number and genius of men required, or as it appeared requisite to the common peace.' Lib. 4, chap. 4, §§ 6, 14. It has been justly observed that the rules attending property must keep pace with its increase and improvement and must be adapted to every case. Miller v. Taylor, 4 Burr. 2340. The essentials of property are 'distinguishable existence in the thing claimed as property, and an actual value in that thing to the true owner.' Ibid.

"The bill claims that the object and effect of this label, as used by the plaintiffs and their associates, is to increase the value of their labor by increasing the demand for it as members of the union. That is, in substance, what they claim, and at this stage of the case must be taken as true. It will not be denied that every freeman has a property right in his own labor, whether present or prospective. From this broad general principle it is easy to develop the particular proposition, that an association of men who combine for the purpose of increasing, by legitimate means, the general demand for their common labor, have a property right in whatever lawful instrumentality they can succeed in creating and controlling for that purpose.

"To apply the test already mentioned, if such an instrumentality has a distinguishable existence, if it has an actual value to those claiming to be its owners, it is property. The fact that this label in this case is valuable to the plaintiffs and their associates is admitted by the demurrer. The defendant has sought to appropriate it and by that Goods with False Brand. Any person, persons, association or union of workmen or body corporate or politic, who shall vend or keep for sale any goods, wares, merchandise, compounds or preparations upon which or in connection with which any forged, imitation or counterfeit label, brand, stamp, wrapper, imprint, engraving, bottle or trade-mark shall be placed, affixed or used, and intended to represent the said goods, wares, implements, merchandise, compounds or preparations as the genuine goods, wares, implements, merchandise, compound, or preparation of any other person or persons, association or union of workmen, or body corporate or politic, knowing the same to be imitation or counterfeit, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment in the county jail not less than one month nor more than twelve months, or both, and shall also be liable in a civil action to the person or persons, association or union of workmen, or body corporate or politic, whose goods, wares, implements, merchandise, compounds or preparations is imitated or counterfeited, or whose label, stamp, wrapper, engraving, imprint, bottle, or trade-mark is imitated, forged or counterfeited, placed, affixed or used, for all damages such person or persons, association or union of workmen, or body corporate or politic, may or shall sustain, both by virtue of the loss of profits and the damage done to the reputation of the said genuine article, goods, wares, implements, merchandise, compound or preparation, by reason of any of the acts in any section of this chapter mentioned, and may be restrained or enjoined by any court of competent jurisdiction from doing or performing any of the acts herein mentioned."

act has demonstrated that the label is at all events worth stealing. It is true that it is not tangible property, like a trade-mark, or a good-will, and as readily distinguishable. Browne, Trade Marks, §521, etc. It is not the corporate property of a corporation but the common property of a voluntary association, in which all its members have a common interest.

"A voluntary association can own property in a certain sense just as well as a partnership. Mears v. Moulton, 30 Md. 140. Notwithstanding no precedent can be found among the reported cases in the highest courts of England, or this country, it seems sufficiently clear upon principle that the device of the label which the union has originated as its instrumentality for the purpose indicated and which the demurrer admits has effectually accomplished its object in the increasing demand for the labor of the members and thereby increasing the value of their labor, it is a property right of the union in which all the members have a common interest.

"If the combination for that purpose be legitimate, and the label itself as used be a lawful instrumentality and contains no fraudulent misrepresentation, the label is entitled to the recognition of a court of equity as a property right, and any fraudulent imitation of it will be suppressed. Counsel for defendant was not understood as contending either that the union itself was an unlawful combination, or that the label in question was an unlawful device. He did contend, however, 29 L. R. A.

The only objection to the information is that it does not aver exclusive ownership of the label in question in the Cigar Makers' Union. Defendant was a dealer in cigars in the city of St. Louis, and on the 26th day of June sold to one David Kreyling a box of cigars, upon which there was a counterfeit label of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, which is as follows, to wit:

LOCAL.	STAMP.
SEPT. 1880. ISSUED BY AUTHORITY OF THE Cigar Makers' International Union of America. UNION-MADE CIGARS.	This Certifies, That the Cigars contained on this box have been made by a First-class Workman, a member of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, an organization opposed to inferior rat-shop, coolie, prison or filthy tenement-house workmanship. Therefore we recommend these cigars to all smokers throughout the world. All infringements upon this label will be punished according to law. G. W. PERKINS, President. C. M. I. U. of America. that the label contains a misrepresentation of fact, in stating that the cigars under it were made by 'a first-class workman.'
DEVISE.

"The argument is, that these labels are put upon each box of cigars made by a union workman, without discrimination, and that it is not possible, in the nature of things, that all the members of union are first-class workmen. But this argument goes outside of the bill, and it is the nature of a 'speaking demurrer.' There is nothing in the bill from which it may be legitimately inferred that the statement in the label was, in point of fact, untrue in any particular, and there is certainly no presumption that the statement is substantially untrue in general.

"The attempt has been made to deny that the defendants' label is a counterfeit throughout, even to the signature. It was, in fact, admitted in argument that if the plaintiffs and those they represent could be held to have a property right in the label, then the defendants' label was a clear infringement. It follows from the foregoing views that the plaintiffs, upon the face of the bill, are entitled to an injunction, and the demurrer will, therefore, be overruled."

In Maheer v. Iowa Fruit & Produce Co. (Dist. Ct. of Iowa, Polk County) as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of April, 1891, a temporary injunction was granted restraining the defendants from using labels in imitation of union labels, or from selling cigars bearing such imitations. In this case two of the defendants had purchased imi-

The label of which the one introduced in evidence was a counterfeit, was duly registered. Said union was a voluntary, unincorporated association of cigar makers, having members and lodges or branches in the various states of the Union and Canada; was not a dealer or manufacturer in cigars; nor was its object trade or commerce, but merely for the purpose of promoting the intellectual, moral and social qualities of its members. A member of the union has the right to use the label, but no other person has, except those who or firms which employ members of the union in the capacity of cigar makers or packers, who are also permitted to use the label so long as they employ members of the union. The label is not the exclusive property of citizens of the state of Missouri, but the right to use it is shared alike by all persons, members of the union, and by them who employ union men. At the time of the sale of the box of cigars, defendant stated that the label thereon was the genuine label of the union, and there was no evidence tending to show that he knew to the contrary.

The first contention is that the label of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America is not a trade-mark, and is, therefore, not entitled to protection under the law quoted. It may be conceded that the label is not what is generally understood by law writers to be a technical trade-mark, because it does not pretend or intimate that the cigars are owned, prepared or manufactured by the union as an organization, or that, as such union, it has any interest or property therein, nor by what particular firm or person the cigars to which it may be attached were manufactured; the only right conferred on members of the organization and firms which employ members of the union in the capacity of cigar makers or packers being to use the same, the object and purpose being to designate the cigars thus labeled from cigars manufactured by persons other than members of the union. The same label was held not to be a valid common-law trade-mark in McVey v. Brendel, 144 Pa. 235, 18 L. R. A. 377; Weener v. Brayton, 153 Mass. 101, 8 L. R. A. 640; and by a divided court in Cigar Makers' Protective Union No. 28 v. Conhaim, 40 Minn. 243, 8 L. R. A. 125. In Weener v. Brayton it was said: "The right to a trade-mark cannot exist as a mere abstract right, independent of and disconnected from a business. It is not property as distinct from, but only as incident to, the business. It cannot be transferred except with the business, may be sold with it, and ordinarily passes with it." The law not only protects the owner in the use of a technical trade-mark, but it protects him in the use of other insignia, by label, symbol or otherwise, which he may attach to merchandise to distinguish it from all other articles of merchandise in the market; and this protection may be had by injunctive proceedings at the instance of a member of an unincorporated association which has adopted a label, purporting to be issued by the association, to be placed on boxes of merchandise made by members of the association who have the sole right, under their articles of association, to use the same, against any person not authorized to make use thereof, and who is making fraudulent use of such label. Carson v. Ury, 39 Fed. Rep. 777, 5 L. R. A. 614, and authorities cited. If, then, the unlawful use of the label under consideration could be restrained by injunctive proceedings instituted by a member of the union against a competitor in business using the label without authority, it would seem to follow, as a sequence, that the state, by appropriate legislation, might protect the use of such label, and prohibit its use by persons other than members of the union or persons who employ tation labels and used some of them, but on protest of members of the union had destroyed the remainder. Subsequently they purchased cigars from Pennsylvania bearing what they supposed were genuine union labels, but which were in fact imitations, and the court held that neither ignorance nor good faith excused the use of such labels. See also Rulena v. Newman, infra.

In Hudson v. Bed-Rock Cigar Company (Circuit Ct. of Kansas, Dist. No. 1), as reported in Cigar Makers' Official Journal of June, 1887, a temporary injunction previously granted restraining defendants from using label of the union, was made permanent, against the contention of defendants that the union was an illegal organization and had no right to the label. The court said: "Even admitting that the union is not a legal organization, I cannot help but recognize the union label as their trade-mark; and no one has a right to counterfeit it in any way, so as to mislead the public, or to use it on any cigars not made by members of the organization."

In Meyer v. Haak (Scott County Dist. Ct., Iowa), as reported by the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of February, 1889, the court granted an injunction on the application of the plaintiffs for themselves and others. Defendants, besides claiming an estoppel which the court did not pass upon, contended that the label was simply and purely a trade-mark and that the protection allowed by law to trade-marks was confined to dealers and manufacturers; that the plaintiffs were only workmen and not owners of the cigars they made; and that the union had no goods on the market in competition with defendant; and that plaintiffs being neither manufacturers nor dealers, had no such proprietary interest in the label as to warrant interference of court. The court held the label was the property of the union, and it had the right to say to whom and under what circumstances and for what purposes it should be delivered and used.

In Perkins v. Roedel (Buffalo Super. Ct.), as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of September, 1894, an injunction was granted restraining defendants from using, or furnishing to be used by others, imitation or counterfeit labels, and from putting up and selling cigars not made by union men, in boxes bearing union trade-mark or imitation of it. Defendants were ordered to surrender for destruction all counterfeits or imitations of labels then in his possession.

In Gallbreath v. Phillipson (14th Jud. Dist. Ct., Dallas County, Texas), as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of April, 1891, an injunction was granted on application of plaintiffs for themselves and others, restraining defendant from using union labels or imitations thereof, other than upon or in connection with cigars made by members of the union.

As supporting the right of a cigar makers' union to the exclusive use of its label, a brief in Strasser v. Moonella, 23 Jones & S. 303, cites Frantz v. Miller (unreported) Dwyer, J. (Ohio Super. Ct.) of which we have found nothing elsewhere.

members thereof in the manufacture and sale of cigars. Certainly, no personal rights or principles of public policy are violated by such legislation, and this is true even though the legislature may have used the word "trade-mark" in the sense that it is ordinarily understood and used by text-writers and defined by judicial decisions.

In People v. Fisher, 50 Hun, 553, the defendant was convicted, under a statute of the state of New York, of counterfeiting and imitating a trade-mark, and affixing the same to an article of merchandise in violation of the statute. The trade-mark was devised by the Cigar Makers' International Union of America, and is the same one involved in this controversy. In that case it was held "that the members of the organization might lawfully devise, as they had done, a trade-mark label to designate the products of their labor, and that a person counterfeiting and imitating such trade-mark, and affixing the same to an article of merchandise, not the product of the labor of members of the union, was properly convicted of the offense of counterfeiting and imitating a trade-mark." In the course of the opinion it is said: "The only recognized indication of a trade-mark is the source, origin, or ownership of the article of merchandise on which it is placed. Caswell v. Davis, 58 N. Y. 223, 17 Am. Rep. 233. This means that the mark is calculated to distinguish the articles which bear it from those of other makers or vendors. It need not indicate any particular person as maker, manufacturer or vendor, or give the name or address of either. When the mark has become recognized by purchasers as a distinctive designation of a particular maker, manufacturer or seller of a certain quality of goods, it will be sufficient indication of the origin or ownership, within the rule requisite to its protection as such, although purchasers may not, from the works or otherwise, be able to tell who is the particular maker or seller of the article. Godillot v.

It also appears from the report in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of March, 1891, that injunctions were granted in Martin v. Reinhardt, Michigan (Grand Rapids Super. Ct.), and Wels v. Gunst (Circuit Ct. Multnomah County, Oregon) restraining use of union label or imitations thereof, but the report is only a memorandum of the fact of the decision.

In Strauss v. Scheinman (Circuit Ct. Chancery, Wayne County, Ohio), as reported in Cigar Makers' Official Journal of June, 1895, an injunction was granted on bill of complaint taken as confessed by defendant and upon proof of complaint taken in open court, enjoining use by defendant in any way of union label on cigars manufactured by him.

An injunction in favor of the treasurer of the International Union was also sustained in the case of Stirmel v. Berriman (Circuit Ct. of Cook County, Ill.), and another in favor of Gaddes and all members of the Pawtucket, R. I., Union v. Waterhouse, a dealer in cigars, for using a counterfeit label. These decisions are announced in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of November, 1896.

Another kindred decision announced in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of February, 1898, is that of an injunction against Samuel Poska a dealer in Chinese made cigars, granted in favor of the Sacramento Cigar Makers' Union to compel him to remove a sign displaying the words: "First International Union Shop of Sacramento" "only union men employed," and bearing a facsimile of the stamp of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America. The court required him to refrain "from exhibiting or causing to be exhibited, the stamp or label above described, or any facsimile thereof, in any store or public place used as a cigar store, and used by or under the control of defendant, without first obtaining the permission of said union to exhibit it."

II. Contents of label.

In McVey v. Brendel, 13 L. R. A. 377, 144 Pa. 236, another point decided was that the clause in the label declaring that the organization was opposed to inferior, rat shop, coolie, prison, or filthy tenement house workmanship, showed a purpose to do harm to non-union men and would prevent equity from protecting the label.

A different view of this feature of the case was taken in Cohn v. People, 23 L. R. A. 821, 149 Ill. 486, which disapproved McVey v. Brendel, supra, on this point and regarded this clause in the label as mere assurance to customers that the cigars bearing that label were not the product of such filthy establishments, and not as saying in effect that all non-union cigars belonged to the classes described.

To similar effect it is said in State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 197, in respect to this clause in the label and the construction put upon it by McVey v. Brendel, "we do not think, however, that the language is fairly susceptible of the construction put upon it,—that it is an open attack on the products of all other laborers and a characterization of their products as unfit for use . . . to construe this language by innuendo, as claimed by appellee, is to hold every intendment against the association, and we see no reason for doing this in favor of those who it is admitted have no moral rights to use the label."

So in Strasser v. Moonella, 28 Jones & S. 197, where such label was invoked, the court refused to deny an injunction on the ground that the object of the union was illegal or against public policy, but without discussing that clause which was regarded as objectionable in McVey v. Brendel.

Likewise disapproving of McVey v. Brendel, supra, on this ground and agreeing with Cohn v. People, is the common pleas decision in Cigar Makers' Protective Union v. Lindner, 3 Ohio Dec. 244, 2 Ohio N. P. 115, where it is said "the label announces the organization to be opposed to inferior goods of certain classes, classes known to the trade as inferior. This is essentially its position if it favors superior goods. This should be its position. . . . The statement that the organization is opposed to inferior, rat shop, coolie, prison, and filthy tenement house workmanship is the statement of a policy, a policy that we think lawful."

III. Effect of statutes.

In a considerable number of states, statutes similar to the Missouri Act upheld in the above case have been enacted. And in several states these statutes have now been before the courts. In Cohn v. People, 23 L. R. A. 821, 149 Ill. 486, such a statute giving the right to a trade-mark in a label adopted by "any person, association or union of workmen" is held constitutional, denying that it is a local or special law granting special privileges, immunities or franchises, since it is not limited to associations of any particular class of persons. The case further decides that the title of the Act to protect associations, unions, etc., in their labels, trade-marks and forms of advertising, is sufficient to uphold a provision in the Act for the punishment of those who counterfeited such trade-

Harris, 81 N. Y. 263; Insurance Oil Tank Co. v. Scott, 33 La. Ann. 946, 39 Am. Rep. 286. Abstractly and apart from its application and use, a trade-mark has no recognized ownership. Its value is in its employment in marking the goods upon which it is placed. This gives it the character of property. It is, then, a symbol of reputation or goodwill. Derringer v. Plats, 29 Cal. 293, 87 Am. Dec. 170; Bradley v. Norton, 33 Conn. 157, 87 Am. Dec. 200." In Cohn v. People, 23 L. R. A. 621, 149 Ill. 486, defendant was convicted under the statute of Illinois for using on boxes of cigars sold by him a counterfeit of the label of the "Cigar Makers' International Union of America;" and it was held that punishment of imitators or counterfeiters of trade-marks was properly provided for under the laws of that state under which the conviction was had. See, also, State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167.

The question then recurs, Was the defendant guilty of a misdemeanor, under the statute, if he knowingly placed a counterfeit label of the Cigar Makers' International Union of America on the box of cigars sold by him to the witness Kreyling? In a recent decision by the St. Louis court of appeals in the case of State v. Berlinghoeiser (not yet reported) it was held that the label in question was not protected by the Act of 1893, and that a conviction thereunder for knowingly placing a counterfeit of the label upon a box of cigars, and then selling the cigars, could not be upheld. The decision is predicated upon the fact that, prior to 1893, the statute was designed alone for the protection of foreign and domestic trade-marks, and that nothing was added thereto by the repeal of certain sections and the enactment in lieu thereof of sections 1 and 4, supra; in other words, that the law was not so amended as to include a label like the one in question. Prior to that time, the statute law was only intended for the protection of foreign and domestic trade-marks. State v. Gibbs, 56 Mo.

marks. This case was one of a prosecution for violating the statute.

In Ohio, the Act of March 30, 1892, likewise provided that unions or associations of workmen might adopt a label, mark, name, brand or device for the products of the labor of its members, which label might be registered and protected by injunction in a suit by the union or association. In Cigar Makers' Protective Union v. Lindner, 8 Ohio Dec. 24, 3 Ohio N. P. 114, suit for an injunction was brought by an unincorporated association of cigar makers which had adopted a label for cigars made by its members and complied with the requirements by registration. The court without discussing the constitutionality of the statute enforces it by granting an injunction.

In Coyle v. Haight (Ohio, Stark C. P.) as reported in the Cigar Makers' Official Journal of September, 1890, the action was brought by the plaintiffs for themselves and other members of the union against the defendant for the use of close imitations of the union label. The defendants demurred. It was contended by defendants that the label was not a legal trade-mark, and that, if it was, the plaintiffs had no proprietary interest in the property. That neither the international nor local unions were engaged in manufacture or trade, or formed for that purpose, and that the members of the unions were not engaged in business together but that their business interests were distinct and separate. They also claimed that "the right to adopt a trade-mark, label, or device does not exist in laborers and employees, but in the manufacturers." The court said: "Is not the laborer as justly entitled to the protection of his skill, as the manufacturer to the protection of his wares? Has not the laborer as much interest in his labor, in its protection, in getting the best possible price for the articles he manufactures?" The court states that this matter has been set at rest by Ohio Laws, vol. 87, p. 141, granting such rights to such organizations.

The case of People v. Fisher, 50 Hun, 553, was a case of a prosecution under N. Y. Penal Code, § 364, making it a misdemeanor to counterfeit or imitate a trade-mark, or affix a trade-mark known to be false or counterfeit to any article of merchandise. The contention of the defendant was that the label of the cigar makers union could not be treated as a trade-mark because of the lack of any proprietary right in its relation to the merchandise upon which it was affixed in respect either to the workmanship or ownership of such merchandise, and that neither the maker, owner or seller was indicated by the 29 L. R. A., label. But the court held that the Cigar Makers' International Union might have a trade-mark label entitled to protection, and that this label had features which might properly characterize it as a trade-mark as it purported to be issued by the Cigar Makers' International Union of America and was subscribed by the name and title of the person described as its president and, when issued for use, had upon it the stamp of the local union. See further quotation from this case in the main case of STATE V. BISHOP.

The penalty under New York Laws of 1893, chap. 219, for using a counterfeit label on goods, was recovered in Bulena v. Newman, 10 Misc. 400, in an action by members of a local branch of the Cigar Makers' International Union from the seller of a box of cigars with a counterfeit label thereon, although he believed the label to be genuine. The union label had been adopted pursuant to the Act of New York, Laws of 1893, chap. 385, which provides for the adoption and protection of trade union labels.

In State v. Hagen, 6 Ind. App. 167, an indictment under the Indiana Act of 1891, p. 317, for unauthorized use of the union label on cigars was not sustained because the statute giving the right to the exclusive use of trade-marks, labels, etc., to any firm, person, corporation or voluntary association, expressly limited this right to "citizens of the state" who were also entitled to the exclusive use of the label. This statute did not, therefore, by its terms cover the case of a label adopted by the International Cigar Makers' Union, since the exclusive use of that label did not belong to citizens of the state. As to the propriety of such a statute the court says: "The moral and equitable right of such a union to such protection as is here claimed seems to have been very generally conceded and, in recognition of this right, laws have been passed in numerous states to accomplish the results." The court regarded the law as defective but said the remedy rested with the supreme legislative body of the state and not with the judiciary.

The case of STATE V. BISHOP, like all the other cases in which these statutes have been construed, sustains the validity of such legislation. In a considerable number of states, similar laws have been enacted but not yet passed upon or brought into question before the courts.

But with the courts thus far agreed in upholding such statutes, it seems practically certain that trade unions are to be generally protected in their trade-marks or labels.

R. A. R.

188. While all statutes pertaining to crimes and their punishments should be strictly construed, and nothing left to intendment, they should not be so construed as to thwart the evident will and intention of those who enacted them, when that intention is plainly and fairly deducible from the law itself. When that is done in this case, we can but conclude that the purpose and intent of the legislature was to amend the law so as to protect, and that it does protect, labels as trade-marks when adopted by associations or unions of workmen to make known and distinguish goods, wares and merchandise manufactured or prepared by them from those manufactured or prepared by other persons, unions or associations. Wherever the law was amended, it was so as to include "association or union of workmen," which is very persuasive, at least, that the purpose was to protect them in any label, advertisement or symbol that they might adopt as their trade-mark. Moreover, under the Law of 1889, a trade-mark was required to be recorded in the office of the recorder of deeds of the county where the goods, wares and merchandise were manufactured; while, by the Act of 1898, it is required to be recorded in the office of secretary of state, whose certificate is made proof of the adoption of such label, trade-mark or form of advertisement, and of the right of such association or union of workmen to adopt the same. The law, as amended, expressly conferred upon any association or union of workmen a right that they did not possess under the statute before; that is, the right to adopt as a trade-mark a label such as the one in question. Our conclusion is that the act not only embraces technical trade-marks, but that it includes any label, symbol, or advertisement which may be or has been adopted by any "association or union of workmen" as a trade-mark, in accordance with its provisions; hence our disapproval of the case last cited.

It is next contended that the Act of 1893 is unconstitutional, is class legislation, and in violation of section 53, article 4, of the State Constitution, which inhibits the legislature from "granting to any corporation, association or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege or immunity." We are unable to see the force of this contention. It is well-settled law, in this state at least, that a statute relating to persons or things as a class is a general law. State v. Herrmann, 75 Mo. 340; State v. Tolls, 71 Mo. 645; Lynch v. Murphy, 119 Mo. 168. The law does not relate to particular persons or things of a class, but embraces within its provisions all associations or unions of workmen, and clearly does not fall within the inhibition of the constitution. Cohn v. People, supra.

A further contention is that the information is insufficient because it fails to aver exclusive ownership of the label in question in the organization known as the Cigar Makers' International Union of America. No such averment seems to be required under the law, which makes it a misdemeanor for any person, persons, association or union of workmen or body corporate or politic, to vend or keep for sale any goods, wares, merchandise, compounds, or preparations upon which or in connection with which, any forged, imitation, or counterfeit label shall be placed, affixed, or used, and intended to represent the said goods, wares, and merchandise as the genuine goods, wares, implements and merchandise of any other person or association or union of workmen. The information is in the language of the statute and is well enough.

A final contention is that the state failed to prove guilty knowledge upon the part of the defendant; that is, that, at the time he sold the box of cigars containing a counterfeit label, he knew the label to be counterfeit. This contention is not without merit. The record before us is barren of proof as to guilty knowledge on the part of defendant, in the absence of which he was not guilty of any offense under the law, which expressly provides that the label must have been used knowing it to be an imitation or counterfeit.

For failure of proof in this regard, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded.

All concur.

MINNESOTA SUPREME COURT.

Annie FUNK, Admx., etc., of Henry Funk,
Deceased, Rept.,

ST. PAUL CITY R. CO., Appt.

(.....Minn.....)

*1. Chapter 13 General Laws 1887, provides that every railroad corpora-

*Headnotes by BUCK, J.

NOTE.—The decision that the meaning of the word "railroad" in a statute must be restricted to railroads of the ordinary kind and exclusive of street railways is in agreement with that in Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Simon (Or.) 10 L. R. A. 251. See, also, other cases cited by counsel in the report of the above case.

29 L. R. A.

tion owning and operating a railroad in this state, shall be liable for damages sustained by an agent or servant by reason of the negligence of any other agent or servant. Held, that this law is not applicable to a street railway corporation, although its line is operated by cable.

2. Where the language of a statute is in any manner obscure or of doubtful meaning, we may recur to the history of the time when it was enacted, and seek in that history for the mischief and defect which the statute was intended to remedy; and when the words of a statute are not explicit, the intention is to be collected from the context, from the occasion and necessity of the law, from the mischief felt, and the object and remedy in view.

3. Where there are several material issues tried and the verdict is a general one, it cannot be upheld if the trial court gave the jury an erroneous charge upon any one of the issues.

(June 27, 1895.)

APPEAL by defendant from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County overruling a motion for a new trial after verdict in favor of plaintiff in an action to recover damages for the killing of plaintiff's intestate by negligence of defendant's employes. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Munn, Boyesen & Thygeson, for appellant:

Chapter 13 of the Laws of 1887 should receive a strict construction and should not be held to apply to a case unless it clearly falls within the peculiar hazards and dangers of railroadings.

Lavallee v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. 40 Minn. 249; Johnson v. St. Paul & D. R. Co. 8 L. R. A. 419, 43 Minn. 222.

The word "railroad" as used in the Fellow Servant Law, chap. 18 of the Laws of 1887, does not mean "street railway."

Carl v. Stillwater Street R. & Transfer Co. 38 Minn. 373, 41 Am. Rep. 290; Newell v. Minneapolis, L. & M. R. Co. 35 Minn. 112, 59 Am. Rep. 308; Williams v. City Electric Street R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 556; Front Street Cable R. Co. v. Johnson, 11 L. R. A. 698, 2 Wash. 112; Thompson-Houston Electric Co. v. Simon, 10 L. R. A. 251, 20 Or. 60; Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City R. Co. 3 Duv. 178; Detroit v. Detroit City R. Co. 56 Fed. Rep. 867; Byrne v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. 24 L. R. A. 693, 61 Fed. Rep. 605; Freiday v. Sioux City Rapid Transit Co. (Iowa) 26 L. R. A. 246; Sears v. Marshalltown Street R. Co. 65 Iowa, 742.

Statutes which are not inconsistent with one another, which relate to the same subject-matter, are in pari materia and should be considered together and effect given to them all, although they contain no reference to one another and were passed at different times.

23 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 811.

In construing a given act the meaning of words or terms as used therein may be gathered from the construction of other acts in pari materia, in which such words or terms were also used.

23 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 316; Reiche v. Smythe, 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 163, 20 L. ed. 566.

Where two acts are in pari materia, a word used in a certain sense in the first act will be presumed to have been used in the same sense in the subsequent one, unless there be something in the context or the nature of things that a different meaning is intended.

County Seat of Linn County, 15 Kan. 379.

In order to understand the subject-matter, scope and object of an enactment of the legislature, the interpreter must ascertain what is the mischief or defect for which the prior law had not provided.

23 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 336, par. 1; Taylor v. Taylor, 10 Minn. 107; Green v. Graves, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 351; People v. Columbia County Supra. 43 N. Y. 180; United States v. Union Pac. R. Co. 91 U. S. 72, 23 L. ed. 224.

29 L. R. A.

Messrs. Willrich & Lambert for respondent.

Buck, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The material and difficult question for us to determine is whether chapter 13 of the General Laws of 1887, in regard to damages arising by reason of a fellow servant, is applicable to the case under consideration. That law reads as follows: "Every railroad corporation owning or operating a railroad in this state shall be liable for all damages sustained by any agent or servant thereof by reason of the negligence of any other agent or servant thereof, without contributory negligence on his part, when sustained in this state."

The defendant is the St. Paul City Railway Company, and in the complaint it is described as the Seventh Street Cable Line in the city of St. Paul, which said line of cable railway extends from Wabasha street eastward to a point on Dayton's bluff, in said city, and that the cars and grip-cars running thereon are operated by means of a cable, which cable runs in a conduit underneath the tracks of the car line. It is also alleged that the plaintiff's intestate was a plasterer by trade and employed by the defendant to plaster the inner walls of the conduit through which the cable runs, and that, while so engaged, he was killed, wholly through the negligence of the defendant. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $2,500, and the defendant appealed. The defendant is a street railway corporation, but whether it is included in the term "railroad" as used in the Law of 1887 is a debatable question. The common understanding of the word "railroad" is that it is a graded road or way on which rails of iron or steel are laid for the wheels of the cars to run upon, carrying heavy loads usually propelled by steam. Railroads, in a rude form, were in use as early as 1676, but it was not until 1829 when successful experiments in the use of locomotives were made, that they first began to be extensively constructed, and it is only within recent years that another class of railroads, namely, those laid down in the streets of towns and cities, have become very numerous.

Judge Robertson, in Louisville & P. R. Co. v. Louisville City R. Co. 2 Duv. 175, says "A railroad is for the use of the universal public in the transportation of all persons, baggage and other freight. A street railway is dedicated for the more limited use of the local public for the more transient transportation of persons only within the limits of the city. In a more technical sense, therefore, a street railway is not a railroad. A 'railroad' and a 'street railroad' or way are in both their technical and popular import as distinct and different things as a road and a street or as a bridge and a railroad bridge, and it has been authoritatively adjudged that the simple term "bridge" means a viaduct in a road dedicated to the common use, and that the qualified phrase 'railroad bridge' means a viaduct constructed for the use of railroad transportation." This decision was made in 1865 and involved the construction to be given to a provision in a railroad charter which provided that no other railroad should be constructed between two named points in a city, the court holding that such provision did not prohibit the construction of a street railway between the points named.

Perhaps it may be conceded that, technically speaking, the term "railroad" would include a street railway so far as its road-bed is made of iron or steel rails for wheels of cars to run upon, but where there is doubt about the true meaning of the word or term used in the law, the legislative intent is not to be determined from that particular expression, but from the general legislation upon the same subject-matter. It is claimed by appellant's counsel, and not denied by the counsel for the respondent, and such we believe the fact to be, that on February 24, 1887, when the general law of that year was passed, there were no cable or electric street railways in existence in this state. If so, what was the legislative intent in using the word "railroad" in the Law of 1887, to be deduced from the whole or from part of the statute taken together, upon the subject of railroads?

When the words of a statute are not explicit, the intention is to be collected from the context, from the occasion and necessity of the law, from the mischief felt and the object and remedy in view.

Potter's Dwar. Stat. 195, note 13.

What was the mischief felt which resulted in the passage of this law? Was it a danger known or one unknown? Was it a danger then felt or realized, or one that might possibly arise in the future? We must assume that it was dealing with and acting upon existing facts within its knowledge.

Of course, if the thing was so entirely free from ambiguity and broad enough to include unknown things which might spring into existence in the future, they would be deemed to come within and be subject to the evident meaning of the terms used. Following this line of thought, we quote the case of Proprietors of Bridges over Rivers Passaic & Hackensack v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co. 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 116, 17 L. ed. 571, in which Mr. Justice Miller uses this language: "It does not follow that when a newly invented or discovered thing is called by some familiar word which comes nearest to expressing the new idea, that the thing so styled is really the thing formerly meant by the familiar word."

The track on which the steam cars now transport the traveler or his property is called a road, sometimes, perhaps generally, a railroad. The term 'road' is applied to it, no doubt, because, in some sense, it is used for the same purpose that roads had been used. But until the thing was made and seen, no imagination, even the most fertile, could have pictured it, from any previous use of the word 'road.' So we call the enclosure in which passengers travel on a railroad, a coach; but it is more like a house than a coach, and is less like a coach than are several other vehicles which are rarely, if ever, called coaches. It does not, therefore, follow, that when a word was used in a statute or a contract seventy years since that it must be held to include everything to which the same word is applied at the present day."

And where the language of a statute is in any manner obscure or of doubtful meaning, we may recur to the history of the time when it was enacted and seek in that history for the mischief and defect which the statute was intending to remedy. In the case of United States v. Union Pac. R. Co. 91 U. S. 73, 23 L. ed. 224, the court said: "Courts, in construing statutes, may, with propriety, recur to the history of the times when it was passed; and this is frequently necessary in order to ascertain the reason as well as the meaning of the particular provision in it." See also Smith v. Townsend, 148 U. S. 490, 37 L. ed. 533; Aldridge v. Williams, 44 U. S. 3 How. 24, 11 L. ed. 476; Preston v. Brouder, 14 U. S. 1 Wheat. 120, 4 L. ed. 51.

But if we assume that, at the time of the passage of the Law of 1887, the history of street-cars was generally known and their use, method of operation and dangers therefrom well understood, can it be fairly and reasonably held that it was a legislative intent to apply the term "railroad" to street-railways? It is a matter of common knowledge that street-cars operated by cable or electricity are more readily managed than those operated by steam, where long passenger and freight trains, with their weight and momentum, are not so easily controlled. A street-car is generally run separately, rarely with more than two or three coupled together, and there is but little danger of collision. They do not run so rapidly, their movements are easily and quickly checked, and the road-beds are constructed upon level or graded streets, without deep cuts, and generally lighted. Nor do street railways carry freight. The greatest railroad hazard and danger of personal injury to railroad employes arise from operating their trains. There is no such danger in operating street railways, whatever may be the motive power, because they do not carry freight. Especially is the danger in coupling their cars entirely absent. They get their business from the street usually, in populous cities, where passenger travel is the only business carried on. Street-cars do not usually run beyond the city limits and none beyond the state boundary. The words in the Law of 1887 make a railroad corporation operating the railroad in this state liable for damages "when sustained within this state." They undoubtedly aim at the railroads operated by steam where their lines extended beyond the jurisdiction of the state. It is true these restrictive words would include railroads operated by steam wholly within the state, but they were inserted to prevent the bringing of suit where the injury was sustained upon railroads out of this state, but where the lines of the same railroad came within the boundary of our own state. Hence the words "when sustained within this state" evidently referred to railroads operated by locomotives, and it was such railroads the legislature had in contemplation when this term was used. Through our territorial and state legislation, the term "railroad" has acquired a definite and well-understood meaning, and it has never been understood to include street railroads. It is usually applied to the ordinary steam railroad of commerce, and when there has been legislation in regard to street railways they have been so designated.

In Elliott on Roads and Streets it is said that "the distinctive and essential feature of a street railway, considered in relation to other roads, is that it is a railway for the transportation of passengers and not of freight. As we employ the term and desire it to be understood, it excuses the idea of the carriage of freight, for we do not believe that a railroad over which heavily laden freight trains are drawn can be considered a street railway." We consider the words "railroad" and "railway" as synonymous, and that they are generally used interchangeably, as this court has heretofore decided in State v. Brin, 80 Minn. 522.

If, in the future, street railways shall be used for carrying freight, as they undoubtedly will be, with all of its attendant hazards and dangers, it will be within the province and discretion of the legislature to make the Law of 1887 applicable to street railways, or if, before that time, it considers the application of that law to the present method of operating street railways a necessary, wise and judicious one, it can do so by such specific and definite terms that there can be no need of construction or interpretation.

If we were to hold that the term "railroad," in the Law of 1887, applied to street railways because the word is broad enough to cover all roads constructed of iron or steel rails for wheels of cars to pass upon, we see no reason why it should not be so construed whenever found in the other legislation of this state. This would require street railways to build depots and waiting rooms for passengers, for there is just as much reason to make the word "railroad" applicable in this respect as to personal injury cases. This is but one of the very many instances where, by the use of the word "railroad," the company is required to perform certain duties to which it cannot reasonably be said that the meaning of such words includes street railways. To so construe in such instances would lead to confusion and be a palpable violation of the legislative intent.

The respondent claims that there is sufficient evidence to justify the finding of the jury without reference to the Fellow Servant Act of 1887. The verdict was a general one, and this court cannot say whether the jury based its finding upon the ground that the death of Henry Funk was caused by the negligence of a fellow servant or not. It may be that the jury founded their verdict upon the erroneous instruction of the court that the defendant would be liable for the negligence of a fellow servant under the Law of 1887.

There were several issues tried, and where there was such an erroneous instruction in regard to a vital one, it cannot be disregarded by this court upon the ground that possibly the jury might have founded their verdict upon some other issue. As to whether the defendant was guilty of negligence in operating its railroads, we express no opinion. That issue can be determined in a new trial, which must be granted, by reason of the erroneous ruling of the court below upon the question we have discussed.

The order appealed from is reversed.

Mitchell, J. :

In concurring in the foregoing opinion, my only excuse for adding anything is the importance of the question involved. The question is wholly one of legislative intent. Did the legislature intend to include street railroads within the provision of the Act? In its original literal sense the word "railroad" means a road with rails upon it upon which wheels of carriages or vehicles run. In this sense it would, of course, include street railroads. But according to the common, popular usage, the word "railroad," without any qualifying or explanatory prefix, is generally understood as referring exclusively to ordinary commercial railroads used for the transportation of both passengers and freight, and whenever street railroads are referred to, the word "street" is prefixed. This is also a general legislative use of the words. In all legislation of this state I have found no Act (unless this be an exception) in which the word "railroad" or "railway," standing alone, was not evidently intended to be applied exclusively to ordinary commercial railroads. Neither have I found an Act (unless this be an exception) which has reference to street railroads in which the word "street" was not prefixed. I do not claim that there might not be a law enacted where it would be evident, from its subject-matter and object, that the word "railroads" was intended to include street railroads. But, in my opinion, this is clearly not such a case. The occasion for enacting this law was the peculiar risks incident to the operation of railroads, and especially those resulting from negligence of fellow servants. The remedy sought to be obtained was better protection to railroad employes from those peculiar hazards. The peculiar conditions which we consider to require peculiar legislation for the protection of employes engaged in the operation of railroads are too familiar to require repetition. Generally, it may be stated that the most cogent ones were the high rate of speed at which trains were run, the great momentum acquired by long and heavy trains where an accident to one car is liable to wreck the entire train, the peculiar dangers incident to the operation of freight trains, that the roads are often built upon an embankment or trestle where an accident would be peculiarly dangerous, the danger of collisions owing to the fact that numerous trains are operated over the same tracks, the vast number of employes of different grades engaged in different lines of work, many of whom are necessarily personally unknown to the others. The mere fact that steam was used as a motive power was not, in itself, either the occasion or the justification for the enactment of the law established for railroad companies, and subjecting them to liability for the negligence of its servants. If one of these com panies were to substitute electricity for steam as its motive power, it would be still subject to the provisions of the Act. In the case of street railroads, whatever be the motive power, the peculiar conditions above referred to either do not exist at all or, at most, only in a very modified degree. This is a fact of such common knowledge that it need not be more than stated. The question is not whether the legislature had the power to place street railroads in the same class with ordinary commercial railroads, but whether they have, in fact, done so. The difference in conditions affecting the risks to which employes are exposed is sufficiently substantial to authorize the legislature to make the law applicable to ordinary commercial railroads alone, and furnishes, in my judgment, ample reason for concluding that they so intended, and that they used the word "railroad" in its ordinary and peculiar sense, and in the sense in which they themselves had generally used it in other statutes. It may be said that in the case of some other line of railroad exceptionally situated, the conditions involving dangers to employes might be exactly similar, both in kind and degree, to those existing on some lines of street railway. It is difficult to conceive of such a case. But it is sufficient answer to the suggestion that it simply shows that a classification of this sort, like everything else human, cannot be wholly perfect, and that, in a case which is marked by substantial characteristics in varying degrees, it will often happen that those of one member may scarcely differ at all from those of some members of another class. But the line must be drawn; and if the difference in conditions generally existing between ordinary commercial railroads and street railroads is substantial, that is all that constitutional rules require as a basis of classification. Neither can I see any middle ground between excluding all street railways from the operation of the Act, and including them, that would be maintainable on principle or capable of convenient practicable application.

CENTRAL TRUST CO. of New York,

*Recept.,
v.*

John J. MORAN et al., Appts.

(56 Minn. 188.)

*1. Under Gen. Laws 1868, chap. 56, §§ 1-3 (Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 34, §§ 71-73) a railroad, with its rolling stock, and personal property properly belonging to the road and appertaining thereto, is in favor of mortgagees under mortgages or deeds of trust executed and re-

*Headnotes by GILFILLAN, CH. J.

NOTE.—In respect to the sale of railroad property under execution, see also Stewart v. Wheeling & L. E. R. Co. (Ohio) post, p. 438, and the note to Brady v. Johnson (Md.) 20 L. R. A. 737.

As to the power of equity to grant mandatory injunctions, see note to Moundsville v. Ohio River R. Co. (W. Va.) 20 L. R. A. 161.

29 L. R. A.

corded pursuant to those sections, one property, the different items of which cannot, as to such mortgagees, be levied on separately. The remedy of creditors, in such a case, against the road, its rolling stock and appertaining personal property, must be against it as an entirety, and not against its several parts.

2. In such a case the mortgagees may have injunction to restrain a levy on a part of the property.

3. Courts may, in proper cases, grant injunctions in substance mandatory; that is, requiring some act to be done.

4. A court may, under Gen. Stat. 1878, chap. 66, title 11, grant in a proper case, a temporary injunction, mandatory in substance; but it ought not to be done, except under peculiar circumstances, and where it is clear the plaintiff will have a final decree, and the court can impose such conditions that the defendant shall sustain no detriment.

5. Execution on a judgment of the state court issued and was levied by the sheriff. Afterwards, the judgment was removed by writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States, and a stay bond was executed. Held, that an action, the purpose of which is, in effect, to vacate the levy, does not interfere with the jurisdiction of the Federal court.

(Collins and Buck, JJ. dissent.)

(January 12, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendants from an order of the District Court for Ramsey County awarding an injunction to restrain the enforcement of a judgment recovered against the Eastern Railway Company, on whose property plaintiff held the mortgage. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. O. W. Baldwin and J. M. Martin for appellant.

Messrs. Young & Lightner for respondent.

GILFILLAN, CH. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The first and most important question in the case is whether, as against the mortgagees in a railroad mortgage or deed of trust covering the railroad, its rolling stock, and personal property, an execution can be levied on an item of the rolling stock, say a locomotive, and the property sold to satisfy the execution. In the absence of any statute on the subject, there has been much diversity of decision, some courts (notably, the Supreme Court of the United States) basing their decisions that the levy cannot be made on the proposition that the rolling stock is part of the realty,—fixtures, as it were; others, of which Susquehanna Canal Co. v. Bonham, 9 Watts & S. 27, 42 Am. Dec. 315, is an instance, arriving at the same result upon considerations of public policy, because the road and its appurtenances are necessary to the exercise of the franchises granted by the state; and others holding that the levy can be made, the same as upon the personal property of any other owner. It is difficult to conceive of rolling stock, which one day may be running on the road of its owner, and the next on some other road, perhaps hundreds of miles away, as real estate or as fixtures, though, no doubt, the legislature may clothe it with some of the legal attributes of that kind of property; and while considerations of public policy may be attributed to the legislature, as a reason for its acts, we do not think they would justify a court in applying to the kind of property in question any other than the rules applied to other property, real or personal, at common law. We shall assume, therefore, that, but for the statute, the rolling stock covered by a railroad mortgage might be levied on as other mortgaged personal property may be.

The statute applicable to the case is Gen. Laws, 1868, chap. 56, §§ 1-8; the same being sections 71-73, chap. 84, Gen. Stat. 1878. The first section authorizes railroad companies to mortgage or execute deeds of trust of the whole or any part of their property and franchises to secure money borrowed by them for the construction and equipment of their roads. The second section authorizes to be included in such mortgages or deeds of trust property, both real and personal, to be afterwards acquired. The last section has a more direct bearing on the question involved, and reads: "Said mortgages or deeds of trust shall be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of each county through which the road mortgaged or deeded may run, or wherever it may hold lands, and shall be notice to all the world of the rights of all parties under the same; and for this purpose and to secure the right of mortgagees or parties under deeds of trust so executed and recorded, the rolling stock and personal property of the company properly belonging to the road and appertaining thereto, shall be deemed a part of the road, and said mortgages and deeds so recorded shall have the same effect, both as to notice and otherwise, as to the personal, as to the real estate, covered by them. In determining the effect of this Act, it is proper to refer to the facts, for they are part of the history of the state, that it was passed in the infancy of railroad construction in the state, when it was the state's public policy to encourage and promote such construction, and when it was known—indeed, was as certain as a mathematical demonstration—that such construction could be done only by railroad companies borrowing money for the purpose on mortgages of their roads and property. These considerations are to be borne in mind as probable reasons influencing the legislature in those parts of the Act apparently intended to strengthen the security of the mortgages. That the section above quoted means something more than merely to provide what shall be notice of the mortgagees' rights, is evident. Had that been the only purpose, the section would have ended at the semicolon. The remainder would have been superfluous. The provision that the rolling stock and personal property properly belonging to the road, and appertaining thereto, shall be deemed a part of the road, has no tendency to give notice of the rights of mortgagees; and it must have been inserted for the purpose specified in it, to wit, "to secure the right of mortgagees or parties interested under deeds of trust." How could it secure, or tend to secure, their rights, except by placing that property on a different footing from other personal property on which there is a chattel mortgage? If that property remains just as though that provision were not in the Act, and on the same footing with personal property generally, and subject to the same incidents and liabilities, then the provision does not add anything to the security, and is nugatory. Assuming, as we have done, that by the rule of the common law the movable property of a railroad company is like the personal property of any other person, and that any piece of it may, by levy and sale, be separated from the other property of the company, we can conceive of no other purpose of a provision that movable property shall "be deemed a part of the road" but to change that rule, and to make the road, with its rolling stock and personal property proper and necessary for its operation, one property, like the different parts constituting one machine, and inseverable, so far as the rights of mortgagees are concerned. Giving this meaning to the provision, it adds to the mortgagees' security. Giving it any other, it does not. It needs no argument to show that the mortgagees' security would be, so far as the movable property is concerned, precarious, if each item of it is liable to be levied on, sold, and separated from the road to which it appertains. To prevent this was the purpose of the clause making the property part of the road.

The diversity in decisions we have referred to turned on the proposition that the personal property is, or that it is not, part of the road; those courts which hold it to be part of the road, either as part of the realty, or as fixtures or appendages, all agreeing that it cannot be separately levied on, and only those holding it not part of the road deciding that it may be. As it is not to be supposed that the legislature intended, in passing the Act referred to, to deny adequate remedies to unsecured creditors of railroad companies, whose property is under mortgage, we would hesitate to arrive at the above construction of it, even though apparently required by its terms, if we did not see that with that construction the remedies of such creditors, though affected, are not really impaired. They can still levy their execution on any real estate not part of the road, or upon any personal property not rolling stock, nor "properly belonging to the road and appertaining thereto," that is, property not properly and necessarily used in operating the road. Their remedy against the road, and what properly appertains to it, must, as to the mortgagees, be against it as an entirety, and not against the several parts of it. If their executions are returned unsatisfied, a very sharp remedy is afforded by Gen. Stat., 1878, chap. 76, and other adequate remedies are readily suggested. That these mortgagees may maintain a suit for an injunction to prevent acts tending to disperse the property, there can be no doubt. They have no adequate remedy in an action at law. As they are not entitled to the immediate possession of the property, but only to have it kept together, they cannot maintain replevin. To put them to an action for damages would be really requiring them to accept, to the extent of the damages recovered, payment of the mortgage before it is due. But a mortgagee may always, by injunction, restrain any wrongful acts, the effect of which will be to impair his security. The injunction ordered in the case was interlocutory, and to enjoin the defendants (other than the railway company) from further depriving the company of the possession or use of the property, or from interfering with the taking possession thereof by the company. It really required the defendants to do an affirmative act, to wit, allow the company to retake the property levied on. That courts of equity may issue injunctions in effect mandatory is now well settled, though they have been chary in exercising the power, so much so as to usually put the injunction in the prohibitory form. As said by the vice chancellor in Great North of England, C. & H. Junction R. Co. v. Clarence R. Co. 1 Colly. Ch. Rep. 507, on a motion for an interlocutory injunction: "That injunctions, in substance mandatory, though in form merely prohibitory, have been and may be granted by the courts, is clear. This branch of its jurisdiction is not fit to be exercised without particular caution, but certainly is one fit and necessary under certain circumstances." See also, Lane v. Newdigate, 10 Ves. Jr. 192; Greatrex v. Greatrex, 1 De G. & S. 692; Boitt v. Price, 1 Sim. 488; Broom v. New York & N. J. Teleph. Co. 42 N. J. Eq. 141; Whiteman v. Fayette Fuel-Gas Co. 189 Pa. 493,—all cases of interlocutory injunctions, mandatory in substance. Where the complaint makes a case for a final injunction, mandatory in substance, we do not see why, under Gen. Stat., 1878, chap. 66, title 11, a temporary injunction, similar in effect, may not issue, if the continuance of the state of things brought about by the defendant's alleged wrongful acts will produce injury to the plaintiff. The administration of justice would be defective, if the court could not, in a proper case, restore the status quo pending the action. The power, however, ought not to be exercised, except under peculiar circumstances, and where it is clear the plaintiff will have a final decree for a mandatory injunction, and where the court may impose such conditions upon the issuance of the writ as that the defendant shall sustain no detriment. In this case, the circumstances were such as to justify the exercise of the power. The complaint, no allegation of which was denied on the motion, shows a right to a final decree, and the court required such security from the plaintiff as to insure that defendants will suffer no harm.

There is nothing in the point that the court is interfering with the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States. The property was not in possession of its officers, nor held under its process. The sheriff, and the writ of execution issued from the state court, did not become the officer and writ of the supreme court, by the issuance of a writ of error from that court, with a stay bond upon the judgment, after the levy by the sheriff. The effect of the stay bond was to prevent further proceedings to enforce the judgment.

Order affirmed.

Collins and Buck, JJ., dissenting:

We dissent from that part of the foregoing opinion in which it is held that, as against the mortgagees in a railroad mortgage or deed of trust covering the railroad rolling stock and personal property, an execution issued upon a judgment against the company cannot be levied upon an item of the rolling stock, say a locomotive, and the interest of the debtor therein sold to satisfy said execution. This conclusion of a majority of the court is squarely and exclusively placed upon a construction of section 73, chapter 34, Gen. Stat., 1878. Said section was originally section 3, chapter 56, Gen. Laws, 1868. The sole intent and purpose of the chapter last referred to were, we think, clearly indicated by its title, which was, "An Act to authorize railroad companies to execute mortgages or deeds of trust and to provide for the recording of the same." The first section authorized the issuance and sale of bonds to obtain money with which to construct and equip the roads, and the execution of mortgages or deeds of trust upon the property or franchises of the railroad companies to secure said bonds. The second section provided that said mortgages or deeds might include and cover not only the present property of the companies, but property, both real and personal, afterwards acquired. The difference of opinion now existing between the members of this court grows out of the construction to be placed upon section 3 (sec. 73), already quoted in full in the majority opinion. The first part of this section provides that these mortgages or deeds shall be recorded in the office of the register of deeds of each county through which the road mortgaged or deeded may run, or in which it has lands. As to this class of mortgages or deeds, this part of the section was simply a change from an existing statute (Gen. Laws, 1867, chap. 58), which provided for the recording of railroad mortgages and deeds of trust in the office of the secretary of state. It fixed the place or places of record for such instruments in the offices of the register of deeds of the several counties wherein the real estate was situated, as was required in case real property was mortgaged or deeded by other corporations or by private individuals. This provision was followed in the section by this language: "And for this purpose and to secure the rights of mortgagees or parties interested under deeds of trust," rolling stock and personal property of the company properly belonging or appertaining to the road "shall be deemed a part of the road." For years prior to the enactment of this statute, and at that time, there had been, and was, much difference of opinion in the courts as to the real character of rolling stock, and whether, when the rights of mortgagees and trustees were involved, it should be regarded as part of the road,—some courts calling it "fixtures," and others "real estate,"—or should be regarded as personal property. We do not see that any part of chapter 56 covered that open question until the language now being considered was used. Had it, and that which followed, been omitted, we are quite sure that the controversy as to the character of rolling stock, and as to whether a mortgage or trust deed upon the same should be filed as a chattel mortgage, to render it valid as against subsequent mortgagees, creditors, and purchasers in good faith, might easily have arisen. In our opinion, this or similar language was essential, and was simply intended to set this question at rest. It had the effect to fix the character of rolling stock and other personal property for but one purpose,—that indicated by the title of the Act,—for the purpose of recording and placing a mortgage or trust deed thereon upon a different footing from the ordinary chattel mortgage, with respect to filing. As the majority opinion rests upon a construction of that part of the section we have just referred to, we need not consider the concluding paragraph of the section.

We observe what has been said in the main opinion concerning the precariousness of the mortgagees' security, if each item of the mortgaged movable property were liable to be levied on, sold, and separated from the road to which it appertains; and we have also noticed what has been suggested as the proper course or remedy for a creditor to pursue, in case an execution issued upon a judgment against a railroad company is returned unsatisfied. After many years' observation we are unable to recall a single instance in which mortgagees of railway property have been unable to take care of themselves, and to adequately protect their interests, whenever their rights were jeopardized or their securities impaired. A levy and sale of rolling stock, although resulting, probably, in very little to the creditor, might be annoying to the mortgagee, but it would not render the mortgage lien more precarious than would a levy and sale of a common farm wagon on which there was a mortgage. It seems to us that this point is fully answered by saying that a sale upon execution of mortgaged property does not deprive the mortgagee of his lien. Such sale may be made and is always subject to the rights of a mortgagee. Gen. Laws, 1883, chap. 60, § 1.

It is true, as urged in the majority opinion, that the judgment creditor of a corporation may have a remedy in case an execution in his favor is returned unsatisfied, under the provisions of Gen. Stat., 1878, chap. 76, § 9. He may sequester its property, and have a receiver appointed. But this section applies only to corporations organized under the laws of this state, and is, at best, a very cumbersome and protracted proceeding. It is not readily available to the ordinary creditor. Other remedies may be suggested as within reach, but we fear they will be found impracticable. That they have been found insufficient in other states is evidenced by the fact that in the year 1870 it became necessary, in the state of Illinois, to adopt constitutional amendment providing "that rolling stock and all movable property belonging to railway corporations shall be considered personal property and liable to execution and sale in the same manner as personal property of individuals, and that the legislature shall pass no laws exempting any such property from execution and sale." This same provision has since been ingrafted into the fundamental law of the states of Arkansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Texas and West Virginia.

In conclusion, we say that a statute, the purpose and scope of which are so clearly expressed in its title as the one in question,—being merely to authorize the execution of mortgages and deeds of trust, and to provide for the record thereof,—ought not to be construed, in the absence of apt words, so as to deprive a creditor of a common-law remedy to collect a judgment. The result here is that a purpose not indicated by the title to the Act, and wholly foreign to that title, is given to it. Had the legislature itself, in express language, made the exemption now read into section 8 by the court, the title would have failed to express the subject of the legislation. Certainly, there is nothing in it to intimate that the legislature designed to prohibit a seizure and sale upon execution of the interest of the railroad mortgagees in and to rolling stock and other personalty, nor was it so claimed by respondent's counsel, when presenting their case.

We think the order appealed from should be reversed.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

John S. FAIRLY, Resp't.,

v.

WAPPOO MILLS, App't.

(.....S. C.....)

1. Evidence of custom and usage is not admissible to explain or vary the terms of an express contract whether written or verbal, unambiguous in its terms, unless to show the mean-

NOTE.—For effect of failure to procure a license for business on the validity of a contract made in such business, see also note to Buckley v. Humason (11th.) 18 L. R. A. 423.

20 L. R. A.

See also 37 L. R. A. 509; 38 L. R. A. 143; 45 L. R. A. 510; 46 L. R. A. 181.

ing of certain terms used in the contract which have by well-established custom or long usage acquired a meaning different from that which they primarily bear.

2. Liability for brokerage upon a contract for the sale of a certain quantity of a commodity, "seller paying brokerage at 10 cents per ton," cannot be reduced by proof of a custom to pay brokerage only on the amount actually delivered.

3. The right of a broker to commissions on a contract, the signature of which he has procured, is not affected by the fact that, as agent for the buyer, he subsequently seeks to procure from the seller some modification of the terms of sale.

4. That a purchaser was not able to fulfill his contract so as to entitle the broker to commissions on the sale, is not shown by an allegation that an extension of time for payment after the first draft was due, was requested because the purchaser was not able to pay it "at that time."
5. The burden is on the seller to show the purchaser's inability to carry out his contract in order to avoid the payment of the broker's fees where he accepted him without any misrepresentation or suppression of knowledge by the broker as to the purchaser's financial ability.
6. The recovery of commissions by a broker is not prevented by failure to procure a license under an ordinance imposing a penalty for such failure where the object of the ordinance was simply to enforce payment of a tax.

(May 30, 1896.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court for Berkeley County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover commissions upon the sale of certain fertilizer which plaintiff had sold for defendant. Affirmed.

The plaintiff complaining of defendant alleges as follows:

"First. That the plaintiff is a broker in the city of Charleston, state of South Carolina, carrying on a brokerage business in fertilizers, phosphate rock, and similar products, and was so at the times hereinafter mentioned, and that the defendant, Wappoo Mills, was, at the times hereinafter mentioned, and now is, a corporation created by and under the laws of the state of South Carolina, and having its principal office and place of business in the county of Berkeley. Second. That the plaintiff, as such broker, sold for account of said defendant, on June, 5, 1890, 2,000 tons dissolved bone to the Caddo Fertilizer Company, the brokerage on which, at the accustomed rate agreed upon, was $200, and was to be paid by the defendant. That the plaintiff has received from the defendant $68 on account of said brokerage, but the balance of $132 is still due and unpaid, although demanded of the defendant. All of which will more fully appear on reference to the broker's memorandum of sale, bill, and account heretofore rendered defendant, and copies of which are hereto annexed, as Exhibits A, B, C, and made part of this complaint. Wherefore, the plaintiff demands judgment against the defendant in the sum of $132 and costs."

Exhibit A, referred to in the complaint, is as follows: "Charleston, S. C., June 5th, 1890. Sold for account of Wappoo Mills, of Charleston, S. C., to the Caddo Fertilizer Co., of Shreveport, La. (2,000) two thousand tons dissolved bone, guaranteed minimum analysis (134) thirteen and one-half per centum available phosphoric acid, in bulk, f. o. b. cars here, at (\$9.85) nine and $\frac{17}{100}$ dollars per ton of 2,000 lbs. Terms: Sight draft against B/L. Shipments: Four hundred tons per month during September, October, November and December, 1890, and January, 1891. Seller paying brokerage at 10 cents per ton. Accepted (Fire, storm, and other unforeseen events excepted). Wappoo Mills, C. C. Pinckney, Jr., Pres't. Accepted. Caddo Fertilizer Co."

The defendant, the Wappoo Mills, answering the complaint herein, for a first defense, says: "(1) That it admits the allegations made in the first paragraph of the complaint herein. (2) That it denies each and every allegation of the second paragraph, except as is specifically admitted in this paragraph. (8) This defendant admits that the contract of sale attached to the complaint as Exhibit A, and made a part thereof, was brought about by the plaintiff; but this defendant alleges that there existed at the date thereof a custom in this business to pay brokerage or commission only on the amount of stuff actually sold and delivered under such contract.

For a second defense, this defendant alleges: "(1) That some time in the early part of the year 1890 the plaintiff, representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, offered to purchase from the defendant, for said company, 2,000 tons of dissolved bone. That the defendant agreed to sell the said 2,000 tons dissolved bone to the Caddo Fertilizer Company upon the following terms, and no other, that is to say, for the price of $9.85 per ton of 2,000 lbs., f. o. b. cars, Charleston; terms, sight draft against bill of lading; shipments, 400 tons per month during September, October, November and December, 1890, and January, 1891; seller paying brokerage at 10c. per ton, fire, storm and other unforeseen events excepted. (2) That about the time designated for the first shipment of 400 tons of dissolved bone, the plaintiff, still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, requested the defendant not to ship the said 400 tons, which, according to the terms of sale, ought to have been shipped at that time. (3) That about the time designated for the second shipment of 400 tons the plaintiff, still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, requested the defendant not to ship said 400 tons, which ought to have been shipped at that time. (4) That about the time designated for the third shipment of 400 tons, viz. some time in November, 1890, the plaintiff, still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, requested the defendant to ship to the Caddo Fertilizer Company a cargo of dissolved bone, by vessel, for the price of $9.50 per ton f. o. b. vessel. That the defendant shipped by vessel 684.21 tons dissolved bone to said company, drawing upon them, at the request of the plaintiff, at thirty days, for the purchase money for same. (5) That when the said draft became due and payable the plaintiff, still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, urged the defendant to renew and extend the said draft for sixty days longer, for the reason that the Caddo Fertilizer Company was not able to pay the first draft at that time. That this defendant, having negotiated said first draft, was compelled to take up same, and accept the note of the Caddo Fertilizer Company, payable at sixty days. (6) That shortly after the failure of the Caddo Fertilizer Company to pay the said first draft the plaintiff, still representing the said Caddo Fertilizer Company, requested the defendant to send another shipment of dissolved bone to said company, but this defendant, considering the said agreement of sale broken, by reason of the several breaches hereinabove mentioned, refused to make the desired shipment. (7) This defendant therefore alleges that the entire amount of dissolved bone sold by it to the Caddo Fertilizer Company, as above set forth, is 684.21 tons, and admits that the plaintiff herein became entitled to a brokerage thereon of $68.43. But this defendant further alleges that, of this brokerage, the sum of sixty-eight dollars has already been paid to the said plaintiff, at his request, and that there remains due to the said plaintiff on the said transaction the sum of forty-three cents, which said sum of forty-three cents this defendant has always been willing, and is now willing, to pay.

For a third defense to the alleged cause of action, this defendant alleges: "(1) That in pursuance of the power in them vested by an Act of the general assembly passed December 17, 1881, and entitled 'An Act to authorize the city council of Charleston to impose a license tax on all persons engaged in any business, trade or profession, in the city of Charleston,' the city council of Charleston on the 28d day of December, A. D. 1889, enacted a law entitled 'An ordinance to regulate licenses for the year 1890,' requiring all persons, firms, or corporations engaged in, or intending to engage in, any trade, business or profession therein mentioned to obtain, before January 20, 1890, a license therefor, and imposing a penalty for each offense on those who should carry on such business, trade or profession without first taking out the required license. (2) That the plaintiff herein, the said John S. Fairly, failed to obtain, during the year 1890, the proper license prescribed by said ordinance for the business conducted by him."

"An ordinance to regulate licenses for the year 1890 provided:

"Section 1. That every person, firm, company or corporation engaged in, or intending to engage in, any trade, business or profession hereinafter mentioned, shall obtain on or before the 20th day of January, A. D. 1890, a license therefor, in the manner hereinafter prescribed. Every person, firm, company or corporation commencing business after the said 20th day of January, A. D. 1890, shall obtain a license therefor before entering upon such trade, business or profession.

"Sec. 3. If any person or persons shall exercise or carry on any trade, business or profession, for the exercising, carrying on or doing of which a license is required by this ordinance, without taking out such license as in that behalf required, he, she or they shall, for each and every offense, be subject to a penalty not exceeding $100, as may be adjudged by the recorder or court trying the case. And the same shall be entered up as a judgment of the court, and execution shall issue against the property of the defendants as for the collection of other taxes and penalties.

29 L. R. A.

"Class 5.

1. Brokers, pawn, each.....	$300 00
2. Brokers, stock and other personal property and real estate at private sale, each.....	75 00
3. Brokers, ship.....	50 00
4. Brokers, street.....	50 00"

Townsend, P. J., delivered the opinion of the lower court as follows:

"In June, 1890, John S. Fairly, a broker doing business in Charleston, S. C., sold for Wappoo Mills, a South Carolina corporation having its office and chief place of business in Berkeley county, 2,000 tons of dissolved bone, to the Caddo Fertilizer Company, of Shreveport, La. The copy of the broker's contract, made a part of the complaint, shows that the sale was 'for account of Wappoo Mills,' and that the 'seller paying brokerage at ten cents per ton.' Fairly sent in his bill for $200 brokerage, as per the memorandum of sale, but the defendant would pay only $68, disputing the balance. The plaintiff then sued for the balance, $132, and to the complaint the defendant filed a lengthy answer. Plaintiff's counsel gave written notice that on the trial they would move to strike out the respective defenses (first, second and third) of the answer, on the ground that they did not constitute grounds of defense or counterclaim; and that they would ask for judgment by default if all the defenses were so stricken out. Code, § 174; Mobley v. Cureton, 6 S. C. N. S. 69. The demurrer came on to be heard at the trial; and the simple question is, admitting the truth of all the facts set out in the answer, do they constitute any valid defense or counterclaim to the plaintiff's claim for brokerage? No counterclaim is set up, so that we are only to deal with defenses. Three defenses are set up. The answer admits that the broker made the contract sued on, but states that—First, there is a custom in the fertilizer trade by which brokerage is only allowed on such stuff as is actually delivered on the contract; second, that only 680 tons were delivered, as the terms of the contract were subsequently modified by the parties; and, thirdly, Fairly had no license, as required by the license ordinance of the city of Charleston, for the year 1890, and therefore the contract he made was unlawful, illegal and void, and he could not sue for and recover his brokerage for making it. If the making of the original contract is admitted, as it is in the answer, then none of these defenses are good, even if they are all true.

"First. As to the license, which seems the most serious question. It is admitted that, if the law requiring a license or other regulation of this character actually and in terms declares that the act or calling is unlawful unless and until the license or requirement is complied with, then the act or calling is prohibited, and a contract made under it cannot be sued on. If, however, there is no express and specific prohibition, then it is necessary to construe the act or ordinance, and see if the intent is to prohibit. 2 Benjamin, Sales, 526; Harris v. Runnels, 53 U. S. 12 How. 84, 18 L. ed. 903; 13 Am. & Eng.

Encyclop. Law p. 516. Now, one of the leading canons of construction in cases of this sort is the test whether or not the license or exaction is a police regulation, or 'a tax assessment for the security and collection of the revenue.' If the former, the calling itself is invalid, unless the requirement is complied with; but, if it is a 'tax for revenue,' then the act done is valid. The law does not operate on the business or calling, and affect that, but on the person, and punishes him with penalty or otherwise. McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 436, 47 Am. Rep. 845; 2 Benjamin, Sales, 825; Harris v. Runnels, supra; Information v. Jager, 29 S. C. 445. Under such license and tax laws for 'revenue,' in cases almost identical with the present, the contract has been held valid, and the parties entitled to enforce it, and the agent to demand compensation for making it. Ames v. Gilman, 10 Met. 248; Larned v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 436, 8 Am. Rep. 346; Mandlebaum v. Gregovich, 17 Nev. 87, 45 Am. Rep. 433, and cases last cited above. If these be the laws of construction, then what is the character of the Charleston License Ordinance of 1890? It is not pretended that it contains any provision that business conducted without license shall be illegal and unlawful until and unless a license is obtained, and, as a matter of fact, it contains no such provision. But the defendant contends it should be so construed. Now, the Ordinance of 1890 is stated in the answer to have been passed in pursuance of a power vested in the city of Charleston, by the Act of the general assembly passed December 17, 1881, entitled 'An Act to authorize the city council of Charleston to impose a license tax on all persons engaged in any business, trade or profession in the city of Charleston.' 17 Stat. at L. 582. The ordinance obtains its authority from, and is limited in its scope and intention by, the Act. Without the Act, or beyond the scope of the Act, the ordinance is void. Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 58. Now, does this Act and ordinance intend to prohibit the business or calling, or is it an Act and ordinance for 'raising a city revenue?' We are left in no doubt as to this. In a whole series of cases affecting this very question and ordinance, and others similar to it, the courts of South Carolina have held, after argument on argument, that this was a tax for the purpose of raising revenue. State v. Haynes, 4 S. C. N. S. 403; State v. Columbia, 6 S. C. N. S. 1; Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 50; Information v. Oliver, 21 S. C. 325; Information v. Jager, 29 S. C. 444. If, then, this be the construction placed on the ordinance by the highest court of the state, and it is a 'revenue tax,' the case comes distinctly under the principle of construction already pointed out, and the business is not unlawful without the license. The defendant contended that, as there was a recurring penalty in the ordinance, this showed the calling was prohibited. This, of course, is also another test adopted to ascertain the meaning of the ordinance. But this yields to the other rule, as to the 'revenue' character of the act and ordinance, so often declared by the supreme court, and need not be considered. But one clause of the ordinance itself is conclusive of this question. The defendant contends that the intention of the ordinance is as if it read, 'It shall be unlawful to engage in business unless and until a license is obtained.' Now, the ordinance grants a license for the year 1890. The license for 1889 expired December 31st, 1889. Section 1 provides that 'all engaged in business . . . shall obtain a license on or before the 20th January, 1890.' They are allowed until January 20th to do so. But, if the construction of the defendant be adopted, then all the business transactions in Charleston between January 1, 1890, and January 20, 1890, were unlawful and illegal and void, for the granting of a license afterwards could not cure them. This construction courts could not adopt. The plain meaning of the ordinance is otherwise. It says parties can do business lawfully, but they must pay taxes for revenue. This tax can be paid any time by January 20th, but then, after that, penalties will be laid on those parties, personally, who do not pay the tax. In addition to this, an examination of the contract and pleadings shows the seller, the Wappoo Mills, residing in Berkeley county, and the buyer, the Caddo Fertilizer Company, in Louisiana. The contract cannot be held a Charleston contract because a Charleston broker made it. It is, therefore, not affected by the Charleston ordinance, and is valid, and the broker could sue for his services. In discussing this license matter, it should also be remembered that the direct question here is not between the taxing power and the citizen, but between a broker and a customer who would avoid the payment for services by pleading the license ordinances of a city not party to the suit. The words of Chief Justice Shaw in Ames v. Gilman, 10 Met. 243, are singularly apposite here: 'Whatever other disabilities a person may incur, who attempts to practice law irregularly, . . . we think he does not so violate any express provision of statute as to enable one who has employed him, and had the benefit of his services, to refuse paying him a reasonable compensation.'

"The other questions, of custom and change of contract, require much less discussion. So far as the custom is concerned, the rule of law is that where there is a written contract, unambiguous in its terms, custom and usage cannot vary it. Clarke's Browne, Usages & Customs, 163, 164, 169; Edwards, Brokers & Factors, p. 149. Usage cannot control the clear and unequivocal stipulations of a contract, but will be controlled by them. Clarke's Browne, Usages & Customs, 164; Globe Mill Co. v. Minneapolis Elevator Co. 44 Minn. 153. Now, the parties here bound themselves by a plain, written contract, in which the plaintiff, as broker, sold 'for account of the Wappoo Mills' 2,000 tons of dissolved bone, for which his compensation is to be, in the language of the contract, 'seller paying brokerage at 10 cents per ton.' This is clear and unambiguous, and no custom could vary it, and no evidence as to such custom allowed to control it. The plaintiff cites cases directly in point, in which the very question is considered, and the custom not allowed to change the contract and rule of law: Mordecai v. Jacobs, 13 Rich. L. 548; Bower v. Jones, 8 Bing. 65; Ware v. Hayward Rubber Co. 8 Allen, 85; Higgins v. Moore, 84 N. Y. 425; Paulsen v. Dallett, 2 Daly, 40; Cook v. Fiaks, 13 Gray, 498. Even if there was a custom, the parties gave the strongest evidence of departing from it by a contract in writing directly in the teeth of it, by its very terms.

"The last defense is that the principals afterwards varied the contract, and, finally, that the defendant declined to ship the entire 2,000 tons to the Caddo Company, for some reasons set out in the answer, and that the broker acted for the Caddo Company when the changes were made. An inspection of the pleading will show that the changes were the act and agreement of the principals themselves, and to suit their mutual convenience. The changes referred to were shipping by boat instead of cars, and a slight change of price to meet this variance, and some modification as to the time of shipment and mode of payment. But the principals agreed to this themselves, and the contract, in the two particulars affecting the broker, is not pretended to have been altered. The number of tons bought and sold was still 2,000 and the seller was still to pay the broker 10 cents per ton. None of the changes, therefore, affected him. It was also contended that the Caddo Company did not pay one draft at maturity, but arranged an extension with the seller, and therefore it was argued that the Caddo Company could not complete the contract. The pleading does not show that they could not complete it. And, even if it did, the broker is not responsible for that. Cases were cited to show that the broker must bring a customer not only willing, but able, to complete the contract. But this rule refers only to real estate, where specific performance is the remedy, and not uniformly held, — even as to real estate, the courts being divided. But as to personal property, where the breach of the contract sounds in damages, it has never been followed. There is, therefore, nothing in subsequent changes which is shown could have affected the broker's compensation. But with all the subsequent modifications and non-performance or otherwise, the broker has nothing to do at all, in the absence of fraud and bad faith on his part. And this is nowhere alleged. What are the duties and business of a broker, and the law as to it? 'A broker for sale is a mere negotiator or middleman between the seller and purchaser. 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 571; Higgins v. Moore, 84 N. Y. 424; Vinton v. Baldwin, 83 Ind. 102, 45 Am. Rep. 448. His duty is ended, when he brings the parties together, and furnishes a purchaser. He is then entitled to his commissions, whether the property is actually delivered and the money paid, or not. Edwards, Brokers & Factors, p. 148; Higgins v. Moore, 84 N. Y. 424; note to Walker v. Osgood, 98 Am. Dec. 177; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 578, and notes and cases. Where he effects a contract, binding on both parties, and which may be enforced, his brokerage is earned, even if the contract be not carried out. This is no concern of his. See 29 L. R. A.

authorities cited above; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 580, 581. This law is recognized in every court, including the United States Supreme Court. In 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 580, and cases, it is summarized thus: 'Where a broker has bound the parties by authorized contract, any inability or refusal of the principal to fulfill the contract he had authorized should not affect the agent's right to compensation.' Cites Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192, and numerous other cases. Among all these cases agreeing on this subject, the following are directly in point, and control the present discussion: Love v. Miller, supra; Vinton v. Baldwin, 83 Ind. 102, 45 Am. Rep. 447; Cook v. Fiaks, 13 Gray, 498; Paulsen v. Dallett, 2 Daly, 40.

The plaintiff brought the parties together by a valid contract. He did his whole duty, and, in the absence of fraud or improper conduct, earned his brokerage. Whether the seller and buyer afterwards changed the contract in some particulars, or whether one of them—the defendant in this case—saw fit to decline to complete the same, for reasons stated in his answer, is no concern of the broker. He made the contract his principals wanted, and for which the defendant agreed to pay, and should have his compensation. Thus, carefully considered, the answer, even if admitted to be true, really shows no valid defense nor counterclaim to the plaintiff's suit. All of its three defenses are without merit on their face, and should therefore be stricken out. This being so, the plaintiff should be allowed to have judgment by default for his claim, to wit,—one hundred and thirty-two dollars and costs."

Defendant appealed on the following grounds: "First. Because the presiding judge erred in holding that the answer of the defendant contained no defense to the action. Second. Because the presiding judge erred in striking out the first defense contained in the said answer, and in holding that no custom can vary the contract set out in the complaint herein, and that no evidence as to a custom which would vary the said contract can be allowed to control the contract. Third. Because the presiding judge erred in striking out so much of the second defense set out in the answer as alleges that the plaintiff himself proposed and brought about changes in the original contract which resulted in a reduction of the amount of material sold by the plaintiff, and that he further erred in construing said defense to allege that the said changes were the acts and agreements of the principals themselves, and that they did not affect the plaintiff. Fourth. Because the presiding judge erred in striking out so much of the second defense of the answer as alleges that the party for whom the plaintiff purchased was not able to pay for the material according to the terms agreed upon. Fifth. Because the presiding judge erred in holding that the rule which requires a broker to produce a customer able, as well as willing, to complete the contract, in order to entitle him to commissions, applies only to contracts for the sale of real estate, and does not apply to contracts for the sale of personal property.

Sixth. Because the presiding judge erred in striking out from the answer the third defense therein set forth, and in not holding that the plaintiff could not recover commissions in this action, in consequence of his failure to take out his license to carry on his business as required by an ordinance of the city of Charleston, S. C., entitled 'An ordinance to regulate licenses for the year 1890.' Seventh. Because the presiding judge erred in holding that, under the said license ordinance, it was not unlawful for the plaintiff to carry on his business without first obtaining a license under said ordinance. Eighth. Because the presiding judge erred in construing the contract set out in the complaint as not made in the city of Charleston, and therefore not affected by the said license ordinance, when it is plainly alleged in the pleadings that the said contract was made in the said city of Charleston."

Messrs. Ficken & Hughes for appellant.
Messrs. Smythe & Lee, for respondent:

Usage and custom are never permitted to give the lie, as it were, to the plain, deliberate, and written contract of the parties themselves, nor could testimony be admitted to prove this.

Clarke's Browne, Usages & Customs, 168, 164, 169; Edwards, Brokers & Factors, p. 149; Globe Mill Co. v. Minneapolis Elevator Co. 44 Minn. 158; Bower v. Jones, 8 Bing. 65; Cook v. Fiske, 12 Gray, 498; Paulsen v. Dallett, 2 Daly, 41; Higgins v. Moore, 84 N. Y. 422; Ware v. Hayward Rubber Co. 8 Allen, 86.

The broker was not responsible for the ability of the party to complete.

Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192; Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 448.

With the amount delivered, change of terms and ability of purchaser to comply, the broker has nothing to do.

2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, pp. 571, 578, 580, 581; Edwards, Brokers & Factors, p. 148; Love v. Miller, Vinton v. Baldwin, Cook v. Fiske, Higgins v. Moore, Ware v. Hayward Rubber Co. and Paulsen v. Dallett, supra.

If the license under the ordinance is a "tax assessment for the security and collection of the revenue," then the carrying on of the calling without the license is not unlawful. The law operates on the person, not on the business.

2 Benjamin, Sales, § 825; Harries v. Runnels, 53 U. S. 12 How. 84, 13 L. ed. 908; McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 436, 47 Am. Rep. 845; Information v. Jager, 29 S. C. 445; 18 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 516.

The license law has been held to be for "revenue" and the contract without license valid, and the agent entitled to compensation for making it.

Ames v. Gilman, 10 Met. 248; Larned v. Andrews, 106 Mass. 436, 8 Am. Rep. 346; Mandlebaum v. Gregovich, 17 Nev. 87, 45 Am. Rep. 438.

The Charleston ordinance is a provision for "raising a city revenue."

State v. Hayne, 4 S. C. N. S. 403; State v. Columbia, 6 S. C. N. S. 1; Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 50; Information v. Oliver, 21 S. C. 325; Information v. Jager, supra.

39 L. R. A.

McIver, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff brings this action to recover the amount of its commissions as a broker, agreed upon by the special contract, as he claims, upon the amount of a sale of 2,000 tons of a certain fertilizer, negotiated by the plaintiff for the defendant to the Caddo Fertilizer Company, the commissions being 10 cents per ton. The defendant, in its answer, admits the allegations contained in the first paragraph of the complaint, which, in substance, are that the plaintiff is a broker in the city of Charleston, S. C., carrying on a brokerage business in fertilizers, etc., and that defendant is a duly-chartered corporation under the laws of this state, having its office and place of business in the county of Berkeley. Defendant denies each and every allegation in the second paragraph of the complaint, except such as is specifically admitted in the answer, to wit, "that the contract of sale attached to the complaint as Exhibit A, and made a part thereof, was brought about by the plaintiff; but this defendant alleges that there existed at the date thereof a custom in this business to pay brokerage or commission only on the amount of stuff actually sold and delivered under such contract." The contract of sale thus referred to is a contract for the sale of 2,000 tons of the fertilizer mentioned, by defendant to the Caddo Fertilizer Company, upon the terms therein mentioned, among which were that the fertilizer should be delivered "f. o. b. cars here" (Charleston), and shipment to be made of "four hundred tons per month during September, October, November and December, 1890, and January, 1891. Seller paying brokerage at 10 cents per ton." This contract is dated "Charleston, S. C., June 5th, 1890," and is signed by the defendant company, through its president, and "Accepted. Caddo Fertilizer Co." The defendant, in its answer, sets up a second defense, alleging that the purchase was made by the plaintiff, "representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company," on the terms above stated; that about the time designated for the first shipment of 400 tons, the plaintiff, still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, requested defendant not to make said shipment; that about the time designated for the second shipment the plaintiff, still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, requested defendant not to make said second shipment; that about the time designated for the third shipment the plaintiff still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, requested defendant to ship to said company a cargo of the fertilizer, "by vessel, for the price of $9.50 per ton f. o. b. vessel," and that defendant did ship by vessel 684.21 tons of said fertilizer to the said company, "drawing upon them, at the request of the plaintiff, at thirty days, for the purchase money for same;" that when this draft became payable the plaintiff, still representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company, "urged the defendant to renew and extend said draft for sixty days longer, for the reason that the Caddo Fertilizer Company were not able to pay the draft at that time," and the defendant, having negotiated said draft, was compelled to take up the same, and accept the note of the Caddo Fertilizer Company, payable at sixty days; that shortly after the failure of the Caddo Fertilizer Company to pay the first draft, the plaintiff, still representing the said company, requested defendant to send them another shipment, but defendant, "considering the said agreement broken by reason of the several breaches hereinabove mentioned, refused to make the desired shipment." The defendant therefore alleges that the entire amount of fertilizers sold by it to the Caddo Fertilizer Company is 684.21 tons, upon which, it is admitted, defendant became liable to pay the brokerage agreed upon, to wit, the sum of $68.43, all of which has been paid, except the sum of 43 cents, which defendant has always been, and is now, willing to pay. For third defense the defendant alleges that the plaintiff never obtained a license as broker for the year 1890, as required by an ordinance of the city council of Charleston. This ordinance was, by consent, incorporated in the case, and is printed in the record, and its terms will hereinafter be more particularly referred to. While we have thus endeavored to state substantially the pleadings, it will be necessary for a more full understanding of the questions involved in this appeal that the reporter should embrace, in his report of the case, copies of the complaint with the exhibit thereon, the answer and the ordinance referred to in the third defense.

The plaintiff gave notice that on the trial of the case he would move to strike out the first, second and third defenses set up in the answer, upon the ground that the allegations therein made do not state facts sufficient to constitute either a defense or counterclaim, and also for judgment by default. This motion was heard by his honor, Judge Townsend, who granted this motion, and held that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment by default of the amount of his claim, to wit, the sum of $132. From this judgment defendant appeals, on the several grounds set out in the record, which need not be repeated here, as they, together with the decree of the circuit judge, should be incorporated in the report of the case.

While the controversy presented by this appeal arose upon the motion to strike out the several defenses set up in the answer, it is practically nothing more nor less than a demurrer to the answer, and will be so considered. It follows, therefore, that all the facts well pleaded in the answer must be regarded as true; and the general question is, conceding the facts stated in the answer, whether they are sufficient to sustain any one or more of the defenses relied upon. Counsel for appellant, in their argument here, while conceding that the answer, in form, sets up but three defenses, yet claim that the answer really sets up four distinct defenses, inasmuch as two of them have been somewhat inartistically united together as one. We see no objection to so regarding the answer, and will, therefore, consider the several defenses as stated in the argument of counsel for appellant. The first is thus stated: "That there exists a custom in the fertilizer trade by which brokerage is only allowed on the amount of material actually delivered under a contract, whatever may be the amount named in the contract." The question raised by this defense has been before the courts of the several states, as well as those of England, in very many cases, most of which, we suppose, have been cited by the counsel in their elaborate arguments. We have examined all of the cases cited, to which we have been able to obtain access, and in the light of these authorities, without undertaking to cite all of them, we propose to consider the question which we are called upon to decide. It seems to us that the very decided weight of authority is in favor of the proposition that evidence of custom and usage is not admissible to explain or vary the terms of an express contract, whether written or verbal, unambiguous in its terms, unless to show the meaning of certain terms used in such contract, which, by well-established custom or long usage, acquired a meaning different from that which they primarily bear, for the reason that when parties, in making a contract, use terms which, by usage or custom, have acquired a certain meaning, they must, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, be assumed to have used such terms in such acquired sense. In the absence of any authority in this state upon this question (for we do not think the case of Mordecai v. Jacobs, 12 Rich. L. 547, throws any light upon the question), we are compelled to resort to the authorities elsewhere. In Globe Mill. Co. v. Minneapolis Elevator Co. 44 Minn. 158, the question was whether the title to certain grain sold vested in the vendee. By the terms of the contract of sale the grain was sold for "cash on delivery," which had not been complied with; but vendee sought to sustain his claim by proof of a custom prevailing in that locality, whereby the title was regarded as having passed when certain things were done, whatever might be the terms of the sale agreed upon by the parties. But the court said: "A local usage cannot be proved to contradict a contract. . . . If, by the contract of sale of this wheat, it was for cash on delivery, the usage cannot make it a sale on a credit." In Page v. Cole, 120 Mass. 37, the action was to recover damages for the breach of a contract for the sale of a "milk-route," and evidence as to the meaning and effect which that term had acquired by usage prevailing in that locality was held competent. In Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 10 Am. Rep. 407, the action was to recover the amount due plaintiff for plastering which he had contracted to do at so much per square yard, and it was held competent to prove that the custom was to measure the openings for windows and doors, as well as the solid walls. In that case it was said that: "Every legal contract is to be interpreted in accordance with the intention of the parties; and usage, when it is reasonable, uniform and well settled, not in opposition to fixed rules of law, not in contradiction to the express terms of the contract [italics ours], is deemed to form a part of the contract, and to enter into the intentions of the parties."

In Hinton v. Locke, 5 Hill, 487, the action was on a contract to pay the plaintiff so much per day for his services, and it was held competent to show that the universal custom in that locality was to count a day as ten hours. Of course, the term "day" could not be regarded as meaning twenty-four hours, and hence it was competent to show how many hours were regarded as a day. In that case, however, Branson, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, expressly disapproves of the case of Smith v. Wilson, 8 Barn. & Ad. 728, where, upon a contract to pay so much a thousand for all the rabbits in a certain warren, it was held competent to show that in that part of the country the custom was to construe the term "thousand" as meaning 100 dozen or 1,200, because he said that would be allowing the custom to contradict the express terms of the contract. His language is: "No usage or custom can be set up for the purpose of controlling the rules of law. Nor is such evidence admissible where it contradicts the agreement of the parties." In Ware v. Hayward Rubber Co. 3 Allen, 84, the plaintiff claimed one half commissions on goods consigned to him for sale, but not sold, and turned over to consignor, basing his claim upon a custom prevailing in that locality. Held, that evidence of such a custom was incompetent. Chapman, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, used this language: "This being a written and express contract, the evidence offered in respect to the usage of commission merchants to charge one-half commissions when goods consigned to them in the ordinary way for sale are taken back, is not applicable to this case, for an express contract cannot be controlled or varied by usage." And this was the point upon which the case turned. In Ford v. Tirrell, 9 Gray, 401, 69 Am. Dec. 297, the action was upon a contract to build an octagon cellar wall at 11 cents per foot, and the question was as to the mode of measurement to be adopted in order to ascertain the amount of work done. The court seems to have held that, as the contract was silent as to the mode of measurement, it was competent to introduce evidence as to the custom or usage in such cases by which the mode of measurement should be determined; citing 1 Greenl. Ev. § 292. In Barton v. McKelway, 22 N. J. L. 165, the action was on a written contract for the delivery of a specified number of morus multicaulis trees, of not less than one foot in height, and the question was as to the mode of measuring the height of the trees. Held, that it was competent to show that it was the universal custom prevailing among dealers in such articles to measure only the ripe, hard wood, rejecting the green, immature top. The court, in its opinion, says that the true office of such evidence is "to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intention of the parties, and the nature and extent of their contract, and fix and explain the meaning of words." In Wilcox v. Wood, 9 Wend. 346, the question was as to when—at what hour—a lease from the 1st of May to the 1st of May in a succeeding year terminated; and it was held competent to show that, by universal custom, such a lease would terminate at 12

M. on the 1st of May. In Grant v. Maddox, 15 Mees. & W. 787, the court went as far as in any other case which we have examined. In that case, the action was upon a contract to pay the plaintiff for her services as an opera singer, so much per week for each week in the three years for which she engaged; and the controversy was as to whether plaintiff was entitled to receive the stipulated sum for each week during the whole of the three years, or only for each week during the theatrical season of those years. The court held that it was competent to prove a custom by which a year was regarded as only the theatrical season, and not the whole calendar year. In Higgins v. Moore, 84 N. Y. 417, the question was whether a purchaser of grain in the city of New York, negotiated by a broker, would be discharged by the payment of the purchase price to the broker. Held, that he would not, as the broker's agency terminates when he makes the sale, and he has no authority to receive the purchase money, and that evidence of any local usage in New York to the contrary was not admissible to control the general rule of law. In Bower v. Jones, 8 Bing. 65, it was held that, where there was an express agreement that the principal should be responsible for bad debts, proof that the custom of the trade was that commissions should not be allowed on bad debts could not be received, because in violation of the express terms of the agreement.

From this review of the cases cited above, as well as from the examination of others, which we have not deemed it necessary to cite, it is obvious there is not entire harmony in the decisions; but we are of opinion that the proposition laid down at the outset of this discussion is supported by the weight of authority, as well as by reason.

Our next inquiry is whether the contract which constitutes the basis of this action is of such a character as to require or warrant a resort to evidence of custom or usage in order to explain any ambiguity therein, or to interpret the meaning of terms used therein which have acquired some secondary meaning. We are unable to discover any ambiguity in the terms of the contract. The amount of the article sold and price, the times of delivery and the time and mode of payment, are all distinctly specified; and we are equally unable to discover any terms used therein which require any interpretation. We do not see, therefore, how the first defense can be sustained.

The second defense set up in the answer is thus stated in the argument of counsel for appellant: "That the plaintiff himself brought about such changes in the original contract of sale as precluded his right to commissions under it." An examination of the answer will show that this defense, as above stated, is not therein stated, for all the allegations in reference to the several changes in the terms of the contract of sale are stated to have been proposed or insisted upon by the plaintiff as agent of the purchaser, and not as broker; the language of the answer, in each instance, being that the several alterations were requested by the plaintiff, "representing the Caddo Fertilizer Company," and not by him as broker. Now, it is conceded that the plaintiff had effected a valid contract for the sale of the fertilizers, assented to in writing by both vendor and vendee, as evidenced by the signatures of both of these parties. It seems to us that the plaintiff's connection with the matter, as broker, terminated, and he was then entitled to his commissions. If, afterwards, acting as the agent or the representative of the purchaser, the plaintiff sought to procure from the defendant some modification of the terms of the sale, we do not see how this could affect his right to commissions which had previously been earned.

The third defense set up in the answer is stated in the argument of counsel for appellant in these words: "That the customer or purchaser produced by the plaintiff was not able to pay for the material according to the terms agreed upon." In the first place, we do not find any allegation in the answer that the purchaser, the Caddo Fertilizer Company, was not able to pay for the fertilizer purchased, and there is no allegation of insolvency. The nearest approach to such an allegation is that the purchaser did not meet the draft drawn upon it when it became payable, and requested an extension "for the reason that the Caddo Fertilizer Company were not able to pay the first draft at that time." (Italics ours.) This allegation does not usually or necessarily imply insolvency. Akers v. Rowan, 33 S. C. 451, 10 L. R. A. 705. And something more is necessary to establish a charge of insolvency. It only implies an inability to meet the draft at maturity, and not an inability to pay the debt, or a want of sufficient assets to do so. The case just cited shows that the interpretation placed upon the words "insolvent" and "insolvency," as used in the United States Bankrupt Act, by the Supreme Court of the United States, is not recognized here in cases not arising under such Bankrupt Act, but that those terms must be interpreted as signifying "that condition in which a debtor is found when his property is insufficient to yield a fund sufficient to pay his debts, through the agency of the process of law." It is very manifest that there is no allegation in the answer which would bring this case within the rule above stated, and hence, upon this ground, the allegations of the answer are not sufficient to sustain this third defense.

In addition to this, while it may be true, as a general proposition, that a broker, before he is entitled to his commissions, must produce a purchaser willing and able to comply with the terms of the contract of sale, yet if the purchaser produced by the broker is accepted by the seller without any misrepresentation on the part of the broker as to the financial ability of the proposed purchaser, and without the suppression by the broker of any knowledge he may have as to the financial condition of such purchaser, then the burden of proof is upon the seller to show that the proposed purchaser is not able to comply with the terms of the contract. It seems to us, after a careful examination of the cases cited upon this point, some of which we will notice below, that the true rule upon this subject is well stated in Coleman v. 29 L. R. A.

Meade, 13 Bush, 358, as follows: "The broker undertakes to furnish a purchaser, and is bound to act in good faith in presenting a person as such, and when one is presented, the employer is not bound to accept him or to pay the commission, unless he (the purchaser) is ready and able to perform the contract on his part according to the terms proposed; but if the principal accepts him, either upon the terms then . . . agreed upon, and a valid contract is entered into between the principal and the person presented by the broker, the commission is earned. But if, as was the case in McGarock v. Woodlief, 61 U. S. 20 How. 221, 15 L. ed. 884, the principal rejects the purchaser, and the broker claims his commission, he must show not only that the person furnished was willing to accept the offer precisely as made, but, in addition, that he was an eligible purchaser [by which we understand, was a person able to carry out the contract], and such as the principal was bound, as between himself and the broker, to accept." This distinction between a case in which the seller accepts the purchaser offered by the broker and a case in which the seller rejects such purchaser, which we think is a just and proper distinction, appears to be ignored in some of the cases, but disregarded or rejected in others. In Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 513, it was held that a broker is not entitled to his commissions unless he finds a purchaser able and willing to carry out this contract, and a sale is actually made. In that case the broker did find a purchaser, who was accepted by the seller, and the contract was actually executed; but as the contract contained a stipulation that, if either party failed to comply with the contract, he should pay to the other the sum of $1,000, and as the proposed purchaser failed to comply and paid the forfeit, the court held that the broker could not recover his commissions on the purchase price agreed upon, but only to the amount of the forfeit received by the vendor. That case is not, therefore, exactly in point. The cases of Duclos v. Cunningham, 102 N. Y. 678; Iselin v. Griffith, 62 Iowa, 668; McLaughlin v. Wheeler, 1 S. Dak. 497,—simply hold the general doctrine that a broker, before he can claim his commissions, must produce a purchaser able and willing to comply, and do not go into the question of the effect of the seller's accepting the proposed purchaser. The case of Butler v. Baker, 17 R. I. 582, in its dicta, is the strongest cited by appellant upon this point. In that case, the broker found a purchaser, and presented him to the owner of the land, who accepted him, and entered into a contract upon the terms proposed. But when the last payment was to be made, the purchaser was unable to do so, and the court held that the broker was not entitled to his commissions. The conclusion reached in that case seems to have been rested partly upon the ground that the vendor knew nothing of the financial condition of the purchaser, and was not informed as to his condition by the broker, which the court said it was his duty to do. It is also there said that the cases differ as to the question upon whom the burden of proof rests as to the financial condition of the purchaser—some holding that the burden of proof is upon the broker, upon the ground that he undertakes to find a purchaser able and willing to buy,—and cites the cases among which we find the case of Coleman v. Meade, supra, which, as we have seen, does not so hold, when the vendor accepts the purchaser, but just the contrary, and then cites other cases showing that the burden of proof rests upon the vendor, concluding that portion of the opinion in these words: "It is not necessary for us to decide this question for the reason that no testimony was offered by the broker to show the purchaser's financial ability, while the defendant did offer such testimony as would justify the jury in finding that the purchaser was unable to comply with the contract." It is obvious, therefore, that the case of Butler v. Baker affords no authority as to the question of the burden of proof. In Love v. Miller, 53 Ind. 294, 21 Am. Rep. 192, it was held that, where a broker, employed for that purpose, produces a purchaser who enters into a valid contract with the owner of certain real estate for the purchase of the same, the broker has earned his commissions, notwithstanding the fact that the purchaser afterwards declines to perform his part of the contract. In that case, nothing is said as to the financial ability of the proposed purchaser. In Vinton v. Baldwin, 88 Ind. 104, 45 Am. Rep. 447, it was held that a person employed to procure a loan, for a commission, is entitled to his commission on finding a person able and willing to make the loan, although the proposed borrower afterwards declined to accept the loan. In that case, the court likened the case to that of a broker employed to sell real estate, in which case, the court said, "It is uniformly held that the commissions are earned when a purchaser is found, able and willing to buy, on the terms proposed, . . . and does not depend upon the ultimate consummation of the sale."

From this review of the authorities, and after due consideration of the reasons upon which they are based, we are of the opinion that the facts stated in the answer are not sufficient to sustain the third defense, and therefore there was no error in sustaining the demurrer to that defense.

It only remains for us to consider what is stated in the answer as to the third defense, but styled in the argument the "fourth defense." That defense, it is claimed in the argument of the counsel for appellant, raises the following question: "Can a broker who has not procured a license to do business, required by a valid city ordinance, maintain an action to recover his commissions?" It is alleged in the answer, and the demurrer admits it to be true, that the plaintiff had failed to procure a license to do business as a broker in the city of Charleston for the year 1890, during which the transaction here in question took place, as required by an ordinance passed by the city council of Charleston under the authority conferred upon said city council by an Act of the general assembly of this state. (Acts, 1881; 17 Stat. at L. 522). This Act simply invests the city council with authority to require the payment of a license fee from any person engaged in any calling, business or profession within the limits of the city of Charleston, with certain exceptions, which need not be stated, and authorizes the city council to pass such ordinances as may be necessary to carry the intent and purposes of the act into full effect. The intent and purpose of the act, as declared in its title, is to authorize the city council to impose "a license tax" on persons engaged in any business in the said city. But there is nothing in the act declaring it to be unlawful for a person to engage in any business for which a license may be required, without obtaining such license. In pursuance of the authority thus conferred, the city council of Charleston, in December, 1889, passed an ordinance (set out in the record) which provides substantially as follows: Section 1: "That every person . . . engaged in, or intending to engage in, any trade, business or profession hereinafter mentioned, shall obtain, on or before the 20th day of January, A. D. 1890, a license therefor," etc. Section 2 provides that "if any person or persons shall exercise or carry on any trade, business or profession, for . . . which a license is required by this ordinance without taking out such license . . . he, she or they shall, for each and every offense, be subject to a penalty not exceeding $100, . . . and the same shall be entered up as a judgment of the court, and execution shall issue against the property of the defendant, as for the collection of other taxes and penalties." The other provisions of the ordinance do not seem to be pertinent to the question made in this case, except that brokers are mentioned as amenable to the provisions requiring a license. It will be observed that the ordinance contains no express provision making it unlawful for a person to engage in business as a broker, but simply imposes a penalty upon a person who does not obtain a license. It is conceded, and properly conceded, that if the law requiring a license actually, and in terms, declares that the business in question is unlawful unless the requirement of a license is complied with, then the carrying on of the business without such license is prohibited, and a contract made under it cannot be enforced in a court of justice; for, as is said in one of the cases hereinafter cited, it would be "altogether anomalous, not to use any harsher term, to hold that a court of justice should enforce a contract founded upon an act which is absolutely forbidden by the lawmaking department of the government," or, as is said in another case, "it would indeed be a strange anomaly if a contract made in violation of a statute, and prohibited by a penalty, could be enforced in the courts of the same country whose laws are thus trampled upon and set at defiance." See McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 439, 47 Am. Rep. 845, and O'Donnell v. Sweeney, 5 Ala. 468, 39 Am. Dec. 336. It seems to us, however, that even where the statute does not, in express terms, declare the act unlawful, or prohibit the carrying on of the business in question without a license, yet if it appears, from a consideration of the terms of the legislation in question, that the legislative intent was to declare the act unlawful, or to prohibit the carrying on of the business without a license, then no contract in pursuance of such business can be enforced. In other words, the inquiry is as to the legislative intent, and that may be found, not only in the express terms of the statute, but also may be implied from the several provisions thereof. See Harris v. Runnels, 58 U. S. 12 How. 79, 13 L. ed. 901, and Niemeyer v. Wright, 75 Va. 299, 40 Am. Rep. 720. An important element which enters into the inquiry as to the legislative intent seems to be whether the license is required simply as a mode of raising revenue,—a tax, pure and simple,—and that the penalty is imposed as a means of enforcing the payment of such tax, and not for the purpose of prohibiting the business; for, while some of the cases do lay down the broad proposition that the imposition of a penalty implies a prohibition, we do not think that such is the necessary implication, as it may be imposed simply for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the license tax, and, if so, then prohibition is not to be implied. We will next notice the cases cited in the argument, which, we think, show that the weight of authority, as well as of reason, supports the views hereinbefore set forth.

The case of Westmoreland v. Bragg, 2 Hill, L. pt. 2, p. 414, is not in point, for the reason that the statute not only forbids the carrying on of the business of an apothecary without a license, but also expressly declares all contracts made by an unlicensed apothecary in the course of his business, "utterly void and of no effect." In McConnell v. Kitchens, 20 S. C. 430, 47 Am. Rep. 845, the action was upon a contract for the sale of fertilizers, which the court held illegal and void because the act regulating the sales of such articles had not been complied with, and that such act was not designed simply for the collection of revenue, but to protect the public from imposition and fraud, and hence a sale of any such article without a compliance with the requirements of the statute was illegal and void. It is obvious that the case does not apply to the case now under consideration. In Miller v. Ammon, 145 U. S. 421, 36 L. ed. 759, the action was on a contract for the sale of wine, held to be "spirituous or vinous liquor," by a person not having a license so to sell, and the court held that the contract could not be enforced. But, in that case, the ordinance of the city of Chicago requiring a license expressly forbade the sale of spirituous or vinous liquor without a license, and did not, as in this case, simply require a person engaged in such business to obtain a license. That case, therefore, differs from the case now under consideration. In Holt v. Green, 73 Pa. 198, 18 Am. Rep. 787, it was held by a divided court (Sharswood and Williams dissenting) that a commercial broker who had not procured a license as required by the act of congress is not entitled to recover his commissions upon a sale made by him. The court, in its opinion, admits that there is a conflict of authority upon the question.

In Johnson v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 498, 49 Am. Rep. 131, the court simply follows Holt v. Green. Buckley v. Humason, 16 L. R. A. 423, 50 Minn. 195, simply decides that, where a statute or an ordinance duly authorized, makes a particular business unlawful for unlicensed persons, any contract made in such business by one not authorized is void. In the notes to that case a good many authorities are collected which seem to show that the weight of authority is in favor of the view that the mere requirement of a license does not make the business unlawful without such license, unless the statute or ordinance either expressly or impliedly declares the business to be unlawful, if carried on by a person without a license; and this implication may arise from the fact that the statute has in view the protection of the public health or morals, or the prevention of frauds upon the public. In the case of Mandlebaum v. Gregovich, 17 Nev. 87, 45 Am. Rep. 438, the true distinction in cases of this kind is well pointed out in the following language: "Numerous authorities are cited by respondent's counsel which announce the general doctrine 'that a penalty implies a prohibition, though there be no prohibitory words in the statute, and that the agreement in violation of the statute prohibiting or enjoining an act absolutely, or only under a penalty, cannot be enforced.' This principle is applied in all cases where the subject-matter of the contract is forbidden by the statute [citing the cases], or is in violation of a statute for the protection of the public against imposition or fraud [citing cases, but omitting the case of McConnell v. Kitchens, supra, which is on that line], or for the protection of the public health or morals [as in the case of sales of spirituous liquors], or where the contract is against public policy." But the court goes on to show that the contract there in question did not fall within either of those classes, and hence there was no illegality in the sale, but simply an illegality in the conduct of the seller, in not procuring a license, for which he may be subjected to a penalty, but the sale itself was not unlawful. In Shippey v. Eastwood, 9 Ala. 200, the action was on a note, to which the defense was that the note was given on Sunday, in violation of the statute forbidding the transaction of any worldly business on Sunday, with certain exceptions, and subjecting the offending party to a penalty; and it was held that the contract, made on Sunday, was void. The court does go on to say: "It has been repeatedly held that a penalty inflicted by a statute upon an offense implies a prohibition, and a contract relating to it is void, even where it is not expressly declared by the statute that the contract shall be void." But this is a mere dictum, for in that case the statute did, in express terms, forbid the making of any contract, except as excepted, on Sunday, and hence there was no necessity for implying a prohibition from the imposition of a penalty. The case of Woods v. Armstrong, 54 Ala. 150, is very much like our own case of McConnell v. Kitchens, supra, and falls under that class of cases mentioned in Mandlebaum v. Gregovich, supra, where the sale of the fertilizers was made in violation of a statute intended to prevent imposition or fraud. The cases of Johnson v. Hudson, 11 East, 180; Cope v. Rowlands, 2 Mees. & W. 149; and Smith v. Mashood, 14 Mees. & W. 452,—show that the true inquiry in all cases of this kind is whether the legislative intent was to declare the business unlawful, if carried on without a license, or simply to impose a penalty upon the person who engages in such business without a license. If the former, then no contract made in the pursuit of such business can be enforced; but if the latter, then it may be, and the penalty is simply for the purpose of requiring the person engaging in the business to pay the license tax imposed.

Looking at this case in the light of these authorities, it seems to us that there is nothing either in the statute, or in the ordinance passed in pursuance of such statute, which indicates an intention to declare the business of broker unlawful, if carried on without a license, but that the real object was to enforce the payment of the license tax by imposing a penalty on the person who may engage in such business without paying the license tax. The history of the Act of 1870, under which the city council of Charleston undertook to impose license taxes on certain occupations pursued within the city of Charleston, as well as that of the Act of 1881-82, above referred to, which was passed to repair the defect in the Act of 1870, may be traced in the case of Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 47, and the case between the same parties, practically, in 21 S. C. 318, and shows very clearly that the sole object of this legislation was simply to enable the city council of Charleston to impose license taxes in aid of the revenue of the city, and not for the purpose of making any business or occupation unlawful. Indeed, the very terms of the city ordinance show that it was not the object to make the business of a broker unlawful, for it expressly contemplates that the business of a broker may be lawfully carried on in the city of Charleston for a part of the year—until the 20th of January of that year—without a license, which is a clear indication that it was no part of the legislative intent to condemn the business of a broker, as contrary to the public policy of the city, and that the imposition of a penalty on a person who engages in the business of a broker after that date, without obtaining a license, was solely for the purpose of enforcing the payment of the license tax imposed on brokers, and not for the purpose of declaring such business unlawful. We do not think, therefore, that there was any error in sustaining the demurrer to what is stated in the answer as a third defense, which is, however, claimed in the argument to be a fourth defense.

Under this view, the other questions discussed in the argument, as to the place of the contract, and as to the effect of the interstate commerce law, do not arise, and need not, therefore, be considered.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be affirmed.

WYOMING SUPREME COURT.

STATE of Wyoming

v.

Joel Ware FOSTER, Assignee, etc., of T. A. Kent.

LARAMIE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

v.

SAME.

(.....Wyo.....)

1. The right of a state or a municipality, if any exists, to priority or preference of payment from an insolvent's estate, cannot be asserted after a general assignment for creditors, which passes the title.

2. A statute providing for a release of a claim in full by a creditor who accepts a dividend under an assignment, cannot apply to the state or a municipality, under a constitutional provision that such liability can be extinguished only by payment into the proper treasury.

3. Public moneys placed by general deposit in a bank, do not establish a trust in the estate of the banker on his insolvency, except so far as they can be traced into some specific fund or property.

NOTE.—Priority of state or United States in payment from assets of a debtor.

I. Scope of note generally.

II. Priority of the United States.

a. Upon what based.

b. Constitutionality of provisions for.

c. Superiority over state laws.

d. Construction and scope of.

1. Generally.

2. Who are debtors of the United States.

3. What debts are within the statute.

4. What constitutes insolvency.

5. Sufficiency of assignment to confer priority.

6. Sufficiency of attachment to confer priority.

e. When and to what it attaches.

f. Nature and extent.

29 L. R. A.

g. Marshaling assets.

h. Liability of assignee or representative.

i. Subrogation of sureties.

j. What amounts to a divestiture of the right.

k. How asserted.

III. Priority of the states.

a. Upon what based.

b. Constitutionality of provisions for.

c. Nature and extent.

d. To what indebtedness it applies.

e. Subrogation of surety making payment.

f. When it attaches and how divested.

IV. Priority of claims for taxes.

I. Scope of note generally.

While the right of government to priority of payment of debts due it is held by the courts of a number of the states to have become a part of our

4. Funds in the hands of a trustee who has become insolvent, which are less than the amount of the trust funds, are presumed to belong to the trust.
5. Money remaining in the vaults of a bank and on deposit by it in other banks, when the banker becomes insolvent, will be held to constitute part of a trust fund of greater amount, which had been received by the banker; but it is otherwise with commercial paper representing loans made by him before assignment.

(January 5, 1896.)

RESERVATION by the District Court for Laramie County for the opinion of the jurisprudence by the adoption of the common law and the policy which governed the royal prerogative has been supposed to be traceable in the doctrine as adopted in this country, the numerous departures from the rules of the common law incident to our different institutions, together with the thoroughness with which our courts have treated the subject and its extent, has prompted the confinement of this note to the American cases on the subject.

II. Priority of the United States. a. Upon what based.

The right of the United States to priority of payment of debts due it does not stand upon any sovereign prerogative, but is exclusively founded upon the actual provisions of its statutes. United States v. State Bank of North Carolina (1832) 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 29, 3 L. ed. 308.

The first enactment on the subject will be found in the Duty Collection Act of Congress of August 4, 1790, providing that when any bond for the payment of duties shall not be satisfied on the day it becomes due, the collector shall forthwith cause a prosecution to be commenced for the recovery of the money thereon by action or suit at law in the proper court having cognizance thereof, and in all cases of insolvency, or where the estate in the hands of the executors or administrators shall be insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debt due to the United States on any such bond shall be first satisfied. Ibid.

This was followed by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, providing that when any revenue officer or other person hereafter becoming indebted to the United States, by bond or otherwise, shall become insolvent, or when the estate of any deceased debtor, in the hands of executors or administrators, shall be insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debt due to the United States shall be first satisfied; and the priority thus established shall be deemed to extend as well to cases in which a debtor, not having sufficient property to pay all his debts, shall make a voluntary assignment thereof, or in which the estate and effects of an absconding, concealed, or absent debtor shall be attached by process of law, as to cases in which an act of legal bankruptcy shall be committed. United States v. State Bank of North Carolina, supra.

The Statute of August 4, 1790, was substantially re-enacted in the Act of Congress of March 2, 1799, section 65, which provided, in addition thereto, that any executor, administrator, or assignee or other person, who shall pay any debt due by the person or estate, for whom or for which they are acting, previous to the debt or debts so due to the United States, from such person or estate being first duly satisfied and paid, shall become answerable in their own person or estate for the debt or debts so due to the United States, or so much thereof as may

Supreme Court of questions arising in actions brought by the State and the County of Laramie to establish priority for their claims upon the estate in possession of defendant as assignee of an insolvent debtor. Trust declared as to moneys on hand.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. A. Van Ordel, Frank H. Clark, and A. C. Campbell, for plaintiffs:

The funds received by John Roberts, treasurer, and by him deposited with T. A. Kent, banker, belonged to and were the property of the county of Laramie, Wyoming.

Wyo. Laws 1890-91, chap. 45, p. 177; Mo- remain due and unpaid, and actions or suits at law may be commenced against them for the recovery of the said debt or debts, in the proper court having cognizance thereof, adding a clause substantially the same as the last clause of the Act of March 3, 1797, as above set forth, except that it requires the voluntary assignment to be one for the benefit of creditors, and providing that if the principal in any bond given for duties shall be insolvent or if he be dead and his estate and effects are insufficient to pay his debts and a surety on such bond or the executor, administrator, or assignee of such surety shall pay the money due on such bond, such surety or his representative, or assignee shall have and enjoy the like advantage, priority or preference for the recovery of such moneys out of the estate of the insolvent or deceased principal as are reserved and secured to the United States.

These statutes continued to govern the question until the enactment of the revised statutes, in which the whole was revised and re-enacted, the Act of March 3, 1797, as above set forth, reappearing with substantially no changes except that it was made applicable to "any person indebted," etc., instead of "any revenue officer or other person," as section 3465.

Which was followed by section 3467, providing that every executor, administrator, or assignee or other person who pays any debt due by the person or estate for whom or for which he acts, before he satisfies and pays the debts due to the United States from such person or estate, shall become answerable, in his own person and estate, for the debt so due to the United States, or for so much thereof as may remain due and unpaid.

And by section 3648 providing that when the principal in any bond given to the United States is insolvent, and his estate and effects are insufficient to pay the United States the money due on the bond, any surety, or his representatives, who pays to the United States the money due on the bond, has a like priority for the recovery and receipt of the money out of the estate of the insolvent as is secured to the United States, and may bring and maintain a suit upon the bond, in law or in equity in his own name for the recovery of all moneys paid thereon.

And the provisions of the revised statute remain in force and were not repealed or affected by the bankruptcy laws.

Thus in Lewis v. United States (1875) 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 513, it was said that the provision of the Bankruptcy Act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. at L. 517) for priority of all debts due the United States is in part materia with the several acts giving priority of payment to the United States, and was doubtless put in to recognize and reaffirm the rights which those statutes give and to exclude the possibility of a different conclusion.

But the provision of the act for the formation of national banks for the distribution of the entire Olune v. La Plata County Comrs. 19 Colo. 123.

John Roberts, treasurer, being simply the custodian of these funds belonging to Laramie county, and, as such custodian, depositing the same with T. A. Kent, banker, and the said T. A. Kent, banker, receiving the same at the time and at all times well knowing them to be the funds of Laramie county—such deposits became trust funds in the hands of T. A. Kent as trustee.

McColl v. Fraser, 40 Hun. 118; Wells, Fargo & Co. v. Robinson, 13 Cal. 184.

The funds of the estate of T. A. Kent, banker, at the time of his failure, and by him transferred to Joel Ware Foster, assignee, are charged with a trust as a part of the funds of Laramie county.

Peake v. Elliott, 30 Kan. 156, 46 Am. Rep. 90; People v. City Bank of Rochester, 96 N. Y. 35; Frelinghuysen v. Nugent, 86 Fed. Rep. 239; Re Armstrong, 33 Fed. Rep. 406; First Nat. Bank of Montgomery v. Armstrong, 36 Fed. Rep. 59; People v. Bank of Danville, 39 Hun. 187; McColl v. Fraser, supra; Fifth Nat. Bank of St. Louis, Mo., v. Armstrong, 40 Fed. Rep. 46; Central Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693; First Nat. Bank of Central City v. Hummel, 8 L. R. A. 788, 14 Colo. 259, affirmed assets of the bank in case of insolvency giving no preference to any claim except for moneys to reimburse the United States for advances in redeeming the notes, is inconsistent with and repugnant to U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5466, giving priority to demands of the United States against insolvents, previously enacted as applied to demands against national banks, and supercedes the latter to the extent of the repugnancy, although the United States is not expressly mentioned in it, as it is clearly designed to prescribe the only rules which should govern on the subject. Cook County Nat. Bank of Chicago v. United States (1882) 107 U. S. 445, 27 L. ed. 537.

b. Constitutionality of provisions for.

Congress has a constitutional right to claim preference in the payment of claims due the United States out of the estate of the public debtor. Com. v. Lewis (1814) 6 Binn. 266.

And the constitutionality of the acts of congress providing therefor has been upheld on different grounds.

Thus the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, is held to be constitutional and valid, as falling within the power to provide for the common defense and general welfare, in United States v. Clason (1806) 2 Brev. 118.

And it was held to be a valid exercise of legislative power under the constitutional provision authorizing congress to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers vested by the constitution in the government of the United States or any department thereof, in United States v. Fisher (1804) 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 358, 2 L. ed. 304.

So it is not subject to the objection that it interferes with the right of state sovereignty respecting the dignity of debts and defeats the measures the states have a right to adopt to secure themselves against delinquencies, on the part of their own revenue offices, as that is the necessary consequence of the supremacy of the laws of the United States on all subjects to which the power of congress extends, the object being an objection to the constitution itself. Ibid.

So in Aikin v. Dunlap (1819) 16 Johns. 77, it was said that it cannot be doubted that congress has the right to stipulate for preference in their contracts for securing the public revenue.

c. Superiority over state laws.

The law of congress giving the right of priority of payment of an indebtedness due to the United States supercedes all state laws upon the subject of the distribution of those estates that come within its provisions. United States v. Duncan (1850) 4 McLean, 607, 13 Ill. 627.

And the local laws of a state cannot create a priority in favor of other creditors which will supercede that of the United States. Field v. United States (1835) 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 122, 9 L. ed. 94.

So the construction of the act of congress giving the United States the right of priority of payment of an indebtedness due to other creditors cannot depend upon the provisions of any particular statutes of a state which does not fall within its very terms. United States v. McLeellan (1836) 3 Sumn. 845.

And when property subject to a lien for a tax due the United States to which priority is given is sold under process issued from a state court, that court will distribute the proceeds and recognize the priority of the claim of the United States. Dungan's App. (1871) 68 Pa. 204, 8 Am. Rep. 169.

In Aikin v. Dunlap (1819) 16 Johns. 77, the court declined to decide whether the preference given by the act of congress controlled the rule of distribution adopted by the statutes of the states, upon the ground that the question was not immediately before it but stated that, in its opinion, the insolvency law must be considered as subject to the paramount law of congress and must be so construed as to give it effect.

d. Construction and scope of.

1. Generally.

"The statutes giving the government a priority are presumed to have for their object the public good, and are, therefore, to be liberally construed." United States v. Duncan (1850) 4 McLean, 607, 13 Ill. 523; United States v. State Bank of North Carolina (1882) 81 U. S. 6 Pet. 22, 8 L. ed. 308; Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware (1838) 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 134, 9 L. ed. 1023.

And ought to receive a fair and reasonable interpretation according to the just import of their terms. United States v. State Bank of North Carolina, supra.

In that case, it was said that the same policy which governed in the case of the royal prerogative may be clearly traced in these statutes. Ibid.

In Com. v. Phoenix Bank (1846) 11 Met. 123, however, it was said that claims to a preference and payment in full are not favored by any considerations of equity, and that the general rule is that when several creditors are entitled to payment from a fund insufficient to satisfy the whole, they shall share in proportion, and, in order to establish such preference, it must be made plainly to appear that the case is within the rule of law that secures it.

These statutes provide for four classes of cases: First, cases where the estate and effects of any deceased debtor in the hands of his executors or administrators are insufficient to pay his debts; secondly, cases where the debtor, not having property sufficient to pay all his debts, has made a voluntary assignment thereof for the benefit of his creditors; thirdly, cases where the estate and effects of an absconding, concealed or absent debtor have been attached by process of law; and fourthly, cases where the debtor has committed a legal act of bankruptcy. Conard v. Nicholl (1890) 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 201, 7 L. ed. 962; United States v. Canal Bank

Hummel v. First Nat. Bank of Central City, 2 Colo. App. 571; Smith v. Combs, 49 N. J. Eq. 420; Griffin v. Chase, 86 Neb. 328; Anheuser-Busch Brewing Assn. v. Morris, Id. 13; San Diego County v. California Nat. Bank, 52 Fed. Rep. 59.

The said T. A. Kent, banker, having mingled the funds of Laramie county entrusted to him, with his own funds and used the same for the benefit of his estate which thereafter passed, by his assignment, into the hands of Joel Ware Foster, assignee, such estate generally is now charged with the trust, and the said Laramie county is entitled to the repayment of its funds out of the said estate before any use of the same for the payment of the general indebtedness of the estate.

McClure v. La Plata County Comrs. 19 Colo. 123; Myers v. Clay Center Board of Education, 51 Kan. 87; Hubbard v. Alamo Irrigating & Mfg. Co. 53 Kan. 637; San Diego County v. California Nat. Bank, supra; Independent Dist. of Boyer v. King, 80 Iowa, 497; McLeod v. Evans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287; Francis v. Evans, 69 Wis. 115; Bowers v. Evans, 71 Wis. 133; Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flinders, 87 Wis. 237; Davenport Plow Co. v. Lamp, 80 Iowa, 722.

Messrs. Charles N. Potter, Atty.-Gen., and J. F. Valle, also for plaintiffs:

(1844) 3 Story, C. C. 79; United States v. McLellan (1836) 3 Sumn. 845; United States v. Griswold (1861) 8 Fed. Rep. 496.

The United States has no lien upon the real estate of a person indebted to it until suit is brought, unless a notorious insolvency or bankruptcy has taken place, or being unable to pay his debts, the debtor has made a voluntary assignment of all his property, or the debtor, having absconded, concealed or absented himself, his property has been attached on that ground, by process of law. United States v. Hooe (1806) 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 73, 2 L. ed. 370.

To entitle the United States to preference over other creditors, it must be shown that the debtor was insolvent and had voluntarily assigned all his property for the benefit of creditors, or that an attachment had been taken out against his property as an absconding and absent debtor, and prosecuted to effect. McLean v. Rankin (1808) 3 Johns. 269.

So in Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware (1898) 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 1017, in construing the Act of Congress of 1797, chap. 74 § 5, providing for priority of payment of the United States in cases of insolvency, the court said: "First, that no lien is created by the statute; secondly, the priority established can never attach while the debtor continues the owner and in possession of the property, although he may be unable to pay all his debts; thirdly, no evidence can be received of the insolvency of the debtor until he has been devastated of his property in one of the modes stated in the section; and fourthly, whenever he is thus devastated of his property the person who becomes invested with the title is thereby made a trustee for the United States, and is bound to pay their debt first out of the proceeds of the debtor's property."

And in United States v. Crookshank (1832) 1 Edw. Ch. 233, 6 L. ed. 121, it was said that the precedence of payment to which the United States is entitled can only arise when the property of the debtor has passed into the hands of assignees in the case of insolvency, or when, in the event of the death of the debtor, his estate has passed to executors or administrators.

2. Who are debtors of the United States.

It is to be observed that the provision of the revised statute includes "any person indebted," etc.

The previous Statute of 1797, however, where the expression used was "any revenue officer or other person," was held to include all debtors of the United States and not to be confined to revenue officers and persons accountable for public money, in the United States v. Fisher (1804) 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 258, 2 L. ed. 304.

And in Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware (1898) 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 1017, in construing the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, it was said that "all debtors to the United States, whatever their character, and by whatever mode bound, may be fairly included within the language" and "that it is manifest that congress intended to give priority of payment to the United States over all other creditors in the cases stated therein."

So it extends to debtors of the United States generally, or at any rate to receivers of the public money whether officers or not, if entrusted by the United States with the receipt or application of public moneys, though the debtor be a foreigner resident within the United States. United States v. Clason (1806) 2 Brev. 118.

And the United States is entitled to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it out of the assets of an insolvent debtor under the acts of congress providing therefor though the contract by which the indebtedness was incurred was made with a foreigner, in a foreign country. Harrison v. Sterry (1809) 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 239, 3 L. ed. 104.

And an agent of the United States in England cannot, by conforming to the English bankrupt laws, lessen or affect the right of the United States to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it out of his estate. Harrison v. Sterry (1807) Bee, 246.

A firm of bankers in London appointed by the United States government disbursing agents of the navy department, some of the members of which are residents of Great Britain and some of the United States, and all the American members of which were adjudicated bankrupts, the firm there being indebted to the United States for moneys placed in its hands by the department for disbursement, is within the meaning of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, section 5, providing for priority of payment of the United States when any revenue officer or other person indebted to the United States shall become insolvent. Lewis v. United States (1875) 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 513.

So one who, with a fraudulent purpose to secure to himself the use of public money, receives it with full knowledge that it belongs to the United States, is indebted to the United States within the meaning of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797. Bayne v. United States (1876) 93 U. S. 642, 23 L. ed. 997.

And corporations are persons within the meaning of that act. Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware (1898) 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 1017.

In Com. v. Phoenix Bank (1846) 11 Met. 129, however, it was held without referring to Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware, above set forth, that an incorporated bank is not a person from which the United States would be entitled to priority of payment of a debt due it within the provisions of that act, the court saying that it was of the opinion that by a fair construction of the act it did not extend to corporations.

The burden rests with persons claiming exemption from the provision of the act providing for priority of payment to the United States where any revenue officer or other person indebted to it shall become insolvent, to show that they are not

A debt due to the state is entitled to a preference over debts due to individuals.

The king's "debt shall be preferred before a debt of any of his subjects."

1 Bl. Com. p. 240; 2 Bl. Com. p. 409; 8 Bl. Com. p. 420; Broom, Legal Maxims, p. 69; Giles v. Grover, 1 Clark & F. 72.

Various English statutes declared and affirmed this right, from Magna Charta down.

Magna Charta, A. D. 1225, 9 Hen. III., chap. 18, (1 Stat. at L. p. 7); 25 Edw. III., chap. 19, (2 Stat. at L. 59); 33 Hen. VIII. chap. 39, § 74, (5 Stat. at L. 127); 18 Eliz. chap. 4, (6 Stat. at L. pp. 262, 263).

The principle has been frequently applied in the United States.

State v. Rogers, 2 Harr. & M'H. 196; Murray v. Ridley, 3 Harr. & M'H. 175; Contee v. Chew, 1 Harr. & J. 417; State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 205, 26 Am. Dec. 561; Smith v. State, 5 Gill, 45; Re Groene's Estate, 4 Md. Ch. 356; State v. Baltimore, 10 Md. 515; Orem v. Wrightson, 51 Md. 42, 34 Am. Rep. 296; Robinson v. Bank of Darien, 18 Ga. 96; Com. v. Cook, 8 Bush, 224; State v. Rouse, 49 Mo. 586; Com. v. Lewis, 6 Binn. 270.

A voluntary assignment, under the Wyoming statute, does not defeat the state's right to a preference, as between the state and other creditors not having specific liens.

In the construction of a statute, if the sovereign (the state) is not specifically and expressly within its provisions. Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware, supra.

3. What debts are within the statute.

In Lewis v. United States (1875) 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 518, the court construed the provision of the Bankruptcy Act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. at L. 517), providing for priority of all debts due the United States and all taxes and assessments under the laws thereof, and the Act of Congress of March 3, 1793, § 5 (1 Stat. at L. 515), providing for priority of debts due to the United States from any revenue officer or other person, saying that the form of the indebtedness is immaterial. It may be by simple contract, specialty, judgment, decree or otherwise by record. The debt may be legal or equitable, and have been incurred in this country or abroad; a valid indebtedness is as effectual in one form as another, and the debtors may be joint or several, and principals or sureties. No distinction is made by the statutes, all are included.

And in Howe v. Sheppard (1836) 2 Sumn. 133, it was held that the Act of Congress of 1797 applies to equitable as well as legal debts.

Thus the United States as holder of a protested bill of exchange which has been negotiated in the ordinary course of trade, is entitled to be preferred to the general creditors of the person liable thereon under the Act of Congress of 1797, § 5. United States v. Fisher (1804) 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 358, 2 L. ed. 804.

And a judgment in favor of the United States against a bankrupt in an action for the recovery of penalties for violation of the internal revenue laws in selling cigar lights without tax stamps is a debt provable in bankruptcy proceedings against the debtor so far as it did not consist of costs of the suit and of which the United States is entitled to priority of payment to that extent, although the judgment was obtained after the adjudication. Re Rosey (1873) 6 Ben. 507, 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 509.

And a claim of an insolvent debtor against the principal in a bond for duties which he had been compelled to pay as surety passes to his assignee and the right of the United States to priority of payment of a judgment debt due it attaches thereto and the claim is payable out of the avails of a claim by the principal on the bond against the government of Spain which was afterwards paid, under the Florida treaty, and came to the hands of the assignee. Hunter v. United States (1834) 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 173, 8 L. ed. 86.

So a claim of the United States against the estate of a deceased insolvent marshal is entitled to priority under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3466, 3467, over a claim by a deputy marshal against the marshal for services. Gregory's Estate (1876) 11 Phila. 123.

The United States is not entitled to priority of payment of a claim against an insolvent national bank, out of its assets over other creditors under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5466, giving priority to demands of 29 L. R. A.

the United States against insolvents, however, as the act authorizing the formation of national banks is a separate code by itself, neither limited nor enlarged by other statutory provisions with respect to the settlement of demands against insolvents or their estates and giving no preference to any claim except for moneys, to reimburse the United States for advances in reclaiming notes. Cook County Nat. Bank of Chicago v. United States (1882) 107 U. S. 445, 27 L. ed. 537, reversing United States v. Cook County Nat. Bank (1879) 9 Bias. 55.

And it is not given a right of priority of payment of a claim due it out of the assets of an insolvent national bank over other creditors by the Bankrupt Act (14 Stat. at L. 517) giving priority to the demands of the United States against the estates of bankrupts, as that enactment deals with the estates of persons adjudged to be insolvent under that law and covers only the distribution of their estates. Cook County Nat. Bank of Chicago v. United States, supra.

So in Howe v. Sheppard (1836) 2 Sumn. 133, it was said that the United States cannot enforce its right of priority in a suit at law as assignee of a judgment of a private creditor of an insolvent debtor when the suit is brought in the name of the creditor, but that the assignment of the judgment transfers the debt, and that the government might enforce the judgment against the debtor by bill in equity, but the court stated that this was not the question intended to be raised.

And in Com. v. Phoenix Bank (1846) 11 Met. 123, the opinion was expressed that deposits made by persons and recruiting officers in a bank, in their own names, though designating the capacity in which they act, do not constitute the bank a debtor of the United States so as to entitle it to priority of payment when the officers themselves are made the absolute debtors of the United States.

See, also, as to debts due to officers and agencies of government, infra, heading, Priority of the states, subhead, To what indebtedness it applies.

Nor does the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, § 5, apply to a debt which was due before the act was passed, though the balance was not adjusted at the treasury until after its passage. United States v. Bryan (1815) 18 U. S. 9 Cranch, 374, 3 L. ed. 764.

But a debt due to the United States from a deceased revenue officer is entitled to priority of payment out of the assets in the hands of his administrators in Pennsylvania, whether the debt arose before or after the passage of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, as it would have been entitled to such priority under the laws of that state previously existing. Com. v. Lewis (1814) 6 Binn. 268.

The priority to which the United States is entitled under that act comprehends a bond for the payment of duties executed anterior to the date of the assignment but payable afterwards. United States v. State Bank of North Carolina (1832) 21 U. S. 6 Pet. 29, 8 L. ed. 308.

mentioned in the statute, it will not be bound.

Willison v. Berkley, 1 Plowd. 289 a.

(a). As to the statute of limitations.

United States v. Hoar, 2 Mason, 311. See also People v. Gilbert, 18 Johns. 227; Com. v. Johnson, 6 Pa. 136; Jesselyn v. Stone, 28 Miss. 753.

(b). As applied to questions of jurisdiction.

United States v. Greene, 4 Mason, 427. See also United States v. Heves, Crabbe, 807, 818; State v. Garland, 29 N. C. 48; The Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 227, 22 L. ed. 80.

(c). As applied to grants by the sovereign.

Feather v. Queen, 6 Best & S. 257; Dixon v. London Small Arms Co. L. R. 1 App. Cas. 682.

(d). As applied to claims asserted against the state.

Divine v. Harvie, 7 T. B. Mon. 439, 18 Am. Dec. 194.

(e). As to claims of creditors on lands escheated to the state.

Den v. O'Hanlon, 21 N. J. L. 582.

(f). As to taxes against property held in public interests.

Public Schools Trustees v. Trenton, 30 N. J. Eq. 667.

(g). As to state's liability for official fees.

4. What constitutes insolvency.

The mere inability of a debtor to pay his debts does not entitle the United States to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it under the Act of Congress providing for such priority in case of the insolvency of the debtor. Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaton (1886) 7 Gill & J. 421, 28 Am. Dec. 223; United States v. Griswold (1881) 8 Fed. Rep. 496; Thelusson v. Smith (1817) 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 396, 4 L. ed. 271; Com. v. Phoenix Bank (1846) 11 Met. 129.

And it is not entitled to priority of payment of an indebtedness on bonds given for duties when the debtor has not sufficient property to pay his debts, but has made no general assignment for the benefit of creditors either voluntarily or by process of law. Smith v. Tinker (1806) 2 Day, 236.

Nor is it sufficient that the winding up of his affairs is effected in whole or in part by legal proceedings. It must be accompanied by a voluntary general assignment or a legal bankruptcy. Com. v. Phoenix Bank, supra.

It must be a legal, actual and known insolvency manifested by some notorious act of the debtor pursuant to law. Prince v. Bartlett (1814) 12 U. S. 8 Cranch, 431, 3 L. ed. 614; Marshall v. Barclay (1823) 1 Paige, 159, 2 L. ed. 600.

The word "insolvency" in the acts of congress providing for the priority of payment of an indebtedness to the United States means a legal insolvency and does not apply to an inability on the part of the debtor to satisfy all his debts where his insolvency was not notoriously known. Thelusson v. Smith (1817) 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 396, 4 L. ed. 271.

Some overt and notorious act is meant which the laws of the state recognize as an insolvency. Bartlett v. Prince (1812) 9 Mass. 431; Marshall v. Barclay (1823) 1 Paige, 159, 2 L. ed. 600.

And it relates to such a general divestment of property as would, in fact, be equivalent to insolvency in its technical sense. It supposes that all the debtor's property has passed from him. Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1822) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 386, 7 L. ed. 189.

Thus the Act of Congress of 1797, providing that, in case of insolvency, debts due to the United States shall be first paid, is confined to cases of declared insolvency, when the effects of the debtor are to be appropriated to the payment of his debts, and does not apply to a case of a prior conveyance by the debtor to a bona fide purchaser, as no lien is created by the statute. Otis v. Warren (1819) 16 Mass. 53.

"Its insolvency, if not established by legal proceedings resulting in the appointment of an official assignee, must be accompanied by a voluntary assignment of substantially all the debtor's property; so long as it remains in his own hands, any partial sale, transfer, or pledge of it does not bring the case within the statute." United States v. Griswold (1881) 8 Fed. Rep. 496.

And the Act of March 2, 1790, only gives preference to the United States on custom-house bonds as against other creditors, after a notorious act of 29 L. R. A.

insolvency, as where the debtor has assigned for the benefit of creditors, when he has absconded and his property is attached, etc. United States v. King (1801) Wall. C. C. 12.

And the United States is not entitled to priority of payment of custom-house bonds due it over another creditor of the debtor firm to whom an assignment of certain property had been made in satisfaction of his debt, though at the time of such assignment the house was, in fact, insolvent, where it continued in business, though embarrassed, and no act of bankruptcy had been committed and no assignment for creditors made or attachment issued. Ibid.

Thus the concealment of a debtor, while insolvent to avoid arrest by his creditors is not a legal act of bankruptcy, which will give the United States the right of priority of payment of a debt due it from the insolvent, the right of priority not attaching while the property remains in the hands of the debtor and subject to his control. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 620.

And a mortgage made while the mortgagor was not legally a bankrupt or insolvent, though in fact unable to pay his debts, as a security for an ordinary loan and which did not amount to and was not pretended to be a voluntary assignment of all his property for the benefit of his creditors, does not constitute an act of bankruptcy and does not give the United States a right of priority of payment of an indebtedness due it under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 2466. United States v. Griswold (1881) 8 Fed. Rep. 496.

Nor is the United States entitled to priority of payment of an indebtedness out of the assets of a bank under Act of Congress of 1797, chap. 74, § 5, where the assets of the bank are put in the hands of receivers under process issued by the bank commissioners pursuant to U. S. Stat. 1838, chap. 14, § 5, for the purpose of the adjustment of its affairs according to the provisions of U. S. Rev. Stat., chap. 44, such proceedings not constituting a legal bankruptcy or insolvency within the meaning of the act. Com. v. Phoenix Bank (1846) 11 Met. 129.

A deed executed by a person indebted to the United States conveying all the property in his possession to trustees for the payment of his debts, not including the debt to the United States, is an act of insolvency within the provisions of the act of congress, however, and such priority attaches at the instant the deed is executed and cannot be defeated by a subsequent decision, in his favor, in an action for the recovery of property which had never been in his possession upon an unascertained claim of the debtor's wife. United States v. The Marshal of Dist. of North Carolina (1833) 2 Brook. 438.

And a reservation of a female slave, with her three children, worth between three and four hundred dollars, from a deed of assignment for the benefit of creditors conveying a large property, is but a trivial portion of the estate, and does not prevent the deed from constituting an act of in-

State v. Kelsey, 44 N. J. L. 1.

The state is not affected by bankruptcy or insolvent laws.

Rex v. Picley, Bunn. 202; Ex parte Temple, 2 Ves. & B. 805; People v. Rossiter, 4 Cow. 148; People v. Herkimer, 4 Cow. 345, 15 Am. Dec. 879. See also Saunders v. Com. 10 Gratt. 494; Com. v. Hutchinson, 10 Pa. 466; Public Schools Trustees v. Trenton, 80 N. J. Eq. 684; State v. Camden County Common Pleas Ct. 51 N. J. L. 426; Greeley v. Provident Sav. Bank, 98 Mo. 458.

The language of the assignment act of Wyoming shows that it was not intended to apply to the state.

See The Dollar Sav. Bank v. United States, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 229, 23 L. ed. 82; Den v. O'Hanlon, 21 N. J. L. 590. See also King v. Allen, 15 East, 333.

Under the assignment law, the assignee takes the property of his assignor, subject to the equitable lien of the state for the amount due to it.

State v. Rouss, 49 Mo. 596; Greeley v. Provident Sav. Bank, 98 Mo. 460; Dunlap v. Gallatin County, 15 Ill. 7; Re Fulton's Estate, 51 Pa. 211; Ludington's Petition, 5 Abb. N. C. 818; Gifford v. Black, 22 Ind. 444.

In Re Cavin's Petition v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256, the court says upon an accounting in solvenoy which will entitle a debt due to the United States to priority of payment, especially when they were not reduced to possession until after the assignment. Ibid.

An assignment by a partnership of all the partnership effects for the payment of its debts for which the partnership fund is inadequate, is an act of insolvenoy which will entitle the United States to priority of payment of a debt due it from the firm, though one of the partners remained solvent. United States v. Shelton (1821) 1 Brock. 517.

And the United States, having obtained a joint judgment against all the obligors on a joint and several bond given for duties, both principal and sureties, and one of the obligors having died and the others having become insolvent, may, by virtue of its right of priority in case of insolvenoy, maintain a suit in equity for the recovery of the debt out of the assets of the deceased judgment debtor whose estate was also insolvent. United States v. Cushman (1836) 2 Sumn. 423.

5. Sufficiency of assignment to confer priority.

There must be, in some way, an assignment of the debtor's property to a third person for distribution among his creditors before the statute giving priority to a debt due to the United States, can be invoked. Bush v. United States (1832) 8 Sawy. 322, 15 Cent. L. J. 427; Smith v. Tinker (1804) 2 Day, 236.

Thus a consignment of goods by a debtor abroad, though insolvent, with directions to have them sold and the proceeds paid to his creditors in the state, is not such an assignment of his property as will entitle the United States to priority of payment of a claim due it out of the assets of the debtor under the act of congress providing therefor in case of a voluntary assignment. McLean v. Rankin (1808) 3 Johns. 369.

"Nor is a sale or mortgage for a present consideration, and not on account of a pre-existing debt or obligation, an assignment, actually speaking, or within the spirit or meaning of the statute which contemplates that the debtor shall thereby divest himself of his property for the benefit of one or more of his creditors." United States v. Griswold (1881) 8 Fed. Rep. 466.

And the election of trustees to wind up the business of a debtor bank under a special statute passed upon the bank's application, is not such an assignment of all its property as will entitle the United States to priority of payment of a debt due it out of the funds of the bank under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, where the trustees refused to accept the trust. Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware (1888) 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 1017, affirming Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaston (1836) 7 Gill & J. 421, 28 Am. Dec. 226.

Or where they were not selected after notice as required by the special act, and did not accept the trust. Farmers' Bank of Delaware v. Beaston, supra.

29 L. R. A.

And the appointment of receivers of a debtor banking corporation is not such a transfer and possession of the property of the bank as will entitle the United States to priority of payment of a claim due it within the meaning of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, providing for such priority, especially where it does not appear that the power conferred upon them was ever executed. Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware, supra.

Nor is the United States entitled to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it under the acts of congress providing therefor where the debtor has made an assignment of his property, unless the assignment covered all his property. United States v. Howland (1819) 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 108, 4 L. ed. 626; United States v. Mott (1822) 1 Paine, C. C. 188.

It must appear that the assignment was of all his property, or that it was made with a view to defeat the claim of the United States. Marshall v. Barclay (1828) 1 Paige, 159, 2 L. ed. 600.

An assignment for the benefit of creditors which is partial on its face and partial in fact, not including all the assignor's property, is not one which will entitle the United States to priority of payment of a claim due. United States v. Bank of United States (1844) 8 Rob. (La.) 262; United States v. Amory (1880) 5 Mason, 455.

An omission of portions of the debtor's property not by accident or for the purpose of evading the statute, but to pay particular creditors, renders the assignment ineffective to give priority to the United States, though the omitted portion did not extend one-twentieth of the whole. United States v. Amory, supra.

So when an assignment for the benefit of creditors purports upon its face to convey specific property only and not to be universal in its operation, it is necessary in a proceeding by the United States to establish a right to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it upon the ground of a general assignment to expressly aver that the assignment conveys all the property of the debtor. United States v. Munroe (1830) 5 Mason, 572.

And an assignment of all the debtor's property in a schedule referred to, which enumerates only specific property and does not purport to be all, affords no presumption that it is all the debtor's property, and is not such an assignment as will entitle the United States to priority of payment of a debt due it when there is no proof that it contained all or that there was a suppression of fact with the fraudulent design to evade the rights of the United States. United States v. Langton (1829) 5 Mason, 280.

And the burden of proof rests with the United States to establish that an assignment for the benefit of creditors not purporting on its face to be of all the debtor's property does in fact contain all of it, where it insists on priority of payment of an indebtedness due it under the Act of Congress of 1799, chap. 123, § 65. United States v. Langton, supra; United States v. Howland (1819) 17 U. S. 4 bankruptcy or insolvency a trust creditor is not entitled to a preference over general creditors of the insolvent, merely on the ground of the nature of his claim, that is, that he is a trust creditor as distinguished from a general creditor.

See also Atkinson v. Rochester Printing Co. 114 N. Y. 168.

Mours, Lacey & Van Devanter and Baird & Churchill, for defendant:

Wherever the property of a party has been wrongfully misapplied, or a trust fund has been wrongfully converted, if its identity can be traced, it will be held, in its new form, liable to the rights of the original owner cestui que trust; and conversely, if its identity cannot be traced, the remedy of the cestui que trust against any specific property, is lost.

2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1258, and authorities cited; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1051, and authorities cited; 2 Perry, Tr. §§ 885 et seq., and authorities cited; 1 Beach, Eq. Jur. §§ 284, 286.

In Little v. Chadwick, 7 L. R. A. 570, 151 Mass. 109, the court says: "When trust money becomes so mixed up with the trustee's individual funds that it is impossible to trace and identify it as entering into some specific property, the trust ceases."

In Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 287, the court holds that the right to follow Wheat, 108, 4 L. ed. 622; United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

But an assignment for the benefit of creditors, to give the United States the right of priority of payment of an indebtedness due it from the assignor, must be of all the debtor's property as contradistinguished from a partial assignment or professedly an assignment of part of the debtor's property only. United States v. Clark, supra.

And the omission by accident or mistake of an article of property from an assignment for the benefit of creditors which purports to be general and does not show that the intention was that it should be partial as opposed to a general one will not defeat the right of the United States to priority of payment of a debt due it out of the assets. Ibid.

And a small portion of the property of a debtor left out of an assignment for the benefit of creditors made by him will not defeat the right of the United States to priority of payment of a debt due it. United States v. Langton, supra.

An assignee for the benefit of creditors is concluded from disputing the generality of the assignment and setting up the omission of an item of property therefrom for the purpose of defeating the right to priority of payment of the United States, when the assignment was general in form and given out to be general and so understood and declared by the parties. United States v. Clark, supra.

In United States v. Hoos (1805) 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 78, 2 L. ed. 370, however, it was said that "if a trivial portion of an estate should be left out, for the purpose of evading the act, it would be considered as a fraud upon the law, and the parties would not be enabled to avail themselves of such a contrivance."

So an assignment, though it must be of all the debtor's property, need not, under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, be for the benefit of all his creditors. United States v. Mott (1822) 1 Paine, C. C. 188.

And the rule would undoubtedly be the same under section 3406 of the Revised Statutes as the language of the Act of March 3, 1797, "a voluntary assignment thereof" is there reproduced.

But an assignment by a debtor of his property for the benefit of a single creditor providing for the payment of no debts except such as were due him, or upon which he was liable as surety, or for the benefit of one or more creditors to discharge the debts due them, is not such an assignment as will give the United States the right of priority of payment of a debt due it under the Act of Congress of 1799, chap. 123, § 65, providing therefor, where the debtor shall make a voluntary assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors. Bouchaud v. Dias (1848) 1 N. Y. 201, reversing 10 Paige, 445, 4 L. ed. 1044, as to this point. United States v. McLellan (1838) 8 Sumn. 345.

Unless it was given for the purpose of evading the right of priority given by the statute. United States v. McLellan, supra.

30 L. R. A.

And U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3046, providing for the priority of payment of an indebtedness due the United States, is only applicable to cases where the debtor's estate, either by his death, legal bankruptcy or insolvency has passed into the hands of an administrator or assignee for the benefit of creditors or where the debtor himself has voluntarily made such disposition of it, and not to a conveyance, assignment or transfer, by whatever means accomplished, to a real or pretended creditor or creditors in payment or satisfaction of a debt or claim. Bush v. United States (1832) 15 Cent. L. J. 427, 8 Sawy. 322.

But "an assignment may be made, within the statutes, by one or more instruments to one or more persons at different dates, provided that the circumstances warrant the conclusion that they are all the result of a pre-existing purpose to assign the insolvent's property for the benefit of his creditors." United States v. Griswold (1881) 8 Fed. Rep. 496.

An insolvent debtor who assigns all his property by different acts cannot thereby, under the pretext that the assignment was partial and not general, defeat the right of the United States to priority of payment of a claim due it. United States v. Bank of United States (1844) 8 Rob. (La.) 263.

And when one who has ceased to do business and is clearly insolvent, with the intent to assign his whole estate for the benefit of creditors, first assigns a part for the benefit of one set of creditors and afterwards assigns the residue for the benefit of another set, the two assignments will be regarded as one transaction, constituting an assignment of all the debtor's property which will entitle the United States to priority of payment of a debt due it under the acts of congress providing therefor. Downing v. Kintzing (1816) 2 Serg. & R. 326; Marshall v. Barclay (1823) 1 Paige, 159, 2 L. ed. 600.

So judgments confessed by a person indebted to the United States, which, when docketed, operate to transfer to the creditors therein substantially all the property owned by him after satisfying specific liens thereon, may constitute a voluntary assignment within the meaning of the statute giving priority of payment to the United States. United States v. Griswold (1881) 8 Fed. Rep. 496.

But the confession of judgments by a debtor unable to pay his debts, to sundry persons, for an aggregate sum, which, together with his indebtedness to the United States and sundry mortgage creditors, far exceeded the value of his assets, most of which were based upon fictitious claims and made with intent to hinder, delay and defraud the United States in the collection of its claim, does not amount to an assignment, within the purview of the act of congress giving priority to the United States. Bush v. United States (1832) 15 Cent. L. J. 427, 8 Sawy. 322.

So the right of priority of the United States attaches in case of an assignment by an agent of the United States in England who is indebted to it trust moneys into other property has its basis in the right of property, and never was based upon the theory of preference by reason of unlawful conversion, and that the guiding principle is that a trustee cannot assert a title of his own to trust property.

In Peters v. Bain, 138 U. S. 670, 671, 693, 83 L. ed. 696, 704, the court held that before the bank could claim a lien upon, or preferential payment out of, any particular piece of property, the funds of the bank must be distinctly and directly traced into that particular piece of property.

See also Commercial Nat. Bank v. Armstrong, 39 Fed. Rep. 684; Philadelphia Nat.

Bank v. Dowd, 2 L. R. A. 490, 88 Fed. Rep. 172; Multnomah County v. Oregon Nat. Bank, 61 Fed. Rep. 912; Illinois Trust & Sav. Bank of Chicago v. First Nat. Bank of Buffalo, 15 Fed. Rep. 858; Phelan v. Iron Mountain Bank, 4 Dill. 88.

In Shields v. Thomas, 71 Miss. 260, the court says, "The principle of following trust funds in equity is fully discussed in Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 13 Ch. Div. 696, and Central Nat. Bank of Baltimore v. Connecticut Mut. L. Ins. Co. 104 U. S. 54, 26 L. ed. 693. The rule announced in these cases, as we understand it, is that trust property will be followed by a court of equity through all its where the property of the debtor is within the jurisdiction of our courts. Harrison v. Sterry (1807) Bee, 246.

And an assignment made by a debtor when his property was about to be levied upon under judgments in favor of a creditor, in trust, first for the debt of such creditor and then for a debt to the United States, is a voluntary assignment which will entitle the United States to preference under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, but it is fraudulent and void as against the United States though the creditor gave up his intention of levying in consideration thereof, and the property could be sold thereunder for the benefit of the United States. United States v. Mott (1822) 1 Paine, C. C. 138.

6. Sufficiency of attachment to confer priority.

There are two classes of attachment in the United States: In the one the effect is to vest the property in trustees for the benefit of all the debtor's creditors; in the other class the attachment is for the exclusive benefit of the attaching creditor, and the provision of the United States statutes giving priority in case of the attachment of the estate and effects of an absconding, concealed or absent debtor applies only to the former class. United States v. Wilkinson (1878) 5 Dill. 275.

Thus the right of the United States to priority of payment of debts due it given by U. S. Rev. Stat. §3466, when the estate and effects of an absconding, concealed or absent debtor are attached by process of law, does not attach where the estate and effects of the debtor are attached, as under the Missouri laws, for the exclusive benefit of the attaching creditor. Ibid.

And the seizure of the property of a person indebted to the United States under attachments and executions on private claims does not constitute such an insolvency as will give priority of payment to the United States when it does not appear that the property was attached as that of an absconding, concealed or absent debtor, or that the debtor had made a voluntary assignment of his property for the benefit of creditors or committed any act of bankruptcy, though the property seized was insufficient to pay the claims exhibited, and the debtor was unable to pay his debts. Prince v. Bartlett (1814) 12 U. S. 8 Cranoh, 481, 3 L. ed. 614.

So a foreign attachment under the Massachusetts statute establishing the trustee process which does not require that the debtor whose goods or effects are attached should have absconded, concealed himself, or should be absent, its principal office being to attach credits or effects which cannot be reached by ordinary process, is not an attachment of the effects of an absconding, concealed, or absent debtor within the provisions of the Act of Congress of 1797, chap. 74, § 5, providing for priority of payment to the United States in such case. Watkins v. Otis (1824) 2 Pick. 88.

And an attachment which is taken out and afterwards withdrawn by consent of creditors without any proceedings under it is not such an attachment as will give the United States priority of payment of a debt due it out of the assets of the debtor under the act of congress. McLean v. Rankin (1808) 3 Johns. 369.

e. When and to what it attaches.

The right of the United States to priority of payment of debts due it attaches at the time of the death of the debtor or the completion of the act of bankruptcy or insolvency, and extends to the whole fund available for the payment of debts.

Thus the right takes effect from the date of a judgment confessed by a person indebted to the United States, which when docketed, will operate to transfer to the creditors therein named substantially all the property owned by him after satisfying specific liens, thus being, in effect, an assignment for the benefit of creditors. United States v. Griswold (1881) 8 Fed. Rep. 496.

And it attaches at the instant of the execution of a deed of conveyance by the debtor of all the property in his possession to trustees for the payment of his debts, and is not defeated by a subsequent decision in his favor in an action for the recovery of property which had never been in his possession, upon an unascertained claim of his wife. United States v. The Marshal of Dist. of North Carolina (1833) 2 Brook. 488.

So the priority of the United States in case of an assignment by one indebted to it to a syndic, attaches by virtue of the assignment and notice to the syndic of its claims. Field v. United States (1855) 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 182, 9 L. ed. 94.

And the surety on the bond of a paymaster becomes a debtor of the United States within the provisions of the Act of Congress of 1797 when the paymaster fails to account as required by law and not from the time of the striking of a balance on the treasury books. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

So the right of the United States to priority of payment of a debt due under the act of congress providing therefor in case of insolvency extends to the whole of the property of the insolvent until the debt is paid. Hunter v. United States (1831) 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 173, 8 L. ed. 86.

And where the debtor commits an act of bankruptcy it extends to all his estate which comes to the hands of his assignee. United States v. Barnes (1884) 31 Fed. Rep. 705.

And the fact that the fund arose and the trustee thereof was appointed under the bankruptcy act does not affect the right of the United States to pursue both and assert its right to priority of payment in the circuit court where it had jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Lewis v. United States (1875) 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 513.

So where a debtor makes an assignment of all the property in his possession for the benefit of creditors and subsequently recovers possession of other transmutations and forms, and that, whether its identity and individuality is preserved, or is merged in a mass of which it forms a part; but that the right rests upon the equitable title of the beneficiary, who, seeking to recover specific property or to fix a charge upon a mass, must trace his estate, and show that the specific thing claimed is, in equity, his property, or that his estate has gone into and remains in the mass he seeks to charge," citing authorities.

In Eureka Dist. Twp. v. Farmer's Bank of Fontanelle, 88 Iowa, 194, the court says: "We do not think it is necessary to trace the deposit into any specific property in the hands of the assignee in order to establish a trust, but it should be shown presumptively, at least, that the estate in his hands has been augmented by the trust fund."

See also Phillips v. Overfield, 100 Mo. 466. A court of equity regards no debt as superior in sacredness to any other.

That one has fraudulently used trust estate gives to the cestui que trust no general lien upon the property of the trustees.

McAfee v. Bland (Ky.) 11 S. W. Rep. 439; Brocchus v. Morgan (Tenn.) 5 Cent. L. J. 53; Akin v. Jones, 25 L. R. A. 593, 93 Tenn. 353; St. Louis Brewing Assn. v. Austin, 100 Ala. 313; Parker v. Jones, 67 Ala. 234; Stater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I. —; Neely v. Rood, property which had never previously been in his possession upon an unascertained claim of his wife, the right of the United States to priority of payment of a debt due it, which attached by virtue of the assignment, extends also to such subsequently acquired property. United States v. The Marshal of Dist. of North Carolina (1838) 2 Brook. 488.

And when a debt due from an assignee for the benefit of creditors to the assignor growing out of a previous partnership between them is omitted from the assignment and the assignee subsequently gives his bond for the debt, the amount of the bond may be recovered by the United States in an action of assumpsit against the assignee under the act of congress charging the assignee with the duty of first paying an indebtedness due the United States out of the assets of the insolvent if the bond was given for moneys in the hands of the assignee at the time of the assignment, but not if it grew out of unsettled partnership concerns. United States v. Clark (1836) 1 Paine, O. C. 629.

The expenses of the recovery of a sum of money due an insolvent estate by the assignee in insolvency, however, are to be first deducted from the gross amount recovered, and the right of the United States to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it from the estate attaches to the balance remaining after such payment only. United States v. Hunter (1828) 5 Mason, 229.

And taxes and funeral charges are not debts due from the deceased over which an indebtedness due the United States has priority in the distribution of the estate but charges imposed by law which the administrator is bound to discharge in the performance of his trust, before satisfying a claim of the United States. United States v. Eggleston (1877) 4 Sawy. 190.

But the costs and expenses of defending an action brought by the United States to establish its right of priority of payment out of the assets of a deceased person, of a prima facie just claim which should have been allowed, are not a part of the necessary expenses of administration which should be paid before paying the claim of the United States. Ibid.

And the expenses of the last sickness of a deceased person is a debt due from the deceased over which a claim due to the United States is entitled to priority of payment. Ibid.

Nor does the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, giving the United States the right of priority of payment of an indebtedness due it in the distribution of the estate of a deceased person over all debts due from him, entitle it to receive its debt from the administrator prior to his payment of the allowance to the widow made by the judge of probate under Maine Laws, vol. 1, chap. 51, § 39, providing that in the settlement of estates, whether solvent or insolvent, the widow shall be entitled to her wearing apparel and so much of the personal estate as the judge of probate shall determine to be necessary, regard being had to the family under her care. Postmaster General v. Robbins (1829) 1 Ware, 165.

So the preference of the United States as a creditor of a partnership applies to the separate and individual estates of the bankrupt partners. Lewis v. United States (1875) 92 U. S. 613, 23 L. ed. 513.

And an indebtedness due the United States from a firm is entitled to priority of payment out of the separate estates of the partners and will not be postponed to claims of individual creditors, the rule that the joint estate must be applied to pay joint debts and the separate estate to pay individual debts applying only when both estates are before the court for distribution. United States v. Lewis (1874) 13 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 33.

And an indebtedness due the United States from a firm, some of the members of which are residents of a foreign country, is entitled, upon the resident partners becoming bankrupt, to priority of payment out of their separate estate. Ibid.

Nor is the United States under any obligation to pursue the partnership effects of a firm indebted to it, which is located in London, a part of its members being residents of Great Britain and a part of the United States, where the American members have all been adjudicated bankrupts, but may proceed against the American members and claim its right of priority of payment out of their separate estates. Lewis v. United States (1875) 92 U. S. 613, 23 L. ed. 513.

Likewise a claim of the United States against a bankrupt firm for a forfeiture of the value of goods incurred by the entry of goods at the custom house upon fraudulent under-valuations is joint and several, upon which the United States is entitled, under U. S. Rev. Stat. §§ 3466, 5501, to priority of payment, upon proof of claim showing the facts, out of the proceeds of the separate estates of the bankrupt partners as well as out of those of the joint estate. Re Vetterlein (1884) 20 Fed. Rep. 109.

And the appropriation by the executors of a deceased partner who died insolvent and indebted to the United States, of partnership property to the payment of the expenses of administration and of taxes on his property, does not affect the right of the United States to priority of payment, or the lien of the judgment obtained on such indebtedness, or prevent it from enforcing them against the real estate of the deceased partner. United States v. Duncan (1850) 4 McLean, 607, 12 Ill. 523.

So the United States is entitled to priority of payment of a judgment obtained by it against three persons, two of whom had been partners, for the individual debt of one of them, the other two being his sureties, out of the partnership as well as the individual assets of the partners over all creditors whether partnership or individual. Re Strassburger (1877) 4 Woods, O. C. 557.

And in United States v. Shelton (1821) 1 Brook. 517, in which a partnership made an assignment of its property for the benefit of creditors and one

54 Mich. 184; Sherwood v. Milford State Bank, 94 Mich. 78; Union Nat. Bank of Chicago v. Goetz, 188 Ill. 127; Wetherell v. O'Brien, 140 Ill. 146; Mutual Acc. Assn. of the Northwest v. Jacobs, 16 L. R. A. 516, 141 Ill. 261; Thompson's App. 23 Pa. 16; Columbian Bank's Estate, 147 Pa. 423; Hopkins' App. (Pa.) 8 Cent. Rep. 860; People's Bank's App. 98 Pa. 107, 89 Am. Rep. 728; Freiberg v. Stoddard, 161 Pa. 259; Third Nat. Bank of St. Paul v. Stillwater Gas Co. 36 Minn. 75; Re Seven Corners' Bank (Minn.) 59 N. W. Rep. 634; Ferchen v. Arndt, 26 Or. 121; Englar v. Offut, 70 Md. 78; Lathrop v. Bampton, 31 Cal. 17, 89

Am. Dec. 141; Goodell v. Buck, 67 Me. 514; Portland & H. S. B. Co. v. Locke, 73 Me. 370; Dyer v. Jacoway, 42 Ark. 182; First Nat. Bank of Richmond v. Davis, 114 N. C. 843.

The United States is not entitled to preference as a prerogative, nor entitled to any preference beyond what is expressly given by statute.

See Middlesex County Board of Chosen Freeholders v. State Bank at New Brunswick, 29 N. J. Eq. 268, 30 N. J. Eq. 311; State v. Harris, 2 Bail. L. 593.

The king's priority was not a lien. The king's right existed only while the property of the members of the firm also assigned for the benefit of his private creditors, the court on application by the United States for priority of payment of a debt due it, from the firm, without deciding whether the act of insolvency of the firm subjects the private property of the individual partners to the United States' right of priority, directed the trustees under the partnership deed to pay the debts due the United States, with liberty to apply to the court should the fund prove insufficient.

But the priority of the United States in the payment of an indebtedness due it out of the assets of an insolvent given by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, does not authorize it to take the property of a partner from partnership effects to pay a separate debt due by such partner to the United States, where the partnership effects are not sufficient to satisfy the creditors of the partnership. United States v. Hack (1894) 98 U. S. 8 Pet. 271, 3 L. ed. 941; United States v. Duncan, supra.

And the United States is not entitled to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it from a member of a partnership out of the partnership assets over joint creditors upon an assignment of all the joint and several property of the partners for the benefit of creditors. United States v. Evans (1896) Crabbe, 60.

But when property has ceased to be partnership property and become the separate property of the debtor partner, the rule is different, the test being whether the property belonged to the firm or the individual. United States v. Duncan, supra.

2. Nature and extent.

It has been the uniform construction of the acts of congress providing for priority of payment of debts due the United States that whether in case of insolvency, death or assignment, the property of the debtor passes to the assignee, executor or administrator, the priority of the United States operating not to prevent the transmission of the property but giving a right of preference in payment out of the proceeds. Brent v. Bank of Washington (1836) 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 593, 9 L. ed. 547.

The priority given to the United States is a mere right of prior payment out of the general funds of the debtor in the hands of assignees. It is not a right which supercedes or overrules the assignment of the debtor as to any property which the United States may afterwards elect to take in execution, so as to prevent such property from passing by virtue of the assignment to the assignees. Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1829) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 386, 7 L. ed. 139.

And where, before the right of preference of the United States accrues under the act of congress providing therefor, the debtor makes a bona fide conveyance, in the ordinary course of business, of his estate to a third person, it is divested out of the debtor and cannot be subjected to the claim of the United States. Thelussan v. Smith (1817) 15 U. S. 2 29 L. R. A.

Wheat, 393, 4 L. ed. 271; Brent v. Bank of Washington, supra.

And the rule is the same where the debtor mortgages it to secure a debt before the right of the United States attaches. Thelussan v. Smith, supra. Or where it is seized under execution. Ibid.

Thus a mortgage of a part of his property made by a collector of revenue to his surety on his official bond to indemnify him against his responsibility as such surety, and to secure him against liability on existing and future indorsements for the mortgagor, is valid and effectual as against the claim of the United States of a right of prior payment of an indebtedness due it though the collector was unable to pay all his debts at the time when the mortgage was given and the mortgagee knew at that time that the mortgagor was largely indebted to the United States. United States v. Hoos (1805) 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 73, 3 L. ed. 370.

And property of a debtor to the United States, which has passed to an assignee for the benefit of creditors by a bona fide assignment, is not subject to levy under execution issued on a judgment obtained on the indebtedness due the United States. Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1829) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 386, 7 L. ed. 139.

Nor is the assignment of a chose in action a mere contract rather than a transfer, but an equitable assignment which will defeat the right of the United States to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it out of the avails thereof, upon the subsequent insolvency of the assignor. Harrison v. Sterry (1809) 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 230, 3 L. ed. 104.

And an assignment by one partner to whom the whole commercial business of the partnership was committed and who was the only partner residing in the country, made in the name of the firm, of partnership effects and credits, is valid and constitutes such a transfer of title as will prevent the right of priority of the United States of payment of an indebtedness due it, from attaching upon the subsequent insolvency of the firm. Ibid.

And a loan on respondentia accompanied by an agreement that the outward and homeward cargoes should be collateral security for the loan, and that the outward bill of lading should be assigned to the lender for that purpose, and that the homeward should be to order with a blank indorsement, vests an equitable interest in the lender which cannot be defeated by a claim of priority of payment interposed by the United States. Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Conard (1827) 4 Wash. C. C. 603, affirmed Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1829) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 386, 7 L. ed. 139.

But an assignment of property and choses in action made by a person indebted to the United States immediately before and in contemplation of insolvency afterwards occurring, is not such a transfer as will defeat the right of the United States to priority of payment out of the avails of the property and choses in action assigned. Harrison v. Sterry, supra.

So the right of priority of the United States does remained in the king's debtor, and the right itself was lost upon any alienation of the property.

2 Tidd, Pr. § 1053; Giles v. Grocer, 9 Bing. 128.

If the state has a preference in the nature of the crown's prerogative, that right of preference itself is therefore lost by any alienation of the property.

State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 226, 26 Am. Dec. 561.

An assignee for benefit of creditors does not take subject to priorities and preferences.

2 Tidd, Pr. 1053; State v. Bank of Maryland, supra; King v. Watson, 3 Price, 6.

not constitute a lien upon the property of the debtor in the hands of his assignee or representative, it merely gives a right of prior payment out of the funds in his hands. Forsyth v. Clark (1890) 3 Wend. 637; Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1823) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 439, 7 L. ed. 212; Otis v. Warren (1819) 16 Mass. 53.

And it does not supersede or overreach prior liens on such property.

Thus the right of priority of the United States in the payment of a debt due it from an insolvent or deceased person's estate given by the Act of Congress of 1797, section 5, does not attach as against the holder of a mortgage, whether title be regarded as in the mortgagor or mortgagee. United States v. Hawkins (1836) 4 Mart. N. S. 817.

And where a mortgagor in good faith procures the satisfaction of his mortgages without payment upon the understanding that he is to give new mortgages, but dies before doing so, after which his heirs give them, they should be given the same effect as the old securities, subject to intervening rights, and the United States will not be permitted to come in either for priority of payment of duties secured by bond due from the deceased or to share ratably with the mortgagees. United States v. Crookshank (1832) 1 Edw. Ch. 233, 6 L. ed. 121.

And in Field v. United States (1835) 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 132, 9 L. ed. 94, in considering the right of the United States to priority of payment under the Duty Collection Act of 1799, chap. 123, the court said there is no doubt that the mortgages upon particular estates sold must be first paid out of the proceeds of the sales of those estates. But if there be any deficiency of the proceeds of any particular estate, to pay the mortgages thereon, the mortgagees thereof cannot come in upon the funds and proceeds of the sales of the other estates except as general creditors.

So the preference in the payment of debts due it to which the United States is entitled over other creditors, will not attach as against persons from whom the debtor borrowed money on respondentia upon goods laden on board a vessel and to whom he indorsed the bill of lading as security for the debts, before the right of preference had accrued by the commission of an act of insolvency. Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1823) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 393, 7 L. ed. 139; United States v. Delaware Ins. Co. (1823) 4 Wash. C. C. 413.

Unless it appears that the right of the respondentia holders is reduced to a mere general lien. Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York, supra.

And in Brent v. Bank of Washington (1836) 36 U. S. 10 Pet. 593, 9 L. ed. 547, it was said to be a well-settled rule that the priority of payment given the United States by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, does not attach to property legally transferred to a creditor on respondentia, though he may hold it subject to account, equity or trust, for the borrower.

And an assignment made by the owner of goods

By assignment for benefit of creditors, the title passed from the debtor.

Burrill, Assignm. § 6; Laws 1890, § 1, p. 84, Form of Conveyance.

Groesbeck, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

These actions were brought in the district court for Laramie county, and by that court were reserved to this court for decision upon certain important and difficult questions arising in them. They were consolidated in the trial court for the purposes of argument and consigned to a factor indorsed upon the bill of lading, of the within bill of lading, and the goods, etc., to be procured thereon and thereby, and any return cargo to be obtained, etc., by the proceeds thereof, and all the return cargo to be taken on board on the assignor's account, as collateral security for the payment of a respondentia bond, is not a mere assignment of the bill of lading itself, operating as an equitable assignment of the interest of the owner in it, but an assignment of the goods contained in it, which will defeat a subsequent levy on the goods under execution issued on a judgment against the owner, in favor of the United States, upon a claim for the payment of which the United States claims priority under the Act of Congress of 1799, chap. 123, the owner having become insolvent. Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1823) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 393, 7 L. ed. 139, affirming (1827) 4 Wash. C. C. 662.

And the doctrine of Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York, supra, was followed and reaffirmed in Conard v. Nicoll (1830) 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 291, 7 L. ed. 362.

A loan on respondentia "upon the goods to the amount of the loan, laden or to be laden on board the vessel, or which may be laden on board at any time during the voyage," gives the lender a mere lien on the homeward-bound goods, however, which cannot be opposed to a claim of priority of payment interposed by the United States. Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Conard (1827) 4 Wash. C. C. 662.

So workmen and materialmen having a lien on a vessel which has been taken and sold under execution issued on a judgment in favor of the United States, are entitled to payment out of the proceeds of sale in preference to the United States. Phillips v. The Thomas Scattergood (1823) Gilp. 1.

And a sale of steamers by creditors of a steamship company under execution issued out of a state court will not be enjoined by a federal court, on motion of the United States, on the ground that it had liens on the steamers under chattel mortgages for advances made to build them, a sale under the mortgages requiring a prior notice of six months, the right of the execution creditors being superior to those of the government so far at least as to allow them to sell, subject to the lien of the government. United States v. Collins (1856) 4 Blatchf. 142.

Nor has the United States any lien for a penalty for violation of the Act of Congress of July 7, 1838, to provide for the better security of the lives of passengers on board of vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, which will overreach a claim of materialmen who have acquired title to the vessel, no forfeiture of the boat being declared and no express lien given for the penalty. United States v. The Steamboat Laurel (1832) Newb. Adm. 269.

Neither does the Act of Congress of March 2, 1799, give a right of priority of payment out of real estate or the proceeds of real estate belonging to or vested in the heirs of the debtor. United States v. Crookshank (1832) 1 Edw. Ch. 233, 6 L. ed. 121.

determination, and are so considered here, as they present substantially the same questions. The relief sought is of an equitable nature, to impress a trust in favor of the state of Wyoming and the county of Laramie, to the amount of certain public funds by the respective treasurers of the state and county deposited in the banking house of Thomas A. Kent, an insolvent debtor, at Cheyenne, in this state, upon the estate of such insolvent, in the hands of the defendant, as assignee. The court below entered findings of fact in each case, which disclose the following important facts: The assignor, Thomas A. Kent, was engaged in a general banking business prior to his assignment. While doing business as a banker, he received deposits from the treasurer of each of the plaintiffs, all of which were placed to the credit of such treasurer, as treasurer, and which were from time to time checked upon. At the time of the assignment, there was a balance due upon the account with the treasurer of the state of Wyoming, in the sum of $56,454.70, and a balance due to the treasurer of the county of Laramie, in the sum of $16,158.98. The balance in favor of the state treasurer was funds belonging to the state of Wyoming, and the balance in favor of the treasurer of Laramie county was the property

Nor does the right of the United States to priority of payment given by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, attach so as to authorize the appropriation of stock in a bank owned by a deceased debtor to the satisfaction of a claim of the United States as against an indebtedness to the bank where the charter of the bank gives it a lien on the stock held by a debtor for the payment of the debts due it. Brent v. Bank of Washington (1836) 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 564, 9 L. ed. 547.

So the United States has no priority or privilege with respect to debts due it over debts due to private persons which will entitle it to prior satisfaction out of property attached before other attaching creditors whose attachments are of earlier date. United States v. Canal Bank (1844) 3 Story, C. C. 79.

And the lien acquired by an attachment issued against an insolvent debtor at the suit of a private creditor which is in the nature of an execution, is not defeated or displaced by virtue of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, by a subsequent attachment issued at the suit of the United States and laid upon the same property as the former attachment. Beaston v. Farmers' Bank of Delaware (1838) 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 102, 9 L. ed. 1017.

But the priority given to the United States by the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797, in the payment of debts due upon custom-house bonds out of the estates of insolvents attaches as against and supercedes a foreign attachment laid on the property of the insolvent, prior to the insolvency, and must be first paid out of the funds attached in the hands of the garnishee, the lien of the attachment being of a special nature liable to be defeated. Willing v. Bleeker (1816) 2 Serg. & R. 221.

And in South Carolina a private creditor of an insolvent person indebted to the United States does not, by the service of an attachment, acquire a prior lien upon the effects of the debtor which cannot be defeated or impaired by the operation of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1797. United States v. Clason (1806) 2 Brev. 118.

So a judgment and execution against an insolvent debtor is entitled to priority of payment out of his assets in the hands of his assignee for the benefit of creditors over a judgment against him in favor of the United States for duties subsequently rendered, and a mortgage subsequently executed by him. United States v. Sheriff of Charleston Dist. (1803) Bee, 196; Wilcocks v. Wain (1823) 10 Serg. & R. 380.

And the taking out of a fiat facias and levying it on the lands of a judgment debtor and condemning them by an inquest are sufficient without a scire facias to keep the judgment upon which it was issued alive and preserve its lien on the real estate so as to prevent a judgment subsequently rendered against the debtor in favor of the United States from coming in and taking priority over it. United States v. Mechanics' Bank of Philadelphia City & County (1829) Gilp. 51.

With reference to ordinary judgments without execution it was held in the early case of Thelusson v. Smith (1817) 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 366, 4 L. ed. 271, affirming (1815) 1 Pet. C. C. 195, that the right of priority of payment of the United States of a debt due it in case of insolvency of the debtor, takes precedence over and cuts out a prior judgment.

But in Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York (1828) 26 U. S. 1 Pet. 366, 7 L. ed. 189; Thelusson v. Smith, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 366, 14 L. ed. 271, was limited and explained, the court saying that that case turned upon its own particular circumstances, that it did not decide that the priority of the United States cut out the lien of the particular creditor and that the real ground of the decision was that the judgment creditor had never perfected his title by an execution and levy on the estate and had acquired no title on the proceeds as his property, and that, if the proceeds were to be deemed general funds of the debtor, the priority of the United States had attached against all other creditors and that, a mere potential lien on land did not carry a legal title to the proceeds of a sale made under an adverse execution.

And Johnson, J. in a concurring opinion in Conard v. Atlantic Ins. Co. of New York, supra, said that it would be vain to endeavor to reconcile the decision with that of Thelusson v. Smith, supra, disapproving of that decision, and claiming that it was thereby overruled.

And in the subsequent case of Brent v. Bank of Washington (1836) 35 U. S. 10 Pet. 564, 9 L. ed. 547, it was stated that it had never been decided that the right of the United States to priority of payment of debts due it affects any lien, general or specific, existing when the event took place which gave it a claim of priority.

And that a judgment in favor of the United States is not entitled to priority of payment out of the estate of an insolvent debtor over an earlier judgment against the debtor which existed and was a lien before the debtor became insolvent, was held in Cottrell v. Pierson (1831) 2 McCrary, 360.

A claim of the United States for an unpaid tax on distilled spirits, however, is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale under execution, on a judgment in favor of a third person, of property used in the distillery and in distilling over a claim of the landlord of the distiller for rent, under the Act of Congress of July 20, 1868 (15 Stat. at L. 125, § 1) making such tax a first lien upon the spirits distilled, and the distillery and the stills, vessels, fixtures and tools therein. Duncan's App. (1871) 68 Pa. 204, 8 Am. Rep. 169.

g. Marshaling assets.

The right of the United States to priority of payment of debts due it is not affected by the rule that a party having a lien upon two funds while another has a lien upon but one of them will be obliged to resort, in the first instance, to the one upon which the other has no lien. United States v. Duncan of said county, and these moneys had been received by said Kent with knowledge of such ownership. Neither of the treasurers had authority to deposit any of the funds with said Kent, as banker, unless such authority is to be presumed by reason of the fact that, for at least 18 years last past, the treasurers, both of the territory and the state, with the knowledge of the people and of the officials of the state, had been accustomed to deposit the funds of the territory and of the state in the manner that the funds in question were deposited, and that in like manner, for the same period of time, the treasurers of Laramie county, with the knowledge of the people and officials of the county, had likewise deposited the county funds in the custody of such treasurers, as such, with bankers, in the same manner as was done in the present instance. The moneys belonging to each of the plaintiffs, and all other moneys of said Kent, as banker, were paid out to depositors, on checks, in the ordinary course of business, excepting that there remained in the vaults at the bank, at the time of the assignment, the sum of $2,058.72 in cash, and also on deposit in other banks, the sum of $1,684.32. None of the real and personal property assigned by the said Kent to the defendant, as assignee, was either (1850) 4 McLean, 607, 12 Ill. 523; United States v. Mott (1822) 1 Paine, C. C. 183.

Or by the New York rule that lands consisting of different parcels subject to a general incumbrance are to be charged in the inverse order of their alienation. United States v. Duncan, supra.

Thus judgments in favor of the United States, binding all the lands of a deceased insolvent debtor, made perfect by a levy, prior in point of time, to judgments in favor of individuals which had also been made perfect by the issue of execution, and which were binding upon lands in a particular county only, will not be thrown upon the lands upon which the judgments of the private creditors were not binding and be required to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale thereof leaving the other land for the satisfaction of the judgments of the private creditors, as the United States had the older lien. Ibid.

And the United States having a judgment against three persons, two of whom had been partners for the individual debt of one of them, and against the others as sureties, cannot be required to pursue its remedy and assert its right of priority first against the surety who was not a member of the firm, before coming on the partnership assets. Re Strassburger (1877) 4 Woods, C. C. 557.

Nor can the United States be required to exhaust collaterals held by it before claiming priority of payment out of a bankrupt estate. Lewis v. United States (1875) 52 U. S. 613, 23 L. ed. 513, affirming United States v. Lewis (1874) 13 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 63.

And a decree in favor of the United States against assigned property will not be suspended on bill filed by the United States to obtain its right of priority against a creditor and sureties on the debtor's bond who were joint assignees of the debtor's estate until it should have proceeded to execution upon a judgment against the sureties and no decree will be made in favor of the creditor, the sureties, though the assignment had been made for their benefit and at their request, and they, by becoming parties to it had covenanted for the execution of its trusts. United States v. Mott (1822) 1 Paine, C. C. 183.

But the question whether such relief would have been afforded the creditor had the sureties been properly before the court for that purpose, was not decided. Ibid.

b. Liability of assignee or representative.

The statutes providing for priority of payment of debts due the United States operates upon the doing of an act of insolvency by the debtor, directly upon the assignee by requiring him to first pay the claim of the United States and making him personally liable therefor if he does not. Bush v. United States (1838) 15 Cent. L. J. 427, 8 Sawy. 322.

The assignee becomes a trustee for the United States and is bound to pay its debts first out of the proceeds of such estate. And when he has notice of such debt he cannot escape personal liability for 29 L. R. A.

its amount to the extent of the value of the assets that come to his hands, if he fails to provide for it before making distribution to other creditors. United States v. Barnes (1867) 31 Fed. Rep. 705; United States v. Duncan (1850) 4 McLean, 607, 12 Ill. 523.

Claims of the United States against the estate of a deceased person must, if known to the administrator, be paid out of the funds applicable thereto pursuant to U. S. Rev. Stat. § 3466, without any allowance or classification thereof by the probate court though the statutes of the state have made no provision therefor. United States v. Hahn (1899) 87 Mo. App. 580.

And it is the duty of a syndic to whom an insolvent debtor has assigned his property for the benefit of creditors who owed debts to the United States in the payment of which it was entitled to priority under the Duty Collection Act of 1790, chap. 128, to make known such debts in his tableau of distribution as having such priority, where they had been brought to his notice, though the United States was not a party to the proceeding in the parish court. Field v. United States (1835) 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 182, 9 L. ed. 84.

Nor is it necessary that the debt of a surety on a bond to the United States should be ascertained by a judgment against him in order to render his assignee for the benefit of creditors chargeable with its payment, as he would have the right, in an action against him therefor to show any reduction of the debt in the same manner as his assignor might have done in an action against him. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

And where a debt due from an assignee for the benefit of creditors to the assignor, growing out of a previous partnership between them, is omitted from the assignment and the assignee subsequently gives his bond for the debt, the amount of the bond may be recovered by the United States in an action of assumpsit against the assignee under the act of congress charging the assignee with the duty of first paying an indebtedness due the United States out of the assets of the insolvent, if the bond was given for moneys in the hands of the assignee at the time of the assignment, but not if it grew out of unsettled partnership matters. Ibid.

And neither the assignee of an insolvent debtor nor his personal representatives can object to the priority of the United States in the payment of a debt due it out of the assets of the debtor upon the grounds that the assignment was fraudulent as against the other creditors of the assignor. Dias v. Bouchaud (1843) 10 Paige, 445, 4 L. ed. 1044.

And the assignee is concluded from disputing the generality of the assignment and setting up the omission of an item of property for the purpose of defeating the right of the United States to priority where the assignment was general in form and given out as such and so understood and declared to be by the parties. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

bought or paid for subsequently to any of the deposits of the public fund by either of the plaintiffs with the said Kent. Loans were made by him, aggregating about $15,000, while the greater part of said public moneys were on deposit in the said bank; but, at the time when each of the said loans was made, said Kent, as banker, had, after deducting the amount of said loans, in cash, a sum largely in excess of the aggregate due to both of the plaintiffs. None of the money of either of the plaintiffs came into the hands of the defendant, unless the moneys remaining in the vaults of the bank, and on deposit with other bankers, are presumed to be moneys of plaintiffs; and the estate that came to his hands has not been increased by said moneys, or their use in paying debts by the insolvent. Upon those findings the court made the following order, reserving the causes for decision to this court: "And the court and the judge thereof do now, after due consideration, believe and find that important and difficult questions arise in this action, which render it both proper and necessary that this cause should be reserved, and sent to the supreme court, for its decision upon such important and difficult questions. And the court and the judge thereof believe and find that the said important and difficult questions

And the judgment of a court though of competent jurisdiction, directing an assignee in bankruptcy to distribute the estate of the bankrupt to specified creditors, cannot be invoked as a defense to an action by the United States against the assignee to recover moneys paid out by him under such judgment based upon the theory that he should have retained them and paid them to the United States as a creditor having a right of priority of payment, where it does not appear that the United States was a party to the proceeding or that the assignee took proper measures to secure its priority. United States v. Barnes (1887) 81 Fed. Rep. 705.

And the United States does not lose its right to proceed against the assignee by omitting to prove its claim in bankruptcy proceedings against the debtor until after the distribution of a part of the assets leaving a portion insufficient to pay its claim, where the assignee had notice thereof. United States v. Barnes, supra.

But an administrator is not liable to the United States under U. S. Rev. Stat. § 8466, for assets which he had disbursed in good faith before notice of its claim. United States v. Eggleston (1877) 4 Savy. 199.

The payment of the debts of an intestate by an administrator disposing of all the assets before notice of a claim in favor of the United States, is not a devastavit. United States v. Ricketts (1825) 2 Cranch, C. C. 552.

And where all the property of an intestate has been exhausted in paying debts, which was done without notice of a debt due the United States and entitled to priority as such, the absence of notice should be specially pleaded in an action brought by the United States against the administrator therefor. United States v. Hoar (1821) 2 Mason, 811.

But notice, to bind an assignee for the benefit of creditors, of an indebtedness due to the United States, under the act of congress making the assignee a trustee for the payment thereof, need not be given by the United States and need only be such as is required in ordinary cases of trustees and enough to put a prudent man on inquiry. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

And an assignee of an insolvent debtor indebted to the United States on bonds given for duties and the personal representatives of such assignee who have notice of the several bonds and of the parties thereto, have legal notice of the rights of the sureties in such bonds to substitution to the rights of the United States, including that of priority in case such bonds are not paid out of the funds, as to which a right of preference is given. Dias v. Bouchaud (1848) 10 Paige, 445. 4 L. ed. 1044.

And a statement of an assignor for the benefit of creditors to the assignee at the time of the assignment that he was a surety on a bond to the United States and that he believed the bond was broken, is sufficient notice to charge him with the duty which the law imposed upon him to give a preference to the United States in the distribution of the assignor's estate. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

Neither a syndie nor other representative to whom an insolvent debtor has assigned his property for the benefit of creditors, who has sold the property assigned upon credit, is liable to the United States with respect to an indebtedness of the debtor to the United States in the payment of which it is entitled to priority under the Duty Collection Act of 1799, chap. 128, unless funds have actually come into its hands. Feld v. United States (1835) 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 182, 9 L. ed. 94.

And the United States, in an action against an assignee for the benefit of creditors for money had and received under the act of congress, must show that the assignee had, in fact, received money to which it is entitled, or such facts must be proved as to afford a fair and reasonable presumption that money has been received. United States v. Clark, supra.

But evidence in an action by the United States against an assignee for the benefit of creditors based upon the act of congress charging the assignee with the duty to first pay an indebtedness to the United States out of the assets coming into his hands, of the sale of property of the estate, is prima facie sufficient to establish the receipt by the assignee of the price thereof, and casts the burden of rebutting the presumption upon the assignee, by proof upon his part. Ibid.

And it will be presumed that a solvent administrator indebted to the estate at the time of the issue of letters to him, performed his duty of collecting the claim by transferring the amount to himself as administrator, and it will be regarded as assets in his hands applicable to the payment of a debt due the United States from the estate, under the provisions of the act of congress charging him with the duty to first pay such debt out of the assets in his hands. United States v. Eggleston (1877) 4 Savy. 199.

The amount recoverable in an action of assumption by the United States against an assignee for the benefit of creditors, based upon the act of congress charging the assignee with the duty of first paying an indebtedness due to the United States out of the moneys coming into his hands, is the amount proved to have been received by him, less commission and expenses of the sale of the property when that does not exceed the amount of the debt. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

1. Subrogation of sureties.

The same right of priority which belongs to the government attaches, under the acts of congress, to the claim of an individual, who, as surety on a custom-house bond, has paid money to the government. Hunter v. United States (1831) 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 173, 5 L. ed. 68.

And it is immaterial whether the payment was made by the surety before or after the bankruptcy arising in this action are as follows: First. Do the facts that the treasurer of the plaintiff deposited the public funds of the plaintiff with T. A. Kent, banker, in the manner above found, and with no authority except as above found, and that said Kent, as banker, paid out the sums upon checks of his depositors, in the ordinary course of business,—said depositors being creditors to the amounts of the checks so drawn,—and that said Kent, thereafter, being insolvent, made and executed a general assignment for the benefit of all his creditors, under the Assignment Law of the state of Wyoming, entitle the plaintiff to a lien upon, and a prior payment out of, any of the assets in the hands of the defendant, as assignee for the benefit of the creditors of the said Kent, as against said defendant, as assignee, and as against the general creditors of said assigned estate, said assigned estate being insolvent, to the extent above found? Second. If question number one shall be answered in the affirmative, against which particular assets is the plaintiff entitled to such lien, and out of which particular assets is the plaintiff entitled to such prior payment?"

After the submission of the questions to this court, a reargument was ordered upon the question of the priority or preference of of the principal. Mott v. Maris (1808) 2 Wash. C. C. 186.

And the sureties are entitled to priority of payment out of the bankrupt principal's estate, both of principal and interest. Champneys v. Lyle (1808) 1 Binn. 327.

Such preference given by the Act of March 1, 1790, to sureties on a custom-house bond, who pay the same to the United States, is not taken away, and that act is not repealed by the bankrupt act, providing for pro rata payment of all creditors. Mott v. Maris and Champneys v. Lyle, supra.

And the right of the United States to priority of payment under the act of congress for the regulation of the collection of duties attaches, not only as against the debtor and his assignee for the benefit of creditors, but also as against the assignee in bankruptcy of such assignee who had mixed the funds arising from the assignment with his own and afterwards became a bankrupt, but in such case the rights of a surety of the original debtor on a custom-house bond, who had paid the indebtedness to the United States, are confined to the estate and effects of his insolvent principal so that he cannot claim priority of payment from the assignee in bankruptcy where no part of the estate of his principal ever comes to the hands of such assignee. Pollock v. Pratt (1811) 2 Wash. C. C. 490.

But a surety who has paid money for a bankrupt in discharge of a bond for duties has not the right of the United States to proceed against the person of the bankrupt, but only against his effects. Kerr v. Hamilton (1809) 1 Cranch, C. C. 544.

And a surety on a custom-house bond who has paid the debt due to the United States is merely entitled, where the principal is afterwards discharged in bankruptcy, to preference out of the estate of the bankrupt, and cannot resort to an action against him for the recovery of the amount paid. Reed v. Emory (1815) 1 Serg. & R. 330.

The preference given to a surety on a bond for duties is only a right to be first satisfied out of the effects of the insolvent in the hands of his assignee, and not a right to maintain an action thereon against the insolvent himself, notwithstanding his discharge, and the discharge may be set up in defense of such action, though a debt due to the United States for duties is not barred by such discharge. Atkin v. Dunlap (1819) 16 Johns. 77.

And a surety on a custom-house bond, who has paid it, is not entitled, under the Act of Congress of 1790 providing for the subrogation of the surety to the rights of the United States in case of payment by him, to be subrogated to such rights as against a co-surety so as to give his claim for contribution preference over other creditors, and he is not entitled to such subrogation on general principles of equity. Bank of South Carolina v. Adger (1836) 2 Hill, Eq. 208.

And a purchaser of goods sold by the collector of revenue upon which the duties had been paid by a surety on a bond given for the payment thereof, 29 L. R. A.

who includes in the purchase price the amount of the duties thereon, is not entitled to preference in payment out of the assets of the principal debtor in the hands of his assignee for the benefit of creditors under the act of congress providing therefor in case of payment by a surety, or even to subrogation to any of the rights of the United States at common law. Dias v. Boucheaud (1843) 10 Paige, 446, 4 L. ed. 1044.

When a bill is filed by sureties on a custom-house bond which has been paid by them for substitution in the place of the obligees therein and to settle their rights to priority of payment out of the estate of the principal debtor, all persons standing in a like situation with the complainants should be made parties or the bill should be filed in behalf of the complainants and of all others who were sureties on bonds given by the principal debtor for duties and who had paid such bonds so as to be entitled to the rights and remedies of the United States against the assigned fund. Ibid.

1. What amounts to a divestiture of the right.

The failure of the United States to prove its claim against a bankrupt in bankruptcy proceedings does not affect its right to priority of payment. Lewis v. United States (1875) 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. ed. 513.

It does not waive its right of priority of payment out of the assets of an insolvent by proving its claim before the commissioners of the bankrupt and voting in the choice of assignees. Harrison v. Sterry (1809) 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 230, 3 L. ed. 104.

And it is not required to prove a debt due to it from the estate of a bankrupt before filing a bill to enforce its right of priority of payment. United States v. Lewis (1874) 13 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 33.

Although it may prove a debt due to it and assert its right of priority of payment in a bankruptcy proceeding against the debtor, it is not obliged to do so, but stands in the category of creditors who are not affected by the proceedings. United States v. Barnes (1897) 31 Fed. Rep. 705; Re Huddell (1891) 47 Fed. Rep. 203.

It is not bound by the bankruptcy acts, and is entitled to recover the full amount of its claim irrespective of the rights of creditors under such proceedings. Re Huddell, supra.

An assignment in bankruptcy made under and by direction of the bankrupt law does not, under the proviso thereof that nothing therein contained shall affect the right of priority of the United States, bind the United States or prevent it from claiming priority of payment of an indebtedness due to it of the assets. United States v. Fisher (1804) 6 U. S. 2 Cranch, 358, 3 L. ed. 304.

And a United States district attorney has no power by any step on his part under the commission of bankruptcy to waive the right of priority of the United States in the distribution of the assets of an insolvent debtor, as such power is not within the scope of the authority delegated to him payment of the state and the county of Laramie, and able and exhaustive arguments were made upon this question. Owing to the limited time within which the delicate questions to be disposed of must be determined, caused by an impending change in the personnel of this court, the discussion of the points involved will, of necessity, be limited; but it is desirable that a speedy determination of the matters presented by the district court should be had, owing to the reason above assigned, the magnitude of the case, the importance of the questions involved, and the necessity of facilitating the settlement of the estate of the insolvent.

1. It is urged with great force that under the common law and the constitution of this state, the state and the county of Laramie have a preference or priority of payment over the general creditors of the insolvent debtor, in the distribution of his estate in the hands of his assignee by a deed of assignment executed by the debtor in trust for all his creditors, without preference or priority, under the provisions of the voluntary assignment statute of this state. Sess. Laws 1890, chap. 51. It is asserted that the state of Wyoming and her municipality, the county of Laramie, as a subdivision thereof for certain governmental purposes, has succeeded to the pre-and as it would be directly contrary to the provision of the National Bankruptcy Act that nothing therein contained shall in any manner affect the right to prior satisfaction of debts due the United States. United States v. Clason (1806) 2 Brev. 118.

So the right of the United States to prior satisfaction of a claim due it from an insolvent surety on a custom-house bond out of the avails of a judgment obtained by him against the principal in the bond, who was also insolvent, for moneys which he was compelled to pay thereon, is not affected by the discharge of the principal from imprisonment under a special act of congress providing that any estate which he might subsequently acquire should be liable to be taken in the same manner as if he had not been imprisoned and discharged, though the act omitted the usual provision that the judgment should remain good and sufficient in law. Hunter v. United States (1881) 80 U. S. 5 Pet. 173, 8 L. ed. 86.

A decree in a state court declaring a partnership and directing the payment of the partnership debts out of the assets in the hands of the administrator of one of the partners who had died insolvent indebted to the United States, obtained in a proceeding instituted by the creditors of the partnership in which the United States was not made a party and did not appear, is not binding upon the United States and does not impair its rights, though the administrator took objection based upon the indebtedness to it and its right of priority; and notwithstanding such decree the priority of the government attaches and the administrator becomes a trustee for the United States whenever assets come to his hands. United States v. Duncan (1850) 4 McLean, 607, 12 Ill. 523.

Nor can the assertion of a joint claim against the proceeds of the estate of a bankrupt firm debar the effect of a proof of claim which entitles the United States to priority of payment out of the separate estates of the partners also. Re Vetterlein (1884) 20 Fed. Rep. 109.

And the payment by the secretary of the treasury of the whole of a sum awarded to an insolvent principal on a bond for duties upon a claim against a foreign nation, to his assignee, where he had been authorized to deduct therefrom a sum due from the principal to a surety on such bond for a payment which he had been required to make thereon, and retain the same by virtue of the right of the United States to priority of payment of a claim due it from the surety who was also insolvent, does not bar the claim of the government or prevent proceedings against the assignee to recover thereon. Hunter v. United States (1881) 80 U. S. 5 Pet. 173, 8 L. ed. 86.

But the right of the United States to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it out of a fund in the hands of a bankruptcy court must be worked out through the bankruptcy act, and while it is not bound to go into a bankruptcy court, and is not concluded by a certificate of discharge, if it claims priority out of the fund, it must assert its claim just as the state and operatives and persons subrogated to the rights of the government are required to do. United States v. Murphy (1888) 15 Fed. Rep. 589.

And when, knowing that the estate of its debtor is being administered upon in a bankruptcy court, it stands by and asserts no claim to the fund and suffers the settlement to proceed and final distribution to be made, under the terms of the bankruptcy act, it waives its right of priority of payment out of the bankrupt estate. Ibid.

Though, by omitting to prove its claim in bankruptcy proceedings against the debtor until after the distribution of a part of the assets of the estate, leaving a portion insufficient to pay its claim, the United States does not lose its right to proceed against the assignee therefor where he had notice of its claim. United States v. Barnes (1887) 81 Fed. Rep. 705.

k. How asserted.

While it is not required to do so, the United States may prove a debt due it and assert its right of priority of payment in a bankruptcy proceeding against the debtor. United States v. Barnes (1887) 81 Fed. Rep. 705; Re Huddell (1891) 47 Fed. Rep. 205.

So the United States when entitled to priority of payment of an indebtedness due it out of the assets of an insolvent debtor, may maintain an action of assumpsit against the assignee for the recovery of money received by him under the assignment. United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629.

Or for the recovery of the amount of a bond given for an indebtedness by the assignee to the assignor, which was omitted from the assignment. Ibid.

For instances of actions against assignees, executors and administrators to establish the right of priority of the United States, see supra, under heading, Liability of assignees or representatives.

So where a fund, out of which the United States claims priority of payment of a sum due it, is in the hands of an assignee of an insolvent, proceedings at law to establish the right might be inadequate, and therefore proceedings in equity are proper. Hunter v. United States (1881) 80 U. S. 5 Pet. 173, 8 L. ed. 86.

And in United States v. Clark (1826) 1 Paine, C. C. 629, it was said that when necessary to obtain the aid of a court of equity to carry its right of priority of payment out of the assets of an insolvent debtor in the hands of a trustee, into effect, the United States could file its bill as in compelling the execution of a trust.

The United States circuit court has jurisdiction of a bill in equity brought by the United States against a debtor of an insolvent indebted to it, claiming priority of payment under the Act of Congress of 1799, chap. 128, § 65, though the local laws where the suit is brought allow a creditor to proceed against a debtor of his debtor by a peou-rogative of the British sovereign; that his debt should be preferred to that of his subject; and that this prerogative has become, to the states of the American republic, an attribute and incident of sovereignty. Two familiar maxims are quoted as the quintessence of the British law: "Quando jus domini regis et subditi inanimul concurrunt, jus regis praeferri debet," and "Thesaurus regis est vinculum pacis et bellorum nervus." These maxims, it is said, should apply to the state, and her revenues should be protected with as much solicitude as those of the British king, as, though her treasury may not be the "bond of peace and the sinew of war," yet she stands in the attitude of parens patria, charged, as she is, directly, through her municipal subdivisions, with the government of the people, in the enforcement of the law and the rights of her citizens, through her tribunals of justice; in the maintenance of the public order, and the execution of the laws; in the education of the young; in the support of the indigent; in the work of internal improvement; and in the various agencies of government that the state controls in the interest of her citizens. As liens are created by her positive statute upon both realty and personality on which they are imposed, it is contended that as much concern should be manifested in the liar process of law. United States v. Howland (1819) 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 106, 4 L. ed. 523.

And the United States, after having filed a bill in the circuit court claiming the payment of a debt due it from a debtor who had previously been discharged under the insolvent law of Rhode Island, on the ground of an assignment made to it by the debtor who was discharged from imprisonment on the condition that he should make such an assignment, may file an amended bill claiming priority under the act of congress giving the right against debtors who have become insolvent; and on the hearing it may rely upon the whole case made by the bill or it may abandon some of the special prayers contained in it. Hunter v. United States (1831) 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 173, 5 L. ed. 83.

So a sale of lands under execution on confessed judgments which amounted to a voluntary transfer of all the debtor's property so as to entitle the United States to priority of payment of an indebtedness of the judgment debtor to it, may be declared null and void, and it may be disregarded so as to enable the United States to sell the same to enforce the judgment obtained on the indebtedness due it and thus work out its right of priority of payment. United States v. Griswold (1831) 3 Fed. Rep. 493.

And when the United States has obtained a joint judgment against all the obligors in a joint and several bond given for duties, both principal and sureties, and one of the obligors dies and the other becomes insolvent, it may by virtue of its right of priority in case of insolvency, maintain a suit in equity for the recovery of the debt out of the assets of the deceased judgment debtor whose estate was also insolvent. United States v. Cushman (1836) 2 Sumn. 426.

All persons standing in a like situation with the complainant should be made parties to a bill filed by sureties in a custom-house bond which had been paid by them, for substitution in the place of the obligee therein and to settle their rights to priority of payment out of the estate of the principal debtor, or the bill should be filed in behalf of the complainants and of all others who were sureties on bonds given by the principal debtor for duties, and who had paid such bonds so as to be entitled to the rights and remedies of the United States against the assigned fund. Dias v. Bouchaud (1843) 10 Paige, 443, 4 L. ed. 1044.

III. Priority of the states.

a. Upon what based.

The right of the state to priority of payment of debts due it is placed by the courts of the different states recognizing it upon different grounds.

Thus in Maryland the state is held entitled to priority of payment of a debt due it out of the assets of the estate of a deceased person as a prerogative right from the common law. Orem v. Wrightson (1873) 51 Md. 34, 34 Am. Rep. 236; Re Green's Es-20 L. R. A.

State v. Baltimore (1857) 10 Md. 504.

The state is given priority by virtue of the third article of the Declaration of Rights made on the 2d of November, 1776, declaring that the inhabitants are entitled to the common law of England according to the course of that law and to the benefit of such English statutes as existed at the time of their first emigration, etc., and also to all the acts of assembly in force on the 1st of June, 1774, where no individual creditors have prior liens. State v. Bank of Maryland (1834) 6 Gill & J. 223, 23 Am. Rep. 551.

So in Jones v. Jones (1837) 1 Bland, Ch. 444, 13 Am. Dec. 327, holding that a debtor's real estate is liable under the Maryland statute to be taken in execution, it was said that in England the king's debt in execution and in the administration of a deceased's estate is preferred to that of a citizen, which right of preference was, in Maryland, extended to the lord proprietary, and after our Revolution it was held to have devolved, according to the principles of the common law upon the state, and it has been expressly declared that all lands and tenements belonging to any public debtor after the commencement of suit against him shall be liable to execution in whatever hands or possession they may be found (March, 1778, chap. 9, § 4; Nov., 1787, chap. 40, by which legislative enactment the state's lien as in England relates not merely to the date of the judgment but to the commencement of the action), whence it follows that the liability of the real estate of a debtor to the state to be taken in execution and the lien of the state incident to such liability are founded upon the common law and the acts of assembly passed in express relation to debts due to the state.

In New York it was held in Receiver of Taxes v. Yonkers & N. Y. Fire Ins. Co. (1872) cited in article in 16 Alb. L. J. 298, that the state is a preferred creditor upon the ground that it had succeeded to the common-law prerogative of the king.

And in Wendell v. Jackson (1831) 3 Wend. 133, 23 Am. Dec. 635; Lansing v. Smith (1829) 4 Wend. 9, 21 Am. Dec. 89, and People v. Herkimer (1825) 4 Cow. 345, 15 Am. Dec. 379,—each turning upon a question foreign to this note, it was said that the people of the state, as successors of its former sovereign, the king, are entitled to all the rights which formerly belonged to him by virtue of his prerogative.

The time of such succession to the rights of the crown being placed upon the declaration of independence, in Wendell v. Jackson, supra.

So in Pennsylvania the rule appears to have originally been the same, though it was subsequently modified by statute.

Thus in Com. v. Baldwin (1832) 1 Watts, 54, 25 Am. Dec. 33, holding that the commonwealth is not bound by a statute limiting the duration of the lien of a judgment unless expressly named therein, it was adjudged that the commonwealth had sucpreservation intact of the public moneys which are the fruits of taxation. The source of this power and right of preference, it is asserted, is grounded mainly on the common law, and upon certain provisions of our constitution.

Whatever of the common law is in force in this jurisdiction is here by the terms of the statute adopting it, enacted at an early day, and incorporated in section 498 of the Revised Statutes of Wyoming. It reads as follows: "The common law of England as modified by judicial decisions, so far as the same is of a general nature, and not inapplicable, and all declaratory or remedial acts or statutes made in aid of, or to supply the defects of, the common law prior to the fourth year of James the First (excepting the second section of the sixth chapter of forty-third Elizabeth, the eighth chapter of the thirteenth Elizabeth and the ninth chapter of thirty-seventh Henry Eighth) and which are of a general nature and not local to England, shall be the rule of decision in this territory (state) when not inconsistent with the laws thereof, and shall be considered as of full force, until repealed by legislative authority." The British statutes excepted from this act of adoption are: "An act for avoiding trifling and frivolous suits in her majesty's courts at Westminster" (Stat. 43 Eliz., chap. 6, § 2); "An act against usury" (Stat. 18 seeded to so much of the prerogative of the king as belonged to him in the capacity of parens patrie or universal trustee, and the rule was laid down that the legislature shall not be taken to have postponed a public right to that of an individual unless such an intent be manifested by explicit terms or at least by necessary and irresistible implication.

But in Com. v. Lewis (1814) 6 Binn. 286, it was said that "the state of Pennsylvania always took preference to individuals until the Act of April, 1794, which directs that debts due to the state from deceased persons shall be last paid."

This modification, it will be observed, applies to deceased debtors only. The state still takes preference in the estates of living debtors and an account settled by the accounting officers of the commonwealth becomes a lien on all the real estate of the debtor. Dictum in Com. v. Lewis, supra; and see Forney v. Com. (1849) 10 Pa. 406, set forth under headings, Nature and extent, and When it attaches and how deeded; Commonwealth's App. (1846) 4 Pa. 164; and Re Arnold's Estate (1863) 46 Pa. 277,—set forth under first heading above named; and in Re Mitchell's Estate (1888) 2 Watts, 87, set forth under heading, When it attaches and how deeded.

And in Georgia the prerogative right of the state to preference or priority in the payment of debts was held to have constituted a branch of the common law in England and as such to have been adopted by the state by the Act of 1874 which introduced into the jurisprudence of that state the whole body of the common law so far as it was not inconsistent with its frame of government, in Robinson v. Bank of Darien (1855) 18 Ga. 65.

In that case it was said that the right of priority of payment of public debts is given because it is necessary to enable the state to accomplish the end of its institution; that, as the government was established for the good of the whole and can only be supported by means of its revenue, this revenue ought to be protected for the benefit of the whole.

But the right of the state to priority of payment does not exist with all the incidents to the royal prerogative right in England. The priority of the states is a rule only in the distribution of the property of the debtor requiring the debt due the state to be first paid when the individual creditor has no antecedent lien overreaching it. Ibid.

And in Kentucky, in Com. v. Logan (1809) 1 Bibb, 529, the decision that a specialty to an individual has priority over a simple-contract debt to the commonwealth, is decided upon common-law principles and authorities, though the court nowhere holds that the state is possessed of the common-law prerogative and right of priority of the king.

The state of New Jersey, however, is held not to possess the common-law prerogative of the crown to have debts due it paid in preference to debts due to other creditors. Middlesex County Board of Chosen Freeholders v. State Bank at New Brunswick (1878) 80 N. J. Eq. 311, affirming 29 N. J. Eq. 268, 29 L. R. A.

And in South Carolina it is held that the state is not entitled to priority over other creditors except in cases provided by statute. State v. Cleary (1833) 2 Hill, L. pt. 2, p. 600.

And that the common-law prerogative of the king to be paid in preference to all other creditors does not apply to the state. The right of the state depends, in this respect, altogether upon the statute law. Klinck v. Keckley (1836) 2 Hill, Eq. 250.

So in State v. Harris (1832) 2 Dall. L. 598, it was held that the king's prerogative of preference in the payment of debts due the crown has not been extended to that state so as to entitle the state to priority of payment of a debt which does not constitute a specific lien upon the property of the debtor, as the prerogative right has been so modified as to depend upon statute and none of the statutes with relation thereto have been adopted in that state.

And in Commissioners of Public Accounts v. Greenwood (1796) 1 Desause, Eq. 450, it was held that the state of South Carolina has not retained the common-law prerogative of the king of an unlimited priority of payment of debts due it before those of a citizen so as to give it a right to priority of payment out of the estate of a deceased commissioner of the treasury of a claim for a breach of his official bond over claims upon judgment and mortgages due to private creditors.

Baxter v. Baxter (1884) 23 S. C. 114, however, criticises State v. Harris, and Klinck v. Keckley, supra, the court saying that the preference of the state is not based upon the ground of prerogative and therefore confined to such debts as are due to the state as a sovereign, as, for instance, taxes, but that it rests solely upon the terms of the act, and the only question is as to the proper construction of the language there used.

In that case it was said that all that was decided by State v. Harris, supra, was that the state was not entitled at common law on the ground of prerogative to any preference over other creditors.

The proviso to the fifth subdivision of the section regulating preferences of the bankruptcy act that nothing contained in the act shall interfere with the assessment or collection of taxes by authority of the United States or of any state, does not create a preference in favor of a state, other than that in which proceedings in bankruptcy are pending, which has failed to collect taxes due it from the bankrupt. Re Ambler (1875) 8 Ben. 176.

b. Constitutionality of provisions for.

As a general rule, the constitutionality of provisions for priority of the states in the payment of debts due them has remained unquestioned, but the right has been so repeatedly upheld when questioned upon other grounds, as to tend strongly toward placing it in the list of settled questions.

In State v. Dickson (1868) 38 Ga. 171, however, the Georgia Act of 1868, authorizing priority of payment of claims due the state, was claimed to be Eliz., chap. 8) ; "A bill against usury" (Stat. 37 Hen. VIII., chap. 9). The period fixed for transplanting the common law into this country, and the time in which it is considered as having effect over this jurisdiction, is the fourth year of James I.—the period when the first territorial or colonial government was established in America, and with it the common law of England, as it then existed. Penny v. Little, 4 Ill. 804. The charter to Gates, Somers, and others for the colony of Virginia, was granted in the fourth year of that monarch, on the 10th day of April, 1606; and by it provision was made for the establishment of a government in the wilds of America, which should rest upon the reason, the experience, and the luster of the British jurisprudence. By our statute, the common law is adopted, with "all declaratory and remedial acts or statutes made in aid of, or to supply the defects of, the common law," prior to the time when the first colonial government was established by England upon American soil, with the exception of certain statutes mentioned; and these curative and remedial statutes must be as well consulted as the common law, in order to ascertain the body of law adopted here.

The right of the crown to have its debts preferred was of very ancient origin, and was recognized in Magna Charta. It was held to be an incident to sovereignty, and not as a unconstitutional as against debts to individuals incurred before its enactment, as violating the obligation of the contract between debtor and creditor, but the court said that it thought the statute to be merely declaratory of what the law previously was, but that, if it were otherwise, it did not see how the obligation of the contract could be impaired by the assertion by the state of a priority which she claims and exercises in all cases, in the collection of her revenues.

c. Nature and extent.

Where the right of a state to priority of payment of debts due it rests solely upon statutes providing therefor, its extent and nature depend entirely upon the proper construction of the language used in the enactment. Baxter v. Baxter (1884) 23 S. C. 114.

And it is not entitled to priority except in the cases provided by the statute. State v. Cleary (1838) 2 Hill, L. pt. 2, p. 600.

Thus the priority of payment of debts due to the public directed by the South Carolina Act of 1789, in the administration of the assets of a deceased person, does not extend to the preference of a debt due to the state in distributing the estate and effects assigned by a debtor under the insolvent debtor's act. State v. Harris (1832) 2 Bail. L. 592.

And the state has no right of priority in the payment of debts due it under the Act of the Province of Maryland of 1650, chapter 23, giving such priority to the lord proprietary of Maryland, as that act was confined to the proprietary and his heirs, and was not in existence at the time of the Revolution. State v. Bank of Maryland (1834) 6 Gill & J. 205, 223, 26 Am. Dec. 561.

Where the right of the state to priority is based upon the prerogative right of the king, its former sovereign, its nature and extent, of course, depend upon the prerogative right as exercised at common-law subject to the modifications necessitated by our different and differing forms of government.

"Anciently the king might, by his writ of protection, prevent any subject from suing his debtor until his debt was paid." Middlesex County Board of Chosen Freeholders v. State Bank at New Brunswick (1878) 29 N. J. Eq. 268.

"Debts due the crown by record or upon specialty are entitled to preference over debts of the same class due to subjects, but simple-contract debts due to the crown are not entitled to preference over debts of record due to subjects, but where both are simple-contract debts, that due to the crown must be preferred." Ibid.

And the state is entitled to priority at common law whenever she and a citizen have claims of equal degree and a conflict arises by death or the act of the party, the debtor not having enough to pay his debts. Rs Green's Estate (1848) 4 Md. Ch. 354.

The priority of the state, however, is a rule only 39 L. R. A.

in the distribution of the property of the debtor, requiring the debt due the state to be first paid when the individual creditor has no antecedent lien overreaching it. Robinson v. Bank of Darien (1855) 18 Ga. 65.

And the state is entitled to priority of payment of a debt due it out of the assets of the estate of a deceased person, except where some antecedent lien stands in the way. Orem v. Wrightson (1878) 51 Md. 34, 34 Am. Rep. 286.

Debts due the state have priority in the distribution of the estate of an insolvent over debts due private individuals without reference to the respective dates of the liens. Seay v. Bank of Rome (1851) 66 Ga. 615.

And the state is entitled to priority of payment out of property in the hands of an heir, of a bond passed to it by the ancestor in his lifetime, over a bond given by the ancestor to an individual. State v. Rogers (1786) 2 Harr. & M'H. 198.

And out of the proceeds of lands sold for the payment of debts because of the insufficiency of the personal property of a deceased debtor for that purpose, as against other general creditors, neither the state nor the creditors having any lien. Smith v. State (1847) 5 Gill, 45.

So where two judgments are rendered against the same party on the same day, one in favor of the state and the other in favor of an individual, that in favor of the state standing first on the docket, the state's judgment is entitled to priority of payment out of the estate of the deceased judgment debtor. Rs Greene's Estate (1848) 4 Md. Ch. 356.

And in Contee v. Chew (1808) 1 Harr. & J. 417, it was held that a judgment in favor of the state against a person since deceased has preference over and should be paid before a judgment against him in favor of an individual.

And the state is entitled to a preference, under Maryland Act of 1786, March 11, providing that in the payment of debts of deceased persons, no creditor shall be entitled to any priority except such as have judgments against the deceased, nor shall any preference be given to creditors in equal degree in the payment of a debt over all debts not on record. Murray v. Ridley (1793) 3 Harr. & M'H. 171.

But the state is entitled to preference in the distribution of the estate of a deceased person only where the intestate is indebted to the state and the citizen in equal degree; a junior judgment in favor of the commissioners of the poor, therefore, is not entitled to be paid in preference to senior judgments in favor of private creditors. Klinck v. Keckley (1835) 2 Hill, Eq. 250.

And a debt due by specialty to a citizen is entitled to preference in the course of administration over a simple-contract debt due the commonwealth. Com. v. Logan (1809) 1 Bibb, 529.

Nor is a debt due by an intestate as surety on personal right attaching to the king's person. It was modified by a number of statutes which were incorporated in the body of the common law by our act of adoption. These were the statutes of 9 Hen. III., Stat. 1, chap. 18, of 25 Edw. III., chap. 19, and of 33 Hen. VIII., chap. 89. By them, the prerogative of the crown was shorn of its original oppressive character. Anciently, the subject had first to pay "gree" or satisfaction to the king of the king's debt, before he could have execution against the king's debtor; and, if he sued the king's debtor without first satisfying the king's debt, the writ of protection ran against the subject seeking his remedy or process against the king's debtor. The last statute in point of time (33 Hen. VIII., chap. 89), as construed in the case of Giles v. Grover, in the house of lords (decided in 1832), as appears from the opinions of the judges (9 Bing. 128), permitted the subject to secure judgment, and obtain process thereon, against the king's debtor, without first making gree or satisfaction. But the king had the right to pursue his remedy concurrently with the debtor, even after the judgment of the latter, and even if process had been issued and executed thereon, if the title to the property remained unaltered in the debtor; and the king's process, in such a case, although issued after the process of the subject, was entitled to preference. The the bond of a county treasurer, under South Carolina Act of 1789, providing for priority of payment of debts due to the public, entitled to preference over antecedent liens either general or special. Barter v. Barter (1884) 23 S. C. 114.

And the same rule was applied to a claim against the estate of a deceased commissioner of the treasury for breach of his official bond as against judgments and mortgages due to private creditors, in Commissioners of Public Accounts v. Greenwood (1795) 1 Desauss. Eq. 450.

And when a judgment is obtained against a person in his lifetime, his executor or administrator must satisfy it out of his estate in preference to a debt of specialty in favor of the state created after its rendition. Hollingsworth v. Patton (1793) 8 Harr. & M'H. 125.

In Pennsylvania a claim of the commonwealth against a surety of a defaulting collector of duties is payable, under the Act of May 30, 1811, providing that the amount of balances settled agreeably to the act, due the commonwealth, shall be a lien upon the real estate of the persons indebted and their sureties from the date of the settlement, out of the proceeds of the sureties' lands sold under a decree of the orphan's court for the payment of his debts, paramount to a mortgage subsequently executed and the claims of other creditors. Forney v. Com. (1849) 10 Pa. 405.

But the commonwealth has no lien for the balance of an account settled with a county treasurer upon his real estate or that of his sureties under that act which will entitle it to preference over judgment creditors in the distribution of the proceeds of the treasurer's real estate unless a certified copy of the account has been transmitted to the prothonotary of the county in which he resided and entered of record as required by the Act of 1827. Re Arnold's Estate (1863) 46 Pa. 277.

Nor for an account settled with a brigade inspector which will entitle it to preference in payment out of the proceeds of real estate of such inspector sold under judgments entered by his sureties on his bond of indemnity as against such judgments under that act, where the account has not been transmitted to the prothonotary of the county where the inspector resided for entry of record as required by such Act of April, 1827. Commonwealth's App. (1848) 4 Pa. 164.

In Forney v. Com., supra, however, it was held that the lien of the commonwealth is not lost because no entry or notice of the lien was made in the docket of the common pleas of a county in which a surety of a defaulting collector resided, of a claim against him, as the Act of April 16, 1827, applies to principals only and not to sureties.

d. To what indebtedness it applies.

As a general rule the right of a state to priority of payment of a debt due it is deemed to apply to every species of indebtedness due it or to the public as such.
21 L. R. A.

Debts due to the public which by South Carolina Act of 1789 are to be preferred in the order of paying the debts of a deceased person are said in State v. Harris (1852) 2 Bail. L. 556, to include debts which are due to the state as a sovereign and for the protection of citizens and property, but that debts which arise ex contractu and which are therefore due to her in her corporate capacity, or debts which arise ex delicto, and which are the punishment of the law for misdemeanors, cannot be entitled to any preference over debts due to citizens.

But in Barter v. Barter (1884) 23 S. C. 114, in construing the South Carolina Statute of 1789, providing for priority of payment of debts due to the public, the court overruled State v. Harris, supra, stating that the preference of the state is not confined to such debts as are due to the state as a sovereign but depends upon the proper construction of the statute, and saying that "where we find that there is a debt and that it is due to the public we are bound to place it in the class which the legislature has declared shall be entitled to preference."

And it was held in that case that a debt due by an intestate as surety on the bond of a county treasurer is a debt due to the public and entitled to priority as such within the meaning of the act.

In Re Southwestern Car Co. (1879) 9 Biss. 76, it was held that a claim of the state upon a contract for the employment of convicts is a debt due to the state which is entitled to priority of payment out of the assets of the bankrupt under the bankruptcy act. U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5101, sub. 3.

In Pennsylvania, however, the right of preference of the state applies to indebtedness of living debtors only and not to debts due from the estates of deceased persons. See Pennsylvania cases cited supra, under heading, Upon what based.

So where a bank is appointed a state depository in Georgia and gives bond as such, a lien is created on the property of the principal and sureties which will, upon default of the depository, entitle the state to priority of payment out of the proceeds of the sale of lands owned by a surety at the time the bond was given under execution issued against the depository and his sureties, as against a claim for improvements made by a subsequent purchaser from the surety, without knowledge of the lien. Simpson v. Mathis (1837) 79 Ga. 159.

And the commissioners of insolvency have no jurisdiction over a claim against an insolvent estate for a debt due on state prison account, as it is a preferred claim under Me. Rev. Stat., chap. 66, § 1, providing that public rates and taxes and money due the state have priority over the general creditors of an insolvent estate. State v. Elmhorn (1877) 67 Me. 504.

But the proceeds of lands of a testator sold for the payment of debts under a direction in the will are equitable assets which should be distributed proceedings between sovereign and subject are aptly termed, in the opinion of one of the judges, "a race with the crown." It was held that the sheriff holding the property of the king's debtor, seized under a fi. facias, but not sold, could not defeat the subsequent process of the king, either by extent in chief or in aid, which were, in effect, deemed the same, for the reason that, before the sale of the property seized under the fi. fa., the title to the property had not been divested from the debtor, and the king's process should have preference, although subsequent to that of the subject creditor. It was conceded upon the argument in the case, and so held by the court, that the crown could not avoid an equitable mortgage or the lien of a factor or of a wharfinger, or of "a bona fide assignment in trust for creditors." See opinion of Patteson, J., page 189. This is stated in Tidd, Pr. 1052, 1058; King v. Watson, 8 Price, 6,—and it is undoubtedly the rule in England that the transfer, bona fide, of the debtor's property, while he has absolute dominion over it, defeats the king's prerogative right, and his preference and priority are lost. So it was held in the much-cited case of State v. Bank of Maryland, 6 Gill & J. 228, 26 Am. Dec. 561, and in a state that recognizes this common-law prerogative of the king as in force and applying to the state. So, as a valid deed of assignment for the among all the creditors pari passu and cannot be appropriated in whole by the commonwealth in satisfaction of a claim held by it against the testator. Nimmo v. Com. (1809) 4 Hen. & M. 57, 4 Am. Dec. 488.

And payment of taxes by a lessor upon his own lands occupied by a lessee under contract to pay all taxes assessed on the demised premises, who had become a bankrupt, does not entitle the lessor to claim the amount of such payment as a preferred debt against the estate of the lessee under section 28 of the Bankruptcy Act. Re Parker & Peck (1872) 6 Ben. 286.

So the deposit by the warden of a penitentiary of funds entrusted to him by the state in his own name as warden, does not constitute the bank in which it was made a debtor of the state so as to give the state a right of prior payment of its claim therefor upon the subsequent bankruptcy of the bank. Re Corn Exchange Bank (1877) 7 Riss. 400, 15 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 481.

Re Corn Exchange Bank, supra, distinguishes Bayne v. United States (1876) 93 U. S. 642, 23 L. ed. 997, set forth under heading, Who are debtors of the United States, upon the ground that that decision was rendered because the money was received by the persons with whom it was deposited in pursuance of a fraudulent conspiracy knowing that it was the money of the government held by the depositor as public money.

In Re Mellor (1788) 10 Ben. 58, however, it was held that a debt for merchandise which was the property of the state sold by the warden of a prison to persons who became bankrupts, for which the warden filed proof of debt stating it to be due him as agent and warden of the state prison, is a debt due to the state and entitled to priority of payment as such.

Re Mellor, supra, distinguishes Re Corn Exchange Bank, supra, and Com. v. Phoenix Bank (1846) 11 Met. 129, set forth under heading, Priority of the United States, subhead, What debts are within the statute, upon the ground that they were decided upon the assumption that, under the statutes regulating the rights and responsibilities of wardens of state prisons, the warden was, in effect, a contractor with the state and chargeable as such with all moneys that came to his hands and not responsible as an agent to his principal, while the law under which this case arose imposes no personal liability upon the warden for contracts made officially and his duty with reference to moneys of the state is that of a mere agent.

Nor are debts due to a corporation created by the state for banking purposes entitled to prior payment out of the assets of an insolvent debtor under Tennessee Act of 1883, chap. 36, § 4, and 1883, chap. 283, § 12, giving priority of payment of debts and arrearages due the state, though the whole interest in such corporation is owned by the state, as such provisions refer to debts and arrearages 29 L. R. A.

due the state in its sovereign character as revenue, fines, forfeitures, penalties, and the like. Fields v. Wheatley (1858) 1 Sneed, 351.

And where a state incorporates a bank and places the public funds in it to be controlled and managed by the officers thereof, she divests herself, so far as the operations of the bank are concerned, of her sovereign character and assumes that of a private individual, and, though the sole owner of the capital stock of the bank, she is not entitled to claim priority of payment of a debt due to the bank by virtue of her sovereign prerogative, out of a decedent's estate. Central Bank of Georgia v. Little (1893) 11 Ga. 846; Bank of the State v. Gibbs (1825) 8 McCord, L. 877.

Such a bank is a mere corporation possessing the same powers and privileges as other corporations only. Bank of the State v. Gibbs, supra.

And the state by giving the bank the capacity to sue and be sued, voluntarily strips itself of its sovereign character so far as respects the transactions of the bank and waives all the privileges of that character. Central Bank of Georgia v. Little, supra, quoting Bank of United States v. Planters Bank of Georgia (1824) 23 U. S. 9 Wheat. 904, 6 L. ed. 244.

So in Moore v. Wabash & Erie Canal Trustees (1856) 7 Ind. 423, holding that a state which creates a corporation and transfers her property to it, in which she becomes an associate, loses her exemption from suit so far as that corporation is concerned, it was said, quoting from Bank of United States v. Planters Bank of Georgia, supra, that "as a member of a corporation, a government never exercises its sovereignty; it acts merely as a corporation and exercises no other powers in the management of the affairs of the corporation than are expressly given by the incorporating act."

And in Governor v. Woodworth (1872) 68 Ill. 254, holding that the fact that the state has an interest as a creditor in a bond running to the governor for the use of the people and all others interested does not take an action thereon out of the statute of limitations, it was said that a state becoming a partner in business with corporations or individuals, divests itself of its sovereign character, and the same rules must be applied where the company or corporation is a party as if it were composed alone of private individuals.

And in Bank of the State v. Gibson (1844) 6 Ala. 514, holding that a bank of which the state is the exclusive proprietor must cause a claim held by it to be presented to the administrator of the deceased debtor within the time prescribed for ordinary debts, it was said that the legislature cannot confer upon a monied corporation established by itself any portion of the sovereign power which is inherent in the body politic. But see next case.

A statute regulating the order in which the debts due by a testator or intestate are to be paid which includes and refers to debts due the public, by implication, a preference or priority in favor of either the state or its municipality, as against its citizen, in the payment of the debts of a common debtor, and has no reference to the question of such priority or preference. It seems that if Kent, the insolvent assignor, is a debtor to the state and to the county of Laramie, his debt to either of them cannot be extinguished by a partial payment. A payment or dividend out of the insolvent estate might be made, pro tanto, but could not operate as a release of the unpaid portion of the debt, as the assignment law provides, because the constitution expressly forbids the extinction of such a debt, except by payment into the proper treasury.

2. The remaining question to be decided is that of following the trust moneys belonging to the state and the county into the estate of Kent, the insolvent debtor. Upon the deposit of these public funds in his bank, he became a quasi trustee, as he stood in the shoes of the depositing treasurers; having knowledge of the trust character of the funds, and having kept his accounts with the respective treasurers, as such. Under our constitutional and statutory provisions, it is clear that the state and the county treasurers are but custodians of the public funds coming into their hands by virtue of their office, and that such moneys remain at all times public moneys, while in their official possession, or in the hands of their depositaries. The statutes of this state are similar to those of Colorado, and in that state it is held that county moneys received and collected by a county treasurer belong to the county, which may maintain an action to recover the same. McClure v. La Plata County Comrs. 19 Colo. 122; Sauer v. Nevadaville, 14 Colo. 54. See State v. McPetridge, 84 Wis. 473, 20 L. R. A. 233. In Michigan it was held that a state treasurer, as to state funds, held a different relation to the state than a county treasurer bears to his county, under the peculiar provisions of the statutes of that state (Perley v. Muskegon County, 32 Mich. 132, 20 Am. Rep. 637), but we think no such distinction exists here. In the Michigan case just cited, it was intimated that, in the case of the death of the county treasurer, the moneys held by him in his official capacity would go to his administrator, and not to his successor in office; but our statute requires the executor or administrator of a deceased county treasurer, under severe penalties and increased liabilities, to deliver up, on demand, the books, moneys, and papers of the deceased official. Rev. Stat. § 1828. Then, as is ordinarily the case under like statutory provisions to ours, it appears the moneys received by either a state or a county treasurer, in this state, by virtue of the office, are considered as public moneys; and the state or the county may maintain an action, like the ones at bar, to charge with a trust the property purchased with such public moneys, or the moneys, in whatever form or transmutations they may have undergone, provided they can be traced or identified. A difficulty arises under the findings of the district court, in these cases, as it does not appear that the public funds deposited with Kent can be traced, or have been traced, into any specific fund or property. Their deposit is found to be a general, and not a special, deposit, and they were evidently not to be returned in specie, but in equivalents. They can be traced to the possession of the insolvent, the assignor, and into his estate, but not further. No particular property is discovered, into which they were converted or found their way, or for which they were substituted; but the findings, on the contrary, are that they went into the mass of the funds of the bank, and were applied generally to the payment of the debtors, including the mass of depositors, in the usual course of business. There is no property of the insolvent estate, other than the moneys on hand, and the balances due and owing to Kent from other banks at the time of his assignment which can be considered to represent any portion of the trust moneys. Some loans were negotiated by Kent, and passed by the assignment; but at the time of that assignment there was, in the vaults of the bank, only the sum of $2,058.72 in cash, and on deposit in other banks the sum of $1,624.-82.

In following trust funds, they must first be traced to the estate of the trustee or quasi trustee, and the corpus of the fund must be found. It must be in esse, in some form, or it cannot be identified. Where the trust moneys are mingled with those of the trustee, the trust may be impressed upon such fund or property with which it is mingled; but, if it appears that the trust moneys are dissipated or lost, there is no fund to impress with the trust, and the sole remedy of the beneficiary is a proceeding against the trustee, personally. Where he is solvent, this is the usual remedy pursued, as by judgment and execution the whole estate can be impressed with the amount of the judgment. Some of the courts have held, as the "modern" equity doctrine, that all that is necessary is to trace the trust moneys into the estate of the trustee, which then becomes impressed with the trust. This was the rule established by a number of cases in the supreme court of Wisconsin, until a return to the general rule was announced in Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, 87 Wis. 237, and the former cases were overruled. The leading cases on the subject are those of Re Cavin's Petition v. Gleason, 105 N. Y. 256, 262; Little v. Chadwick, 151 Mass. 109, 7 L. R. A. 570, and Slater v. Oriental Mills, 18 R. I.—

That the money constituting the trust may have been wrongfully converted by the defaulting or delinquent trustee does not seem to alter the situation, as some of the courts hold. There is no peculiar sanctity that surrounds an action ex delicto, as distinguished from an action ex contractu, at law, so far as the obtaining satisfaction of any judgment is concerned; and when equity is invoked in the former cases, equitable rules must be applied. Where no specific lien is created by contract, or the acts of the parties, none exists. The only course open is in equity, to discover the corpus of the trust fund, or to follow the changes and transmutations of the trust moneys into some particular property that can be charged with the trust, saving the rights of innocent purchasers for value. The courts generally have gone as far as it seems possible, in holding that the presumption always is that the trustee has used his own funds in his business operations; and, if there be any money on hand at the time the trust is sought to be enforced, that presumption controls. So the trustee who has blended trust moneys with his own is not permitted to say that he has used trust moneys when he had a right to use his own. This appears to be one of the principles that governed the decision in the famous case of Knatchbull v. Hallett, L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 696, which overruled some prior English decisions. It is to the effect that if a person who holds money as a trustee, or in a fiduciary character, pays it to his account at his banker's, and mixes it with his own money, and afterwards draws out sums by checks in the ordinary manner, the drawer must be taken to have drawn out his own moneys in preference to the trust money. This principle pervades some of the cases which adopt the rule that the entire estate of the trustee is impressed with the trust moneys traced to it. In Kimmel v. Dickson (S. Dak.) 25 L. R. A. 309, the moneys found in a defunct bank amounted to $259.71, while the amount left there by plaintiff before it failed, to be used for the payment of his note, was $265. The case was decided upon the authority of Ellicott v. Barnes, 31 Kan. 170; Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 156, 46 Am. Rep. 90.—and upon the case of McLeod v. Ecans, 66 Wis. 401, 57 Am. Rep. 287, which had then been overruled by Nonotuck Silk Co. v. Flanders, supra. But the order of the trial court was affirmed, and that was that the receiver of the insolvent bank pay to the plaintiff the sum found in the bank at the time of its failure, although it was less than the sum left there for the specific purpose of paying the note. So it was in the case of Massey v. Fisher, 62 Fed. Rep. 958, very recently decided. In the course of the opinion, the court remarks: "It is not important that the plaintiff's money bore no mark, and cannot be identified. It is sufficient to trace it into the bank's vaults and find that a sum equal to it, and presumably representing it, remained continuously there until the receiver took it. The modern rules of equity require no more." Some of the cases cited by the learned judge go further than he, but his conclusion, though reached at the extreme limits of the rule, seems correct. The trust moneys here are traced to the bank vaults, and to deposits made elsewhere, and the sum found there represents a portion of them. The amount of moneys on hand at the time of the assignment to the defendant for the benefit of the creditors of Kent constitutes the only portion of the trust moneys that can be traced and identified as trust moneys; and these only under the fiction or presumption, that seems to be a well-established rule of equity, that the trustee is presumed to have paid out his own moneys, and kept those belonging to the trust. This was tacitly conceded upon the argument by counsel for the defendant. The commercial paper representing loans made to different parties before the assignment, and passing by it to the assignee, as the court below finds, were severally exchanged for moneys when there was sufficient funds of Kent on hand out of which the loans were made. Upon the presumption as established in equity, and referred to above, it must be held that these loans were made from the moneys of the trustee, and not from the trust funds, and should not be impressed with the trust.

As the inquiries of the district court have been answered generally by this opinion, it will not be necessary to specifically answer the questions propounded.

Corn and Blake, JJ., concur.

J. W. Blake, Judge of District Court, sat in lieu of Conaway, J., disqualified.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Henry BISSELL, Appt.,

v.

Edward H. DAVISON et al.

(65 Conn. 183.)

1. The existence of small-pox in a town or an indication that an epidemic of that disease is likely to present itself is not necessary to permit school committees to require vaccination of pupils before attending public schools, under Gen. Stat. §§ 2137 and 2137.

2. A statute authorizing school authorities to make vaccination a condition of the privilege of attending public schools is essentially a police regulation and does not violate the constitutional guarantees of due process of law or equal protection of the law.

NOTE.—In connection with the above case, see Duffield v. Williamport School Dist. (Pa.) 25 L. R. A. 152, and note, also the later case of Re Smith (N. Y.) 25 L. R. A. 320.

29 L. R. A.

(December 1, 1894.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for Hartford County in favor of defendants in a proceeding for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to admit plaintiff's son into the public schools. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Joseph L. Barbour and George W. Andrew, for appellant:

In Lake View School Trustees v. People, 87 Ill. 308, 29 Am. Rep. 55, the trustees had statutory authority to direct what branches should be taught, and to adopt and enforce all necessary rules and regulations for the management and government of schools. A candidate for admission passed a satisfactory examination in all the required branches except grammar, which his father did not wish him to study. The court held that he was unjustly refused admission and compelled the trustees to admit him to study the other branches.

In Morrow v. Wood, 35 Wis. 59, 17 Am. Rep. 471, the court decided that a teacher had no right to punish a pupil for refusing to pursue the study of geography, the parent having directed such refusal.

The advantages or benefit vouchsafed to each child, of attending a public school, is one derived and secured to it under the highest sanction of positive law. It is, therefore, a right, a legal right, as distinctively so as the vested right in property owned is a legal right, and as such it is protected, and is entitled to be protected, by all the guaranties by which other legal rights are protected and secured to the possessor.

Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 412.

Expelling a child from school is depriving him of a right within the meaning of the law.

Perkins v. West Des Moines Independent School Dist. Directors, 56 Iowa, 476.

It does not avail to say that the statute in question authorizes the action of the school committee and that therefore they are acting by due process of law. The phrase "due process of law," means more than a special act passed for the very purpose of authorizing the deprivation.

8 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 714; San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 751; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 184 U. S. 418, 83 L. ed. 970, 8 Inters. Com. Rep. 209; People v. Essex County Supra, 70 N. Y. 234; Leck v. Anderson, 57 Cal. 251, 40 Am. Rep. 115; Mead v. Larkin, 66 Ala. 87; Varden v. Mount, 78 Ky. 86, 39 Am. Rep. 208; Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 30 Am. Rep. 289; Zeigler v. South & North Ala. R. Co. 58 Ala. 594.

The children who attend private or parochial schools and there receive an education are exempt from submission to an operation which may be attended with disastrous results, while those who cannot attend such schools are deprived of educational advantages unless they submit.

San Mateo County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 733; Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 30 L. ed. 320.

It cannot be justly claimed that this law is a police regulation.

Re Tie Loy, 26 Fed. Rep. 614.

The police power of the state is not above and beyond the constitution.

Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 32 L. ed. 253; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 638, 31 L. ed. 205; People v. Gilson, 109 N. Y. 400; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 108, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 877, 52 Am. Rep. 34; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611.

It is not within the province of the legislature to arbitrarily include within the police power of the state that which does not legitimately come under its operation.

13 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 746; Re Jacobs, 33 Hun, 374, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636.

Messrs. Frank L. Hungerford and Philip J. Markley, for appellee:

The constitution is a mere limitation of the powers of the legislative department. Nothing should be regarded as prohibited which is 29 L. R. A.

not so, either expressly or by fair and reasonable implication.

Lourey v. Gridley, 30 Conn. 450; Wheeler's App. 45 Conn. 815.

The legislature is the sole judge of the justice and policy of its own acts.

Bishop's Fund Trustees v. Rider, 13 Conn. 108; State v. Brennan's Liquors, 25 Conn. 288; Cooley, Const. Lim. 159.

A legislative act will not be declared unconstitutional unless the fact clearly appears.

Hartford Bridge Co. v. Union Ferry Co. 29 Conn. 227; White v. Stamford, 37 Conn. 587. See also Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 588.

While education is a fundamental privilege, it is not a right; public schools are instituted by the legislature and sustained by public money, and they may and should be regulated by the power that created them.

Grandall v. State, 10 Conn. 347.

The privilege of obtaining a common-school education is a liberty or property right within the meaning of the language of the constitution, and there has been no deprivation thereof so far as the son of the petitioner is concerned.

Miller, U. S. Const. 684; Barbier v. Connolly, 118 U. S. 31, 28 L. ed. 924; Soon Hing v. Crowley, 118 U. S. 708, 28 L. ed. 1145; Leeper v. Texas, 189 U. S. 462, 35 L. ed. 225.

The privileges and immunities referred to in the 14th Amendment are the privileges and immunities arising out of the nature and essential character of the national government and granted or secured by the Constitution of the United States.

Miller, U. S. Const. 683; Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 34 L. ed. 519; Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S. 17 Wall. 36, 21 L. ed. 394.

The amendment does not prevent a state from framing such laws to regulate the privileges and immunities of its own citizens as do not abridge the privileges and immunities as citizens of the United States.

Miller, U. S. Const. 662; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 29 L. ed. 615; People v. Gallagher, 93 N. Y. 438, 45 Am. Rep. 232; Abel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226.

The 14th Amendment did not and was not intended to impair the police powers of the state.

Barbier v. Connolly, supra; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 683, 32 L. ed. 256.

Torrance, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On the 10th of March, 1894, the school committee of the town of New Britain passed the following vote: "That every pupil attending the public schools shall, at or before the beginning of the school term of this year, present to their teachers satisfactory evidence of vaccination, before he or she shall be allowed to attend school; and hereafter every pupil, upon entering school, shall conform to this requirement. That, after the beginning of the spring term of this year, all pupils shall be excluded from the schools, unless they have been properly vaccinated, and it shall be the duty of the superintendent to see that this order shall be enforced. Free vaccination shall be provided for all those unable to pay for the same." Under the provisions of this vote, the plaintiff's minor son, a pupil in the high school of New Britain, was excluded from said school, solely because he refused and neglected to be vaccinated. Upon the application of the plaintiff, the superior court issued an alternative writ of mandamus to the school committee of New Britain, in substance, requiring them to admit said minor as a pupil in the high school, or to show cause to the contrary to said court. In their return to this writ the school committee gave, in substance, as their reasons for excluding said minor from the high school, the fact of the existence of said vote, and the further fact that the minor neglected and refused to comply with its terms. To this return the plaintiff demurred upon the grounds—First, that the vote was not warranted by law; second, because it is in violation of the constitution of this state; and, third, because it is in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The superior court held the return to be sufficient, and overruled the demurrer, and the action of the court in so doing is the sole error assigned on this appeal.

Under the provisions of sections 2187 and 2197 of the General Statutes, the school committee of New Britain is invested with the power to require that every child shall be vaccinated, before being permitted to attend the public schools. The vote in question was passed in pursuance of the power so given. It is one way of exercising that power, and, so far as we can now see, it was an unobjectionable way of exercising it. If, then, the statute conferring this power upon the committee is a valid one, it would seem that the vote was warranted by law. But the plaintiff urges that the vote was not warranted by law, because, at the time it was passed, "it does not appear that there was a single case of small-pox in the town of New Britain, nor any indication that an epidemic of that disease was likely to present itself." This claim assumes that the power in question cannot be exercised by the school committee unless at the time of its exercise one or more cases of small-pox exist in town, or an epidemic of the disease is reasonably to be apprehended. But the statute conferring the power has imposed no such conditions upon its exercise, and we see no good reasons why any such conditions should be implied. We think the vote was clearly warranted by law, provided the statute in question is a valid one, which is the next point to be considered.

This proceeding may be regarded either as one brought to vindicate some right of the plaintiff, or some right of his minor son. The right, as it is called, to attend the public school, is one belonging to the minor, and not to the plaintiff, and should properly be vindicated in a proceeding brought by or on behalf of the minor. Stephenson v. Hall, 14 Barb. 222; Spear v. Cummings, 23 Pick. 224, 84 Am. Dec. 53; Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 376, 61 Am. Dec. 256. On the other hand, the plaintiff is the natural guardian of the minor, charged by law with the duty of sending him to school, and, to enable him to perform that duty, is, perhaps, entitled, on his own behalf, to bring a proceeding of this kind. People v. Detroit Board of Education, 18 Mich. 400. In discussing the validity of the statute, it will, perhaps, make the discussion briefer and clearer if we treat the proceeding—as was done in the argument—as if it were brought to vindicate the right of the minor to attend the public school.

The plaintiff contends that the statute conferring the power to require vaccination as a condition of admittance to or attendance at the public schools violates certain provisions of the constitution of this state, and of the Fourteenth Amendment to the National Constitution. He says, in effect, that it allows the privileges of the common schools to those who believe in vaccination, and denies it to those who do not; that it deprives him of his rights, without due course or process of law, and denies to him the equal protection of the laws. These objections to the validity of the statute, and the reasons and arguments urged in support of them, seem to proceed upon a misconception or misapprehension of the real nature and object of the statute. The statute in question forms a part of the laws relating to our common-school system, and must be read as a part of those laws. The duty of providing for the education of the children within its limits, through the support and maintenance of public schools, has always been regarded in this state in the light of a governmental duty resting upon the sovereign state. It is a duty not imposed by constitutional provision, but has always been assumed by the state; not only because the education of youth is a matter of great public utility, but also, and chiefly, because it is one of great public necessity for the protection and welfare of the state itself. In the performance of this duty, the state maintains and supports, at great expense, and with an ever-watchful solicitude, public schools throughout its territory, and secures to its youth the privilege of attendance therein. This is a privilege or advantage, rather than a right, in the strict technical sense of the term. This privilege is granted, and is to be enjoyed, upon such terms and under such reasonable conditions and restrictions as the law-making power, within constitutional limits, may see fit to impose; and, within those limits, the question, what terms, conditions, and restrictions will best subserve the end sought in the establishment and maintenance of public schools, is a question solely for the legislature, and not for the courts. The statute in question authorizes the committee to impose vaccination as one of those conditions. It does not authorize or compel compulsory vaccination. It simply requires vaccination as one of the conditions of the privilege of attending the public school. Its object is to promote the usefulness and efficiency of the schools by caring for the health of the scholars. It is of the same general nature as the power given in the same section to exclude from the schools children of school age, under the age of five years, whenever, in the judgment of the board or committee, the interests of the school will be thereby promoted.

The statute is essentially a police regulation,—as much so as would be one giving the power to exclude temporarily scholars afflicted with infectious or contagious diseases, or coming from homes or districts where such diseases were prevalent. In California a statute gave to the trustees of the general common-school districts the power to exclude from the schools scholars who had not been vaccinated, and this was upheld as a valid exercise of the police power. Abuel v. Clark, 84 Cal. 226. In Duffield v. Williamsport School Dist., 163 Pa. 476, 25 L. R. A. 152 (a recent case), the resolution of a school board requiring vaccination as a condition of the right of attending the public school, was upheld as a reasonable health regulation for the benefit of the pupils and the general public. In the case at bar the required condition is made to operate impartially upon all children alike. It affects all in the same way, and reasonable provision is made for providing free vaccination where necessary. It is a reasonable exercise of the power to require vaccination, if such requirement ever can, in the nature of things, be a reasonable one. If vaccination is a preventive of small-pox, as claimed by what appears to be the great majority of the medical profession, the requirement would seem to be a reasonable one. Public opinion, also, upon this question, as crystallized into law, seems to regard it as such a preventive. It is a question, however, about which medical men differ greatly, and upon which public opinion at the present day may be said to be divided. However this may be, we think that, in a case like the one at bar, touching the terms and conditions of attendance at the public schools, the question of the reasonableness, in this sense, of such a requirement, is one exclusively for the legislature. The question before us is not whether the legislature ought to have passed such a law. It is simply whether it had the power to pass it. In no proper sense can this statute be said to contravene the provisions of section 1 of the first article of our State Constitution, as claimed by the plaintiff. It may operate to exclude his son from school, but, if so, it will be because of his failure to comply with what the legislature regards, wisely or unwisely, as a reasonable requirement, enacted in good faith to promote the public welfare. Nor, in any proper sense, can the statute be said to deprive the plaintiff of any right, without due process of law, or to deny to him the equal protection of the law.

We think the demurrer was properly overruled. There is no error.

The other Judges concur.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Noah W. SHAFER

v.

A. J. LACOCK et al., Appts.

(168 Pa. 497.)

1. Declarations of the workmen of one employed in repairing a house which is burned during such employment, as to the cause of the fire, are admissible to charge him with liability when made while the fire is in progress.
2. One engaged in repairing a house is not relieved from liability for injury thereto by fire, through the negligence of his workmen, because he furnished proper appliances and competent workmen.
3. The burning of a house through fire set from the sparks of a fire-pot placed upon its roof by workmen engaged in repairing it will be presumed to have been caused by their negligence.

(May 30, 1895.)

APPPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas No. 2 for Allegheny County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to hold defendants liable for NOTE.—On the question of the presumption of negligence arising from an accident, see note,—covering several classes of cases of this kind,—to Barnowski v. Helson (Mich.) 15 L. R. A. 33, also Spellman v. Lincoln Rapid Transit Co. (Neb.) 20 L. R. A. 313; Haynes v. Raleigh Gas Co. (N. C.) 26 L. R. A. 810; Howser v. Cumberland & P. R. Co. (Md.) 27 L. R. A. 154; Budd v. United Carriage Co. (Or.) 27 L. R. A. 279, and other cases there cited.

29 L. R. A.

the destruction of plaintiff's house by fire which was alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant's servants while engaged in making repairs upon the house. Affirmed.

The assignments of error were as follows:

"First. The court erred in admitting the following evidence, testimony of plaintiff: 'A. Then, as soon as I got into the gate, one of the tinnerns came to me, and he said— A. He said, "I owe you an apology for burning your house down," and then he said to me,—told me how it occurred. He said, "I was working up on the roof, and I had exposed it. A spark got into the sheathing, and I thought I had put it out, and when I came back I found that the fire had such a start that we couldn't control it." What I said to him, I don't mind.'

"Second. The court erred in admitting the following evidence, testimony of Rose Shelton: 'Q. What did they say? A. Why, Mary Shafer asked them whether they were hunting for something. They were talking to themselves, and she asked them what it was about, and they said a spark had caught, and they wanted some water.'

"Third. The court erred in admitting the following evidence, testimony of Charles F. Swift: 'Q. Did you hear any conversation between the tinner and other persons, or yourself, that day, and, if so, when did you hear it? A. After the fire got well under headway, so far that nothing more could be done to carry articles from the house, the wind shifted to the south, I think, and the cinders came in a northwesterly direction, falling on many of the articles that had been removed from the house. They were lying in the upper part of the yard, and a number of us commenced carrying a number of those articles across the road, in Mr. Collenbaugh's yard, and during the time of carrying of these articles the conversation between the group of persons who were there and the tinner occurred there. Q. Well, now, just state what the conversation was. A. As we were standing there, he pointed at an opening at the foot of the window casing or mullion,—I don't know just exactly what you call it. It was resting on the window stool outside,—a hole large enough to enter my fist through. He said that his pot was sitting out on the roof, and that sparks from that pot drew around the mansard and the corner of the casing into that hole, and he discovered it was on fire; and he said he extinguished it, as he supposed, spit in it, rubbed it with his hand, put it out, and I can't say positively whether he said he put it out as far as he could see or not. Q. He gave that as the way the fire occurred? A. That was the only theory he could give at that time. Q. Did he say when that occurred? A. During the time that he was on the roof, mending a hole in the roof near the window, opening from the roof,—what time of day, do you mean? Q. Yes. A. I can't say as he did. I don't remember as he said just what time of day it was.

"Fourth. The court erred in admitting the following evidence, testimony of Milton Kerns: 'Q. Did Mr. Reese tell you that he expected to be discharged or bounced on Saturday for the burning of Mr. Shafer's house, and that it had caught from a spark from his charcoal stove? A. Yes, sir.'

"Fifth. The court erred in its answer to the fourth point submitted by defendants, which point and answer are as follows: 'If the jury believe that the workman sent by defendants to do the work upon plaintiff's house was a competent and careful workman, and that the fire pot furnished to him by defendants, and used by him, was a safe and proper appliance, then the defendants were not guilty of the want of reasonable and ordinary care, and their verdict should be for the defendants.' 'Refused.'

"Sixth. The court erred in its answer to the fifth point submitted by defendants, which point and answer are as follows: 'Fifth. Under all the evidence, the verdict should be for the defendants.' 'Refused.'

"Seventh. The court erred in its oral charge, as follows: 'Now, the contention of the defendant is that the fire did not originate from sparks from this fire pot, and he has suggested this theory to account for the fire,—and mainly on that contention they differ,—that the fire burst out at the side of the dormer window. Now, I allowed the testimony to be given of what the young man said at the time the building was burned, as a part of the res gesta. He admitted to Mr. Shafer that the fire, according to Mr. Shafer's testimony, originated from a spark from his fire pot, and that he tried to put it out, and failed. The colored girl, and also Mary, heard him admit that the fire caught from a spark. A man down in the yard while the house was burning said he explained where it caught; pointed up; caught from a spark. Then, the next day, he admitted, according to the testimony of those two witnesses who were called to contradict him, that the fire caught from a spark. To one of them he expressed the fear that he would be dismissed from the employment of the defendants for burning the house, and to the other one admitted that it caught from a spark, and that he thought he had extinguished it, and, when he returned, found it had got beyond control. Now, the young man, when first called as a witness, explaining what he said to Mr. Shafer, differs materially from what Mr. Shafer says he said. He said that he told Mr. Shafer he owed an explanation, and that he told him he thought the house caught from a spark. But his testimony here is that it did not catch from a spark. He has so testified, or rather explained his declaration to Mr. Shafer at that time, because he then supposed it caught from a spark. Now, as I say, gentlemen, the first question is, How did that fire take place? If it took place from a spark or sparks from the fire pot he was using, then the next question would be, was it negligence? Was it because of his negligence in handling it, or doing something which he ought not to have done, or not being as careful as he ought to have been? The fair presumption is, if it caught from sparks, that it was negligence. That is the fair presumption. He denies here that it caught from sparks, and denies that he said so to these others. Now, I say, if you find from the evidence that the fire originated from the sparks, the fair presumption would be that it was through some negligence of his. The plaintiff cannot explain the exact circumstances of the case, but the young man knows all about it. If it was not through negligence,—that is, if this spark set fire to the house without negligence on his part,—he could explain it, because, if it was purely accidental, without any negligence on his part, there would be no responsibility on him or his employer. By way of illustrating it, what I mean, gentlemen, I will say this: If he was handling the fire box very carefully, as he ought to have been doing, upon a roof where there would be danger from sparks, and if, with that care and caution that he ought to have exercised, there was a sudden puff of wind that sent sparks into the house, he would not be responsible; there would not be negligence there. He denies that the fire took place from sparks, and you have the declarations of the various witnesses. If you find that the fire did occur from sparks, the fair presumption would be that he was in some way negligent, as he only could explain how it occurred, and why he was not guilty of negligence, if it occurred from sparks.'

Messrs. J. S. Ferguson, James S. Young, and Lewis McMullin, for appellants:

Declarations are not competent as part of the res gesta unless made at the time of the accident and directly connected with the main fact.

21 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 106.

Declarations of a servant causing an injury, made after his act is entirely finished, are inadmissible as original evidence against his master in an action for such injury.

Vassar v. Knickerbocker Ice Co. 28 Jones & B. 118; Luby v. Hudson River R. Co. 17 N. Y. 181; Williamson v. Cambridge R. Co. 144 Mass. 148; Lane v. Bryant, 9 Gray, 245, 69 Am. Dec. 262; Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 86; Story, Agency, § 184; Northwestern Union Packet Co. v. Clough, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 540, 22 L. ed. 408; Vicksburg & M. R. Co. v. O'Brien, 119 U. S. 99, 30 L. ed. 299.

Negligence is not to be presumed upon the fact of an occurrence, the statement of which suggests itself, an anomalous, exceptional, and extraordinary character.

Buckley v. Gutta Percha & Rubber Mfg. Co. 118 N. Y. 540; Allison Mfg. Co. v. McCormick, 118 Pa. 519.

The burden of proof of negligence was upon the plaintiff, and the law will not presume it for him.

McCully v. Clarke, 40 Pa. 399, 80 Am. Dec. 584.

The jury shall not be permitted arbitrarily and without evidence to infer that there was negligence.

Baker v. Fehr, 97 Pa. 72.

Where the measure of duty is not unvarying, where a higher degree of care is demanded under some circumstances than under others, where both the duty and the extent of performance are to be ascertained as facts, a jury alone can determine what is negligence and whether it has been proved.

McCully v. Clarke, supra.

Messrs. J. M. Garrison and John S. Robb for appellee.

McCullum, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

If the destruction of the plaintiff's property was the direct result of the negligence of the defendants' servants in the performance of the work their employers had undertaken to do for him, this judgment must stand, unless it plainly appears that the court below erred in its rulings on offers of evidence, or in its instructions to the jury. It is contended, in support of the appeal, that the declarations of the workmen, made while the fire was in progress, to the effect that it was caused by their carelessness, were not admissible to charge their employers with liability for the consequences of it. We think this contention is sufficiently answered by the decisions of this court in Hanover R. Co. v. Coyle, 55 Pa. 396; Tompkins v. Saltmarsh, 14 Serg. & R. 275; Elkins v. McKean, 79 Pa. 493, and Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Lyons, 129 Pa. 113. We accordingly overruled the first, second, and third specifications of error.

As the evidence complained of in the fourth specification was received in rebuttal, and manifestly for the purpose of contradicting the defendants' principal witness in a material matter, it was clearly relevant, and its admission afforded no ground for reversing the judgment. The proposition that if the defendants furnished a proper fire pot, and competent and careful workmen, they are not responsible to the plaintiff for the loss he sustained through the negligence of their servants, is not applicable to the case. The relation between the parties is not that of master and servant, and the duties which the former owes to the latter need no consideration in the decision of the questions involved in this issue. For these reasons the fourth and fifth specifications are overruled.

There are cases in which a fair presumption or inference of negligence arises from the circumstances under which the injury occurred, and this, we think, is one of them. The defendants, by their servants, were in possession of the roof of the plaintiff's house, and engaged in repairing it. For the purposes of their work, they had a fire pot there, and it is established by the verdict that the fire which destroyed his property was caused by a spark or sparks from it. The workmen, while the fire was in progress, acknowledged that it was so caused; but on the trial they set up, in the interest of their employers, a theory respecting the origin of it which was discredited by their previous declarations and other testimony, and was rejected by the jury. It was a theory born long after the fire, and opposed to their observation at the time of it. It was speculative and conjectural, and it was justly condemned. The defendants, by their servants, were in exclusive possession of the roof, and the destruction of the property was due to fire brought there by them, and under their control. The occurrence was not in the ordinary course of things, and the circumstances connected with and surrounding it put on them the duty of showing that it was at least consistent with the exercise of proper care in the performance of their work. If it was capable of an explanation which repelled an inference that it resulted from their negligence, they could and ought to have made it, because they were in a position to do so, while, from the nature of the case, it was not in the power of the plaintiff to show expressly in what manner their work was performed, or the cause of the escape from the fire pot of the sparks by means of which his house was burned. In Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, §§ 59, 60, the rule applicable to the case is thus stated: "The accident, the injury, and the circumstances under which they occurred, are in some cases sufficient to raise a presumption of negligence, and thus cast upon the defendant the burden of establishing his freedom from fault." "When a thing which causes the injury is shown to be under the management of the defendant, and the accident is such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen, if those who have the management use proper care, it affords reasonable evidence, in the absence of explanation by the defendant, that the accident arose from a want of care." See also, on this point, Thomp. Neg. pp. 1237-1235; Cooley, Torta, 706; and 16 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 448,—and cases there cited.

In the light of the evidence, and the principles applicable to it, we cannot convict the learned court below of error in the instructions. We therefore overrule the sixth and seventh specifications.

Judgment affirmed.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT (Division 2).

STATE of Missouri, Resp.,

v.

George JULOW, App.

(.....Mo.....)

1. A right to insist that employes shall withdraw from or refrain from joining any trade union or labor union as a condition of employment or continued employment, is within the constitutional rights of an employer and protected by the constitutional guaranty of due process of law against a statute which attempts to make it an offense for an employer to impose such conditions.
2. A statute restricting the right to discharge laborers because of membership in labor unions is within a constitutional provision against special laws.
3. The police power does not extend to a statutory prohibition of the exercise by employers of the right to insist that employes shall not belong to labor unions.

(June 18, 1886.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the St. Louis Court of Criminal Correction convicting defendant of violating the statute making it unlawful for an employer to prohibit an employé from belonging to a labor union. Reversed.

Statement by Sherwood, J.:

The defendant, being tried upon an information, was fined $50 and appeals to this court. The information had for its origin the following statute:

"Section 1. No employer, superintendent, foreman, or other person exercising superintendence or authority over any mechanic, miner, engineer, fireman, switchman, baggageman, brakeman, conductor, telegraph operator, laborer, or other workman, shall enter into any contract or agreement with any such employé, to withdraw from any trade union, labor union, or other lawful organization of which said employé may be a member, or requiring said employé to refrain from joining any trade union, labor union, or other lawful organization, or requiring any such employé to abstain from attending any meeting or assemblage of people called or held for lawful purposes, or shall by any means attempt to compel or coerce any employé into withdrawal from any lawful organization or society.

"Sec. 2. Corporations, and the managers, superintendents, overseers, master mechanics, foremen, officers, and directors, and oth-

NOTE.—The above case decides a new constitutional question in the law of master and servant.

As to hours of labor, see note to People v. Phyle (N. Y.) 19 L. R. A. 141, also Re House Bill No. 1280 (Mass.) 28 L. R. A. 344.

As to payment of wages in money, see note to Avent-Beattyville Coal Co. v. Com. (Ky.) 28 L. R. A. 273.

See also, on the subject of statutory restrictions on contracts between master and servant, the notes to Com. v. Perry (Mass.) 14 L. R. A. 325, and State v. Loomis (Mo.) 21 L. R. A. 739.

29 L. R. A.

ers exercising authority for and on behalf of corporations doing business in this state, shall be subject to the provisions of this act, and, upon conviction of the violation of any of its provisions, to the punishment prescribed by it.

"Sec. 3. Any person or corporation violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

The particular portion of section 1, on which the information is bottomed is that in italics. The information, in substance, charged that George Julow was on the 23d of May, 1894, a foreman or superintendent of the Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, and as such exercised authority over one Richard C. Simmonds, then a mechanic or workman and employé of said Hamilton-Brown Shoe Company, but not under contract for any definite period of time; that at the same time Simmonds was a member of the Lathers' Protective Association of America, a lawful labor organization or society; that on the date last aforesaid Julow notified Simmonds that unless he withdrew from membership of said association he could no longer work for or be employed by said shoe company; that Simmonds refused to withdraw from said association, and thereupon he was on said date, for the reason aforesaid, by Julow discharged from the service of said shoe company, etc. The evidence supported the charge contained in the information. The defendant introduced no evidence on his part, nor did he make any admission as to the truth of such charge, but having previously demurred to the sufficiency of the information, without success, at the close of the testimony of the state he unsuccessfully renewed his attack on the information, and the evidence offered in support thereof, by moving for his discharge, which motion being denied, and he found guilty and judgment rendered against him, as aforesaid, for $50, he moved for a new trial and in arrest, but without avail; hence this appeal.

Messrs. S. B. Jones & Williams for appellant.

Mr. R. F. Walker, Atty-Gen., for the State:

In discussing an Ohio statute, similar to the one under consideration in this case, Saylor, J., says: "I construe it to mean that an employer shall not coerce, or attempt to coerce, his employé from belonging to a lawful labor organization, i. e., shall not coerce him to quit such organization by discharging such employé. I do not think this takes away from the employer the right to discharge his employé; he may discharge him for any reason, but he shall not attempt to coerce him to quit the labor organization. I think the legislature has power to enact that the coercion of one person by another may be an offense."

Davis v. State, 30 Ohio L. J. 849.

While the state cannot, under the guise of the police power, overthrow rights which the constitution guarantees, yet the legislature may do many things in the legitimate exercise of this power which, however injudicious they may seem, are not obnoxious to the objection of being beyond the scope of legislative action.

State v. Addington, 77 Mo. 110; St. Louis County Ct. v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175; Phillips v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 86 Mo. 540; State v. New Madrid County Ct. 51 Mo. 83, Ewing v. Hobitzelle, 85 Mo. 64.

Sherwood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant alleges various grounds why the act under which he was convicted is unconstitutional, among them these: "Because the act of the legislature under which the said information was drawn is unconstitutional and void, because it violates the following provisions of the constitution of the state of Missouri: (1) 'That all persons have a natural right to life, liberty, and the enjoyment of the gains of their own industry.' Section 4, article 2. (2) 'That no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law.' Section 20, article 2. (3) That the act of the legislature aforesaid violates the constitutional provision forbidding the legislature to grant to any corporation, association, or individual any special or exclusive right, privilege, or immunity. Section 58, article 4. That the act aforesaid violates the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which provides: 'Nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws.'"

For the present purpose it will be assumed that defendant attempted to do the act with which he is charged and that it lay in his power to compel or coerce Simmonds to withdraw from a lawful organization with which he was connected; because by so doing all discussion of matters merely preliminary to the main question herein involved will be avoided. A similar provision to that contained in section 30, article 2, supra, is found in the 5th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing, among other things, "nor deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law." In section 30, supra, as well as in the section in the Federal Constitution just recited, it will be noted that the rights of life, liberty, and property are grouped together in the same sentence: they constitute a trinity of rights, and each, as opposed to unlawful deprivation thereof, is of equal constitutional importance. With each of those rights, under the operation of a familiar principle, every auxiliary right, every attribute necessary to make the principal right effectual and valuable in its most extensive sense, pass as incidents of the original grant. "The rights thus guaranteed are something more than the mere privileges of locomotion; the guaranty is the negation of arbitrary power in every form which results in a deprivation of a right."

29 L. R. A.

These terms, "life," "liberty," and "property," are representative terms and cover every right to which a member of the body politic is entitled under the law. Within their comprehensive scope are embraced the right of self-defense, freedom of speech, religious and political freedom, exemption from arbitrary arrests, the right to buy and sell as others may,—all our liberties, personal, civil and political,—in short, all that makes life worth living; and of none of these liberties can any one be deprived except by due process of law. 2 Story, Const. 5th ed. § 1950. Now, as before stated, each of the rights heretofore mentioned carries with it, as its natural and necessary coincident, all that effectuates and renders complete the full, unrestrained enjoyment of that right. Take, for instance, that of property. Necessarily blended with that right are those of acquiring property by labor, by contract, and also of terminating that contract at pleasure, being liable, however, civilly, for any unwarranted termination. In the case at bar, as will be remembered, the contract was not made for any definite period. From these premises it follows that "depriving an owner of property of one of its essential attributes is depriving him of his property within the constitutional provision." People v. Otis, 90 N. Y. 48. In State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621, relative to the subject under consideration, it is said: "The right to use, buy, and sell property, and contract in respect thereto, including contracts for labor, which is, as we have seen, property, is protected by the constitution." In the present instance, does the act in question seek to deprive the owner or the representative of the owner of one of the essential attributes of his property, to wit, the right to terminate any contract made by him, and does it profess to do this by force of its own terms, and without opportunity of being heard? If it does, then it falls under the ban of the prohibitory provisions of both the state and Federal Constitutions.

The "law of the land" and "due process of law" are the legal equivalents of each other. Touching this topic, a distinguished jurist observes: "Perhaps no definition is more often quoted than that given by Mr. Webster in the Dartmouth College Case: 'By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law, a law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment only after trial.' The meaning is that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment is not, therefore, to be considered the law of the land." Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. 481. Comstock, J., when discussing a constitutional prohibition such as ours, said: "No doubt, it seems to me, can be admitted of the meaning of these provisions. To say, as has been suggested, that 'the law of the land' or 'due process of law,' may mean the very act of legislation which deprives the citizen of his rights, privileges, or property, leads to a simple absurdity. The constitution would then mean that no person shall be deprived of his property rights unless the legislature shall pass a law to effectuate the wrong; and this would be throwing the restraint entirely away.

Where rights of property are admitted to exist, the legislature cannot say they shall exist no longer; nor will it make any difference although a process and a tribunal are appointed to execute sentence. If this is the 'law of the land' and 'due process of law' within the meaning of the constitution, then the legislature is omnipotent. It may, under the same interpretation, pass a law to take away liberty or life without a pre-existing cause, appointing judicial and executive agencies to execute its will. Property is placed by the constitution in the same category with 'liberty and life.' Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378. Here the law under review declares that to be a crime which consists alone in the exercise of a constitutional right, to wit, that of terminating a contract,—one of the essential attributes of property, indeed of property itself, under preceding definitions. Brought to the bar of a court on such a charge the accused would have been prejudged in so far as the criminality of the act charged is concerned. No question could there be made or admitted as to the quality of the act. That would have been settled by the previous legislative declaration, and it would only remain to find the fact as charged in order to declare the guilt as charged. But the fact as charged, as already seen, is not a crime, and will not be a crime so long as constitutional guarantees and constitutional prohibitions are respected and enforced. If an owner, etc., obeys the law on which this prosecution rests, he is thereby deprived of a right and a liberty to contract or terminate a contract, as all others may; if he disobey it, then he is punished for the performance of an act wholly innocent, unless, indeed, the doing of such act, guaranteed by the organic law,—the exercise of a right of which the legislature is forbidden to deprive him,—can by that body be conclusively pronounced criminal. We deny the power of the legislature to do this, to brand as an offense that which the constitution designates and declares to be a right, and therefore an innocent act; and consequently we hold that the statute which professes to exert such power is nothing more nor less than a "legislative judgment," and an attempt to deprive all who are included within its terms of a constitutional right without due process of law. In support of these views, see State v. Loomis, 115 Mo. 807, 21 L. R. A. 789; Com. v. Perry, 155 Mass. 117, 14 L. R. A. 325; Godcharles v. Wigeman, 113 Pa. 431; State v. Goodwill, 33 W. Va. 179, 6 L. R. A. 621; Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636; People v. Gillaon, 109 N. Y. 339; Millet v. People, 117 Ill. 294, 57 Am. Rep. 869; Ritchie v. People, 155 Ill. 98, ante, p. 79.

2. But the statute is obnoxious to criticism on other grounds. It does not relate to persons or things as a class,—to all workmen, etc.,—but only to those who belong to some "lawful organization or society," evidently referring to a trade union, labor union, etc. Where a statute does this,—where it does not relate to persons or things as a class, but to particular persons or things of a class,—it is a special, as contradistinguished from a general, law. State v. Tolle, 71 Mo. 645; State v. Herrmann, 75 Mo. 840. Here a non-trade-union man or a non-labor-union man could be discharged without ceremony, without let or hindrance, whenever the employer so desired, with or without reason therefor, while, in the case of a trade-union or labor-union man, he could not be discharged if such discharge rested on the ground of his being a member of such an organization. In other words, the legislature have undertaken to limit the power of the owner or employer as to his right to contract with or to terminate a contract with particular persons of a class and therefore the statute which does this is a special, not a general law, and therefore violative of the constitution. Judge Cooley says: "A statute would not be constitutional which should select particular individuals from a class or locality and subject them to peculiar rules, or impose upon them special obligations or burdens, from which others in the same class or locality are exempt. Every one has a right to demand that he be governed by general rules, and a special statute which, without his consent, singles his case out as one to be regulated by a different law from that which is applied in all similar cases would not be legitimate legislation, but would be such an arbitrary mandate as is not within the province of free government." Cooley, Const. Lim. 391. The legislature may legislate in regard to a class of persons, but they cannot take what may be termed a natural class of persons, split that class in two, and then arbitrarily designate the dis severed fractions of the original unit as two classes, and enact different rules for the government of each. This would be a mere arbitrary classification, without any basis of reason on which to rest, and would resemble a classification of men by the color of their hair or other individual peculiarities, something not competent for the legislature to do. State v. Herrmann, 75 Mo. loc. cit. 858.

3. The litigated statute is also in conflict with section 1, article 14, of the Federal Constitution, aforesaid, forbidding that "any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law," as to which the same considerations as heretofore announced apply.

4. Nor can the statute escape censure by assuming the label of a "police regulation." It has none of the elements or attributes which pertain to such a regulation, for it does not, in terms or by implication, promote or tend to promote the public health, welfare, comfort, or safety; and if it did, the state would not be allowed, under the guise and pretense of a police regulation, to encroach or trample upon any of the just rights of the citizen, which the constitution intended to secure against diminution or abridgment. Re Jacobs, 98 N. Y. 98, 50 Am. Rep. 636, and cases cited.

5. In conclusion, it may be said that there is a broad distinction between the invasion of a right conferred by the constitution, to wit, a right of property, carrying with it, as we have seen, all the liberties, attributes, and coincident rights which go to effectuate the principal right, and those rights which are the mere creatures of legislative gratuity, where the legislature granting a privilege or bestowing a bounty may, of course, as no constitutional right is involved, prescribe the conditions upon which the privilege may be exercised or the bounty be obtained. This point finds ample illustration in the recent cases of Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S. 160, 39 L. ed. 657, and St. Joseph v. Levin (decided at the present term), 81 S. W. Rep. 101, opinion by Burgess, J.

The premises considered, we reverse the judgment, and order the defendant discharged. All concur.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

STATE of North Carolina
v.
Leroy CROOK.

(115 N. C. 760.)

Sentence in a criminal case may lawfully be suspended at the pleasure of the court and the court's power over an accused is not affected or lost by an order to pay costs both of himself and a codefendant or even by committing him for refusal to do so, since the requirement to pay costs is not part of the sentence.

(December 11, 1894.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Union County sentencing him to jail upon a verdict which had been rendered against him some time previously, but sentence upon which had been suspended. Affirmed.

Crook and one Gurley pleaded guilty upon an indictment and were convicted for making an affray with deadly weapons. Judgment against both was suspended and the court directed Crook to pay all the costs. He was given time to comply with the order which was extended from time to time and upon his failure to comply within the time finally limited the court committed him to the county jail where he remained until just before the adjournment of the term, when the court directed him to be brought before it and sentenced him to imprisonment in the common jail for six months. From this action Crook appealed, and assigned as error: (1) That the former order or judgment of the court, made in February, 1892, that the defendant Crook pay all the costs in this case, including the costs of his codefendant, Gurley, was a judgment of the court against the defendant Crook; and the judgment having been performed in part, to wit, a payment of a part of the costs, it was no longer in the power of the court to change said judgment, and imprison the defendant. (2) That the defendant having stated to the court that he was unable to pay the balance of said bill of costs, and the court having ordered the defendant into the custody of the sheriff, said order was by implication a judgment of the court, and an order to the sheriff to imprison the defendant until the costs were paid, or he be discharged according to law; and the defendant Crook, having been in jail twelve days of the twenty or thirty days necessary to remain in jail to be discharged under the insolvent debtor's law, had thereby executed a part of this judgment; and it was no longer in the power of the court to change the judgment in a manner to make it more harsh.

Further facts appear in the opinion.

Mr. F. H. Whitaker, Jr., for appellant.
Mr. Frank I. Osborne, Atty-Gen., for the State.

Avery, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The practice of making an order, where defendants are convicted or submit on a criminal charge, that the judgment be suspended upon the payment of the costs, is one that seems to be somewhat peculiar to our own courts; but it must be admitted that its adoption has proved very salutary, both in bringing about the reformation of petty offenders, and in the suppression, especially of certain classes of offenses. The exercise of this discretionary power has not heretofore been questioned, and the beneficial effects of its judicious use have been made so manifest as to commend it both to the judges and the people. We search in vain for direct authority emanating from the courts of other states, to aid us in determining the precise meaning of such orders, because it has not been the practice to make them elsewhere in the same way. The order is, in effect, a final judgment for the whole or a certain proportion of the costs incurred in the prosecution of the charge, but a suspension of the sentence of fine or imprisonment, either generally and indefinitely, or till some specified term of the court. We cannot understand how the rights of a defendant are infringed, or his interests prejudiced, by allowing him to escape for the present upon a partial judgment for the costs, and suspending the motion or prayer for further punishment, instead of subjecting him immediately to such fine or imprisonment as his own criminal conduct has made him liable to suffer. In civil causes this court has approved the practice of granting a writ of restitution, on appeal, to one wrongfully dispossessed of land under a justice's judgment, and by the same order retaining the case till witnesses could be summoned, and the damages growing out of the wrongful ejection assessed. Lane v.

NOTE.—As to suspension of sentence, see also State v. Voss (Iowa) 8 L. R. A. 787; People v. Cummings (Mich.) 14 L. R. A. 285, and note; People v. Monroe County Court of Sessions (N. Y.) 23 L. R. A. 356, and Re Webb (Wis.) 27 L. R. A. 356, 29 L. R. A.

Morton, 81 N. C. 38. We might adduce other instances in which one branch of a controversy has been finally disposed of while other matters in dispute have been retained to await further investigation preliminary to judgment, but it is needless to do so.

It is familiar learning that a court may suspend the judgment over a criminal in toto until another term, but has no power to impose two sentences for a single offense, as by pronouncing judgment under one count in an indictment, and reserving the right to punish under another count at a subsequent term, or by imposing a fine, and at a later term superadding imprisonment. State v. Ray, 50 Iowa, 520; State v. Miller, 6 Baxt. 513; State v. Watson, 95 Mo. 411; People v. Felix, 45 Cal. 163; Thurman v. State, 54 Ark. 120; Whart. Crim. Pl. & Pr. § 913; Whitney v. State, 6 Lea, 247. The judgments, orders, and decrees of a court, as a general rule, are under its control and subject to modification during the term at which they are entered; but where a defendant has undergone a part of the punishment the sentence cannot be revoked, and another, except in diminution or mitigation, substituted for it, because he would be twice placed in jeopardy, and twice subjected to punishment for the same offense. State v. Warren, 93 N. C. 825; Ex parte Lange, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 163, 21 L. ed. 872. The punishment which the courts are prohibited from inflicting twice is usually fine or imprisonment, now that corporal punishment is inflicted only for a few offenses, of a character more serious than that of which the defendant was convicted. State v. Burton, 113 N. C. 663; 1 Bishop, Crim. L. § 940. But costs neither constitute a part of the relief in civil actions (4 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 313, and note), nor of the punishment in criminal prosecutions, though the payment of them, or a proposition to pay, may be considered in mitigation of sentence by the court. The payment of costs is regulated by our statute (Code, § 1211), which provides that every person convicted, or confessing himself guilty, or submitting to the court, shall pay the costs of the prosecution, and the legal effect of a conviction and judgment is to vest the right to the costs in those entitled to them; but, where a fine is imposed, it is due to the state, and is remitted by a pardon granted by the governor. State v. Mooney, 74 N. C. 99, 31 Am. Rep. 487. The right of the officers to recover costs in the name of the state is a mere incidental one, arising out of the conviction under the provisions of our statute; and the judgment for them, as we have seen, vests the claim in the officers to whom they are due. The order for payment of them is no more a part of the punishment proper than that to pay an allowance and costs on conviction in bastardy; but in both cases the legislature, in the exercise of the police powers of the state, has provided for the protection of the public by making a defendant liable to imprisonment, as an inducement to the payment of such cost or allowance. State v. Burton, at page 659, 113 N. C.; Myers v. Stafford, 114 N. C. 234; State v. Parsons (decided at this term), 115 N. C. 730. In

Com. v. Dowdican's Bail, 115 Mass. 186, we find a recognition of the principle we have stated in the long-continued practice of the courts of that state which eventually (in 1865 and 1869) received the sanction of the legislature. The court said: "It has long been a common practice in this commonwealth, after verdict of guilty in a criminal case, when the court is satisfied that, by reason of extenuating circumstances, or of the pendency of a question of law in a like case before a higher court, or other sufficient cause, public justice does not require an immediate sentence, to order, with the consent of the defendant and of the attorney for the commonwealth, and upon such terms as the court, in its discretion, may impose, that the indictment be laid on file. . . . Such an order is not equivalent to a final judgment, or to a nolle prosequi or discontinuance, by which the case is put out of court; but is a mere suspending of active proceedings in the case, which dispenses with the necessity of entering formal continuances upon the docket, and leaves it within the power of the court at any time, upon the motion of either party, to bring the case forward, and pass any lawful order or judgment therein. Neither the order laying the indictment on file, nor the payment of costs, therefore, . . . entitled the defendant to be finally discharged." It thus appears that, under the name of "laying the indictment on file," the courts of that state accomplished the same result attained here by suspending judgment. Such orders are not prejudicial, but favorable, to defendants, in that punishment is postponed, with the possibility of escaping it altogether; and it is presumed that the party adjudged guilty is present and assenting to, if not asking for, such orders. Gibson v. State, 68 Miss. 241. If the payment of the costs constitutes no part of the punishment, as was held by the supreme court of Massachusetts, and by the court of Mississippi in Gibson's Case, supra, as well as by the supreme court of Florida in Ex parte Williams, 26 Fla. 310, then the payment of a portion of it by the defendant is not undergoing or performing a part of the sentence, and does not bring this case within the principle announced in State v. Warren, and Ex parte Lange, supra; Easterling v. State, 85 Miss. 210.

It is conceded that when the court couples with the payment of the costs any judgment that might have constituted a part of a sentence, as that a public nuisance be abated, in case of conviction for creating it, the power of the court is exhausted in its rendition, and the suspension of judgment is deemed to have been ordered on condition of the performance of such requirement. State v. Addy, 43 N. J. L. 113, 39 Am. Rep. 547; Gibson v. State, supra. But the suspension of the judgment upon the payment of the whole of the costs by one of the two defendants in this case, including the solicitor's fee due from his codefendant, and the actual payment of both fees taxed for the prosecuting officer, fails to bring it within the principle announced in Addy's Case, supra, since the adjudication that such codefendant pay his own fee, as a part of the costs, would have constituted no part of his punishment, and when added, as a part of the costs, to defendant's bill, inflicts no punishment on him. The court merely suspended judgment on the condition of paying the costs of the other defendant, as well as his own, as a part of the terms upon which the favor of the postponement was granted, as it is the practice to do on conviction in such cases. Gibson's Case, supra.

It has always been the practice in our courts, so far as we can ascertain, where the judgment for costs is rendered in the same order of the court which imposes the sentence, to leave the exact amount of the costs to be taxed by the clerk, and, under the Act of 1879, to be revised by the judge. The practice under that act was to revise the bill of costs at chambers, and it seems to have been contemplated neither by the courts nor by the legislature that costs in a criminal action constituted a part of the punishment for the offense, and that the party convicted might consequently claim the right to such notice as would enable him to be present when the court should adjudge what amount was due. "Where the defendant is found guilty, and the court pronounces judgment that he pay a fine, and stand committed until it be paid, the imprisonment is no part of the punishment, but only a mode of enforcing payment of the fine." 1 Archbold, Crim. Pr. & Pl. (Pom. ed.) p. 580; Son v. People, 12 Wend. 844. The same principle applies where he is committed during a term for nonpayment of a judgment for costs, like that in this case, and is brought before the judge during the same term on the prayer of the solicitor for judgment. The court, in such cases, orders the defendant to be committed by way of inducement to pay the costs. If the order prove ineffectual, it becomes optional with the court whether he shall be allowed to remain in prison, and rid himself of responsibility for costs by taking, at the proper time, the insolvent debtors' oath, or whether he shall be brought to the bar of the court, and subjected to the sentence which still remains suspended over him. An order of commitment, whether for nonpayment of fine and costs, or costs only, can be modified during the term at which it is entered (Burton's Case, supra), because where there is a sentence to pay a fine, "its execution" does not begin, in contemplation of law, till the power of modification by the court ends, and then committal for failure to discharge costs is treated as an effort to enforce the payment, till the same period. The rule is different where the court sentences a prisoner, as a part or the whole of its judgment, to a term of imprisonment in the common jail, and he is immediately committed to prison. In such case he is not incarcerated for failure to pay, or to enforce payment of, fine and costs, but is deemed, from the day of his commitment to the expiration of his term, to be undergoing his sentence. Upon the expiration of his term, he may still pay fine and costs imposed in addition to imprisonment, but on his failure to do so the law holds him to be still committed for the statutory period, and until he shall comply with the requirements of the statute. State v. Parsons (decided at this term), 115 N. C. 780.

We think, therefore, that there was no error in the ruling of the court below, and its judgment is affirmed.

MARYLAND COURT OF APPEALS.

William J. HOOPER et al., Exrs., etc., of William E. Hooper, Deceased, Appts.,
v.

CENTRAL TRUST CO. OF NEW YORK
et al.

(.....Md.....)

1. A cross-bill by second mortgagees is not so far foreign to a bill filed to foreclose the first mortgage as to be improper where the matter alleged is the same as set out in the answer and attacks the priority of the first mortgage seeking to establish that of the second and the question of priority cannot be adjusted without the aid of the cross-bill.
2. First mortgagees will not be permitted by equity to assert their lien against the property in preference to a grantor's lien for unpaid purchase money a waiver of which they procured by a fraudulent device so as to let in their mortgage as a first lien although the grantors agreed to take a second mortgage as security which on its face declares that it is subject to the lien of the first.

3. Promoters of a corporation to whom stock and mortgage bonds are issued nominally in payment for property transferred to the corporation which was in fact bought of a third person will not be permitted to jeopardize such third person's collection of the purchase money by enforcing their mortgage without paying for their stock.
4. A stipulation in second mortgage bonds on corporate property, that they shall not be enforced against the individual estate of stockholders, will not prevent equity from refusing to enforce a first mortgage held by such stockholders until they have paid for their stock.
5. A prayer for payment of stock subscriptions cannot properly be inserted in a cross-bill filed by second mortgagees on corporate property in a suit to foreclose a first mortgage held by stockholders of the corporation the priority of which over the second mortgage is attacked on the ground of fraud.
6. A promoter of a corporation is affected and bound by any fraud contained in a guaranty to one selling property to the corporation by another promoter that money in his hands should be applied to placing improvements on the property, for the purpose

NOTE.—The duties and liabilities of promoters to a corporation and its members are treated at length in a note to Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox (Conn.) 25 L. R. A. 90.

29 L. R. A.

of securing a waiver of the vendor's lien, so that he cannot acquire a right to a judgment for the price of such improvements which he can enforce against the objection of such vendor.

7. Promoters of a corporation who secure a waiver of the lien of one selling property to the corporation in favor of a mortgage taken by themselves upon the property by a fraudulent guaranty that certain money shall be applied to making improvements on the property, which is not done, will not be permitted to enforce their mortgage against his objection.
8. Receiver's certificates issued to a promoter of a corporation for money advanced to pay for improvements put on the corporate property will not be given priority over the rights of the seller of the property who waived his lien upon the fraudulent guaranty by another promoter at the time of the sale that money was in his possession which would be applied to pay for such improvements.
9. Equity will relieve against the waiver of a vendors' lien procured by a fraudulent guaranty on the part of the vendee.
10. That commissioners appointed to make partition of a decedent's estate refused to recognize any value in second mortgage bonds taken for property sold to a corporation will have no bearing upon the question whether or not such bonds shall not be given priority over the first mortgage bonds which were issued to promoters because of their fraud in procuring their preference.
11. A promoter of a corporation who has not paid his stock subscription will not be permitted to take an assignment of a claim for improvements made on the corporate property so as to enforce the same in priority to valid mortgages on such property.
12. Vested liens upon the property of individuals and private corporations cannot be displaced by means of receiver's certificates.

(June 20, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendants Hooper et al. from a decree of the Circuit Court of Baltimore City dismissing their cross-bill in a suit by the Central Trust Company to foreclose a mortgage upon property of the Maryland Ice Company. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Thomas M. Lanahan, John P. Poe, and Frank Gosnell for appellants.

Messrs. William Pinkney Whyte and Barton & Wilmer, for appellees:

The stock by the contract between the company and the holders was issued as full paid and non-assessable. Such a contract is binding on the company.

Brant v. Ehlen, 59 Md. 24; Crawford v. Rohrer, Id. 604; Bickley v. Schlag, 48 N. J. Eq. 533; Scott v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143, 26 L. ed. 968; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 38.

Where actual fraud enters into the transaction, the person receiving the stock can be compelled to return the stock or its market value, but the corporation cannot hold him liable for the par value of the stock.

Phelan v. Hazard, 5 Dill. 51; Zelaya Min. Co. v. Meyer, 28 N. Y. S. R. 759; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Frear Stone Mfg. Co. 97 Ill. 537, 87 Am. Rep. 129; First Nat. Bank of Deadwood v. Gustin-Minerco Consol. Min. Co. 6 L. R. A. 676, 42 Minn. 327; Harrison v. Union 29 L. R. A.

Pac. R. Co. 13 Fed. Rep. 523; Scott v. Thayer, supra; Baltimore Granite Roofing Co. v. Michael, 54 Md. 65.

The remedy of the Messrs. Hooper, if they have any claim against the stockholders, is by an original bill in equity or by a suit at law.

Crawford v. Rohrer, 59 Md. 604; Norris v. Johnson, 34 Md. 485.

If the alleged liability has any existence, to attempt to enforce it in this case by a cross-bill, or by any other means, is to interject into this case a controversy entirely foreign to the purposes of the litigation.

2 Dan. Ch. Pl. & Pr. 6th Am. ed. p. 15; Story, Eq. Pl. 10th ed. § 38, p. 365; Ayres v. Carter, 58 U. S. 17 How. 591, 15 L. ed. 179; Cross v. Del Valle, 63 U. S. 1 Wall. 1, 17 L. ed. 515; Provident Rubber Co. v. Goodyear, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 807, 19 L. ed. 537; Ayers v. Chicago, 101 U. S. 184, 25 L. ed. 838; Rowan v. Sharpe's Rifle Mfg. Co. 33 Conn. 27; Remer v. McKay, 38 Fed. Rep. 164; Johnson Railroad Signal Co. v. Union Switch & Signal Co. 43 Fed. Rep. 331; Stonemets Printer's Mach. Co. v. Brown Folding Mach. Co. 46 Fed. Rep. 861; Pacific R. Co. v. Cutting, 27 Fed. Rep. 638; Krueger v. Ferry, 41 N. J. Eq. 434; Slater v. Cobb, 153 Mass. 22; Lund v. Skanes Enskilda Bank, 96 Ill. 181; Gage v. Mayer, 117 Ill. 632.

It is a statutory liability in this: That if any liability exists in spite of the contract with the company that it does not exist, it remains by force of the statute which provides the mode in which stock may be paid in property, and a receiver cannot enforce such a liability. He can only enforce a contractual liability.

2 Spelling, Priv. Corp. §§ 868, 869; Chandler v. Keith, 43 Iowa, 99; Republic L. Ins. Co. v. Swigert, 12 L. R. A. 328, 135 Ill. 150; Bell v. Shibley, 33 Barb. 610; Stillman v. Dougherty, 44 Md. 880; Gaither v. Stockbridge, 67 Md. 222; Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 98, 36 L. ed. 638; Beach, Receivers, § 670; Coffin v. Ransdell, 110 Ind. 417; 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 869; Farnsworth v. Wood, 91 N. Y. 308; Wincock v. Turpin, 96 Ill. 135; High, Receivers, § 315; Luckemeyer v. Satz, 61 Md. 313; Buschman v. Hanna, 73 Md. 1; Billings v. Robinson, 94 N. Y. 415, 28 Hun. 122; Cleveland v. Burnham, 55 Wis. 598; Scott v. Thayer, 105 U. S. 143, 26 L. ed. 968; Mills v. Scott, 99 U. S. 25, 25 L. ed. 294.

Under no circumstances were the holders of the stock liable to the Messrs. Hooper.

Clark v. Bever, 139 U. S. 96, 35 L. ed. 88; Fogg v. Blair, 139 U. S. 118, 35 L. ed. 104; Handley v. Stute, 139 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 927.

Knowledge of existing arrangements against stockholders' liability on the part of a creditor forbids his assertion of a claim against a stockholder.

Cott v. North Carolina Gold Amalgamating Co. 119 U. S. 343, 30 L. ed. 420; Bank of Fort Madison v. Alden, 129 U. S. 373, 33 L. ed. 725.

And knowledge may be presumed.

Whithill v. Jacobs, 75 Wis. 474; First Nat. Bank of Deadwood v. Gustin-Minerco Consol. Min. Co. 6 L. R. A. 676, 42 Minn. 327; Young v. Erie Iron Co. 65 Mich. 111; Cook v. Bailey, 146 Pa. 328; 2 Spelling, Corp. p. 884.

The Messrs. Hooper expressly waived all claim against stockholders by accepting the mortgage and bond, with the exemption covenant.

French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 518; Robinson v. Bidwell, 22 Cal. 379; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 871; Brown v. Eastern State Co. 184 Mass. 590; Baschor v. Forbes, 36 Md. 154; Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 216.

There is no liability for unpaid stock under any circumstances in this case.

Bickley v. Schlag, 46 N. J. Eq. 588; Coit v. North Carolina Gold Amalgamating Co. 119 U. S. 848, 80 L. ed. 420; Glenn v. Liggett, 185 U. S. 583, 84 L. ed. 264.

The court had the right to order the issue of certificates and grant the lien for their security, notice of the application having been served on the Messrs. Hooper and they not objecting.

2 Beach, Receivers, § 747; Ellis v. Vernon Ice, Light & Water Co. 86 Tex. 110.

Mr. John H. Thomas, also for appellees: A stockholder of a corporation is not liable as such to any creditors of the corporation, except those who became such while he was a stockholder.

Weber v. Fickey, 47 Md. 196, 52 Md. 500; Coit v. North Carolina Gold Amalgamating Co. 119 U. S. 847, 80 L. ed. 421; Clark v. Bever, 139 U. S. 107, 35 L. ed. 98; Fogg v. Blair, 139 U. S. 126, 35 L. ed. 107; Bank of Fort Madison v. Alden, 129 U. S. 872, 32 L. ed. 725; Handley v. Stutz, 189 U. S. 482, 85 L. ed. 286.

The appellants did not rely on any individual liability of stockholders of the ice company, as part of their security.

Corporate creditors may waive their rights, if they would otherwise have any, to the individual liability of stockholders.

1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 216.

The stockholders' liability, when it exists, is not an ingredient of the contract between the creditor and the corporation; but a statutory incident of it; and it does not contradict a written evidence of corporate liability whether it be a bond or a note, to prove that it was also agreed that there should be no stockholders' liability therefor.

Baschor v. Forbes, 36 Md. 154; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 216.

The rights of creditors of a corporation to recover from a stockholder depend, in the absence of fraud on the part of the stockholders, entirely on the contract between him and the corporation.

Brant v. Ehlen, 59 Md. 28; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 46.

The holder of stock, issued for "property purchased," is not liable to corporate creditors, unless there was actual fraud in the transaction.

1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, 8d ed. § 35, p. 47; Wetherbee v. Baker, 85 N. J. Eq. 501; Bickley v. Schlag, 46 N. J. Eq. 588.

The rights and liabilities of the parties to this cause depend entirely upon the statutes of New Jersey, under which the ice company was organized.

Glenn v. Liggett, 185 U. S. 583, 84 L. ed. 264; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 228.

The holders of stock, which has been issued for property purchased, have not been held accountable to the corporate creditors, unless there was actual fraud in the transaction.

Clark v. Bever, 139 U. S. 97, 35 L. ed. 88; Van Cott v. Van Brunt, 82 N. Y. 585; Memphis 29 L. R. A.

& L. R. R. Co. v. Dow, 120 U. S. 237, 30 L. ed. 595; Fogg v. Blair, 139 U. S. 118, 35 L. ed. 104; Handley v. Stutz, 189 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 227; Lloyd v. Preston, 146 U. S. 630, 36 L. ed. 1111; 2 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 746, p. 1210, and notes; Camden v. Stuart, 144 U. S. 105, 36 L. ed. 868; Bank of Fort Madison v. Alden, 129 U. S. 872, 32 L. ed. 725.

The ice company was justified in adopting the well-founded expectations of annual net profits it could calculate on receiving, as a basis for capitalizing the stock of the company.

Com. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 52 Pa. 506; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 46, notes on p. 65.

Even if the amount fixed upon as the proper amount of capital stock, on this basis, was inordinately large, and the property was improperly accepted for the bonds and stock, the appellants were not injured; still less were they defrauded thereby. They cannot, on that ground, hold stockholders responsible for corporate debts.

Re Ambrose Lake Tin & Copper Min. Co. L. R. 14 Ch. Div. 390; Com. v. Central Pass. R. Co. 52 Pa. 515; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 46, and notes; Baltimore Granite Roofing Co. v. Michael, 54 Md. 65.

The New Jersey statute provides special means for enforcing liabilities, if any, of stockholders to corporate creditors.

Corporation Acts of New Jersey, §§ 93, 94, p. 42; Wetherbee v. Baker, 85 N. J. Eq. 507; Bickley v. Schlag, 46 N. J. Eq. 588; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 220-224.

These liabilities, if any, being the creatures of statute, the modes provided by the statute which created them, for the enforcement of them, must be pursued. They are exclusive of all others.

Wetherbee v. Baker, and Bickley v. Schlag, supra; Pollard v. Bailey, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 527, 32 L. ed. 378; Fourth Nat. Bank of New York City v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747, 30 L. ed. 825; 1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, §§ 220-224.

The ice company could not maintain an action on its contracts with the stockholders. It would be estopped by the provisions in its bonds, and by its own declarations, in the certificates of stock it issued.

Brant v. Ehlen, 59 Md. 28.

It could not maintain an action of tort, founded on the alleged frauds. If any frauds were perpetrated, that company was a party to them.

Roman v. Mali, 42 Md. 518.

Chancery will not interfere to prevent an insolvent debtor from alienating his property to avoid an existing or prospective debt, even where there is a suit pending to establish it.

Adler v. Fenton, 65 U. S. 24 How. 407, 16 L. ed. 696.

The investment corporation and Poor and Greenough are not parties to these proceedings. The question of their alleged liabilities cannot properly be adjudicated in them.

1 Cook, Stock & Stockholders, § 218.

McSherry, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On March 21, 1890, the Maryland Ice Company was incorporated under the laws of the state of New Jersey. On the following 5th of April the company acquired certain property situated in Baltimore city from the executors of the estate of the late William E. Hooper, deceased, and it acquired this property under an agreement previously made between the executors and Ormond Hammond, Jr., who contracted for himself and his undisclosed associates. The circumstances attending this acquisition of property will be stated later on. The price agreed to be paid was $150,000 in cash (of which $5,000 were paid when the agreement was executed) and $100,000 in second mortgage bonds of a company to be formed thereafter, which company, when formed, was the Maryland Ice Company. In the contract of purchase, which bore date February 28, 1890, there were stipulations requiring the construction by the purchaser and his associates of certain betterments and ice-manufacturing machinery upon the premises, to the value of $130,000 to $150,000, to be erected by a designated time, and to have a prescribed ice-producing capacity. Simultaneously with the execution of the deed by the executors conveying the property to the Maryland Ice Company, the latter placed upon record two mortgages to the Central Trust Company of New York, each dated on the 1st of March, and acknowledged on the 3d of April, and each covering the property so conveyed to the Maryland Ice Company by the Hoopers, and also covering all additions thereto, and all machinery thereafter to be placed thereon. The first of these two mortgages secured an issue of $250,000 of the Maryland Ice Company's bonds, and the second secured an issue of $110,000 of other bonds of the same company. These latter were delivered to the executors, $100,000 of them in part payment of the purchase money as provided in the contract of February 28, and $10,000 of them in settlement of another transaction, which has no connection with the pending controversy. Prior to the incorporation of the Maryland Ice Company, Ormond Hammond, Jr., and Thomas Sturgis, acting for and in behalf of the promoters of the enterprise, which finally culminated in the formation of the Maryland Ice Company, entered into a contract with the Arctic Ice Machine Manufacturing Company for the construction of three ice-manufacturing machines to be placed upon this property. In the contract so executed on March 15, 1890, there was a clause expressly reserving to the Arctic Company the title in these machines, and the right to reclaim and remove them if the purchase price should not be paid when due. This contract was assigned to the Maryland Ice Company after its incorporation. The machines were, after some delays, finally erected, but were not fully paid for. The Maryland Ice Company having made default on September 1, 1891, in the payment of the interest coupon due that day on its first mortgage bonds, the Central Trust Company, representing and acting for the holders of those bonds, filed on the following day, in the circuit court of Baltimore city, a bill for the foreclosure of the first mortgage, and for a sale of the property, including the machines constructed by the Arctic Company, and which had not been fully paid for by the Maryland Ice Company. With the bill there was filed the unsworn answer of the Maryland Ice Company consenting to a sale, and agreeing that a receiver be forthwith appointed. On the same day a decree was signed appointing O. Hammond, Jr., receiver, and enjoining the Maryland Ice Company and all persons from selling or disposing of any of the company's property. This whole proceeding, though ostensibly between different parties, occupying opposite sides of the docket, was in fact conducted by the same individuals, who, under other names, controlled both sides of the apparent controversy, because the trust company, the plaintiff, acted at the instance and in behalf of the first mortgage bondholders, and the Maryland Company, the defendant, represented its stockholders, who were the same identical bondholders and their agents, and coprojectors of the original undertaking. After the appointment of the receiver, the Arctic Company intervened by petition, and asserted, under the contract of March 15, 1890, made with Hammond and Sturgis, its ownership of the machines erected by it, but which had not been fully paid for. This claim was resisted by the first mortgage bondholders on the ground that they were bona fide purchasers of those bonds without notice of the unrecorded conditional sale made by the Arctic Company of the three ice-manufacturing machines. While that controversy was pending, no further steps were taken with reference to the foreclosure and sale. Ultimately the point at issue between the first mortgage bondholders, represented by the Central Trust Company, and the Arctic Company, reached this court, and the case is reported in 77 Md. 202. Bearing in mind that the precise question controverted between the contending parties to that appeal was whether the holders of the first mortgage bonds were in fact bona fide purchasers thereof without notice or knowledge of the title set up by the Arctic Company to the three machines erected by it under the contract made by Hammond and Sturgis on March 15, 1890, the pertinency of the conclusions reached on that subject in that case to the questions involved in the pending appeal will be apparent. After a full, able and elaborate argument at the bar, we held that the London & New York Investment Corporation and Poor and Greenough, who, it then appeared, together owned $245,000 of the $250,000 of the first mortgage bonds of the Maryland Company, and who, it now appears, between them own the entire issue, were in fact, with Hammond and Sturgis, the actual promoters of the scheme which resulted in the purchase of the property from the Hoopers, the making of the contract with the Arctic Company, the formation of the Maryland Ice Company, and the issue of its first and second mortgage bonds. It was distinctly decided that the London Corporation and Poor and Greenough had notice and knowledge of the provisions of the contract between the executors of Hooper on the one hand and Hammond on the other, wherein the latter agreed, in behalf of himself and his associates, that betterments to cost from $130,000 to $150,000 should be placed upon the property; that they knew how and by what means the Hoopers were to be paid the amount of the agreed purchase money, and that they further knew the provisions of the contract between Hammond and Sturgis and the Arctic Company, which was subsequently assigned to the Maryland Ice Company. And they were held to have known these facts because, in the opinion of this court, the London & New York Investment Corporation and Poor and Greenough were the real parties to these several contracts executed in their behalf by their accredited agents, Hammond and Sturgis. "It was," we said in 77 Md. 281, "for the London Corporation, and at its instance, that Hammond negotiated the purchase with Hooper, and it was for it and for its benefit that he incurred the obligation to erect the three additional machines thereon; and it was to advance its interests that he and Sturgis entered into the contract with the Arctic Company. He and Sturgis were, therefore, in fact the agents of that corporation, employed to develop the project for it; and the attempts to disguise their real connection with the London Corporation are, whilst numerous and adroit, none the less transparent and obvious. The priority asserted by the Central Trust Company for the holders of the Maryland Ice Company's first mortgage bonds is a priority claimed in behalf of the very persons whose agents and associates purchased the machines and contracted for the preservation of the vendor's lien thereon. The London Corporation and Poor and Greenough, who are stockholders of the Maryland Company, claim, as creditors of the very company which they organized and control, and whose obligations they were aware of, a priority over the vendor of the machines, notwithstanding the knowledge and information which they had and were chargeable with when they took the bonds, and notwithstanding the fact that the very priority which they are now seeking to defeat was one created by their own agents, even before the bonds were issued. No court has ever yet held that parties thus situated could successfully maintain such a position. It is the worst of bad faith. . . . As bondholders, they have no standing to destroy or to impair the lien which as projectors of the company they, through their own agents, established in favor of some one else." Page 284, 77 Md.

Under the contract between Hammond and the Hoopers of February 28, 1890, it was stipulated that Hammond should furnish a guaranty from Poor and Greenough, bankers of New York, that the betterments and additional machinery provided for would be placed upon the property on or before the 1st day of the succeeding July. The object which the Hoopers had in view in insisting on these betterments is obvious. They desired to add to the security of the second mortgage bonds, which, in consideration of these betterments and improvements being made, they agreed to take as part of the purchase price for the property. And the object which the purchasers obviously had in view in giving the guaranty was to induce the vendors to waive their lien for the unpaid purchase money so as to let in the first mortgage as a prior lien. Accordingly, before the delivery, and as a condition of the delivery by the vendors of the deed to the Maryland Ice Company, which had just been substituted in the executor's report of sales to the orphans' court as purchaser of the property in the place and stead of Hammond and his associates, who made the contract of purchase in contemplation of the incorporation of the company, and before the grantors waived their vendor's lien in favor of the first mortgage bonds, guaranty in the words hereinafter set forth was signed by Poor and Greenough, and was given to the Hoopers.

Having determined in 77 Md. 203, that the holders of the first mortgage bonds (who, together with Sturgis and Lane, are also the holders of the stock of the Maryland Ice Company) were not bona fide purchasers of those bonds without notice of the claim or lien of the Arctic Company, and that they were accordingly bound by the provisions in the latter company's contract of March 15, 1890, and were subordinated to the vendor's lien asserted by that company, the case was remanded for further proceedings and proof respecting another branch of the controversy. It came here twice afterwards (Maryland Ice Co. v. Arctic Ice Machine Mfg. Co., 79 Md. 108); and when the amount due to the Arctic Company was finally and definitely settled a portion of it was paid and $50,000 of it were advanced by the London Corporation, which took from the Arctic Company an assignment of the latter company's decree to that extent. Whether this decree, in the hands of the London Corporation under the assignment from the Arctic Company, is a prior lien to that of the second mortgage, is one of the questions involved in the pending appeals.

From the day the original bill was filed down until about the 6th day of June, 1893, various sums were borrowed by the receiver on certificates issued under authority conferred by the circuit court. The money, aggregating over $90,000, was furnished by the London Corporation. The Hoopers, who held then, and still hold, the second mortgage bonds, never assented to the issuing of these certificates. Whether these receiver certificates held by the London Corporation are a prior lien to the second mortgage is another of the questions now before us for decision.

After the controversy between the Arctic Company on the one side and the holders of the first mortgage bonds and the Maryland Ice Company on the other side, had been finally disposed of as above stated, the Hoopers, still holding the $110,000 of second mortgage bonds, came into the foreclosure proceeding case by petition, and were finally made parties defendants. They obtained leave to file, and did file, a cross-bill, and they also answered the original bill. They incorporated the averments and statements of the cross-bill in their answer as parts thereof, and by both answer and cross-bill they insist that the holders of the first mortgage bonds are not entitled to a priority over the holders of the second mortgage bonds, for reasons to be stated later on; and they further claim that before the holders of the first mortgage bonds shall be allowed any part of the proceeds which may arise from a sale of the mortgaged premises they, the first mortgage bondholders, shall, as stockholders of the Maryland Ice Company, pay to the receiver thereof the sum which the par value of the stock held by them amounts to in excess of the sum due to them on the first mortgage bonds. And these are the other questions presented on this appeal. The cross-bill concludes with a prayer for general relief, and it was answered by the Central Trust Company, by the Maryland Ice Company, and by Hammond, the receiver. Considerable testimony was taken and thereafter the cross-bill was dismissed by a pro forma decree, from which the pending appeal was taken.

At the outset it is insisted that the relief sought by the cross-bill is so foreign to and irreconcilable with that which the original bill invoked that the pro forma decree should, for that reason, be affirmed. It is undoubtedly true that a subject which is not germane to pending controversy cannot, by means of a cross-bill, be injected into the litigation. A cross-bill is a mere auxiliary suit, and a dependency of the original. Story, Eq. Pl. § 399. Where a decree on the plaintiff's bill will not determine the litigation, the imperfection may be remedied by one or more cross-bills filed by one or more of the defendants against the plaintiffs; and, if this has not been done, and the difficulty appears at the hearing, the cause may be directed to stand over for the purpose. Adams, Eq. *402. The cross-bill may set up additional facts not alleged in the original bill where they constitute part of the same defense, and relate to the same subject-matter. Underhill v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. 355, 1 L. ed. 407. And, though its allegations must relate to the subject-matter of the original bill, it is not restricted to the issues under it. Nelson v. Dunn, 15 Ala. 501. It is generally considered as a defense, or as a proceeding to procure a complete determination of a matter already in litigation in the court, and therefore the plaintiff is not, at least as against the plaintiff in the original bill, obliged to show any ground of equity to support the jurisdiction of the court. Adams, Eq. *403; Story, Eq. Pl. § 399; Mitford, Eq. Pl. (by Jeremy) 80-88. But the answer specifically relies by way of defense to the original bill upon the same matter set forth in the cross-bill, and these, if sustained, present an insuperable bar to the relief prayed in the original bill filed by the Central Trust Company, in so far forth as respects the alleged priority of the first mortgage bonds. With a single exception, which will be adverted to hereafter, the relief sought, or the defense relied on in the cross-bill, is necessary to a complete determination of the relative priorities of the several liens now asserted; and that issue as to these priorities (which is of vital importance in the controversy) cannot be adjusted under the original bill unaided by the cross-bill.

As we have stated, the original bill was filed to procure a foreclosure of the first mortgage, and it prayed that the proceeds of the foreclosure sale might be applied to the payment of the principal and interest unpaid upon the first mortgage bonds, together with interest or overdue interest down to the time of sale; and then, if there should be any surplus, that it should be applied to the payment of the second mortgage bonds. Now, the defenses set up and relied on by the appellants present insuperable obstacles to the granting of so much of this relief as would give the first mortgage bondholders a preference over the second mortgage bonds. These defenses, set up in the cross-bill and in the answer, assail the priority of the receiver's certificates, the priority of the Arctic Company's decree in the hands of the London Corporation, and finally the priority of the first mortgage bonds in the hands of that corporation and in the hands of Poor and Greenough.

If the holders of the first mortgage bonds by any fraudulent device procured for their own benefit the execution and delivery of the deed by the Hoopers for the mortgaged property, and by the same means, and for their own advantage, secured a waiver by the grantors of their lien for the unpaid purchase money, so as to let in the first mortgage as the first lien, then, upon the plainest principles of natural justice, they will not be allowed in a court of equity to enforce this lien of their own creation in their own favor to the prejudice of, or even in preference to, the lien of the vendors for the purchase money represented by the second mortgage bonds, even though the second mortgage bonds on their face declare that issue to be subject to the lien of the first. It is scarcely necessary to cite adjudged cases in support of a proposition so plain and self-evident as this. Courts of equity will never allow the mere form in which a transaction is clothed or disguised by the parties who have projected it for their own gain to control or defeat the legal or equitable rights of others; particularly where an adherence to form and a disregard of substance would result in the successful consummation of a palpably fraudulent scheme. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 379. To fully appreciate the relevancy of the defenses made by the cross-bill and by the answer we must rapidly sketch the further connection of these first mortgage bondholders with the Maryland Ice Company enterprise, and trace them through its various developments, down to the present period. After the contract of February 28, 1890, had been made, containing the stipulation respecting betterments and additional machinery, and the further stipulation providing for the guaranty by Poor and Greenough, and there had been inserted in the deed of April 5 a recital with regard to the contemplated betterments, which recital, embodying the agreement in this particular of the projectors, became in fact a part of the consideration of the conveyance, the further organization and development of the Maryland Ice Company was progressed with. The London Corporation, Poor and Greenough, and Sturgis fixed the capital stock of the company at $500,000; not one dollar on which has ever been paid by them or by any one else, except possibly $1,000 for ten shares, put in the names of five individuals on March 24, 1890, for the purpose of effecting a formal organization. As one of the methods resorted to for the purpose of concealing or cloaking the real transaction, an agreement was entered into between Hammond and the London Corporation on the 4th of March, 1890, whereby he contracted to turn over to the Maryland Ice Company, when formed, the property purchased four days previously from the Hoopers; and to so turn it over for $250,000 of first and $110,000 of second mortgage bonds and $500,000 of stock; but not one of the bonds went into his hands, or was ever intended to go there, and a certificate for 4,990 shares of stock remaining after ten had been issued as just stated was nominally issued to him, but in fact was merely handed to him with a request that he sign a transfer in blank on its back. This transfer he signed as directed, and it now appears filled out as an assignment of 1000 shares to the London Corporation, 440 shares to Poor and Greenough, 1000 shares to Greenough, trustees, 850 shares to Sturgis, 850 shares to W. C. Lane, and 850 shares to Hammond. Only a few days subsequently a certificate for 850 shares was presented to Hammond by Sturgis with a request that he assign that also in blank, which was done, and it was then returned to Sturgis; and Hammond never saw it afterwards. No money or other consideration of any kind was paid to Hammond for this stock by the parties who received it; nor did Hammond ever pay or give to the Maryland Ice Company anything for it himself. As in fact the stock, with the exception of the ten shares before alluded to, all went to the promoters of the concern precisely as it was intended that it should go from the beginning, there was nothing due to Hammond for it, and consequently nothing was paid or given him. So completely was he a mere figurehead, that even the $5,000 paid to the Hoopers when the contract of February 28, was made, was paid through Sturgis by the London Corporation. The stock purports to be full-paid, nonassessable stock, and professes on its face to have been "issued for property purchased." The property, however, was purchased for $250,000, through Hammond, but by the very parties who procured the stock; and the stock was not issued for the purchase at all, and no part of it was used therefor. The purchasers of the property,—the London Corporation, Poor and Greenough, and Sturgis,—through their selected representatives, who held the ten shares, voted that the stock be issued to Hammond merely that he might immediately transfer it back to them; and this he did. Thus, in effect, they issued it through a crafty device, to themselves as full-paid, nonassessable stock, though they paid nothing for it at all. They consequently owe the Maryland Ice Company for this stock, and by no subterfuge or artifice, however cunning, can they evade their liability in this respect when that liability is sought to be fastened upon them by a party entitled to resort to it to secure payment of a claim due by the Maryland Company. "It has again and again been decided that the unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation constitute a trust fund for the benefit of the general creditors of the corporation, and that this trust cannot be defeated, or the fund impaired, by a simulated or pretended payment for the stock taken, nor by any device short of actual payment in good faith. Any arrangement, therefore, among the stockholders, or those in charge of the affairs of the corporation, by which the stock is but nominally paid for, whether in money or property, the corporation not, in fact, getting the benefit of the price in good faith, will be regarded as a sham and not a valid payment, as against the creditors of the corporation, however it may be regarded as between the corporation and the subscribers." Crawford v. Rohrer, 59 Md. 604; Camden v. Stuart, 144 U. S. 105, 36 L. ed. 363; Lloyd v. Preston, 146 U. S. 680, 36 L. ed. 1111; Richardson v. Green, 138 U. S. 80, 33 L. ed. 516; Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205, 25 L. ed. 885.

29 L. R. A.

As against a creditor of the Maryland Ice Company, this acquisition of alleged full-paid, nonassessable stock without the payment of a single cent would be grossly fraudulent; and to permit holders of such stock, who, as promoters of the company occupied the position of agents in procuring for the projected company the property upon which its mortgages were afterwards fastened, to claim and recover in the capacity of first mortgage bondholding creditors of that company, from that company, an amount equal to the sum due by them to the same company, and due in their capacity of stockholders for stock actually issued, but not paid for, without requiring them first to pay what they themselves owe, would be a flagrant injustice to the vendors of the mortgaged property, if the lien of the latter for unpaid purchase money were thereby put in jeopardy. It is true, as a general principle, that to render a stockholder individually liable to the extent of his unpaid subscription at the suit of a creditor of the corporation upon a debt due by the corporation to the creditor, the stockholder must have been such at the time the debt was contracted. Weber v. Fickey, 47 Md. 196, 52 Md. 500; Handley v. Stutz, 139 U. S. 417, 35 L. ed. 227; First Nat. Bank of Deadwood v. Gustin Miners Consol. Min. Co. 42 Minn. 327, 6 L. R. A. 676; Bahn's App. (Pa.) 5 Cent. Rep. 187; Morawetz, Priv. Corp. §§ 832, 833. But we are not confronted with that question, because no decree is asked against the stockholders to require them to pay the second mortgage bonds, but merely a decree directing the receiver to collect the unpaid subscriptions, to be applied by the Maryland Ice Company, when collected, to the extinguishment of the first mortgage bonds. Nor, for the same reason, does the provision in the second mortgage bonds to the effect that no liability on that bond shall ever be enforced against the individual estate of any stockholder of the Maryland Ice Company interpose any difficulty as the case now stands. If suits should be brought hereafter by the receiver or by creditors to enforce payment for these unpaid shares, the law of the corporation's domicile would govern and control. First Nat. Bank of Deadwood v. Gustin Minnesota Consol. Min. Co. supra. But this branch of the subject is not before us now, and need not be discussed, because this feature of the relief sought by the cross-bill is obviously foreign to the object of the original bill, and such relief could not properly be granted in the pending proceeding, though the improvident joinder of this particular subject will not affect the jurisdiction of the court to decree relief as to the subjects which are properly included in the cross-bill. Code, art. 16, § 161. The fact of the indebtedness to the Maryland Ice Company by its first mortgage bondholders in their capacity as its stockholders, while furnishing no ground in this proceeding for a decree directing the receiver to collect the amounts not paid on the stock, is a circumstance which reflects strongly in a court of equity on the good faith of these same bondholders in pressing for a sale of the mortgaged property while they are largely indebted to the company; and it is a circumstance which exhibits them in the light of attempting to shut out the second mortgage altogether at the very time when, being thus indebted, they are seeking equitable relief in their own behalf, though refusing to do equity themselves. These first mortgage bondholders are the real plaintiffs to the original bill. They were in fact the real purchasers of the property bought from the Hoopers. They were the promoters of the Maryland Company, and, though they did not get possession of the certificates of stock until April 7, 1890, yet, under the contract of March 4 between Hammond and the London Corporation, and under the antecedent arrangements between the same parties and the other promoters of the scheme, they were from the beginning to become owners of the stock without giving an equivalent therefor. As the real purchasers of the property, they owe to the vendors the balance of the purchase money which they contracted to pay. Through the Maryland Company, which they organized and own, they have become holders of $250,000 of its bonds that are on their face a first lien upon the property which they bought; and they now seek, as though they were total strangers to the original transaction, and were only connected with the Maryland Company as bona fide holders of its bonds, to sell for their own benefit the mortgaged property, to the obvious prejudice of the subsequent lien held by the vendors and created by these same projectors, though as stockholders they owe the company quite as much as they now endeavor in the capacity of bondholders to recover from it. If, while they are largely indebted to the company for the stock thus acquired by them without any consideration paid or promised, they be permitted, as holders of the first mortgage bonds, to sell the property, and thereby strike down the second lien, which they themselves created, and which is held by persons from whom they bought the property, which was bought under stipulations they have not complied with, as will be pointed out further on, the device to which, in the very inception of the undertaking, they deliberately resorted "to evade the law and accomplish that which is forbidden" (Memphis & T. R. R. Co. v. Dow, 120 U. S. 287, 30 L. ed. 595), will succeed under the very eyes, and still worse, by the potent aid, of a court of equity. The Hoopers, while not seeking by their answer or by their cross-bill to recover a decree against the stockholders for the payment of the second mortgage bonds out of the amounts due on the stock, resist the claim of the holders of the first mortgage bonds to have the property sold so long as the latter owe the Maryland Company the par value of this unpaid stock. In a word, they invoke the familiar and salutary doctrine that he who seeks equity must do equity. This doctrine in its broadest sense may be regarded as the foundation of all equity, and as the source of every rule of equity jurisprudence; since it is undeniable that courts of equity do not recognize and protect the equitable rights of litigant parties, unless such rights are, in pursuance of the settled juridical notions of morality, based upon conscience and good faith. "Whatever be the nature of the controversy between two definite parties, and whatever be the nature of the remedy demanded, the court will not confer its equitable relief upon the party seeking its interposition and aid, unless he has acknowledged and conceded, or will admit and provide for, all the equitable rights, claims, and demands justly belonging to the adversary party, and growing out of or necessarily involved in the subject-matter of the controversy." 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 385.

The guaranty given by Poor and Greenough is in these words:

"New York, March 31st, 1890. Messrs. Wm. J. Hooper et al.—Gentlemen: Referring to a contract between yourselves and Ormond Hammond, Jr., dated February 28th, 1890, wherein it is stipulated that we shall arrange a guaranty that the proposed Maryland Ice Company shall erect additional machinery for manufacturing ice to the extent of one hundred and fifty tons per day, to be placed at once upon the property herein described, we now try to state that the Arctic Ice Machine Manufacturing Company has entered into a contract for the furnishing of ice machines in accordance with the stipulation, and E. J. Oood Co. have entered into a contract to supply boilers, etc., completing the manufacturing outfit; which contracts, together with the improvements now being made, will aggregate a cost in excess of $180,000. These contracts, we are assured, are from thoroughly responsible people, and supply the guaranty which you desire. We remain, gentlemen, very truly, yours, Poor and Greenough.

"P. S. New York, April 5th, 1890. The Maryland Ice Company has deposited with us the funds called for by the within-described contract, and we hereby agree that they shall be applied in accordance therewith. Poor & Greenough."

This execution of this guaranty was a condition, and a material condition, upon which the Hoopers were induced to allow the lien of the first mortgage to take precedence over their vendors,' or, more properly speaking, their grantors', lien for the deferred purchase money. This is placed beyond doubt by the statement contained in their report of sales to the orphans' court of Baltimore city, and by the recital in their deed to the Maryland Ice Company, and by all the circumstances surrounding the whole transaction. By the explicit terms of the guaranty and by the recital in the deed, the grantors, the Hoopers, were entitled to have the additional security contemplated by both the guaranty and the deed. It was upon the faith of the assurance given by Poor and Greenough in the guaranty of April 5, that they then had in their hands sufficient funds of the Maryland Ice Company to pay for the betterments and additional machinery, that the Hoopers let in the lien of the first mortgage in favor, as it now turns out, of the very parties who purchased, and now, under the name of the Maryland Ice Company, still hold, the property. If, as we have heretofore held,—and there is nothing in the present record to induce a change or modification of our former opinion,—the London Corporation was one of the promoters of the Maryland Company, and was therefore a party to all that was done in the organization of that concern, and in the acquisition for it of the property purchased from the Hoopers, then the London Corporation was not only aware of the guaranty given by Poor and Greenough, but is bound by it, and is affected equally as they are with all the consequences resulting from a deception practiced upon the vendors by means of any false statements contained in that guaranty. If the holders of the first mortgage bonds secured for themselves, under and by the first mortgage, a priority over the lien, representing the unpaid purchase money due to the vendors, and secured that priority by inducing the vendors to let in the first mortgage lien because of the assurance given by Poor and Greenough for and in behalf of all the projectors that they, Poor and Greenough, had in hand sufficient funds of the Maryland Ice Company with which to pay for the stipulated betterments, when in point of fact that assurance was utterly untrue, and they did not have those funds in hand at all, it surely cannot be that a court of equity will, at the instance of the holders of a first lien procured by themselves in that way, allow the mortgaged property to be sold to the detriment of the vendors who have been thus deliberately imposed on and deceived. A first lien obtained over the vendors' or grantors' lien by means of a false representation of such a material inducement leading the vendors to postpone the priority of their purchase-money lien is nothing less than flagitious fraud, which, upon its being unmasked and exposed, no court will countenance or suffer to prevail. The equity acquired by a party who has been misled is superior to the interest in the same subject-matter of the one who willfully procured or suffered him to be thus misled. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 686. The priority resulting from order of time merely, or that resulting from the superior nature of the equity itself, or that belonging to a legal title, may be postponed or defeated in various manners and by various incidents, among which the most important are notice given to or fraud or negligence of the holder of the interest which would otherwise have been preferred. Id. §§ 716, 726, 731.

Was the guaranty untruthful? It is clear beyond controversy that when Poor and Greenough gave the guaranty in the postscript of April 5 they did not have, and had not had, in their hands, and never did have afterwards, and they certainly never did apply, the funds which they declared they then had and that they would thereafter apply in payment for the machinery mentioned in the contracts to which the guaranty made reference. It was not until that declaration contained in the postscript heretofore quoted had been actually reduced to writing and had been signed that the Hoopers allowed the Maryland Company, which is merely another name for the bondholders, to have the property. It is perfectly clear that a large part of the money borrowed from the London Corporation on receiver's certificates was used to pay in part for this very machinery which Poor and Greenough declared in the guaranty they then held sufficient of the Maryland Company's money to pay for. It is further disclosed by the record that the $50,000 which the London Corporation claims as a prior lien over the second mortgage bonds by virtue of the Arctic Company's decree that was assigned to the London Corporation as heretofore stated, constitute nearly one half of the total contract price agreed to be paid to the Arctic Company for the three ice-manufacturing machines, which are the identical machines that Poor and Greenough unequivocally declared in the guaranty of April 5 they had at that time in their hands the money of the Maryland Company to pay for. We have not overlooked that part of Greenough's testimony where he undertakes to explain away the evident meaning of the guaranty by saying it was perfectly well, understood by the Hoopers and himself that the guaranty only had reference to the cash payments to be made for the machinery, and did not include the deferred payments. But this will not stand the test of investigation for the plain reason that the cash payment to the Arctic Company had been made on April 3, two days prior to the date of the postscript, as shown by a statement of expenditures furnished by Greenough himself; and according to Sturgis' diary the payment had been made on March 15. Whichever statement as to the time of making the payment be accepted, the cash payment to the Arctic Company had been made before the guaranty was given, and therefore, obviously, the declaration that Poor and Greenough had in their hands or on deposit with themselves the funds called for by the contracts, meant, and could only have meant, all the funds agreed to be paid for the machinery. If the testimony of Sturgis, as contained in the first record that came before us, be true, the Maryland Company never did have at any time any funds on deposit with Poor and Greenough, and consequently the statement in the postscript of April 5 was absolutely false. So far, then, from the guaranty being true, much of the money claimed by the London Corporation under the receiver's certificates, and all of the money claimed by it under the Arctic Company's decree, are sums which ought to have been paid absolutely and unconditionally according to the guaranty, to strengthen the lien of the second mortgage. They were not mere loans, which should take precedence over that lien. The attempt to collect them in advance of the second mortgage is a direct, continuing breach of the guaranty.

Now, the vendor's lien exists for unpaid purchase money even though a deed has been executed and possession of the property has been delivered. Schwartz v. Stein, 29 Md. 112. Perhaps it would be more technically accurate to call the lien a grantor's lien after the deed has been delivered. 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1249, note. The vendor's or grantor's lien is not waived by a recital in the deed that the consideration has been paid. (Thompson v. Corrie, 57 Md. 200; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1225); and it prevails against the grantee and his heirs and other privies in estate, and against those claiming as volunteers, or even as subsequent purchasers for value, if they have notice that the purchase money, or any part thereof, remains unpaid (Schwartz v. Stein, supra). The London Corporation and Poor and Greenough and their associates created a lien in their own favor,—the first mortgage lien. They created it on a condition insisted on by the grantors, and inserted in a guaranty and in the deed, for the grantors' benefit. They, the parties giving the guaranty and accepting the deed, have violated that condition, and in spite of this they now ask a court of equity to enforce their lien, thus procured, and to enforce it over and in preference to a grantor's lien, which was only waived or postponed in favor of the first mortgage upon a condition which the holders of the first mortgage bonds made and have flagrantly disregarded. No authority has been cited in support of such a demand as this, and we apprehend none can be found under any system of jurisprudence where the most elementary precepts of ethics pervade the administration of justice. "If the facts relied on show deception,—as where misrepresentations were intentionally made for the purpose of deceiving the defendant, and he relied upon and was deceived by the same, and thereby was induced to enter into a contract which, but for the fact of such deception, he would not have done,—a court of equity will relieve against the contract, and refuse to enforce the same, whether it be accompanied by damage or not." 2 Warvelle, Vendors, 752. And this is so upon the theory that a court of equity will not make itself an instrument to carry out fraud.

It is, therefore, we think, obvious that these first mortgage bondholders, who acquired a prior lien over the grantor's lien by means of the false representations made by Poor and Greenough in behalf and with the knowledge of all the parties who were intended to take and did take the entire issue of those bonds, should not be allowed to profit by the fraud of which they were guilty; and that in the distribution of the funds which may arise and be realized on a sale of the mortgaged property these first mortgage bonds must be subordinated to $100,000 of the second; that is to say, that $100,000 of the second mortgage bonds must be first paid in full with their accrued interest and interest on overdue interest coupons before the first mortgage bondholders shall be permitted to receive any part of the proceeds of sale. It is no answer to say that some time after the 1st day of July, 1890, the guaranty was complied with to the extent of there being on the premises ice-manufacturing machines which produced daily the quantity of ice specified in the contract with the Hoopers. The other features of the guaranty have never been observed. The Hoopers were entitled to rely on the guaranty as it was written, and, having waived their lien, or deferred it only because the guaranty was given, if the material statements in that guaranty are false, and were false when made, and have not been complied with, the deceived and defrauded vendors are not bound by their waiver, and may assert their lien against the land in the hands of those who were parties to the whole transaction, and fully cognizant of all its details. You cannot hold them to their waiver of their lien except upon the terms on which they agreed to waive it, and you cannot make some other and different terms, and then say to the vendors that these are as beneficial as those actually agreed to. The vendors are not obliged to accept other conditions, and, as those upon which their waiver was founded have been broken, they may reassert their lien in preference to the lien of the first mortgage, which will accordingly be displaced. Slide & Spur Gold Mines v. Seymour, 153 U. S. 509, 88 L. ed. 802; McDole v. Purdy, 23 Iowa, 277; Dayton, X. & B. R. Co. v. Lewton, 20 Ohio St. 401.

We attach no importance to the fact that the bonds held by the Hoopers are declared on their face to be subject to the prior lien of the first mortgage, because that is precisely the relation they would have held but for the fraud and deception to which we have adverted. Nor do we consider the action of the commissioners appointed to make partition of the estate of William Hooper, deceased, in affirming no value to these bonds, as at all bearing on the questions before us. It is perfectly clear that the London Corporation cannot assert as against the Hoopers the lien of the Arctic Company's decree. That decree was obtained, as we have said, against the Maryland Company for the balance of the money due for the very machines which, under the contract made by Hammond, on February 28, 1890, in behalf of the London Corporation and Poor and Greenough, with the Hoopers, were to be placed upon the property by the 1st day of July. When ultimately placed there, the Arctic Company obtained a decree for the balance of the purchase money due for them, and the London Corporation, one of the original projectors, and in fact one of the actual purchasers of these very machines, advanced $50,000 of the amount decreed to be paid, and took an assignment of the decree. When the London Corporation paid this sum of $50,000 to the Arctic Company, it did merely what, as the real purchaser of the machines, it was legally bound to do,—it simply paid its own debt; and it cannot, by taking an assignment of, instead of a receipt for, that debt, convert itself from a debtor of the Arctic Company into a creditor of the Maryland Company as against the second mortgage bondholders, whatever may be its rights, under the assignment, as between itself and the Maryland Company.

With reference to the receiver's certificates we have no difficulty. When the property of private corporations or of individuals has been placed in the hands of a receiver, all expenses for safe-keeping and preservation are properly payable out of the income, if there be any; or, if there be none, then out of the proceeds of the corpus of the estate when sold. But this necessary power by no means includes authority in such instances to allow the creation of liens through the medium of receiver's certificates, which will take priority over existing antecedent liens. "Extensive as are the powers of courts of equity, they do not authorize a chancellor to thus impair the force of solemn obligations and destroy vested rights. Instead of displacing mortgages and other liens upon the property of private corporations and natural persons, it is the duty of courts to uphold and enforce them against all subsequent incumbrances." Farmers Loan & T. Co. v. Grape Creek Coal Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 481, 16 L. R. A. 603. It is only against railroad mortgages that the Supreme Court of the United States has sustained orders giving priority to receiver's certificates, and then only on principles having no application to a mortgage executed by a private corporation owing no duty to the public. In Wood v. Guarantee Trust & Safe Deposit Co., 128 U. S. 431, 32 L. ed. 478, the Supreme Court said: "The doctrine of Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 285, 25 L. ed. 339, has never yet been applied in any case except that of a railroad. The case lays great emphasis on the consideration that a railroad is a peculiar property, of a public nature, and discharging a great public work. There is a broad distinction between such a case and that of a purely private concern. We do not undertake to decide the question here, but only point it out." And in Kneeland v. American Loan & T. Co., 186 U. S. 89, 34 L. ed. 879, the same tribunal, in speaking of the power of a court of equity to displace the lien of a railroad mortgage, said: "Upon these facts we remark, first that the appointment of a receiver vests in the court no absolute control over the property, and no general authority to displace vested contract liens." Because, in a few specified and limited cases this court has declared that unsecured claims were entitled to priority over mortgage debts, an idea seems to have obtained that a court appointing a receiver acquires power to give such preference to any general and unsecured claims. It has been assumed that a court appointing a receiver could rightfully burden the mortgaged property for the payment of any unsecured indebtedness. Indeed, we are advised that some courts have made the appointment of a receiver conditional upon the payment of all unsecured indebtedness in preference to the mortgage liens sought to be enforced. Can anything be conceived which more thoroughly destroys the sacredness of contract obligations? One holding a mortgage debt upon a railroad has the same right to demand and expect of the court respect for his vested and contracted priority as the holder of a mortgage on a farm or lot. So when a court appoints a receiver of railroad property, it has no right to make that receivership conditional on the payment of other than those few unsecured claims which, by the rulings of this court, have been declared to have an equitable priority. No one is bound to sell to a railroad company, or to work for it; and whoever has dealings with a company whose property is mortgaged must be assumed to have dealt with it on the faith of its personal responsibility, and not in expectation of subsequently displacing the priority of the mortgage lien. It is the exception, and not the rule, that such priority of liens can be displaced. We emphasize this fact of the sacredness of contract liens for the reason that there seems to be growing an idea that the chancellor, in the exercise of his equitable powers, has unlimited discretion in this matter of the displacement of vested liens. See also Bound v. South Carolina R. Co. 50 Fed. Rep. 812; Fidelity Ins. Trust & Safe Deposit Co. v. Roanoke Iron Co. 68 Fed. Rep. 623. It would be exceedingly dangerous to concede to a court of equity the power to displace, in favor of receiver's certificates, subsisting liens on the property of private corporations or of individuals. No mortgage lien would ever be secure if it were liable to be postponed to subsequent obligations created by a receiver. If the power exists at all apart from the case of a railroad mortgage, there is no reason for denying its applicability to every species of mortgage, and a mortgagee might suddenly discover that what he believed to be an ample security has been utterly destroyed and swept away by intervening liens created subsequently by an order of the court. We are unable to give our assent to such a doctrine.

29 L. R. A.

In concluding this opinion it is proper to observe that the $10,000 of second mortgage bonds, which formed no part of the consideration of the purchase from the Hoopers, but which related to another and distinct transaction, while subordinate to the first mortgage bonds, because not representing unpaid purchase money, are entitled to priority over the Arctic Company's decree in the hands of the London Corporation, and to priority over the receiver's certificates.

As a result of the views we have expressed, the pro forma decree dismissing the cross-bill will be reversed, and the cause will be remanded, that a decree may be passed directing a sale of the mortgaged property, and giving to the appellants, in the distribution of the funds arising from the sale, a priority over the first mortgage bonds as to $100,000 of the second mortgage bonds, with the overdue interest thereon and interest on that overdue interest down to the day of sale; and likewise giving to the appellants, as to said $100,000 of second mortgage bonds, with accrued interest and interest on overdue interest a priority over the receiver's certificates and over the Arctic Company's decree in the hands of the London Company, or any one claiming under it; and further giving a priority as to the remaining $10,000 of second mortgage bonds over the receiver's certificates and the said Arctic Company's decree.

Pro forma decrees reversed, with costs above and below, and cause remanded that a decree may be passed in conformity to this opinion.

Earl P. MASON et al., Appts.,

UNION MILLS PAPER MFG. CO., and BALTIMORE & OHIO R. CO., Garnishee.

(.....Md.....)

1. A nonresident of the state whose obligation is sought to be enforced by another nonresident through garnishment of funds in the hands of a resident is within the provisions of a statute that any person liable to an action who is absent from the state when it accrues shall have no benefit of the statute of limitations while the absence continues.

2. A foreign contract between nonresidents may constitute a cause of action within the meaning of a statute providing that if any person liable to an action shall be absent from the state when it accrues he shall have no benefit of the statute of limitations while such absence continues.

(June 12, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiffs from a judgment of the Superior Court of Baltimore City in favor of defendant in a garnishment proceeding brought to reach its property in the hands of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company.
Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. William Reynolds, for appellants:

A court is not warranted in arbitrarily interpolating into this section a proviso that it has no application to cases where both the parties are nonresidents, and the contract sued upon is not one to be performed in this state.

Dugan v. Gittings, 3 Gill, 164, 43 Am. Dec. 806; Hartley v. Crawford, 12 Neb. 471; Kemps v. Bader, 86 Tenn. 189; Power v. Hathaway, 43 Barb. 214.

The decisions of this court are clearly inconsistent with the allowance of the construction contended for by the appellees.

Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, 75 Md. 604; Hysinger v. Baltzell, 3 Gill & J. 158; Campbell v. Morris, 3 Harr. & McH. 554.

The right to interpose the defense of limitations to a claim just upon its face is neither a natural, nor a moral, nor even a common-law, right, but is purely a privilege granted by statute; one which is not favorably regarded by the courts; which is never extended by implication, but is always strictly construed.

Poe, Pl. § 618; Wall v. Wall, 2 Harr. & G. 79; Eschbach v. Pitts, 6 Md. 71; Gemmell v. Davis, 71 Md. 461.

The universal construction put upon these statutes is that under them limitations do not begin to run until there may be found within the jurisdiction of the forum whose statute is pleaded a person capable of being sued.

Hysinger v. Baltzell, 3 Gill & J. 161; State v. Reigart, 1 Gill, 1, 39 Am. Dec. 628; Kirkland v. Krebs, 84 Md. 97; Wood, Limitations, §§ 224-248, 250, and cases there cited; Olcott v. Tivoga R. Co. 20 N. Y. 210, 75 Am. Dec. 393; Larson v. Aultman & T. Co. 86 Wis. 281; Bulger v. Roche, 11 Pick. 86, 22 Am. Dec. 359; Goetz v. Voelinger, 99 Mass. 504; McCann v. Randall, 147 Mass. 81; Ruggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. 263, 3 Am. Dec. 482.

Messrs. John K. Cowen, E. J. D. Cross, and George Dobbin Penniman, for appellee:

The lex fori governs as to the statute of limitations to be followed.

1 Wood, Limitations, 2d ed. p. 29; Angell, Limitations, 6th ed. § 65.

If the nonresident creditor elects to sue in a state whose statute has barred his claim, he cannot set up the nonresidence of the debtor as a defense to the statute.

Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland, Oh. 272.

If the theory of the appellant is correct there is no quieting of the affairs of any large wholesale merchant or manufacturer who is extending his business from state to state.

There could be no real barring of a debt by limitations; each new state would give a new right of action for the period limited by its statute, and a merchant would never be safe from the annoyance of defending old stale claims, if he extended his business into other states.

Of course, every state has a right to protect its own citizens, and if a nonresident debtor owes a resident creditor, the state can protect its resident creditor in his right to his own tribunal, by providing that the nonresident debtor must so come within the state that suit could be brought before the statute will begin to run in favor of the debtor.

Hysinger v. Baltzell, 3 Gill & J. 158.

But a nonresident creditor who elects to bring a nonresident debtor into the courts of any particular state, in order to recover a debt, cannot claim the benefit of this exception, as to the statute not running against nonresident debtors, because the reasons for its existence do not apply to him.

It is the duty of a debtor to seek his creditor for the purpose of paying his debt.

Jones v. Ricketts, 7 Md. 117.

A foreign corporation is not bound, under our statutes, to submit itself to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state in a suit by a nonresident brought upon a foreign contract.

Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, 75 Md. 614.

All statutes of limitations proceed upon the policy comprised in the maxim, interest re-

NOTE.—An unusual question under the statute of limitations, which is at the same time one of general interest, is decided in the present case. Under the rules of this decision a defendant would have no protection by the statute of limitations except in the state of his residence.

As to what constitutes "residence out of the state" within the meaning of such statutes, see note to Kerwin v. Sabin (Minn.) 17 L. R. A. 225.

29 L. R. A.

ipublica ut sit finis litium, that some lapse of time must be prescribed, in order to give quiet to human affairs.

Lingan v. Henderson, 1 Bland, Ch. 272.

The statute of limitations has justly been denominated "a statute of repose" and is one of the most important and beneficial legislative enactments which our statute book contains.

Green v. Johnson, 8 Gill & J. 394.

Fowler, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by this appeal relates to the construction of section 5 of article 57 of the Code, title "Limitations of Actions." Both parties are nonresidents of this state, the defendant being a Pennsylvania corporation, and the plaintiffs are citizens of and doing business in the state of Rhode Island, under the name of Mason, Chapin & Co. The plaintiffs sued out of the superior court of Baltimore city, on the 7th of February, 1894, a foreign attachment against the defendant, the cause of action being a breach of contract by the latter. This attachment was laid in the hands of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, as garnishee, and the defendant corporation voluntarily appeared in the short-note case, and filed four pleas, upon three of which issue was joined, and to the fourth, which was the plea of limitations, the plaintiffs replied "that the said defendant was, at the time said cause of action accrued to the plaintiffs, absent from the state of Maryland, to wit, in the state of Pennsylvania, and thereafter was and continued to be, and remained, absent from this state, up to within three years before bringing this suit." To this replication the defendant rejoined that "the alleged cause of action accrued more than three years before the institution of this suit, outside of the state of Maryland, and at the time of the accruing of said cause of action both the plaintiff and defendant were nonresidents of the state of Maryland, and have never ceased to be nonresidents, and said contract, on which this suit was instituted, was not made in this state, nor was any part of it to be performed in this state." The plaintiffs demurred to this rejoinder, and the court below overruled the demurrer and gave judgment therein in favor of the defendant. From this judgment the plaintiffs have appealed.

The precise question is whether section 5 of article 57 of the Code applies to cases where both plaintiff and defendant are nonresidents, and where the cause of action accrued outside of this state, and the contract sued on is a foreign contract. On the part of the plaintiffs it is contended that they have the same rights and occupy the same position as to the right to rely upon the provisions of our code relative to limitations of actions that any resident of this state has, and that if a citizen of Maryland could not be successfully met by a plea of the statute by a foreign debtor who is a resident of Pennsylvania, no more can such a plea be so set up against them. On the other hand, the defendant contends that the provisions of section 5 of article 57 were made for and relate alone to debtors who are citizens of Maryland, and that a non-resident creditor who elects to bring a nonresident debtor into the courts of Maryland in order to recover on a foreign contract cannot avoid a plea of limitations by pleading the absence out of the state of such nonresident in the terms of said section 5.

It will be observed that the validity of the replication of the plaintiff must depend upon the construction placed on section 5 of article 57. That section provides that "if any person liable to any action shall be absent out of the state at the time when the cause of action may arise or accrue against him, he shall have no benefit of the limitation herein contained, if the person who has the cause of action shall commence the same after the presence in this state of the person liable thereto within the times herein limited." This language is certainly broad enough to include within its terms the defendant. It could not be much broader than it seems to be made by the words "any person liable to any action." But, comprehensive and all-embracing as it may seem to be, yet the language used in the statute must be construed and taken in the sense in which it appears to be used by the legislature. The defendant suggests that an investigation or historical study of the origin and growth of the statute will show that its contention is the proper one; but, after a careful examination of the old statutes,—the original Statute of 21 Jac. I., chap. 16, and 4 Anne, chap. 16, § 19, as well as the several statutes adopted by this state, all of which are based upon and in many respects similar to or modifications of the provisions of the old English statutes just referred to,—we have arrived at a different conclusion. In the Statute of James there was a provision in favor of "any person or persons . . . beyond the seas," and the same provision appeared on our own statute until 1818, when the act of that year (chap. 216) repealed it. It is true that the words "any person . . . beyond the sea," both in the Statute of James and our old statute, related to persons who were entitled to sue; but there was a similar provision in regard to defendants to be found in 4 Anne, chap. 16, § 19, by which it is provided that the statute should not run in their favor during their absence from the realm. And so the words in section 5 of article 57 of the Code relate to absent debtors, and the whole section is doubtless a modification of section 19 of the Statute of Anne. If these words or similar ones have been uniformly held, when used in the English statute of limitations, from which ours is derived, to include both residents and nonresidents,—subjects and foreigners alike,—then a like construction should be given to them or similar words when they appear in our statute. In Angell on Limitations (sec. 21) the correct rule is laid down for construing these statutes. He says, in speaking of the Statute of Jac. I., as modified by that of 4 Anne: "Where any difference appears between the provisions of that statute in respect to personal actions and those of American statutes of limitations, it will be seen to be more in words than in substance, the end of one and all of them being one and the same.

And the mere change of phraseology in the revision of the statute before in force will not work an alteration in the law previously declared, unless it undisputably appears that such was the intention of the legislature." See authorities cited in note. In the case of Strithorpe v. Graeme, 2 W. Bl. 723, which was an action of assumpsit, the defendant pleaded nonassumpsit and limitations. The plaintiff, who was a foreigner, replied that he had been beyond seas, etc., in Germany, and so remained, etc. Counsel argued that the replication was bad; because, if the law stood so, foreigners who reside always out of England would have the same or greater advantage than natives, and that the exception in the statute was meant for Englishmen who occasionally go beyond seas. But Wilmut, Ld. Ch. J., said: "The exception in the statute is general, and therefore there must be judgment for plaintiff." This case is also reported in 3 Wils. 145, and the opinion of the chief justice is there given more fully to the same effect. Also, Le Veux v. Berkeley, 5 Q. B. 836, which was tried before Lord Denman. And in the later case of Lafond v. Ruddock, 18 C. B. 813, it was again contended that the proviso of section 7 of Stat. 21 Jac. I., relating to creditors "beyond the seas" could not apply to foreigners coming to England for the first time. Jervis, Ch. J., again applied the liberal construction and said: "The proviso in favor of persons under disabilities in Stat. 21 Jac. I., chap. 16, applies as well to foreigners who have never been in this country as to parties residing abroad at the time of the accruing of the cause of action, and returning afterwards to England." As we have seen, this same exception in favor of absent creditors was, until 1818, a part of our statute; and it was then repealed because it was not considered fair, as suggested also in the old English cases we have cited, that citizens of other states and subjects of foreign countries should have greater advantages than our own citizens. And that this was the object intended by the repeal of the proviso in favor of absent creditors is evident from what was said by Archer, J., in delivering the opinion of the court of appeals in the case of Frey v. Kirk, 4 Gill & J. 531, 28 Am. Dec. 581: "The unlimited latitude," he said, "given to persons beyond seas, was considered by the legislature as unreasonable, and it could constitute no actual grievance or just cause of complaint if they were reduced to the same standard as our own citizens." And again he says, in the same case, that the construction the court had placed on this same act was such as put all suitors, foreign and domestic, upon the same footing. See also, Pancoast v. Addison, 1 Harr. & J. 350, 3 Am. Dec. 590. It is apparent, therefore, that the saving or exception in favor of creditors has always in England, and in Maryland also as long as it was a part of our law, been held to apply to both foreign and domestic creditors. And, if that be so, why should not the like provision in section 5 of article 57 have the same liberal construction? In England, under the Statute of 4 Anne, chap. 16, § 19, a foreign defendant could not plead the statute of limitations unless he had returned and been in England during the statutory period of limitations. Forbes v. Smith, 11 Exch. 161; Fannin v. Anderson, 7 Q. B. 811. And it has been uniformly held that the words "beyond the seas" is equivalent to "out of the state," "out of the jurisdiction" (so held by this court in Maurice v. Worden, 52 Md. 291); and, therefore, if section 5 should be read as construed in that case, it would read as follows: "If any person, etc., shall be out of the state, beyond seas, or out of the jurisdiction of the state" at the time the action accrues, etc., he shall have no benefit, etc. So read, section 5 would be identical with section 19 of Stat. 4 Anne, chap. 16, which has always been held in England to include both residents and nonresidents. Fannin v. Anderson, supra; Towns v. Mead, 16 C. B. 123; Forbes v. Smith, supra. Then, according to the terms of this section, thus read, a citizen of Pennsylvania may be sued in our courts; and it is conceded that, as against one of our citizens, a citizen of Pennsylvania cannot successfully plead the statute when sued here, if the former shall commence his action after the presence here of the latter within the statutory period, for it was so held in Hysinger v. Ballisell, 3 Gill & J. 158. In White v. White, 1 Md. Ch. 57, it was held that the circumstance of the defendant in that case being a nonresident did not deprive him of the benefit of the statute of limitations of Maryland, because it was clearly shown that he had been in Baltimore more than three years before the action was commenced. And, of course, if he had not been here during the statutory period, he could not have relied upon limitations as a defense. It would also seem to be clear that the plaintiffs, who are citizens of another state, have the same right to sue here that a citizen of this state has, and it is difficult to understand upon what principle of justice or fairness the nonresident debtor should be allowed to plead limitations against a nonresident creditor and not against one of our own citizens. All should be on the same footing. Frey v. Kirk, supra. And this would accord not only with justice, but would seem to be giving to nonresidents nothing more than they have a right to demand; for it would not do to say that our citizens and citizens of other states would enjoy the same rights and privileges here, when, under our law, the latter would be absolutely barred from recovery by a plea of limitations, while it would not avail against the former. Paine v. Drew, 44 N. H. 314. And inasmuch as the right to set up limitations as a defense has no existence except by virtue of statute, we should not allow it to prevail any more in the one case than in the other, unless it can be clearly shown that there is some statutory provision requiring such a distinction to be made.

It was urged that the course of the plaintiffs is somewhat inconsistent. In that they seek to avoid the effect of defendant's plea because of the nonresidence of the latter, while the very action by which the defendant was forced into a Maryland court is founded upon the same fact. While it is true the attachment proceedings were based on the non-residence of defendant, yet this is another case in which, as the plaintiffs contend, the question of residence or nonresidence is not involved, but only the question of the absence or presence in this state of the defendant, without regard to residence. Nor is it correct to say that the defendant was compelled to appear to this action. On the contrary, its appearance was entirely voluntary. Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, 75 Md. 604. Such appearance was not even necessary to enable it to plead limitations or make any other defenses, for the same defenses which could have been made in this case would have been as well made on its behalf by the garnishee in the attachment case, without any appearance on the part of the defendant in this case. Poe, Practice, §§ 540, 543. But there does seem to be some inconsistency in the position assumed by the defendant. Because it is a nonresident it claims the benefit of that part of the statute of limitations which is in its favor, and denies, for the same reason, that section 5, which is not in its favor, has any application whatever to it. It would seem but fair that our statute should apply altogether, or not at all, to the defendant. If altogether, the rejoinder of the defendant was bad and the replication of the plaintiff was good; and if not at all, the defendant's plea was bad, and in either case the judgment on the demurrer should have been against the defendant.

We may now briefly consider another question raised by the demurrer, namely: The cause of action having accrued, and the contract having been made outside the state, does such contract constitute such a cause of action as is contemplated by section 5 of article 57? It was contended by the defendant that foreign contracts are not contemplated by this section, but that it relates only to contracts made in this state and to be performed here. But we think such a construction would be strained; and it was said by Jervis, Ch. J., in Lafond v. Buddock, supra: "The rejoinder now proposed is that the plaintiff is a Frenchman domiciled in France, and that the cause of action accrued there, so as to negative inferentially that the plaintiff returned to this country within the meaning of the proviso. It seems to me," he continued, "that is seeking to put too strict a construction upon this statute;" and it was held that "the mere circumstance of the cause of action accruing in France, and the plaintiff being a domiciled Frenchman" was no answer to the replication that at the time the cause of action accrued the plaintiff was beyond seas, and had commenced his action within the period limited, next after his return, etc. Nor is there anything in the language of the section under consideration which would seem to compel us to adopt the narrow construction suggested by the defendant. In Fairfax Forrest Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Chambers, supra, it was held that: "Our courts have jurisdiction in regard to contracts whether made in or out of this state; and where the suit is brought by a nonresident against a nonresident defendant upon a for-foreign contract, if the defendant voluntarily appears, and the case is tried upon its merits, the validity of a judgment rendered in such a case cannot be questioned." There, as here, the defendant was a nonresident corporation, and the proceedings were begun by suing out a foreign attachment. If, then, our courts have jurisdiction in respect to, and the section in question is general enough to include, foreign contracts, we can see no reason why they should not be held to be embraced within its terms. To exclude them would be to deprive citizens of other states of rights and privileges to which they are entitled. Le Roy v. Crowninshield, 2 Mason, 157, Fed. Cas. No. 8,269; Paine v. Drew, supra. But it was urged that to adopt the liberal construction, and thus assume jurisdiction over foreign litigants, would make the courts of this state the battle ground on which would be waged a never-ending war. The danger, if any, is more imaginary than real. In Paine v. Drew, supra, Sargent, J., who delivered the opinion of the court in that case, said: "The objection that our courts will be crowded with stale claims from abroad, to the exclusion of their legitimate business, is purely imaginary. The fact that this question is now for the first time directly raised is a sufficient answer to the objection." No authority has been produced to sustain the defendant's position. On the contrary, a number of courts of the highest authority have held, in construing statutes more or less like ours, that the more liberal construction is the more reasonable and just one. We will examine a few of them, though the language of the statutes construed differs more or less from each other, and also from our own statute, so that decisions based upon them cannot always be accepted as of controlling authority. The case, however, just cited (Paine v. Drew, supra) is so similar in all its facts to the one at bar, and the opinion of the court is so full and clear, that it deserves more than ordinary consideration. The statute of New Hampshire (Pub. Stat. 1891, chap. 217) provides that "if the defendant at the time the cause of action accrued or afterwards was absent from or residing out of the state the time of such absence shall be excluded," etc. It was held (Paine v. Drew) that, a citizen of Maine suing a citizen of Massachusetts in the courts of New Hampshire, the latter could not avail himself of the statute of limitations, in any other manner than as though the plaintiff were a citizen of New Hampshire; in other words, that the statute would not protect him until he had been in New Hampshire long enough to allow the plaintiff to sue within the time limited. In commenting upon provisions of statutes of the various states like our section 5 of article 57, it was said: "It has been held almost uniformly that these words, 'absence,' 'return,' 'leaving property,' etc., are not confined in their application to those who have once been inhabitants, but are equally applicable to those who have never before been in the state,—to foreigners as well as citizens;" and that whether the statute runs against a claim or not depends entirely on the presence or absence of the defendant, and that it matters not whether the plaintiff be resident or nonresident, absent or present, in the state. In the case of Ruggles v. Keeler, 3 Johns. 264, 3 Am. Dec. 483, Chancellor Kent took the same view, and that, too, upon the construction of a statute substantially like ours. He said: "Whether the defendant be a resident of this state and only absent for a time, or whether he resides altogether out of the state, is immaterial. He is equally within the proviso." The proviso referred to is that "if the defendant shall be out of the state" he shall have no benefit of the statute, etc.; and in the case just cited both parties were nonresidents. In Graves v. Weeks, 19 Vt. 181, it was held that the statute of that state extended to the case where both parties were residents of another state and the debtor is within the state of Vermont for temporary purposes. The statute was that limitations should not run "when the debtor at the time the action accrued was out of the state." To the same effect are Hartley v. Crawford, 13 Neb. 471; Kempe v. Bader, 86 Tenn. 189; Power v. Hathaway, 43 Barb. 214; Olcott v. Toga R. Co. 20 N. Y. 210, 75 Am. Dec. 398; Larson v. Aultman & T. Co. 86 Wis. 281; Bulger v. Roche, 11 Pick. 86, 23 Am. Dec. 859; Goets v. Voelinger, 99 Mass. 504; McCann v. Randall, 147 Mass. 81. In Angell on Limitations (sec. 205) the author says: "The acts of limitations of Maryland of 1715 and 1765 are by judicial construction to be taken together, and to receive an interpretation to carry into effect the plain and obvious intent of the legislature, which was that limitations should not attach against a creditor where the debtor was absent from the state." And he cites Hysinger v. Baltzell, supra, where the defendant was a resident of Pennsylvania when the cause of action accrued, and it was held he could not plead the statute, because he had not been here long enough to afford the plaintiff an opportunity to prosecute his writ. It is true that in Hysinger v. Baltzell the plaintiff was a resident of this state, but, as we have seen, both residents and nonresidents stand upon the same footing in this respect (Frey v. Kirk, supra), and the absence or presence in the state of the plaintiff has no effect whatever upon the running or not running of the statute. Paine v. Drew, and White v. White, supra. In conclusion, we will refer to the case of Maurice v. Worden, supra, which we think gives a clear and satisfactory construction of section 5, entirely confirming the views here expressed. The whole question raised by the defendant here is whether that section applies to it. The contention is that the section referred to will be so construed as to restrict it to resident debtors; and reliance was placed here, as there, upon section 4 of the same article of the Code, and its relation to section 5, the argument being that inasmuch as the former related only to residents, the latter, which was claimed to be a supplement to it, had no other or greater significance. This court, however, seems to have placed very little reliance upon section 4 for any purpose, and declared it to be so ambiguous that it is practically useless,—so useless that it was said the profession did not seem ever to have relied on it. But in regard to section 5 it was said that the meaning of the phrase therein used, namely, "out of the state," is identical with the well-known expressions "beyond the seas," or "out of the actual jurisdiction," "beyond the reach of process of the state." We have already seen that the words "beyond the seas," whether used in statutes of limitations in regard to creditors or debtors, have always been held to apply to both residents and nonresidents, unless otherwise provided,—as, for instance, in the Illinois statute. "Without undertaking," said this court, in the case just cited, "to review all the cases which have construed the words 'beyond the seas' and 'out of the state,' there is in reality no conflict among them, and they all tend to ascertain whether or not in the particular case the party could be reached by the process of the court." If he can be reached by process, it matters not whether he be resident or not; for in either case he will be protected by the statute unless his creditor sues him within the time limited,—and this without regard to whether the creditor be present or absent from this state. And, on the other hand, if the debtor cannot be reached by process, he is "beyond the seas," "absent out of the state," and, therefore, although a defendant, may be actually within the tribunal limits of the state, if he is, within the meaning of the statute, "out of the state." Maurice v. Worden, supra; Sleight v. Kane, 1 Johns. Cas. 76.

Judgment reversed and cause remanded for new trial.

Robinson, Ch. J., and Bryan and Briggs, JJ., dissent.

IOWA SUPREME COURT.

BIBBINS, Appt.,
v.
W. W. CLARK et al.

(.....Iowa.....)

1. Individual real estate of a partner is subject to the lien of a tax assessment upon the personal property of the partnership under a statute making taxes due from any person a lien upon any property owned by him.
2. A statute simply making personal property taxes a lien on the real estate of the owner does not give them priority over mortgage liens existing at the time they attach.
3. Suit for the refunding of an illegal tax cannot be maintained against the county until the claim has been presented to the board of supervisors under a statute providing that that board shall direct the treasurer to refund illegal taxes.

4. Members of a partnership the personal taxes of which have been levied on the real estate of their copartner cannot be compelled to reimburse a mortgagee of such real estate who to protect his own interests has been compelled to pay the taxes.
5. A mortgagor who permits his personal property taxes to become a lien on the mortgaged land can be compelled to reimburse the mortgagee who is compelled to pay them to protect his own interests.
6. An objection that a suit should have been brought at law instead of in equity cannot be taken by demurrer.

NOTE.—Priority of claims for taxes against the assets of a debtor.

- I. Scope of note.
- II. Upon what based.
- III. Constitutionality and construction of provisions for.
- IV. What is included in the right.
 - a. Taxes generally.
 - b. Claims against collectors.
- V. Nature and extent of priority.
- VI. Subrogation of persons paying the tax.
- VII. What amounts to a divestiture of the right.
- VIII. Enforcement of the right.

I. Scope of note.

The design of this note is to treat of the priority of claims for taxes with relation to claims for prior payment out of some particular fund only, and questions as to the priority of tax liens generally, and the superiority of tax titles derived therefrom, have been omitted.

As to priority of tax liens, see note (Taxes made a lien on real property; priorities), to New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young (Iowa) 10 L. R. A. 478.

As to claims on bonds for duties, see note to State v. Foster (Wyo.) ante, 226.

II. Upon what based.

Taxes, though not regarded as debts, have been deemed to be within the principle of the prerogative right of the sovereign power to priority of payment of debts due it.

Thus in Dennis v. Maynard (1854) 15 Ill. 477, holding that county taxes create a lien and take precedence to and priority over judgments, it was said that all the principles applicable to the prerogative right of priority of the crown in this respect, equally apply to the public dues for taxes.

And in Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. (1888) (N. Y.) 13 Cent. Rep. 404, the court reiterated a statement made in Re Columbian Ins. Co. (1886) 8 Abb. App. Dec. 239, that there is great force in the claim that the state has succeeded to all the prerogatives of the British crown so far as they are essential to the efficient exercise of powers inherent in the nature of civil government, and that there is the same priority of right here in respect to the payment of taxes which existed at common law in favor of the public treasury.

As to the succession of the states to the prerogative right of preference of the crown, see note to State v. Foster (Wyo.) ante, 226.

As a general rule, however, taxes are regarded as a lien upon the property of the taxpayer or are made so by statute. In such case the right of priority of payment is dependent upon the priority of the lien, and when the right of priority is conferred by statute it is limited and confined to that actually conferred and dependent upon the proper construction of the terms of the statutes.

Thus unpaid county taxes are not taxes due the state entitled to priority in the distribution of the estate of a decedent next after the expenses of administration under the Georgia statute providing for preference of unpaid taxes or other debts due the state or United States. Hargrove v. Lilly (1882) 60 Ga. 826.

And the state has no priority in the disbursement of an insolvent decedent's estate for the payment of taxes assessed against lands included in the estate, under Virginia Code 1873, chap. 128, § 26, giving priority to taxes and levies assessed upon the decedent previous to his death, except for the taxes due from the insolvent himself individually as a taxpayer which had been assessed on his property, and has no lien on his estate as a deceased defaulting sheriff for taxes collected and unaccounted for by him. Spilman v. Payne (1886) 84 Va. 435.

As to the right of the state to priority when taxes are regarded as a lien or made so by statute, see infra, under heading, Nature and extent of priority. As to taxes as a lien on real property, see note to Miller v. Anderson, 11 L. R. A. 817, 18. Dak. 530.

III. Constitutionality and construction of provisions for.

The constitutionality of provisions for the priority of payment of taxes does not appear to have been questioned.

And in Geren v. Gruber (1874) 26 La. Ann. 694, it was said to be competent for the sovereign power to provide how taxes shall be collected and say whether the right of preference shall exist and for what length of time.

And in Aikin v. Dunlap (1819) 17 Johns. 77, it was said that it cannot be doubted that congress has the right to stipulate for preference in their contracts for securing the public revenue.

And in Jaok v. Wiennett (1885) 115 Ill. 105, 58 Am. Rep. 129, it was said that the constitutional provision requiring the general assembly to provide such revenue as shall be needful renders it indispensable that taxes shall have priority over individual debts.

Re Columbian Ins. Co. (1886) 8 Abb. App. Dec. 239, 3 Keyes, 121, is the only case found turning directly upon the construction of these provisions. In this it was held that 2 N. Y. Rev. Stat. 470, § 79, regulating the distribution of the assets of insolvents, is not to be so construed as to extinguish the rights of the government enacting it to priority of payment from the assets, of taxes due it.

It is to be observed, however, that all the de-

(February 2, 1894.)

APP^{EAL} by plaintiff from a judgment of the District Court for Polk County in favor of defendants in an action brought to annul a tax sale and to recover the amount which plaintiff had been compelled to pay to protect his property therefrom. Reversed.

The facts are stated in opinion.

Mr. William H. Bailly for appellant.

Messrs. Spurrier, Dowell & Parrish for appellee Polk county.

Messrs. Dudley & Coffin for other appellees.

Kinne, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. The facts in this case are that during the years 1886, 1887, and 1888 defendants actions upon the statutory portions of the subject, though bearing particularly upon the specific subjects herein treated, consist generally of an interpretation of those provisions.

IV. What is included in the right.

a. Taxes generally.

Both counties and municipal corporations in levying taxes are instrumentalities of government, the claim of neither having priority over the other, and a purchaser at a tax sale for a county tax takes the property subject to the city tax; though when the property is not of sufficient value to pay both, the sale first rightfully made will devote the lien of the other governmental agency. Justice v. Logansport (1884) 101 Ind. 323.

And when land is sold for state, county, and municipal taxes, and the proceeds are insufficient to pay all, the state cannot as sovereign assert a prior right of satisfaction when the lien given for taxes is without restriction or qualification, applying to all taxes authorized to be assessed by law, and counties and municipalities are governing agencies created by the state with power to levy and collect taxes. Nashville v. Lee (1883) 13 Lea, 452.

—So both the taxes levied upon real estate and sums added thereto for failure to make prompt payment are entitled to priority of payment in the distribution of the proceeds of a judicial sale of such real estate under a mortgage, under Pa. Act of March 13, 1875 (Pub. Laws, 15), providing that taxes assessed and levied upon real estate shall be a lien thereon and have priority to any mortgage, and that if they remain unpaid for a specified period certain designated sums shall be added thereto. Titusville's App. (1885) 108 Pa. 600.

And South Carolina Act of 1788, imposing double taxes on all persons who refuse or neglect to make due return on oath of all their taxable property, provides for an increased tax after the time limited for making the annual return, and not a mere penalty indefeasible, and the addition is entitled to the same priority of payment out of the proceeds of a sale, of lands of the tax debtor under a judgment against him, over the judgment, as that to which the original tax is entitled. Butler v. Bailly (1800) 2 Bay, 244.

So a fund arising from a sheriff's sale of an equitable interest under a contract for a conveyance of lands is subject to the lien of the city in which they are situated for taxes imposed. Van Arsdalen's App. (1877) 3 W. N. C. 468.

And Maine Stat. 1879, chap. 154, § 15, requiring city taxes to be paid in full out of an insolvent estate, applies to one in which no dividend had been made at the time the statute took effect although 29 L. R. A.

W. W. Clark, Lavina W. Clark, and A. W. Ford were copartners doing business in the city of Des Moines under the firm name of W. W. Clark & Co.; that one half of the taxes upon the personal property of W. W. Clark & Co. for 1887 were not paid by them, and the entire taxes upon their personal property for 1888 were not paid by them; that November 1, 1888, M. W. Bibbins sold and conveyed to W. W. Clark certain lots in Lee township, city of Des Moines, subject to a mortgage of $10,000 and interest, which grantee assumed and agreed to pay as a part of the purchase price of said property; that as a part of said transaction, and simultaneously with the execution of said deed, W. W. Clark, for a part of the purchase price of said lots, executed and delivered to Bibbins a purchase money mortgage on said lots the insolvency proceedings were commenced prior to its enactment. Belfast v. Fogler (1880) 71 Me. 403.

b. Claims against collectors.

Taxes collected by a tax collector and unaccounted for cease to be taxes and become a debt to the town, upon a claim for which against his estate in insolvency the town is entitled to priority, under Massachusetts Pub. Stat., chap. 187, § 104, directing preference in the order for a dividend to all debts due to the United States, and all debts due for taxes assessed by the state, or any county, city, or town therein. Bent v. Hubbardston (1884) 138 Mass. 99.

And the claim of a widow of a deceased tax collector for dower, and liens by judgment or decree on lands of the decedent, have priority in the distribution of the decedent's estate, under the Georgia statute, over a claim of the county for taxes collected and not accounted for, though "unpaid taxes or other debts due the state" are thereby preferred over judgments, etc. Hargrove v. Lilly (1882) 69 Ga. 323.

But where moneys collected by deputies upon tax bills placed in their hands by the tax collector are paid over by them to his administrator after his death as "the state's money," the administrator may, within the reason of the rule of "ear marking" pay such moneys to the state in preference to the other creditors of the tax collector, though the state has no lien upon the estate for, or right of preference in, the payment thereof. Spilman v. Payne (1888) 84 Va. 435.

And a debt due to the United States from a deceased revenue officer is entitled to priority of payment out of the assets in the hands of his administrators in Pennsylvania, whether the debt was incurred before or after the passage of the Act of Congress of March 3, 1790, providing for the priority of the United States in the payment of debts due it, as it would have been entitled to such priority under the laws of that state previously existing. Com. v. Lewis (1814) 6 Binn. 205.

And a claim of the commonwealth against a defaulting collector of duties is a paramount claim upon the proceeds of a surety's lands, sold under the decree of the orphan's court over a mortgage subsequently executed, and claims of other creditors, under Pennsylvania Act of May 30, 1811, providing for the settlement of balances due the Commonwealth and making them a lien on the estate of the debtor and his sureties from the date of the settlement. Forney v. Com. (1849) 10 Pa. 405.

V. Nature and extent of priority.

A mere right to priority of payment of taxes gives the collector no power to seize and sell the property of the taxpayer. He has no right in the

(afterwards assigned to plaintiff), in which he covenanted that said premises were free from incumbrance except said mortgage of $10,000, and that he would warrant and defend the title of said premises against all persons lawfully claiming the same; that December 7, 1889, W. W. Clark conveyed the lots to Lavina W. Clark; that January 7, 1890, plaintiff obtained, in Polk county district court, against W. W. Clark and Lavina W. Clark, a decree foreclosing said purchase money mortgage, and under a special execution thereon the lots were sold to her at sheriff's sale, February 19, 1890, for the full amount of the mortgage debt; that December 7, 1890, the treasurer of Polk county sold said lots at tax sale to A. C. Miller for the said unpaid personal property taxes of W. W. Clark & Co., amounting to $399.23, and executed to him a tax-sale certificate; that February 20, 1891, plaintiff received a sheriff's deed for said property, and on March 23, 1891, brought this action; that in January, 1891, after the sheriff's sale to plaintiff, the Clarks having failed to pay interest on the $10,000 mortgage, the holder brought suit to foreclose said mortgage, and in June, 1891, after the present suit was brought, plaintiff, to prevent loss, and obtain an extension and renewal of said mortgage, was compelled to pay said personal property taxes and redeem from said tax sale to Miller; that at all of the times aforesaid W. W. Clark and Lavina W. Clark were the owners of certain real estate described, which was primarily liable for said personal property taxes. Plaintiff prays judgment against Polk county, W. W. Clark & Co., W. W. Clark, Lavina W. Clark, and A. W. Ford, and each of them, for the amount of said taxes, interest, and costs; that the tax sale be set aside, annulled, and ordered returned and refunded; that defendants' said property be decreed primarily liable for said taxes, and a special execution issue for the sale thereof; that plaintiff have such other and further relief as in equity she ought to receive. To the amended petition all of the defendants demur, alleging property itself, though he has a right of prior payment out of the proceeds when sold. Anderson v. State (1852) 23 Miss. 459.

And the right of prior payment given by Mississippi Acts 1841, 1844, and 1848, providing that the taxes thereby imposed shall be preferred to all judgments, executions, incumbrances, and liens of any description whatsoever, does not of itself constitute a lien upon the property of the taxpayer, and if before the right of priority attaches there is a bona fide transfer, it is lost. Ibid.; Bailey v. Fuqua (1859) 24 Miss. 497.

And a mortgagee of personal property who takes possession under his mortgage and sells the property either directly or through the decree or order of a court before any distraint for taxes is made is entitled to the proceeds so far as may be necessary to pay his claim as against the taxes assessed against the mortgagor, where the taxes are not decleared by statute to be a lien on personalty. Maish v. Bird (1884) 23 Fed. Rep. 180.

And a tax assessed against the capital stock of a corporation, which is sought to be charged by the collector against a parcel of its real estate after it had given and recorded a trust deed thereof, is a personal property tax which does not become a lien on realty until the collector upon failure to collect from the personalty has charged it thereon, and is a subsequent lien to such trust deed and not entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of sale thereof under such deed. Parsons v. East St. Louis Gas Light & Coke Co. (1884) 108 Ill. 380.

Nor are taxes assessed upon real estate subsequent in point of time to a mortgage upon the same premises entitled to priority of payment over the mortgage out of the proceeds of sale upon foreclosure of the mortgage where the legislature has not given preference to the lien for taxes over other liens. Gormley's App. (1856) 27 Pa. 49.

And a mortgage made by a collector of revenue to his surety on his official bond to secure him against liability thereon and on existing and future indorsements for the mortgagor, is valid and effectual as against the claim of the United States on such bond, though he could not pay all his debts when the mortgage was given and the mortgagee knew he was largely indebted to the United States. United States v. Hooe (1805) 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 73, 2 L. ed. 370.

New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young (1890) 10 L. R. A. 473, 51 Iowa, 732, holds that the lien for personal property taxes imposed upon real estate by Iowa Code, section 865, providing that taxes due from any person on personal property shall be a lien upon any real estate owned by him, is superior to liens of individuals previously acquired upon such real estate, and that such taxes assessed against a mortgagor of lands after foreclosure sale thereof are a lien on the mortgaged lands.

But this case was squarely overruled by the principal case.

So, property of a national bank organized under the Act of June 8, 1864, cannot be subjected to a claim for a tax which was levied after the bank became insolvent and which was not a lien upon that particular property but a mere debt of the bank at the time of the appointment of a receiver, as against the claim of such receiver subsequently appointed. Woodward v. Ellsworth (1879) 4 Colo. 580.

But the delivery of the tax warrant binds the property of the taxpayer when followed by a levy and takes precedence over an execution subsequently issued though first levied. Evans v. Walsh (1879) 41 N. J. L. 281, 32 Am. Rep. 201.

And the lien acquired by the state by the issue of a warrant for taxes takes precedence over the equitable claims of the creditors of a corporation where its property is subsequently brought into the custody of the law. Re Columbian Ins. Co. (1865) 3 Abb. App. Dec. 239, 3 Keyes, 123.

Where taxes are regarded as a lien upon the property of the taxpayer, or are made so by statute, however, the nature and extent of the right of the state to priority of payment are governed by the character of the lien.

Thus it was held that the payment of taxes must of necessity be a paramount obligation, taking precedence over all private contracts between individuals, in Butler v. Baily (1800) 2 Bay, 244; Jack v. Wenneck (1855) 115 Ill. 105, 55 Am. Rep. 129.

And that a state has, in her sovereign capacity, a prior lien on all her realty for taxes which may be enforced to the prejudice of any claim due by her citizens whenever acquired, in Re Brand (1889) 3 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 324.

And that a claim of a county for taxes is entitled to priority over individual debts and is a charge upon the property without reference to ownership, and that it may be seized and sold though there are prior liens and incumbrances upon it, in Dunlap v. Gallatin County (1853) 15 Ill. 7.

So a tax laid upon real estate for the purpose of opening or improving a street in the city of New that the facts stated do not entitle plaintiff to the relief demanded, and defendant W. W. Clark further alleging that if, upon the facts stated, defendant is liable to plaintiff for said taxes, plaintiff has a complete and adequate remedy at law. The district court having sustained the demurrers, plaintiff elected to stand upon her petition as amended, and from the rulings on the demurrers and the judgment dismissing her petition and for costs, she brings this appeal.

2. Our statute provides that "taxes upon real property are hereby made a perpetual lien thereon against all persons except the United States and this state; and taxes due from any person upon personal property shall be a lien upon any real property owned by such person, or to which he may acquire a title, and the treasurer is authorized and directed to collect the delinquent taxes by the sale of any property upon which the taxes are levied, or any other personal or real property belonging to the person to whom the taxes are assessed. Code, § 865. The taxes in controversy were assessed on personalty of the firm of W. W. Clark & Co. The real estate sought to be holden for said taxes, and which was sold therefor, had been deeded by one M. W. Bibbins to W. W. Clark, a member of said firm. It is claimed that, as the taxes were assessed against the firm on its property, and as the lots had been deeded to Clark individually, the case is not within the statute above quoted, which makes taxes "due from any person a lien upon any property owned by such person;" that in fact the owner of the property and the person from whom the taxes are due are not the same. The question thus presented is, May taxes assessed against a firm on its personal property become a lien on the individual real estate of a partner? While it is true that taxes assessed on firm property are a demand against the partnership as such, they are also a demand against each member of the copartnership. Each copartner is liable individually for the firm debts and obligations, and these include taxes. These taxes, being due from Clark York takes preference under 2 N. Y. Rev. Laws, p. 420, § 186, p. 442, § 259, over a prior mortgage, being itself equivalent to a senior mortgage or judgment. Dale v. McEvers (1828) 2 Cow. 118.

And in Butler v. Bally (1800) 2 Bay, 244, it was held that a claim for delinquent taxes due the state is entitled to priority in payment over a judgment against the tax-debtor out of the proceeds of a sale of his lands under execution issued on such judgment.

And that a lien for taxes is not displaced by a pre-existing judgment or decree, and a purchaser at a mortgage sale cannot withhold any of the moneys derived therefrom to pay taxes then a lien on the property sold unless authorized to do so by the terms of the sale, was held in Osterberg v. Union Trust Co. of New York (1876) 98 U. S. 423, 23 L. ed. 964.

So in Jenkins v. Newman (1889) 122 Ind. 99, it was held that a tax lien upon which a decree of foreclosure has been rendered is superior to a judgment lien.

And money of a debtor in the hands of the sheriff will be directed to be paid in satisfaction of an execution against such debtor for taxes held by the sheriff under Georgia Act of 1804, section 14, providing that the taxes thereby imposed shall be preferred to all securities and incumbrances whatever, in preference to a senior f. fa. in favor of individuals in his hands, the dates of the contending claims not being material. State v. Pemberton (1831) Dudley (Ga.) 15.

And where lands held by one person as trustee of the legal title for the use of another are sold to a third person, and subsequently sold at sheriff's sale under a judgment against the person for whose benefit they were formerly held for the purpose of questioning the title of the purchaser, who perfected his title by purchasing at the sheriff's sale, taxes assessed against the judgment debtor while the lands were in the hands of the trustee are entitled, under Pennsylvania Act of February 8, 1824, making taxes a lien having priority over judgments, to be first paid out of the proceeds of the sheriff's sale before payment of the judgment, though the judgment debtor never had any title to the land, either legal or equitable, in his own name. Dungan's App. (1879) 88 Pa. 414.

So a claim of the commonwealth against a surety of a defaulting collector of duties is a paramount claim upon the proceeds of his lands sold under a decree of the orphan's court, over a mortgage 29 L. R. A.

subsequently executed and the claims of other creditors, under Pennsylvania Act of May 30, 1811, providing that the amount of balances settled agreeably to that act, due the commonwealth, shall be a lien on the real estate of the persons indebted and their sureties from the date of the settlement. Forney v. Com. (1849) 10 Pa. 405.

And a claim of the United States for an unpaid tax on distilled spirits is entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of a sheriff's sale under execution on a judgment in favor of a third person, of property used in the distillery and in distilling, over a claim of the landlord of the distiller for rent, under the Act of Congress of July 20, 1868 (15 Stat. at L. 126, § 1) making such tax a first lien upon the spirits distilled and the stills, vessels, fixtures, and tools therein. Dungan's App. (1871) 68 Pa. 204, 8 Am. Rep. 169.

So an assessment for paving, imposed under Pennsylvania Act of February 8, 1824, relating to taxes on real estate in the city and county of Philadelphia giving priority over all other obligations or responsibilities, is superior to a mechanic's lien and is entitled to priority of payment out of the lands to which the liens attached under a condemnation expropiation over claims of mechanics and materialmen and judgment creditors. Pennock v. Hoover (1835) 5 Rawle, 291.

But a county tax in order to have priority over a real estate mortgage under Delaware Statute of March 15, 1875, providing that a state or county tax shall be paramount to all other liens, must have been levied upon the mortgaged real estate before its conversion into personalty by a sale under the mortgage. Rhoads v. Given (1876) 5 Houst. (Del.) 183.

And a municipal lien filed by the city of Pittsburgh for grading and paving is not entitled to priority of payment out of the proceeds of a sale of real estate of the tax debtor over a mortgage of a prior date and record, under Pennsylvania Act of February 8, 1824, applicable to Philadelphia and subsequently extended to Allegheny county, as the Act of April 18, 1857, with the supplementary Act of April 22, 1868, relating to setting curbstones and raising sidewalks therein, provides an entirely different system of procedure and makes no provision for priority. Pittsburgh's App. (1861) 40 Pa. 455.

So a tax lien, under Conn. Gen. Stat., § 3890, providing that the estate of any person in any portion of real estate which is by law set in his list for tax-as a copartner as well as from the firm, would become a lien upon his real estate. See Chapin v. Streeter, 124 U. S. 360, 31 L. ed. 475.

3. It is conceded by counsel that the facts in this case present for our determination the same question as that involved in the case New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young, 81 Iowa, 732, 10 L. R. A. 478. It was there held that taxes on personal property which became a lien upon mortgaged real estate after foreclosure and sale of the mortgaged premises, and prior to the expiration of the period of redemption, were a lien superior to any right acquired by the holders of the mortgage by virtue of the foreclosure and sale of the property. On a rehearing, the majority of the court as then constituted adhered to the doctrine announced in the original opinion, Justices Granger and Robinson dissenting. The writer, who has since become a member of the court, while appreciating the importance of the question presented, and being fully impressed with the necessity of adhering to established precedents, is nevertheless unable to concur in the opinion of the majority of the court as then constituted in so far as it relates to the priority of liens. Taxes become liens by virtue of statute only, and, when created, the lien is not to be enlarged by judicial construction. Cooley, Taxn. 444; Desty, Taxn. p. 784; Jaffray v. Anderson, 66 Iowa, 719; New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young, 81 Iowa, 732, 10 L. R. A. 478. Now, our statute does not provide, either expressly or by implication, that taxes due upon personal property shall be a lien upon real estate owned by such person, superior to any lien then existing thereon. It simply says, as to such taxes, they shall be a lien upon any real estate he owns, or which he may afterwards acquire. To hold that a mere statutory creation of a lien upon real estate, without more, is equivalent to, and to be construed as, creating a lien superior to existing liens thereon, is, as it seems to us, not only overriding all rules of construction, but it is inconsistent with our ation shall be subject to a lien for that part of his taxes which is laid upon the valuation of said real estate as found in said list when finally completed, has priority over a mortgage upon lands of the person taxed so far as the valuation of that particular tract is concerned only and not with reference to taxes on his other property. Conn. Gen. Stat., § 3899, providing that no real estate incumbered by mortgage shall be sold for the payment of any taxes except the tax laid upon the assessed valuation of such real estate unless the sale is made subject to such mortgage. Meyer v. Burritt (1891) 60 Conn. 117.

VI. Subrogation of persons paying the tax.

The field of priority of payment seems to be confined strictly to the state or municipality imposing the tax, and not to be extended to a third person paying it unless he was compelled by law to do so.

Thus a tax collector who has paid over taxes which were not paid but which were made a lien by statute prior to all others charged upon the premises, for the amount of which the taxpayer confesses judgment in favor of the collector and afterwards dies, has no right of priority over liens against the estate which preceded his judgment; the collector having paid voluntarily, is not subrogated to the rights of the state. Wallace's Estate (1868) 59 Pa. 401.

And the assignee of a mortgagor who pays delinquent taxes upon the mortgaged premises proved by the collector as a preferred claim against the mortgagor's estate after the property has been sold under the mortgage subject to existing liens cannot recover the amount thus paid from the mortgagee. Brown v. Holyoke Water Power Co. (1892) 157 Mass. 280.

So payment of taxes by a lessor upon his own lands occupied by a lessee who had become a bankrupt, under contract to pay all taxes assessed upon the demised premises, does not entitle the lessor to claim the amount of such payment as a preferred debt against the estate of the lessee under section 23 of the Bankruptcy Act. Re Parker & Peck (1872) 6 Ben. 284.

VII. What amounts to a divestiture of the right.

When the receiver of taxes presents claim for personal taxes to the assignee for the benefit of creditors of the insolvent tax debtor and appears before the referee upon the accounting by the assignee he is not entitled to preference over other creditors, but must be regarded as having elected to come in under the assignment, and must be treated as any other creditor in the absence of a preference in his favor. Re De Frece (1898) 6 Misc. 274.

And where lands are sold for city taxes and the purchase moneys brought into court and distributed, the city making no claim for taxes subsequently assessed, it cannot enter a lien against the property and again sell it where the proceeds of the first sale would have been sufficient to pay both, the statute preserving the lien only where the proceeds are insufficient to pay the whole. Smith v. Simpson (1899) 60 Pa. 168.

And where the state fails to assert its right of preference in payment of taxes due it from the estate of an insolvent who has assigned for the benefit of creditors, a mortgagee of lands upon which the taxes are a lien cannot assert it and require the assignee to pay them. Re Lewis (1890) 81 N. Y. 421.

But an assignee in bankruptcy cannot, by a sale of the bankrupt's property, divest the right of a state to enforce payment of her taxes on the property wherever found though the state refused to come into the bankruptcy court and claim them under provisions of the bankrupt law for the payment thereof, no power existing to compel her to do so, or to sell the property free of incumbrances in case of refusal. Stokes v. State (1873) 46 Ga. 412, 12 Am. Rep. 588, 9 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 191.

And the relinquishment by the collector of a distress for taxes upon the goods of a tenant on the premises taxed is not a release of the priority of taxes over mortgages and other incumbrances, so as to postpone the taxes to other incumbrances; though the rule is probably different when the goods distrained are the property of the owner of the estate taxed. Parker's App. (1844) 3 Watts & S. 449.

Nor does a claim of the commonwealth for taxes against the estate of one who has assigned for the benefit of creditors which by Pennsylvania Acts of June 7, 1879, section 14, and of June 1, 1880, § 31, is made a preferred claim to be first allowed before any other claims are paid, lose its preference by reason of noncompliance with the provisions of Pennsylvania Act of April 14, 1837, § 4 (Purdon, Dig. p. 1286) requiring the auditor-general to transmit to the respective counties, to be by them entered of record, certified copies of the liens therefor. Re holding in the construction of other statutes where similar language is employed. The statute provides that judgments of the supreme and district courts of this state "are liens upon the real estate owned by the defendant at the time of such rendition, and also upon all he may subsequently acquire for the period of ten years from the date of the judgment." Code, § 2882. It has never been claimed under that statute that a judgment was thereby made a lien prior to an existing lien upon the real estate of the party. Yet, applying the rule of the majority opinion in the Young Case, it could be said with as much reason as in the case at bar, that the lien thus created by statute was superior to all existing liens against the real estate of the judgment debtor. So it is provided in bastardy proceedings that upon filing the complaint "a lien shall be created upon the real property of the accused," etc. Code, § 4717. Was the claim ever made that such a lien was superior to all others then existing against the land of the accused? In these and other cases which might be cited the language used to give the lien is general, as in the case at bar. In none of them is it said that the lien shall be prior to existing liens, but in each case the priority of the lien is left to be determined by the rules of law applicable to all liens in the absence of special provisions. An examination of our statutes will show that when the legislature has intended to create a lien which should take precedence of existing liens, apt language has been used to express such intention. See Code, § 1558, and chapter 100, Acts 16th Gen. Assm. The section under consideration makes a clear distinction between liens upon real estate for taxes assessed thereon and liens upon real estate for taxes assessed upon personal property. In the former case the lien is "against all persons," and "perpetual;" in the latter it is simply declared that there shall be a lien. Now, in the opinion referred to this language of the statute is so enlarged by construction that in effect the statute is made to say that this lien upon real Goodwin Gas Stove & Meter Co's Assigned Estate (1896) 186 Pa. 290, aff'g (1894) 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 483, 15 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 65.

Nor is a claim against the surety of a defaulting collector lost by such noncompliance. Forney v. Com. (1849) 10 Pa. 409.

And the prior lien given to all city and county taxes in Allegheny city and county upon real estate upon which taxes are assessed, by Pennsylvania Acts of April 5, 1844, and February 27, 1860, is not lost by the default of the collector in not making the taxes out of the personal property found on the premises during the life of the warrant, so as to postpone the taxes to a mortgage and entitle it to be first paid out of the proceeds of a sale thereunder.) Germania Sav. Bank's App. (1879) 91 Pa. 345.

But municipal liens for taxes are cut off by a judicial sale under Pennsylvania Act of January 6, 1864, § 12, relating to municipal liens in Pittsburgh where enough is realized to pay them, and they are to be paid from the proceeds in preference to prior liens. Pittsburg's App. (1871) 70 Pa. 142.

And the prior lien of municipal taxes in the city of Allegheny, given by Pennsylvania Act of February 27, 1860, is devested by a sale of the lands upon which they are assessed by foreclosure of a prior mortgage, and the lien creditors are remitted to the proceeds of sale for payment of their respective claims. Shaw v. Allegheny (1897) 115 Pa. 44.

But though property upon which a tax due the United States is a prior lien which is sold under process of a state court does not pass to the purchaser subject to such lien, the lien attaches to the proceeds of the sale and is to be first paid and satisfied therefrom. Dungan's App. (1871) 68 Pa. 304, 8 Am. Rep. 168.

A city tax, however, the lien of which attaches to land of the person assessed, cannot, upon the subsequent transfer, and its sale by the sheriff as the property of the vendee under a judgment for the purchase price, be satisfied out of the proceeds of such sheriff's sale as the lien of the tax attached to all the vendor originally had and was not devested by the subsequent transactions, while the lien of the judgment attached to what the vendee acquired only. Freeman v. Atlanta (1881) 66 Ga. 617.

The question whether the right to prior payment of taxes is devested by an assignment for the benefit of creditors has been differently decided. It is thought, however, that the question as to the existence of a lien for the tax is controlling upon the question of divestiture.

29 L. R. A.

Thus in State v. Rowse (1873) 49 Mo. 586, it was held that the state has a right in the nature of an equitable lien on the property of a taxpayer for the payment of taxes on personal property which is not discharged by an assignment of the property of the taxpayer for the benefit of creditors.

And in Wright v. Wigton (1877) 84 Pa. 163, it was held that an assignment for the benefit of creditors does not exempt real estate assigned from liability for taxes assessed upon it, whether imposed before or after the assignment.

And in Cones v. Wilson (1860) 14 Ind. 465, it was held that the assignment of property to trustees for the payment of debts is not such a transfer as will divest the lien of the state thereon for taxes.

And that an assignment for the benefit of creditors does not constitute such a change of possession of personal property remaining on the lands included in the assignment as to exempt it from liability to seizure for taxes assessed upon such lands, was held in Wright v. Wigton, supra.

And that creditors in case of assignment under the Illinois insolvency laws were held not to acquire such vested rights in the property assigned that it could not be thereafter taken or appropriated for the payment of taxes levied before the assignment but which had not then become a lien upon the property assigned, in Jack v. Welsch (1885) 115 Ill. 105, 56 Am. Rep. 129.

And that payment by preference out of the proceeds of an insolvent's movable property of taxes on personalty was held rightfully ordered when proceeds of his real estate were not included therein, and that, there being no legislation requiring registration to secure a lien for the payment of taxes on personal property, the lien existed independent of registration, in Mullan v. His Creditors (1887) 89 La. Ann. 897.

So a water tax made a lien by statute upon the property, upon which it is assessed, imposed upon lands in the hands of an assignee in bankruptcy, should be paid in full by the assignee when he has sufficient funds in his hands as a part of the proper expenses of his administration of the estate. Re Moller (1876) 8 Ben. 528, affirmed (1877) 14 Blatchf. 207.

And taxes in New York where they are made a personal debt of the owner of the premises against which they are assessed collectible out of his property, laid before the commencement of proceedings in bankruptcy against such owner, should be paid in full by the assignee in bankruptcy when he has estate for personal taxes shall be superior to all other liens then existing against said real estate. The statute does not say so, the legislature has not so declared, nor can any such result be reached by applying to this provision of the statute the same rule of construction applied to like language used elsewhere in the code. Why should a special rule of construction be created for this particular statute? What reason is there for saying that this provision, simply creating a lien, means more than it says? In the Young Case it is said in the majority opinion: "It is a general principle in our system of taxation that when taxes are made a lien upon real estate they become prior and superior to all mortgage or judgment liens." As to taxes assessed against personalty and by statute made a lien upon realty, without provisions for priority, the above statement, in our judgment, finds no support in the authorities. Touching this question, the supreme court of South Dakota, in the recent case of Miller v. Anderson, 1 S. Dak. 589, 11 L. R. A. 317, said: "But, reading the entire section 1613 together, it is inexplicable to us why, if the legislature intended to put both real and personal taxes on a common footing, and make them both liens to the same extent and of the same rank, they should not have used terms at least suggestive of such intent. If by force of a general principle, as stated in the majority opinion of the supreme court of Iowa, hereinafter referred to, the lien declared was necessarily a first one, why was it not as safe to rely upon that principle in the case of real estate taxes as in the case of personal property taxes? As to the former, sufficient funds in his hands, and not be charged against the proceeds of a sale of the property under a prior mortgage. Ibid.

And Iowa Laws of 1876, chap. 14, providing that assessments or taxes shall be entitled to priority or preference and be first paid in full, charges an assignee for the benefit of creditors with the duty to pay taxes levied against the debtor to the extent of the property coming to his hands, though no levy had been made and no claim filed or demand made. Hulscamp Bros. v. Albert (1888) 60 Iowa, 421.

The right of the state to priority of payment of taxes is defeated, however, by a bona fide transfer of his property by the taxpayer before it attaches, when the tax is not a lien thereon. Anderson v. State (1852) 23 Miss. 459; Bailey v. Fuqua (1852) 24 Miss. 497.

And the property of a national bank organized under the Act of June 8, 1864, cannot be subjected to a claim for a tax which was a mere personal debt of the bank and not a lien upon the property sought to be subjected at the time the bank became insolvent and a receiver was appointed as against the claim of such receiver. Woodward v. Ellsworth (1879) 4 Colo. 580.

And in Lyon v. Guthard (1883) 52 Mich. 271, it was held that in Michigan there is no law making personal taxes a lien until a levy is made, and a personal tax upon which no levy has been made, against one who has made a valid assignment for the benefit of creditors cannot be satisfied from the stock in the hands of the assignee upon any terms other than those to which other creditors are entitled, as to permit the seizure of such property would be to permit the property of one to be taken to pay the tax of another.

And in Re Ranger (1893) 6 Misc. 274, it was held that a claim for personal taxes against an assignor for the benefit of creditors is not entitled to preference over other claims filed with the assignee where it is not preferred in the assignment and its priority is not provided for by statute.

So it was held that taxes imposed under the laws of the state of New York upon real estate will not be required to be paid in case of an assignment by the taxpayer for the benefit of creditors in preference to the private creditors of the assignor where they are not preferred in the assignment and the taxes are not claimed out of the particular real estate upon which they are imposed, in Re Lewis (1880) 9 Daly, 220.

And that the court has no power to direct an assignee for the benefit of creditors to pay taxes on lands included in the property assigned in preference to other debts of the assignor where the assignment contained no provision with relation to the taxes except as they were included in the general unpreferred debts the authority of the assignor.

signee and the control of the court over him being limited by the express terms of the assignment, in Re Lewis (1880) 81 N. Y. 421.

In Re Lewis (1880) 9 Daly, 220, the court drew a distinction between cases of distribution under the bankruptcy laws and by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, saying that in the one case the distribution is made by law, taking all discretion in the matter away from the debtor; in the other case the distribution is made according to the will of the debtor as expressed in the deed of assignment.

VIII. Enforcement of the right.

The state is not bound to wait until the estate of an insolvent in the hands of trustees is administered for the collection of a claim for taxes and then participate in the distribution of the proceeds but may at once enforce payment to the exclusion of all other creditors. Dunlap v. Gallatin County (1858) 15 Ill. 7.

Formal proof of debt in respect to claims for taxes and water rates against a bankrupt estate is not necessary. Re Moller (1876) 8 Ben. 523, affirmed (1877) 14 Blatchf. 207; Hulscamp Bros. v. Albert (1883) 60 Iowa, 421.

And town and school taxes are a preferred claim against an insolvent estate of a deceased person under the Maine statute which need not be presented to or proved before commissioners of insolvency, but may be recovered in an action of debt against the administrator without presentment. Bulfinch v. Benner (1874) 64 Me. 407.

So a city, which has a privilege for the payment of taxes upon the property of a succession which is sold by order of the court of probate, may make direct claim for the sum due out of the proceeds of sale in the hands of the executors for distribution, such sale transferring the privilege from the property to the proceeds. Dupuy's Succession (1881) 33 La. Ann. 258.

And when the tax is a prior lien the register in bankruptcy may direct the payment of debts due the state and all taxes and assessments made under her laws out of the bankrupt taxpayer's estate to the prejudice of a creditor having a prior lien. Re Brand (1869) 8 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 324.

So the duty is charged upon an assignee for the benefit of creditors by Iowa Laws of 1876, chapter 14, providing that assessments or taxes shall be entitled to priority or preference and be first paid in full, to pay taxes levied against the debtor to the extent of the property coming into his hands though no levy of the taxes had been made on the goods and no claim had been filed for the taxes against the assignee, or demand made. Hulscamp Bros. v. Albert (1888) 60 Iowa, 421.

And the right of the state in the nature of an equitable lien upon the property of the taxpayer they were careful to state that the lien was 'against all persons;' thus definitely fixing its rank as a lien; and then, in direct contradistinction as to personal property taxes, they provide that they shall simply be a lien. Gathering the meaning and intent of this act from its language, (and this is a primary rule of construction), we conclude that that part of said section 1613 which relates to personal property taxes gives a lien for the same to the tax creditor from the time they became due upon any real property then owned or subsequently acquired by the tax debtor, subject, however, as in case of other liens created by law, to general statutes governing questions of priority or rank." A majority of the court as now constituted is in full accord with the views expressed by Mr. Justice Granger in his dissenting opinion in the Young Case.

for the payment of taxes upon personal property may be enforced after an assignment by the taxpayer for the benefit of creditors, by the seizure and sale of property in the hands of the assignee under Wagner's Mo. Stat., 1188, section 23, authorizing such seizure and sale of the property of the person liable for the taxes, it being regarded for such purpose as the property of the assignor. State v. Rowse (1872) 49 Mo. 586.

Likewise the state having a paramount right to collect taxes imposed upon a railroad company under the New York corporation tax act out of moneys in the hands of a receiver thereof appointed by the court is not confined to the proceeds provided by that act for their collection, but may make a direct application for an order requiring the receiver to pay in the foreclosure proceeding in which he was appointed, making the corporation and the receiver parties. Central Trust Co. v. New York City & N. R. Co. (1888) (N. Y.) 18 Cent. Rep. 404.

And when a railroad corporation liable to taxation under the New York corporation tax act is operated under the corporate franchise by a receiver appointed by the court, and he has in his hands money arising from the gross earnings sufficient to pay the taxes accrued under that act, the state has a paramount right to collect such taxes from such money. Ibid.

And the state has a right paramount to other creditors under Missouri Acts 1881, § 7, p. 180, to be paid taxes due out of the assets in the hands of a receiver of the taxpayer, and the court should see that such taxes are paid before distribution to other creditors though the demand therefor was not presented by the collector within the time prescribed for the presentment of claims. Greeley v. Provident Sav. Bank (1889) 98 Mo. 458.

So N. Y. Rev. Stat., 7th ed. 2298, § 27, making taxes assessed upon the estate of a deceased person previous to his death a preferred claim against his estate in the second order of preference, furnishes the rule by which personal representations must be governed in ascertaining and paying the debts of the deceased. Re Babcock (1889) 115 N. Y. 450.

And executors and administrators are held under Maryland Code, art. 81, § 72, making taxes a preferred claim, as affected with notice of all taxes due upon all the property in their custody; and it is their legal duty to ascertain and discharge the same, next after funeral expenses, before proceeding to the further administration of the estate. Bonaparte v. State (1885) 68 Md. 465.

And demands for taxes due the state preferred in the distribution of the estate of a decedent under Maryland Code, art. 81, § 72, are not within the jurisdiction of the orphan's court, the scrutiny and approval of which is a safeguard applicable and

The writer has given this question a careful investigation, and is convinced that the rule of the majority opinion in the Young Case is wrong, and that by it the letter and spirit of the statute is unwarrantably extended by judicial construction, to the great detriment of other lien holders, and an effect given to that part of the statute never contemplated by the legislature. All the statute provides as to personal tax being a lien upon real estate is that it shall be a lien, and as such it must be held to come within the general rule that its priority is to be determined as of the time the lien attached. In view of the very full discussion of this question in the Young Case we need not say more. The mortgage lien of plaintiff, having attached to the lots prior to the time the taxes on the personality became a lien thereon, must be held to be appropriate to claims essentially of a private nature. Ibid.

Taxes required by Maryland Code, art. 81, § 72, to be paid by administrators as preferred debts to the exclusion of all others except necessary funeral expenses are not within the purview of Maryland Code, art. 98, § 108, relieving the administrator from liability for a claim of which he had no notice exhibited after he had paid away and distributed the estate according to law, or section 117 thereof providing that he is not bound to take notice of claims unless they are exhibited legally authenticated or unless allowed by the orphan's court, or unless suit is pending thereon, or section 98 thereof providing that no administrator shall be allowed in his account for any claim discharged by him unless he produce the claim passed by the orphan's court or proven as therein directed, or section 83 thereof providing the method of proof of debts and forbidding the discharge of any claims unless passed upon in the prescribed manner. Ibid.

And where property subject to a lien for a tax due the United States to which priority is given is sold under process issued from a state court, that court will distribute the proceeds and recognize the priority of the claim of the United States. Dungan's App. (1871) 68 Pa. 204, 8 Am. Rep. 169.

So Mo. Rev. Stat., § 6758, providing for the collection of taxes on personality by distraint, and section 6886, providing for the collection of taxes on realty by action, do not prevent the presentment of tax bills for allowance in probate court in the third class under Mo. Rev. Stat., § 184, providing for the presentment of all debts including taxes due the state or any county or incorporated city or town. State v. Donaldson (1887) 28 Mo. App. 190.

And that a tax is not a debt in the legal sense of the term does not prevent its presentment for allowance in probate court against the estate of a deceased person in class three, under Mo. Rev. Stat., § 184, providing for the division of all demands against estates, class three expressly including taxes due the state, a county, or an incorporated city or town. Ibid.

Nor is a tax a debt,—an action for the collection of which can be stayed pending proceeding in bankruptcy against the taxpayer under section 5106 of the Bankruptcy Act, providing that no creditor whose debt is provable shall be allowed to prosecute suit thereon to final judgment. Re Duryee (1880) 2 Fed. Rep. 68.

Where the dissolution of a corporation has been adjudged the intervention of the attorney-general to enforce the right of the state to priority in the payment of taxes due it out of the assets is unnecessary. Re Columbian Ins. Co. (1889) 8 Abb. App. Dec. 239, 8 Keyes, 123.

F. H. B.

superior to the tax lien. The case of New England Loan & T. Co. v. Young, heretofore referred to, in so far as it holds that taxes assessed against personal property, and which become a lien upon real estate, are a lien thereon prior and superior to existing liens thereon, must be and is overruled.

4. Can the plaintiff recover from the county the amount of taxes paid, with interest thereon? Plaintiff seems to base her right to recover upon section 870 of the Code. That section provides: "The board of supervisors shall direct the treasurer to refund to the taxpayer any tax, or any portion of a tax, found to have been erroneously or illegally exacted, or paid, with all interest and costs actually paid thereon, and in case any real property subject to taxation shall be sold for the payment of such erroneous tax, interest, or costs as above mentioned, the error or irregularity in the tax may at any time be corrected as above provided, and shall not affect the validity of the sale, or the right or title conveyed by the treasurer's deed, if the property was subject to taxation for any of the purposes for which any portion of the taxes for which the land was sold was levied, and the taxes were not paid before the sale, and the property had not been redeemed from sale." If it be conceded that plaintiff's case is within the provisions of this statute, still she cannot recover as against Polk county. The demurrer is the one usually interposed in equitable actions, and by it the sufficiency of the facts stated to constitute a cause of action against the county are questioned. Under our statute, before one holding an unliquidated demand against a county can sue thereon, he must present the same to the board of supervisors of the county and demand payment thereof. This is preliminary to his right to prosecute an action against the county. It is not alleged in the bill in this case that this claim was ever presented to the board of supervisors, and payment demanded. Code, § 2610. If we treat the claim for a refunding as a liquidated claim or demand against the county, then it seems to us under the wording of Code, § 870, heretofore quoted, it must be presented for allowance to the board before suit can be instituted. It says the board of supervisors shall direct the treasurer to refund, etc. Clearly the statute contemplates that the board shall have an opportunity to refund without suit, and without being compelled to pay further costs incident to litigation, which they might be willing to avoid by refunding if they were asked so to do before an action was commenced. Here is a party claiming a refunding of certain money paid in redemption from tax sale. It is reasonable that the board should have an opportunity to pass upon the justness of his demand before the county can be put to the payment of costs. Brownlee v. Marion County, 58 Iowa, 488; Dickey v. Polk County, 58 Iowa, 289; Richards v. Wapello County, 48 Iowa, 510.

5. Is plaintiff entitled to a judgment against the other defendants? It was the duty of these defendants to pay these taxes, and, as we have held in another division of this opinion, that duty rested upon them as a copartnership and also as individuals. Plaintiff redeemed from a tax sale of the real estate for these taxes, being compelled to do so to protect her interest in the land, and to procure an extension of the insurance company's mortgage on the premises which was prior to her own mortgage. The case is peculiar. As to all these defendants (except W. W. Clark) we discover nothing from which we can say that a promise or contract to refund the amount paid by plaintiff can be inferred. They were under no obligations to the plaintiff to pay these taxes, only in so far as that as good citizens it was their duty to do so. The taxes were not assessed against this land. The title to the land was not in dispute. No benefit was conferred upon their title because plaintiff made redemption, for they claimed no title to the land. The only conceivable benefit of the redemption to them was that thereby an obligation due from them to the government was discharged. If one could make another his debtor by simply paying his debt, then justice would require that these defendants should be held liable to plaintiff for the amount of their debt which she has paid. But it is said that one cannot thus make another his debtor without the latter's request or consent. Iowa Homestead Co. v. Des Moines Nas. & R. Co. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 166, 21 L. ed. 638; Garrigan v. Knight, 47 Iowa, 527. The case is unlike Goodnow v. Stryker, 61 Iowa, 261, or any other called to our attention, for the reasons above given. So far as these defendants (except W. W. Clark) are concerned, there is no obligation resting upon them to reimburse plaintiff for the amount paid by her in redemption of these lots.

6. It seems to us that W. W. Clark is impliedly bound to reimburse the plaintiff for the amount she has expended in redeeming these lots from tax sale with interest and costs. He knew these taxes were unpaid. He knew that they would in time become a lien upon these lots. The payment of these taxes, as we have said, was a matter of necessity for plaintiff in order to preserve her lien. It was in no sense a voluntary payment. In these taxes she was not meddling with that which did not concern her. Clark was the owner of the lots. He owed it to the state and county to pay these taxes. As a mortgagor of plaintiff's assignor, he ought not to be permitted to take advantage of his own negligence in failing to pay these taxes, which were outstanding when he executed the purchase money mortgage, and which, although technically not liens against the lots at the time that mortgage was executed, were nevertheless claims against Clark which would ripen into liens in due time, impairing the value of the security he had given plaintiff.

We think, under all the facts of this case, plaintiff should recover from Clark. It is said that, even if plaintiff is entitled to recover of Clark, she has adopted the wrong kind of proceedings; that she should have brought her action at law. That question cannot be raised by demurrer. Having failed to move to transfer the cause to the proper side of the calendar in the court below, defendants have waived the error, if any, in the form of the proceedings. Code, § 2519. The court erred in sustaining the demurrer of the defendant W. W. Clark, and for that reason the decision below is reversed.

Given and Rothrock, JJ., dissent as to third division of opinion.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Martin V. MONTGOMERY, Admr., etc., of John O. Grinnell, Deceased,

LANSING CITY ELECTRIC R. CO., Plff. in Err.

(....Mich.....)

1. Whether or not a motorman used due care is a question for the jury where with his lever in next to the fastest notch until within a few feet of it he overtook a band playing while parading the streets knowing that some of the men were in close proximity to the track.
2. The negligence of a bandman in walking close to an electric railway track while playing his instrument cannot as a matter of law be said to be the proximate cause of his injury by a car overtaking him where the evidence would justify a finding that the motorman was guilty of reckless and wanton conduct as to the speed with which he approached the band.
3. Permanent lung trouble need not be specifically alleged to admit proof of it in an action for damages for personal injuries if the injuries are alleged to be permanent and the evidence shows that the lung trouble would probably result from the injury received.

(December 12, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Ingham County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by defendant's negligence from the effects of which the injured person subsequently died. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Moore & Moore, with Messrs. Smith, Lee & Day, for appellant:

There was no evidence to go to the jury, upon the subject of gross negligence.

Denman v. Johnston, 85 Mich. 387; Schindler v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 87 Mich. 400; Frost v. Milwaukee & N. R. Co. 96 Mich. 470; Cooley, Torts, 2d ed. p. 811; Belt R. & Stock Yard Co. v. Mann, 107 Ind. 89; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Bryan, Id. 51; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Ader, 110 Ind. 376.

It was the duty of the plaintiff under the circumstances to look out for this car. The rule requires the same diligence in this regard, as it does for people about to cross a railroad track.

NOTE.—The question of negligence in running a street-car which strikes and injures a person on the street has been treated, so far as it relates to injuries to children, in a note to Wallace v. City & Suburban R. Co. (Or.) 25 L. R. A. 668.

As to collision of street-car with vehicles or horses, see note to Hicks v. Citizens R. Co. (Mo.) 25 L. R. A. 508.

39 L. R. A.

Carson v. Federal Street & P. V. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 257, 147 Pa. 219; Ehrisman v. East Harrisburg City Pass. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 448, 150 Pa. 180.

This being the clear duty of the plaintiff, the motorman had a right to assume that he would get out of danger had he seen him.

Noyes v. Southern Pac. R. Co. (Cal.) 24 Pac. Rep. 927.

He should not have been permitted to recover for the injury to his lung, without having averred it in his declaration, so that the defendant might have been prepared to meet such a claim.

Shaddock v. Alpine Pl. Road Co. 79 Mich. 7; Wilkinson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Works, 73 Mich. 405; Kuhn v. Freund, 87 Mich. 545; Thompson v. Quincy, 10 L. R. A. 784, 88 Mich. 178; Palmer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 636, 93 Mich. 368; Finn v. Adrian, 93 Mich. 504; Fuller v. Jackson, 93 Mich. 197.

Messrs. M. V. Montgomery and R. A. Montgomery for appellee.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

May 23, 1893, John O. Grinnell, the deceased, and eight others, constituting the Frank Tucker Theatrical Company, were engaged in giving a street parade in Lansing. They had gone to North Lansing, and had returned on a street-car, getting off the car a few blocks below Michigan avenue, where the car stopped. They passed ahead of this car, four walking on one side of the car track, single file, about six feet apart; the others walking on the other side of the track, in the same order. Mr. Grinnell was on the east side, and near the track. Six were ahead of him, each playing a wind instrument, and two behind him playing snare and bass drums. He was playing a cornet. The car from which they alighted followed soon after, and overtook them just as they reached Michigan avenue. The platform of the car passed Grinnell, but the body of the car struck him on the shoulder, knocking him down. Mr. Grinnell on the trial testified: "I was very near the car track, but not between the rails. I remember something striking me. I heard nothing; heard no bell indicating any warning. I recollect something struck me, and after that the first thing I knew I was on my feet, and people were holding me up. I was struck about the point of the right shoulder blade, and knew that I was hurt when I first came to my senses. They took me to the hotel. Two of my teeth were loose, beside one that was knocked out. After getting to the hotel, while being confined there, I noticed the injury to my back, my arm, and my right side, and slight injury to my right hip.

I got hurt on Monday, and got out on Friday. Before leaving the hotel I noticed a sore spot on my right chest, perhaps two or three days after the accident. It was followed by spitting of blood. I never had anything of the kind before. This spitting of blood continued for about two weeks. At the end of two weeks, or perhaps a little longer, I had a dry cough started,—hacking cough,—and I have had it ever since up to about five weeks ago, and from that time until now I have been coughing very bad, and it is growing worse all the time. When I was hurt I weighed one hundred and thirty-two pounds; now I weigh one hundred and nine pounds. Aside from whooping cough and scarlet fever, which I had when quite small, I have never been sick." He was asked: "State to the jury whether you were thinking about or looking out for any indication that the car was coming. A. Yes, sir; I always did, because I always had to work so close to the track. I was playing at the moment I was hurt. I thought I was far enough from the track to be out of the way. I was looking out for the car, and was positive that I would hear a signal, if there was any near." On further examination, Grinnell testified that he knew the car could not pass without hitting him, but that he was looking out for it, and had no doubt that he could hear the bell and get out of the way. Some considerable testimony was given tending to show that no bell was rung or other warning given when the car approached Michigan avenue, where the accident happened, and there was testimony also that the car was running at a rate of speed greater than usual, and that it did not slow down when it reached Michigan avenue. Just what rate of speed it was going plaintiff's witnesses do not state, but many of them say that it was faster than the car usually ran, and some say it was running rapidly. One witness testified that he had been in the employ of the defendant company before that time. He noticed the car approaching the band, and, when within half a car length of Grinnell, he noticed the lever in the fourth notch,—that is, next to the last notch,—the last notch giving the car the fastest speed it could attain, and that no bell was sounded. Both the motorman and the conductor, as well as others, testified that the bell was sounded, and that they were going slow, the motorman saying, "Not more than three miles an hour." The conductor testified, further, that his orders were to slow down at the Michigan avenue crossing. The motorman testified that a high wind was blowing from the west, and, as he saw the members of the band ahead of him, his attention was directed to the man carrying the bass drum, as he feared he would be blown upon the track. He saw Grinnell. Saw him brace up against the wind, but did not pay so much attention to those on the east side, as he was afraid the wind would carry those on the west side onto the track. He says that when about five or six feet from Grinnell he saw him. He was walking along blowing his horn, and as the wind came down Michigan avenue he leaned over to protect himself against it, and that was the reason the car struck him. If Grinnell had continued to walk the same distance from the track, the car would not have struck him. The motorman denies that the lever was in the fourth notch, and says that he did not have any current on when he crossed Michigan avenue, but that he ran about 84 feet after he struck Grinnell. On his cross-examination he was asked: "Suppose you had run up behind these people carefully and slowly, until you had attracted their attention by your bell, that would not have been a difficult job? A. No, sir."

Under this testimony, the court directed the jury: (1) That Grinnell was guilty of negligence, and "under some circumstances this would prevent a recovery, but in this case it may or may not, as you may determine regarding certain other facts to which I shall call your attention." (2) "The car which struck the plaintiff had that same forenoon carried the band to North Lansing. The same conductor and motorman were in charge. They knew that the band paraded Franklin street. They had brought this band from the Franklin street parade down Washington avenue to Ionia street, and there let the band off. The band from that point had proceeded down Washington avenue, to the knowledge of the street-car men, had passed the street-car in front of the bank, was in plain view of the motorman when the car started, and the motorman knew what the purpose of the plaintiff and the other members of the band was in being on the street. It was not a case where the injured party was supposed to be crossing the street, but it is a case where the motorman in charge of the car knew that the band was parading the street, knew that their backs were toward him, knew the positions of the members of the band, and knew the noise they were making with their instruments. It is sometimes very correctly said that if one discovers another to have been negligent he must take precaution accordingly, omitting which he is liable to the other for the damages which follow from his own want of care; for, however nearly related two separate negligences may be, the one cannot bar an action for the other unless it is contributory, and though an unseen position might contribute to an accident, a discovered one cannot. The plaintiff, Grinnell, was not a trespasser upon the street-car tracks in any sense. The right of the street railway in the street is only to use the street in common with the public. It has no exclusive right of travel, even upon its track; and it is bound to use the same care in preventing a collision as is the driver of a wagon or other vehicle. Street-cars have precedence necessarily in the portion of the way designated for their use. This superior right must be exercised, however, with proper caution and due regard for the rights of others; and the fact that it has a prescribed route does not alter the duty of the defendant to the public, who have a right to travel upon its tracks until met or overtaken by its cars. There is no question made in this case but that the motorman saw this band. He says that he saw the plaintiff, and he says that because of the wind he was watching the man with the bass drum, on the west side of the track. If the plaintiff, Grinnell, and other members of the band, were, or if the plaintiff, Grinnell, alone was, when viewed from the motorman's position on the car, in a place of danger, either on or near the track, it was the duty of the motorman, taking into consideration his knowledge of the situation and of the purpose and intention of the band,—it was the duty of the motorman to run his car with corresponding care, and in a manner reasonably safe under the circumstances, both as to speed and control; and if, under these circumstances and such duty, the motorman intentionally ran his car at what he knew was a high and dangerous rate of speed, not, indeed, intending to injure any one, nor wishing to injure any one, but in reckless disregard of the consequences to the plaintiff and members of the band, and if because thereof the plaintiff was injured, then the company was to blame, and the defendant railway company is liable to the plaintiff for whatever injury it so caused him. If the plaintiff, Grinnell, was not in a place of danger, as viewed from the motorman's position, then the railway company is not liable. If the car was not running at a rate of speed which the motorman knew, or a reasonable man ought to have known, dangerous and improper under the circumstances, the company is not liable. If the company, through its agents and servants, was not wanton and reckless under the circumstances, it is not liable. Whether the company is or is not liable you are to determine. In other words, you are to determine whether or not the plaintiff has shown, by a preponderance of the evidence, that, under the facts and circumstances known to the motorman, and in view of things as they appeared to him, this car was run at a high and dangerous rate of speed, with a reckless or wanton disregard of consequences, and whether the injury was caused thereby. If these things have not been so shown, the defendant is not liable; if they have been so shown, it is liable."

We think this charge justified by the evidence. The motorman knew that the band was ahead of the car. He recognized the danger of those on the west side being blown upon the track. He saw Grinnell, and knew he was in close proximity to the track; heard the band playing, and knew that the noise of the approaching car would be liable to be drowned by the noise of the band; yet, if the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses be true, he did not slacken his speed. He kept the lever in next to the fastest notch, at least until within a few feet of these parties; and the testimony shows the car must have been under considerable speed, as it ran over 80 feet after causing the injury, though the motorman claims to have stopped it as soon as he could after it struck; while if he had had it under control it is plain, from his own testimony, he could have prevented the injury, and if going at the usual speed he could have stopped it within ten or fifteen feet. It was a question for the jury to determine whether he used that care and caution under the circumstances he was bound to exercise, in view of the danger as he must have seen it. Defendant's counsel contend that the evidence establishes the fact that Grinnell's negligence alone caused the accident. We do not think this can be said as a matter of law. There was evidence from which the jury might well find that the motorman was guilty of reckless and wanton conduct in driving his car at a high rate of speed as he approached these people on Michigan avenue. Counsel for defendant cite a long line of cases, holding that one may be guilty of such gross carelessness as to bar recovery; such as driving upon a track in front of an approaching car without looking around until the car runs into the vehicle. Wood v. Detroit City Street R. Co. 52 Mich. 403, 50 Am. Rep. 259; Kelly v. Hendrie, 26 Mich. 255. In Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Campau, 35 Mich. 468, the deceased, walking on a railroad track, stepped out of the way of an approaching train, and was struck by another train from behind; and in Graf v. Chicago & N.W. R. Co., 94 Mich. 579, cars were being shunted onto a siding, and the deceased attempted to pass in front, and was killed. Other cases of like character are cited, but each case cited depended upon its own peculiar facts. It is settled that, when one attempts to cross in front of an approaching train in plain view, he takes his chances of being injured, and cannot complain. In the late case of McGee v. Consolidated Street R. Co., 103 Mich. 107, 26 L. R. A. 300, the plaintiff attempted to cross the street in front of an electric car, and was injured. It was held that he was bound to look for the approach of the car, and, not having looked, he was guilty of such carelessness that he could not recover. In the present case it is conceded that Grinnell was careless, and, but for the gross carelessness of defendant's servants charged in the declaration and proved on the trial, he could not recover. It is quite a different case than where one attempts to cross in front of the car. Here the motorman saw the situation. He apprehended the danger to those in the street, and yet, if plaintiff's testimony be true, he did nothing to avoid the accident. The court, in directing the attention of the jury to this branch of the case, stated the rule as to gross negligence as laid down in Richter v. Harper, 95 Mich. 231. In that case it was said: "It is true that the contributory negligence of the plaintiff does not prevent recovery in a case where the defendant who knows, or ought, by the exercise of the most ordinary care, to have known, of the precedent negligence of the plaintiff, by his subsequent negligence does plaintiff an injury." As stated by Mr. Justice Cooley, in his work on Torts (page 674): "In such cases it may well be said that the negligence of the plaintiff only puts him in position of danger, and was therefore only the remote cause of the injury, while the subsequent intervening negligence of the defendant was the proximate cause." In Hanlon v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 104 Mo. 388, the court, after stating that one going upon the track of a railroad should observe all such precautions for his own safety as reason and prudence dictate, and if disaster comes upon him by reason of a failure to do so he must bear the consequences, says: "This has, however, a qualification which is founded upon principles of humanity, and is universally recognized. This qualification enjoins upon the railroad company the duty of using all reasonable effort to avoid injury to one who has negligently placed himself in a position of danger, if the peril is known, or, under certain circumstances by reasonable care might have been known. A failure to observe this requirement renders the company liable, notwithstanding the previous negligence of the person injured." In Hicks v. Citizens' R. Co., decided in July, 1894, by the Missouri supreme court, and reported in 124 Mo. 115, 25 L. R. A. 508, this case in 104 Mo. 388 was cited and approved; and it was there said, substantially, that the court could not say, as matter of law, that the plaintiffs were not guilty of contributory negligence; but defendant's gripman saw plaintiffs in their dangerous and exposed situation, and the question was whether after that he acted with due care towards them. The cases do not attempt to define these acts as gross negligence, but place the right of recovery upon the ground that the proximate cause of the injury is the act of the defendant. In the present case the testimony shows that the motorman saw the danger Grinnell was in. It is common knowledge, and not disputed on this record, that when the electric car and its appliances are in proper condition the motorman has perfect control over it. He may run it at so slow a rate of speed that it can be stopped at once,—almost in an instant. Here the motorman saw the danger. He should have slowed down, and, if necessary to avoid the danger, stopped his car. In any view which may be taken of the case, we think there was testimony to warrant the charge, and that the charge as given is within the well-recognized rules, and that it fairly left to the jury the question as to the proximate cause of the injury.

We think there is but one other question which merits discussion. In the opening of counsel for plaintiff he stated to the jury that the accident caused an injury to plaintiff's lung. When one of the witnesses was called to testify to the injuries which the plaintiff had sustained, defendant's counsel objected to any evidence of injury to the lung, as such injury is not alleged in the declaration, and that it is not alleged in the declaration that plaintiff had a disease of a lingering character. Some comment was made by the court upon the declaration, and a suggestion was made to amend, but finally counsel for plaintiff insisted that the declaration was sufficient to admit the proofs offered in regard to the condition of the lung. These proofs were admitted under objection and exception of defendant's counsel. Two physicians were called who had examined Mr. Grinnell a few days before the trial, and who testified to his then condition; that they found tenderness of the spine, depression of the right chest, and tenderness showing a solidification or hepatized condition of the right lung. They also testified to some other conditions. One of the physicians was then asked to state "if either, and which, of the conditions which you now find and describe would naturally result from a severe injury to the back and spine occurring the latter part of May last. A. The condition of the lung,—chronic inflammation of the lung,—and the condition of his spine, I think, might result. It is fair to suppose that it did." Their testimony tended further to show that by reason of the injury his lung was affected, and consumption had resulted. The court, in its instruction to the jury, stated substantially that if they found for plaintiff he was entitled to recover for the injury to his lungs. It is insisted by counsel that this was error; that, if this claim was insisted upon, the defendant had the right to look up Grinnell's past history, and they had no opportunity to do so, as the trial was then in progress. It does not appear that after the court concluded to admit this class of testimony the defendant asked a continuance. When it was proposed to amend the declaration, the court stated that, if the amendment were allowed, he should grant a continuance. The proposition to amend was withdrawn, and the proofs taken under the declaration as it stood. When the court announced this ruling, no motion was made for continuance, and no further claim made that defendant was taken by surprise. The only question, therefore, which arises is whether the declaration was sufficient to admit this proof. Counsel for defendant contend that it has been settled by many cases in this court that the plaintiff cannot recover for injury to his lung, and for consumption resulting from the injury, without an allegation to that effect in the declaration. The declaration alleges: "That, when said car so struck said plaintiff as aforesaid, the blow and collision resulting therefrom seriously hurt, wounded, and crippled said plaintiff; his eyes were badly bruised and discolored; his face and head badly bruised, and some of his teeth loosened, and his lips cut and lacerated; his arms seriously bruised and strained thereby; his back and spine seriously hurt, crippled, bruised, and sprained, and injured and he was by said blow and collision rendered immediately insensible, in which insensible condition he continued for a long space of time next thereafter, to wit, for the space of one day. That said injuries so inflicted upon his head, face, lips, teeth, arm, back, and spine were permanent and lasting, and each and all are incurable." The cases relied upon by defendant's counsel, showing these proofs inadmissible under this declaration, are: Fuller v. Jackson, 92 Mich. 197; Kuhn v. Freund, 87 Mich. 545; Shaw v. Hoffman, 21 Mich. 151; Brink v. Freoff, 44 Mich. 69; Allen v. Kinyon, 41 Mich. 281; Krueger v. Le Blanc, 62 Mich. 70; Hatt v. Evening News Assn. 94 Mich. 119; Bateman v. Blake, 81 Mich. 227; Wilkinson v. Detroit Steel & Spring Works, 73 Mich. 405; Shaddock v. Alpine Pl. Road Co. 79 Mich. 7. We think none of these cases support this contention. The case of Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471, lays down the true rule, and has never been overturned. Some language has been used in later decisions which, upon a casual reading, might seem to have modified the former ruling; but, upon an examination of the exact questions involved in each instance, the distinction will be observed. The declaration in Johnson v. McKee is substantially that "defendant assaulted plaintiff, and struck him a great many violent blows on and about the face, nose, head, and body, thereby severely wounding the plaintiff upon the face, head, and body, breaking the cartilage of the nose, and inflicting great and permanent injuries upon and to his face, head, and body; by means of which several premises said plaintiff was then and there greatly hurt, bruised, and wounded, and became and was sick, sore, and disordered, and so remained for a long space of time, to wit, from the time of said assault to the present; whereby the said plaintiff was obliged to and did necessarily pay, lay out, and expend five hundred dollars in an endeavor to be cured of the bruises, wounds, sickness, soreness, and disorder aforesaid, occasioned as aforesaid." Mr. Justice Campbell for the court said: "The battery consisted in striking McKee with a chair, whereby certain injuries were inflicted on his face and head, and in consequence of which he was seriously, and, as is claimed, permanently, affected. Among other results, there was evidence that he suffered from a urinary difficulty caused or aggravated by the blow. It was claimed this injury was not within the terms of the declaration, and could not be shown without express averment. If the evidence showed any such resulting injury, it showed it to have been as closely connected with the blow as any of the other evil consequences. It was a sickness produced by it in the same way as the swelling and soreness in the head and eyes, and the other grievances about which no question was made on the trial. The declaration charges sickness and pain to have been among the sufferings caused by means of the assault, and we do not think the rules of pleading require any more specific description than was given. We need not inquire how far it was requisite to go in declaring for consequences not necessarily following such an injury, because these consequences are very clearly set forth. When the defendant was informed that damages were sought for sickness and disorder, and their attendant expenses, as well as for wounds and bruises, he was bound to expect evidence of any sickness the origin or aggravation of which could be traced to the act complained of." It will be seen that the rule thus laid down does not require plaintiff to aver all the physical injuries which he sustained, or which may have resulted or be aggravated by the tort, even though they do not necessarily result from the original injury. If such injuries can be traced to the act complained of, and are such as would naturally follow from the injury, they need not be specifically averred. The testimony in the present case shows that the injury to the spine and back might, and probably would, result in injury to the lungs. Johnson v. McKee was cited and followed in Welch v. Ware, 83 Mich. 77. In Elliott v. Van Buren, 83 Mich. 51, 20 Am. Rep. 668, the court, in speaking of the objection to the evidence tending to prove the continued result of the assault in bodily weakness and malady, and the fact of the plaintiff's suffering from fits, said: "Upon the first of these points the case is covered entirely by the decision of Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 471." Again, in Keyser v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co., 66 Mich. 400, the case of Johnson v. McKee is cited and approved. The rule of the case of Johnson v. McKee is but the reiteration of the rule laid down by the law-writers upon this subject, and adopted by other courts as well as this. Sutherland, in his work on Damages (vol. 8 [2d ed.] pp. 2661, 2662), says: "The general rule in tort is that the party who commits trespass or other wrongful act is liable for all the direct injury resulting, although such injury could not have been contemplated as the probable result of the act done. Plaintiff may show specific, direct effects of the injury, without specifically alleging them, as that he was thereby made subject to fits. If they were a part of the result, the plaintiff may recover for such damage without specially alleging it, as well as the pain and disability which followed. Tyson v. Booth, 100 Mass. 258. The obvious probable effect of the injury may be given in evidence, though not laid in the declaration." In this connection Judge Sutherland cites Johnson v. McKee. This rule has been followed in the following cases: Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Hecht, 115 Ind. 443; Ehrgott v. New York, 96 N. Y. 264, 48 Am. Rep. 623; Delis v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 51 Wis. 400; Schmidt v. Pfeil, 24 Wis. 454; Birchard v. Booth, 4 Wis. 67; Morgan v. Kendall, 124 Ind. 460, 9 L. R. A. 445; Sloan v. Edwards, 61 Md. 98; Hussey v. Ryan, 64 Md. 426; Deneer & R. G. R. Co. v. Harris, 123 U. S. 597, 80 L. ed. 1146. In this last case it appeared that the plaintiff was injured by a gunshot wound in the hip. Among other things he was allowed to and did prove that one of the consequences of the wound was the loss of procreative power, resulting direct and proximately from the nature of the wound. Mr. Justice Harlan, speaking for the court, said: "Because of the fact that the loss did result directly and proximately from the nature of the wound, evidence of this fact was therefore admissible, though the declaration does not in terms specify such loss as one of the results of the wound." This rule does not in any sense overturn the well-established one, that where damages are special they must be specially averred in the declaration. In the case of Heiser v. Loomis, 47 Mich. 18, the declaration averred that "plaintiff was greatly hindered, and prevented from doing and performing his work and business, and looking after and attending to his necessary affairs and vocations." He attempted to recover because "he was bothered some about help, and cutting his hay was delayed because of his injury, and his crop damaged." This was held by the court to be in the nature of special damages, and not recoverable without special averments. If we turn, now, to the cases cited by defendant's counsel, which they claim uphold their contention as to the injury to the lung, we shall find that it was never intended to overrule Johnson v. McKee. In Fuller v. Jackson the declaration did not aver that plaintiff had any difficulty with her breast which was aggravated by the injury. Plaintiff testified to having had such injury, and that after her fall her breast broke out again. She sought to show that this breaking out was caused by the fall. Defendant offered proof tending to show that the fall would not produce this particular infirmity. The court below instructed the jury that plaintiff could not recover for the injury to the breast, unless such injury might have been aggravated by the acts which resulted from defendant's neglect. This instruction was held to be erroneous, saying that, defendant's theory having been brought into the case for the purpose of accounting for some other trouble, it did not warrant the plaintiff to use it in aggravation of her damages, when there was no averment of any such claim of damages in her declaration. The case of Shaddock v. Alpine Pl. Road Co., 79 Mich. 7, was cited in support of that ruling. But the Shaddock Case was written by Mr. Justice Campbell, who also wrote Johnson v. McKee; and the declaration in the Shaddock Case, it was said, contained nothing more specific than that the plaintiff was hurt, bruised, and wounded; that the word "hurt" was so general as to give no information, while the word "bruise" did not indicate generally more than a temporary contusion; and that the word "wounded" was any injury, breaking, or cutting of the skin. It is true that the learned justice cited the rule laid down in 1 Chitty, Pl. 886, 4th ed. 347, that "when-ever the damages sustained do not necessarily arise from the act complained of, and consequently are not implied in the law, in order to prevent surprise of the defendant, which otherwise might ensue on the trial, the plaintiff must, in general, state the particular damage which he has sustained, or he will not be permitted to give evidence of it. But this had especial reference to special damages, for the learned justice, in connection with the statement of this rule, says: "The rule which requires special damages to be alleged would be useless, unless so alleged as to give definite information." In Kuhn v. Freund none of the counts of the declaration contained any allegation of permanent injuries. It will therefore be seen that it was not intended to overrule Johnson v. McKee, and that it has not in fact been overruled.

The judgment must be affirmed.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Martha Jane IRVIN

v.

John IRVIN, App't.

(160 Pa. 523.)

1. Evidence of a contemporaneous agreement by a wife to procure a divorce from her husband is inadmissible to defeat recovery by her upon a written agreement valid upon its face for the release of her dower rights in real property of the husband where she has performed the written agreement upon her part which of itself constitutes a consideration for the undertaking of the other party, and after such agreement she resumed marital relations with her husband, although proof of such an agreement would be admissible if the action were upon a bond, bill, or note to prove that the consideration was unlawful.
2. It is not essential to the recovery of an installment of the amount agreed to be paid in consideration of a release of dower rights that the plaintiff should have physical possession of a note which the contract contemplated should be given to represent such installment until the same become due.

(July 18, 1895.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas for Clearfield County in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover the amount alleged to be due on a contract by which plaintiff for a money consideration undertook to release her dower in certain real estate. Affirmed.

NOTE.—For illegality remotely connected with the consideration of a contract, see also Jackson v. City Nat. Bank (Ind.) 9 L. R. A. 657, and note, also Martin v. Richardson (Ky.) 19 L. R. A. 632.

29 L. R. A.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. David L. Krebs and William Patterson, for appellant:

Wherever a contract grows immediately out of, and is connected with, an act to be done which is against public policy, the contract is itself illegal and void, no matter how ingeniously drawn to conceal the illegal part.

Kilborn v. Field, 78 Pa. 194; Armstrong v. Toler, 24 U. S. 11 Wheat. 258, 6 L. ed. 468; Johnson v. Hulings, 103 Pa. 498, 49 Am. Rep. 181; Holt v. Green, 73 Pa. 198, 13 Am. Rep. 787; Ham v. Smith, 87 Pa. 68; Bredin's App. 92 Pa. 241, 37 Am. Rep. 677.

Where the welfare of society and the vindication of the law are the chief objects, the defendant may give in evidence the illegality of the contract as a bar to a suit to enforce it, and this to prevent the evil which would be produced by enforcing the contract or allowing it to stand.

Bredin's App. supra; Ormerod v. Dearman, 100 Pa. 561, 45 Am. Rep. 891.

The maxim, in pari delicto, etc., has no application.

National Bank of Oxford v. Kirk, 90 Pa. 49; Unger v. Boas, 18 Pa. 601; Hatefield v. Gulden, 7 Watts, 152, 31 Am. Dec. 750; Clippinger v. Hepbaugh, 5 Watts & S. 815, 40 Am. Dec. 519; Bowman v. Coffroth, 59 Pa. 19; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 63 Pa. 188, 8 Am. Rep. 159.

A mortgage, the consideration of which in whole or in part is the stifling of a prosecution for conspiracy to defraud an embezzlement as a bank officer is void.

Pearce v. Wilson, 111 Pa. 14; Acery v. Layton, 119 Pa. 604; Wilson v. Himes, 5 Pa. 423, 47 Am. Dec. 423.

Parol evidence is admissible to establish a contemporaneous oral agreement which induced the execution of a written contract, though it may vary, change, or reform the instrument, and though omitted not by fraud, accident, or mistake.

Ferguson v. Rafferty, 6 L. R. A. 83, 128 Pa. 837; Walker v. France, 112 Pa. 208; Phillips v. Maly, 106 Pa. 536; Hoffman v. Bloomsburg & S. Railroad, 157 Pa. 175.

The condition attached, either in writing or orally, to the note when placed in the escrow, may be shown.

Carpenter v. National Bank of the Republic, 106 Pa. 170; Altoona Second Nat. Bank v. Dunn, 151 Pa. 228; 1 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 228.

Mrs. Oscar Mitchell, S. R. Peale, and Frank Fielding, for appellee:

The whole consideration mentioned in the contract was for the real estate and personal property conveyed by the deeds mentioned, and no part of it was in consideration that the plaintiff should procure a divorce from her husband.

The contract in this case was fully executed and the appellant had received all he was entitled to receive under it. Mrs. Irvin complied with every one of her takings fully and completely. This gave her an undoubted right to recover the purchase money upon the note for $4,000, and under the written contract.

Adams v. Grey, 154 Pa. 258; Swan v. Scott, 11 Serg. & R. 155; Evans v. Dravo, 24 Pa. 62, 62 Am. Dec. 359; Hendrickson v. Evans, 25 Pa. 441.

Chief Justice Paxson, said in Irvin v. Irvin, 142 Pa. 286: "I know of no decided case and no principle of law which permits an oral contract, made at the same time with a written contract under seal, and purposely omitted therefrom, to be set up, not only to contradict, but to destroy, it. The two agreements cannot possibly stand together; one or the other must fall. When parties without fraud or mistake have put their engagements in writing, that is not only the best, but the sole, evidence of their agreement.

Barnhart v. Riddle, 29 Pa. 92; Lewis v. Brewster, 57 Pa. 410; Martin v. Berens, 67 Pa. 459; McClure v. People's Freight R. Co. 90 Pa. 269; Smith v. National L. Ins. Co. 103 Pa. 177, 49 Am. Rep. 121; Thorne v. Warfield, 100 Pa. 519; Roland v. Finney, 96 Pa. 192; English's App. 119 Pa. 533; Jessop v. Ivey, 153 Pa. 71; Hoffman v. Bloomsburg & S. Railroad, 157 Pa. 174; Woodcock v. Robinson, 148 Pa. 503; Stull v. Thompson, 154 Pa. 43; Sanders v. Sharp, 153 Pa. 555.

Dean, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Plaintiff's suit, when brought at first, was founded upon a note, of which the following is a copy: "4,000. Curwensville, Pa., Oct. 8th, 1884. On or before November 1st, 1885, after date, I promise to pay to the order of Annie M. Irvin four thousand dollars at County National Bank, Clearfield, Pa., value received, with interest from December 1st, 1884. [Signed] John Irvin. [Indorsed] Annie M. Irvin." Plaintiff claimed to be the owner of the note, with the right to sue thereon. This was denied by the defendant. The plaintiff is the wife of James A. Irvin, who is a brother of John and Jared F. Irvin. Before and at the date of the note, they had been doing business as John Irvin & Bros., at Curwensville, Clearfield county. At the time, they owned a tract of about 600 acres of timber land, known as the "Elk Lick Tract," as tenants in common. For this they were offered $150,000. The price was deemed a good one, and they were anxious to sell. Shortly before this time there had arisen domestic difficulties between James A. and his wife, Martha Jane, this plaintiff, and she refused to join her husband in the execution of a deed to the purchaser, and the sale was imperiled. Her husband, then, for the purpose of divesting his wife's interest, confessed a judgment to his sister, Annie M. Irvin. On this, execution was issued, and his interest in the land levied on. Thereupon the wife filed a bill in equity against her husband, his sister, and the sheriff, averring that, as to her, the proposed sale was collusive and fraudulent, with the intent to divest her right of dower in her husband's land. The court awarded a preliminary injunction, restraining the sheriff from proceeding with the sale. Some months after this negotiations for harmony between the husband and wife were opened, and these resulted in a written contract between her and John Irvin, dated the 11th of September, 1884. Afterwards, by amendment, the suit was based on this contract. By this paper the wife agreed: (1) She would convey all her right in the Elk Lick tract to the purchaser; (2) that she would, within twenty days, convey to John Irvin, brother of her husband, all her right and title in all the remaining real estate of her husband, and in all his personal property, excepting only the personal property in the house wherein she then resided; (3) that she would, on or before December following, deliver up possession of the premises where she lived; (4) that, within twenty days, she would discontinue the equity suit to restrain the sheriff from selling the interest of her husband in the Elk Lick tract. As a consideration for all this, John Irvin agreed (1) to pay her $6,000, installments of $1,000 in hand, $1,000 in twenty days, when she delivered the second deed, and $4,000 on the 1st of November, 1885, for which last payment he was to give his negotiable promissory note, with interest from November 1, 1884, and with indorser approved by Murray & Gordon, the wife's attorneys, the note to be delivered to the attorneys as custodians for the parties to the agreement; (2) to pay to her $3 per week from the date of the agreement until December 1st, following, and, further, to pay all the docket costs in the equity suit; (3) to procure for her a formal transfer of the personal property in the house where she lived. Then follows this final stipulation by her: "Said Martha Jane Irvin agrees that, in any proceeding she may institute against her husband for divorce, she will not assign any other reason therefor than the desertion of her by her husband." In fulfillment of her agreement, she joined her husband in the deed of the Elk Lick tract, and was paid the $1,000. She also at once commenced proceedings for divorce against her husband on the grounds of desertion. The second deed was prepared, also note for $4,000, with an approved indorser, as well as formal transfer of the personal property, all of which, with the $1,000 in money, were tendered her at the expiration of the twenty days, the deed for execution, the note, transfer, and money for her acceptance; but for some reason, she then declined to do either. But on 23th March, 1885, she concluded to carry out her agreement, and delivered this paper to her attorneys: "Clearfield, Pa., March 28th, 1885. This is to certify that, after having considered the propriety of carrying out the arrangement in writing made with John Irvin in September last, and after consultation with my friends and other counsel, I have definitely determined to carry out the same; and I hereby authorize my said attorneys, Murray & Gordon, to discontinue the equity suit, proceed forthwith with the divorce case, and in all respects carry out the agreement according to its tenor and effect. Martha Jane Irvin." Then, on 24th April, 1885, she executed the second deed, and received the second $1,000, and the bill of transfer of the personal property. At the same time, the note on which this suit was first instituted, indorsed by Annie M. Irvin, her husband's sister, was delivered to her attorneys, Murray & Gordon, and they thereupon delivered to him this receipt: "This is to certify that we have this day had and received from John Irvin his negotiable promissory note, dated October 8th, 1884, for four thousand dollars, with interest from December 1st, 1884, indorsed by Annie M. Irvin, the same being received by us and delivered to us as custodians, in pursuance of an arrangement made September 11th, 1884, when a certain agreement was made between Martha Jane Irvin, wife of James A. Irvin, and said John Irvin, by which we are to hold the same until such time as said Martha Jane Irvin shall have procured a divorce from the bonds of matrimony without alimony from her said husband, and not to deliver the same to said Martha Jane Irvin until said divorce shall be obtained, provided that her procuring or obtaining said divorce is not hindered, delayed, or defended against by said James A. Irvin, and she shall, after proper exertions on her part, be prevented from obtaining it prior to November 1st, 1885. Witness our hands and seals this 24th April, 1885. Murray & Gordon."

It will be noticed this paper is dated more than six months after the agreement, and is not signed by her. Nothing further was done. Afterwards, there was a reconciliation between the husband and wife, and for a considerable time they lived together, but again separated. The note was not delivered to her by her attorneys. The suit was brought December 31, 1889, on the note, but, as already noticed, afterwards, on 17th September, 1890, the plaintiff amended her statement, and based her right to recover on the agreement of 11th of September, 1884. The case first came on for trial in the court below September 21, 1890. The plaintiff then offered in evidence the agreement, and proof of the execution and delivery of the deeds, discontinuance of the equity suit, and surrender of the premises in which she had lived; then called Mr. Gordon, one of her attorneys, as a witness to the agreement. When on the stand, on examination as a subscribing witness, he produced the note as the one referred to in the contract. Then the court, against the objection of plaintiff's counsel, permitted defendant's counsel to cross-examine him as to the circumstances attending the giving of the note, the nature and extent of the attorneys' custody. He stated that part of the contract was they were to hold the note until the wife had procured a divorce, provided the husband made no defense to it. The cross-examination further elicited evidence of a parol understanding or agreement at variance with the written one, and contradictory of it. The defendant, having offered in evidence the paper signed by the wife, dated March 28th, and the receipt by her attorneys of April 24, 1885, rested; and thereupon the court, being of opinion that a part of the consideration for the defendant's contract was a stipulation by the wife that she would procure a divorce, the contract was void as against public policy, directed, peremptorily, a verdict for defendant. On appeal by plaintiff to this court, the judgment was reversed. See Irvin v. Irvin, 142 Pa. 271. There were 32 assignments of error, but the reversal was on these grounds: (1) It was error to permit defendant to inject his defense by a cross examination of plaintiff's witness, called to testify to the written agreement. (2) That the testimony thus introduced was in direct contradiction of the written instrument, and, there being no allegation of fraud, accident, or mistake, was not admissible. On these two points the judgment was reversed, although there is a very strong intimation by Paxson, C. J., who rendered the opinion, that even an attempt by defendant, in an orderly way, to have set up an unlawful or immoral transaction, to which he was a party, as a defense to his obligation, would not have availed him. The case having again come on to trial in the court below, plaintiff offered and read the agreement of 11th September, 1884, and gave evidence of the discontinuance of the equity proceedings, the execution and delivery of the two deeds, also the surrender of possession of the house, and the $4,000 note, and rested. The defendant then offered evidence to show a parol agreement between the counsel of the wife and John Irvin's counsel, with her consent that when the second $1,000 was paid, no more should be paid until the wife had procured a divorce, and that the $4,000 note was not to be surrendered to her until the decree of divorce was entered; that the contemporaneous parol agreement was the sole inducement to John Irvin's executing the written one,—this for the purpose of showing that plaintiff had no right to the possession of the note for institution of suit, and that the contract was void as against public policy. To this offer plaintiff objected, and the court overruled it. Defendant then offered the two papers, dated respectively the 28th of March and 24th of April, 1885, which, on objection by plaintiff, were also rejected, and the court directed a verdict for plaintiff for the $4,000, with interest. Hence, we have this appeal by defendant. He assigns five errors, but they are practically three. The first two were settled by the decision of the court when the case was here before. The defendant could not introduce his defense by a cross-examination of plaintiff's witness, called merely to prove and identify papers. We could add nothing to what was so concisely said by Chief Justice Paxson, in his opinion on that point.

As to the third assignment, the rejection of the offer to prove there was a parol contract by which the $4,000 note was not to be delivered to plaintiff by her attorneys until she had procured a decree of divorce, the preliminary question for the court was, Had the plaintiff made out, clear of any taint of illegality, a contract by defendant to pay her $4,000? It will be noticed she offered in evidence the agreement of 11th of September, 1884. There is no semblance of an illegal consideration in this agreement. She only expressly stipulates she will not assign any other cause for the divorce than desertion. In this there was not only nothing unlawful, but there was nothing discreditable to either. From the very fact of excluding other causes there is a fair implication that the husband was conscious of the existence of others involving graver moral turpitude than desertion. A sense of shame in him still remained; and there was a willingness on her part to suppress that which would be disgraceful to him, and annoying to his brothers and sisters. This is all that can possibly be inferred from this particular stipulation, while all the other parts of the agreement bear witness to a perfectly good consideration. He owned very valuable lands, which it was impossible to dispose of at a satisfactory price unless she joined in the deed. This she agreed to do for the consideration of $6,000. She then, by formal seal and acknowledgment, released her interest in the Elk Lick tract for the consideration of $1,000, and her interest in sixteen other tracts for the consideration of $5,000, the two making the $6,000 consideration named in the agreement. She offered proof that afterwards she surrendered possession of the house she lived in, and discontinued the equity suit to restrain her husband from selling the land. She then offered evidence to identify the note delivered to her attorneys, and put it in evidence, and rested. How stood the case now? She had shown a perfectly valid contract with her husband's brother, by which she, for a valuable consideration, $6,000, had agreed to part with a right, worth, in case she survived her husband, far more than she was to get. This right, by two formal deeds, she proved she had relinquished. She had not procured a divorce from him, but this she had not agreed to do. She had instituted proceedings, which were then pending, in which she assigned but the single cause, desertion. Her case was complete in every particular, and, up to this stage, entitled her to a verdict. What is the defense? That the consideration for the $4,000, in part, was the procuring by her of a decree of divorce, and therefore the contract is avoided. As to this, the contract could not be reformed by interpolating the alleged suppressed consideration. While it is settled that when, by fraud, accident, or mistake, a material stipulation has been omitted from an instrument, equity will reform it, it will not do so when the omission is intentional. No chancellor would listen an instant to such a plea. But it is alleged the parol contract stipulated for an unlawful consideration on part of plaintiff, and therefore it would be against public policy to enforce the contract on her behalf. The rule invoked is well settled, and was recognized long before Colins v. Bantern, 2 Wils. 841, decided in England as early as 1765. That case only more clearly defined and sustained it, by reasons which, though often assailed, have been but little shaken by professional and judicial criticism since. There, the suit was on a bond for £700. The instrument, while lawful on its face, had been corruptly given to stifle a prosecution for perjury. The action was debt, and the plea special, setting out the unlawful consideration as a defense. The plaintiff demurred, and judgment was entered for defendant, Wilmot, C., saying: "The present condition is for the payment of a sum of money, but that payment to be made was grounded upon a vicious consideration, which is not inconsistent with the condition of the bond, but strikes at the contract itself in such manner as shows that, in truth, the bond never had any legal entity." And the opinion closes in these words: "We are all of the opinion that judgment may be for defendant; that the averment pleaded is not contradictory, but explanatory, of the condition; that the bond was void ab initio, and never had any existence." In the numerous cases decided since, both in England and this country, the weight of authority has probably carried the principle beyond the limit of the leading case, and permitted a plea, not alone explanatory, but expressly contradictory, of the consideration in the bond, where the contract was of such illegality or immorality that its enforcement would be injurious to the public welfare. And a distinction has been taken between those contracts in which the consideration affects only the parties and those in which it affects the public. In this state it has been held that a note or bond given in fraud of creditors is valid as between the parties; and in Evans v. Dravo, 24 Pa. 62, 63 Am. Dec. 359, it was held, upon full consideration, that a bond given a husband on a collusive transaction to defraud his wife could be enforced, and the obligor would not be permitted to show his own turpitude to defeat a recovery. But, in that case, the court uses this language, by Woodward, J.: "I do not say the rule is applicable to contracts forbidden by statute, or which are contra bonos mores; they stand on their own ground, which it is now not necessary to examine." The ground on which they stand is stated by Black, J., in Jenkins v. Fowler, 24 Pa. 308, which was a contract between adjoining land owners who, for their mutual advantage, agreed to fence in a public road: "The contract being wholly void, one of the parties cannot sue the other for a breach of it." The substance of the decision is that a contract between individuals which is necessarily prejudicial to the convenience and welfare of the public must not be enforced, no matter how flagrant and malicious the breach of it by one of the parties. So, while the rule laid down in Evans v. Dravo, supra, Swan v. Scott, 11 Serg. & R. 155, and other cases, that a demand on an illegal transaction will be enforced if the plaintiff can make out his case without disclosing the illegality, that rule has not been invariably applied to contracts where the illegal consideration is a violation of statute or an immorality detrimental to the public. In such cases the courts may overlook the parties, and consider the question one of public policy. As is said in Smith's Leading Cases, in note by Hare & Wallace (8th ed. vol. 1, p. 752), where most of the cases are carefully cited: "The better opinion seems to be that there is no universal rule, and that each case must be governed in some degree by its own circumstances. The maxim 'Nemo allegans turpitudinem suam audiendus' is inflexible, as between the parties, but may yield to considerations of public policy and the duty of preventing the consummation of a fraudulent and illegal purpose." Nor, is the rule universal in its application to cases where the consideration is violative of a statute, as will be noticed from the cases cited to the leading case.

And this brings us back to the reasoning of Wilmut, J., in the leading case, Collins v. Blantern, supra: Is the contract grounded upon a vicious consideration, which strikes at the contract itself in such a manner as shows that, in truth, it never had a legal entity? If the consideration for the payment of the $4,000 was that plaintiff should obtain a divorce from her husband, the consideration was a violation of statute by both. The second section of the Act of 1815 provides that in her petition or libel she shall set out the cause for the divorce, and, under oath or affirmation, state that it is not made out of levity or collusion. If this was the consideration for the $4,000, it was in violation of statute, and was so vicious that the contract never had a legal existence. Kilborn v. Field, 78 Pa. 194. That the plaintiff and defendant stipulate for a falsehood to the court, and contract that one of them shall commit perjury to bolster up the falsehood, clearly renders the contract void ab initio, if based on such iniquity.

In passing upon the correctness of the court's ruling, we must, however, consider how the case stood when this offer was made. The plaintiff had offered in evidence a written contract by which she agreed, by deeds, to relinquish her right of dower in a tract of land worth $150,000; also her right of dower in 16 other tracts, and any right she had in all his personalty; also, that she would deliver up possession of the house wherein she lived; that she would discontinue the suit to restrain the sale by his sister. For this he was to pay to her $6,000. She then proved that all she was to do she had done. The consideration in one deed was $1,000, and in the other $5,000, making $6,000, for which she had receipted, but he had only paid her $2,000. All this was proven beyond dispute, and the further fact appeared that, after the agreement, they had resumed marital relations, and lived together for several years. She had rested her case. The defendant then offers evidence, not in denial of a single fact established by her, but to show a contemporaneous parol agreement between her attorneys and his, that the $4,000 note was not to be delivered until she had procured a divorce,—this for the purpose of making void the written contract. That is, the offer is to prove that, with the knowledge of the clients, their eminent and reputable counsel, in utter disregard of their duty or fidelity to the court, and in plain violation of the law of the land, engaged in traffic in divorces, and, for a consideration passing between the parties, bargained for a collusive decree: There were presented to the court for consideration two rules, each founded on public policy: (1) A written contract cannot be contradicted, altered, or added to by parol, except for fraud, accident, or mistake. The reason for this rule is very concisely given in Wodock v. Robinson, 148 Pa. 503: "If it were not for the rule, no man would be able to protect himself, by the most solemn forms and attestations, against falsehood, misrepresentation, and perjury." The other rule is the one already noticed: (2) If an unlawful consideration for a contract be detrimental to public morals, the courts may permit a party to such contract to set up his own turpitude as a defense to a breach of it. It must be kept in mind the suit was not on a bond, bill, note, or mortgage expressing a nominal or money consideration, and which was met by an offer to prove the real consideration, as in nearly every reported case in which the question is considered. It was on a contract setting out in detail a full consideration on part of plaintiff for the money defendant was to pay,—a consideration which he had received, and for years had been in the enjoyment of, and which he did not pretend to deny. But he says to plaintiff: "True, the contract, as represented, was made. The purpose of that was not to obtain a divorce, but to free valuable lands of your claim upon them, that the title might be passed, and a favorable sale made. True, you paid the full consideration, and have not received what you were to get. This contract was a good one for me. It was fair, with no taint of illegality. But there was another, a verbal contract, not in writing, which is illegal, made by our attorneys, by which you were to get a divorce. That avoids the legal contract, and you cannot recover." This was the attitude in which defendant stood when the offers of testimony were made. Clearly, under the whole testimony,—that of plaintiff, which was heard, and that of defendant, which was offered,—the integrity of the established written contract could not be af-fectured by what, if true, was a collateral undertaking to do an unlawful act. The written contract did not, as in Collins v. Blanton, rest on a vicious consideration, which struck at the contract itself, so that it never had a legal entity. It rested on a perfectly good consideration, wholly independent of the merely collateral promise. No verdict against it, on such evidence, ought to have been or could have been sustained.

It must be remembered, when this offer was made the judge was sitting as a chancellor to administer equity. On the law, defendant had not the shadow of defense. He now becomes the actor, asking that in equity his written contract, the fruits of which he had in his pocket, be wiped out of existence. Why? Because, according to his own story, he and plaintiff had participated in a crime. Therefore he prays the chancellor to reach out his hand and save him from payment for the good bargain he has made with his brother's wife. Of course his conduct meets the indignation of the chancellor. He has suffered no wrong; only wants to perpetrate one; and therefore cannot be aided on the ground on which equity affords relief to other suitors. But the question for the chancellor is not what is his wickedness, but whether harkening to his appeal will tend to encourage or deter other evil-disposed persons from making illegal contracts. The answer to that question determines the public policy. We think, in view of the special facts in this case, to have listened to such a defense, instead of promoting the good of the public, would have tended to promote trickery and perjury, to evade payment of debts. While, if plaintiff had offered, to sustain her claim, merely a bond, bill, or note, and defendant had offered to prove the consideration was unlawful, the evidence would have been admissible, yet in view of the facts here, the court properly rejected the testimony.

The averment that, while there was no fraud in the making of the parol agreement, the plaintiff's use of the written agreement, before a decree of divorce, is a fraud upon him, is without foundation. Assume he entered into such agreement. He knew no such decree could be legally entered, because of that very agreement; and, further, he knew that, by resumption of the marital relation, after the libel for divorce had been filed, the wife condoned her husband's offenses prior thereto, and the cause for divorce at the date of the agreement ceased to exist, by reason of the condonation. This, according to his own showing, puts him in the attitude of attempting to defraud her out of the written consideration passing to her, after he has received every penny he was to get. Without infringing on any principle in any of the decided cases, we are entirely clear in our judgment that no policy of the law or regard for the public good requires us to aid defendant in the perpetration of such a wrong upon his brother's wife.

As to the note not being in plaintiff's possession at the time of suit brought, such physical possession of it was not necessary to sustain her action. If, as she clearly proved, she had done all she was required to do under the written agreement, she had a right to demand and have possession of the note. If it had not been produced at the trial, she could have recovered on the agreement, without it. The written stipulation was that she was to be paid $4,000 on 1st November, 1885, if she signed the deeds and performed the other conditions of the written agreement. This payment was to be evidenced by a note payable at that date. If the note had never been delivered to her attorneys, her right to recover would have been clear. If delivered and not handed to her, the agreement still evidenced her right to the money. All the assignments of error are overruled, and the judgment is affirmed.

CONNECTICUT SUPREME COURT OF ERRORS.

Mary J. DONOVAN, Appt.,
v.
HARTFORD STREET R. CO.

(65 Conn. 201.)

1. The relation of carrier and passenger does not exist between a street railway company and a person who has given a signal, which was seen and responded to, for a car to stop, but who was struck by the unexpected swinging of the car from its proper track onto a switch track.
2. Striking [from the complaint] in an action to recover damages for negligent injuries the allegation that defendant was a common carrier of passengers is not error unless other allegations show that the relation of carrier and passenger existed between plaintiff and defendant.

3. The court will take judicial notice that a street railway company is a common carrier of passengers.
4. Negligence of a street railway company in not avoiding the deflection of a car from the main track to a branch track so as to strike a person waiting to take it, is a question of fact upon which the decision of the trial court is conclusive.
5. An accident to a person waiting for a street-car, who is struck by the sudden switching of the car upon a side track, does not make a prima facie case of negligence on the part of the carrier.

(December 1, 1894.)

NOTE.—On the question when a person becomes a passenger before actually entering the carrier's vehicle, see Webster v. Fitchburg R. Co. (Mass.) 24 L. R. A. 521, and note.

29 L. R. A.

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the City Court of Hartford in favor of defendant in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of defendant in permitting a car which she had signaled with the intention of becoming a passenger on it to enter upon a switch track upon which she was standing and come in contact with her. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Roger Welles and Uriah Case, for appellant:

The allegation stricken out was a proper and legal description of the company. The forms adapted to suits of this character all contain such an allegation.

2 Ch. Pl. 359; Practice Act, pp. 57, 58, 59.

A street railway company is a common carrier of passengers, with duties and responsibilities similar to those of a railroad company.

Booth, Street Railway Law, § 324.

When the plaintiff was struck, the relation of carrier and passenger had begun between the parties.

Booth, Street Railway Law, § 326.

The company should be the last one to claim that she was not a passenger, and should not be sustained in such a claim.

Burbridge v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 86 Mo. App. 669; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 744.

The branch track was the "carrier's premises," so that the plaintiff was injured by the carrier, on the carrier's own premises.

Snow v. Fitchburg R. Co. 136 Mass. 552;

Dodge v. Boston & B. S. S. Co. 2 L. R. A. 83, 148 Mass. 207; 25 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1081, note 5; Amended Charter, § 5 Private Laws, 498, § 9.

The accident proves negligence.

Knowles v. Orampton, 55 Conn. 886; Johnson v. Hudson River R. Co. 20 N. Y. 65, 75 Am. Dec. 375; Davis v. Guilford, 55 Conn. 851; Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 289.

A question of duty is a question of law.

Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 58 Conn. 461.

As there was here a contractual relation existing between the parties, the rule of res ipsa loquitur applies to this case.

Lennon v. Rawitzer, 57 Conn. 587; Carpus v. London & B. R. Co. 5 Q. B. 747; Le Barron v. East Boston Ferry Co. 11 Allen, 817, 87 Am. Dec. 717; Feital v. Middlesex R. Co. 109 Mass. 398, 13 Am. Rep. 720; Curtis v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 18 N. Y. 534, 75 Am. Dec. 258; Edgerton v. New York & H. R. Co. 39 N. Y. 227; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 709, note 7.

Messrs. Robinson & Robinson, for appellee:

Not until the car had stopped in response to a signal and for the purpose of accepting a person as a passenger, and until the person is attempting to get on, does he become a passenger.

Smith v. St. Paul City R. Co. 82 Minn. 1, 50 Am. Rep. 550; Brien v. Bennett, 8 Car. & P. 724; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Mehlsack, 181 Ill. 61; Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 262, and note 2.

The street is in no sense a passenger station for the safety of which the company is responsible.

Booth, Street Railway Law, § 326; Platt v. 29 L. R. A.

Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 1 Hun, 124.

Plaintiff's claim that she established a prima facie case of negligence by proving the accident without contribution was properly overruled.

Gibbons v. Wilkes-Barre & Suburban Street R. Co. 155 Pa. 279; Booth, Street Railway Law, §§ 323, 361.

The facts as found by the court below do not constitute negligence.

The switch, which was placed to direct the car up Asylum street, was turned by an accident unusual, not to be anticipated, and not imputable to the defendant.

White v. Milwaukee City R. Co. 61 Wis. 536, 50 Am. Rep. 154; Carter v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. 42 Fed. Rep. 87; Booth, Street Railway Law, § 382.

The speed of the car, not exceeding the pace of a man on a quick walk, was not sufficient to constitute negligence.

28 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1023, note 1.

No negligence can be imputed to the defendant because of the appliances in use: (1) because no allegation to that effect is made, and (2) because they were the usual and so far as appears the only ones in use.

Unger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 51 N. Y. 497; Carter v. Kansas City Cable R. Co. supra.

Running a car off the track, a possible and not uncommon contingency constitutes no negligence.

Altreuter v. Hudson River R. Co. 2 E. D. Smith, 151; 23 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1081, note 1; Macomber v. Nichols, 44 Mich. 212; Hazel v. People's Pass. R. Co. 132 Pa. 96;

White v. Milwaukee City R. Co. supra.

Running a car upon the wrong track does not constitute negligence.

Altreuter v. Hudson River R. Co. supra; 23 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1081, note.

The company had a clear right to run its car on either track, and, as against pedestrians or other vehicles, had a superior right upon its own tracks.

Booth, Street Railway Law, § 303; McKeever v. Market Street R. Co. 59 Cal. 294.

Street railway companies are liable for injuries to pedestrians as any other vehicle is and in no other degree, and are held to ordinary care only.

Maryland Agr. College v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 43 Md. 434; Unger v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 51 N. Y. 497; Fath v. Tower Grove & L. R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 74, 105 Mo. 537; Booth, Street Railway Law, § 309; Pitcher v. People's Street R. Co. 154 Pa. 560; Ehrieman v. East Harrisburg City Pass. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 448, 150 Pa. 180; 23 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 1019.

Even if the plaintiff had been a passenger, she could not recover.

Booth, Street Railway Law, § 328.

The plaintiff's case has no standing in court because the question of the negligence involved is manifestly a pure question of fact for the determination of the trial judge or jury.

McDonough v. Metropolitan R. Co. 137 Mass. 210; Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 289; O'Neil v. East Windsor, 63 Conn.

154; Ehrieman v. East Harrisburg City Pass. R. Co. supra; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657, 21 L. ed. 745; Beach, Contrib. Neg. § 163.

As the court below did not impose upon the plaintiff any duty whatever, nor absolve the defendant from any duty which the law required of it, nor in any respect violate any rule or principle of law, this court will not review its conclusion.

Williams v. Clinton, 28 Conn. 264; Daniels v. Saybrook, 84 Conn. 377; Congdon v. Norwich, 87 Conn. 414; Young v. New Haven, 89 Conn. 435; Brannan v. Fair Haven & W. R. Co. 45 Conn. 284, 29 Am. Rep. 679; Dexter v. McCready, 54 Conn. 171; Fiske v. Forsyth Dyeing, Laundering & Bleaching Co. 57 Conn. 119; Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 239; O'Neil v. East Windsor, 63 Conn. 154.

Fenn, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff's first reason of appeal is that the "court erred in striking out of the original complaint, on the motion of the defendant, the allegation that the defendant was on October 25, 1890, a 'common carrier of passengers by horse railroad,' because it appears by other allegations in the complaint that at the time and place of the accident the relation of carrier and passenger existed between the parties, and that the plaintiff was injured while attempting to carry out, on her part, an implied contract between her and said car driver that she should take passage on said car at that point on said Asylum street where she was struck by said car, by its having been negligently turned from the track whereon it should have gone." The plaintiff, thus, it will be seen, bases her claim of error upon the concession of that which is manifestly true, namely, that the action of the court of which she complains could injure her only in case the other allegations of the complaint showed that the relation of carrier and passenger existed at the time of the injury, between the defendant and herself. In other words, the statement that the defendant was a common carrier of passengers would be irrelevant, in a complaint for personal injury, unless such complaint contained other statements showing that the person injured sustained such a relation to such common carrier as conferred the right, by reason thereof, and in no other way, to recover damages for such injury in an action based on contract, for failure to perform an implied promise, or in tort for the breach of an imposed duty. McElroy v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 4 Cush. 400, 50 Am. Dec. 794; Baton v. Boston & L. R. Co. 11 Allen, 500, 87 Am. Dec. 780; Buswell, Personal Injuries, § 5.

Our first inquiry, therefore, is, Does the complaint in this case contain such allegations? The gist of the averments in reference to the injury is, not that the plaintiff was hurt, either while riding upon the car of defendant, or while in the act of getting on or off such car. It is not even alleged that at the time of the injury the plaintiff was upon premises lawfully in the occupation or control of the defendant; but the statement is that the injury occurred while the plaintiff was at a safe distance from the track on which the car should go,—a place safe for the plaintiff, and convenient for her to get on board. It would seem from the complaint that the place where she awaited the car was the same from which she gave the signal that she desired to get on board,—a signal which, we are asked to infer, was seen and recognized although the complaint fails to aver that fact. Again, the injury is not alleged to have been received by reason of the failure of the defendant's servants to acknowledge or respond to, or to comply with the signal of the plaintiff, nor that they failed to use proper endeavors to stop, or in fact to stop, as soon as they should have done, in order to receive the plaintiff on board, at the place desired by her; but the allegation is that the car, while going, was so carelessly and negligently managed and directed as to turn from the track where it should have gone, and run against the plaintiff. Now, it is manifest that here is no allegation of a cause of action growing out of the relation of carrier and passenger, in express terms, and according to the rules of pleading, which require direct statements, and exclude those by way of argument or inference merely, which demand the averment of ultimate and issuable, not of probative or evidential, facts. While, therefore, what the plaintiffs counsel say in their brief, referring to the Connecticut Practice Act (pages 57-59), is correct, namely, that "the forms adapted to suits of this character all contain the allegation that the defendant was a common carrier," it is equally true that they all contain, also, other allegations making such averment relevant, showing a contract, undertaking, or duty, or a liability of the defendant to the plaintiff, growing out of the relation of the parties, which is here utterly wanting, so far as any direct or positive statement is concerned. But, more than this, the facts stated in this complaint are not such as even indirectly, and by way of evidence or inference, tend to indicate, either the existence of the relation of carrier and passenger between the parties, or, if we were to assume such relation, that the cause of action was in any way founded upon it. The negligence relied on was such as might just as well arise in any case where two persons were using the public street, each lawfully, but each independent of the other; and of course, in any such case, it would not matter that one of such persons was a common carrier. Even if it could be held—and no case, we think, can be found anywhere that would be a precedent for the ruling—that the defendant was under a special duty, imposed upon it by law, to stop its car so as to safely receive the plaintiff as a passenger, there is, as we have seen, nothing in the complaint adapted to recovery for a breach of such duty. It was not in fact claimed that any injury was so received, but instead it was claimed, in argument, that if the car had stopped before entering upon the switch, and before reaching the place where it would be necessary, in order to have taken the plaintiff on board, the deflection might have been prevented. Evidence, therefore, of an injury by failure to stop to allow the plaintiff to get on board, would not have been admissible. Shepard v. New Haven & Northampton Co. 45 Conn. 54. "Under the practice act the right to recover rests upon, and is limited by, the facts alleged in the complaint." Loomis, J., in Powers v. Mulvey, 51 Conn. 482. But, without further discussion of this matter, it must, we think, be evident that the ruling of the court could in no way have injured the plaintiff, provided, notwithstanding such ruling, the facts as to the situation of the parties were fully found as they appear and are conceded to be, and that such facts show that such relation of carrier and passenger did not exist at the time when the plaintiff was struck by the car. We think they do so show, for while, perhaps, more favorable to the plaintiff's contention on this point than the allegations of the complaint, since it appeared in evidence that the driver did see, and responded to, the plaintiff's signal; that he expected to stop for her to get on board; and that she advanced upon the crosswalk for that purpose,—such facts are not sufficient to establish the relation. Creamer v. West End Street R. Co. 156 Mass. 820, 16 L. R. A. 490; Platt v. Forty-Second Street & G. Street Ferry R. Co. 2 Hun, 124; Booth, Street Railway Law, § 826. A common carrier is bound to exercise a high degree of care towards those who have put themselves under his care as passengers, but not until they have thus put themselves under his care. Up to that time, although they may have contracted with him for their future transportation, he owes no more care to them than to any third party. His special duty begins when, by coming upon his premises, or in the act of entering his vehicle, the actual relation of passenger to carrier is assumed. We therefore think the plaintiff was not injured by the action of the court in this regard. Indeed, upon the facts alleged and shown, the court was bound, without this averment (therefore unnecessary, by the rules of both common-law and code pleadings), to take judicial notice that the defendant was a common carrier of passengers, if such fact was relevant. 5 Special Laws Conn. pp. 306, 492; Gen. Stat. § 1087.

The second reason of appeal is that the court erred in not holding upon the facts found, that the defendant was guilty of negligence in not avoiding the defection of its car from its Asylum street track to and upon its branch track, which defection caused the injury to the plaintiff. We think it clear that whether there was negligence in this respect must, under the exceptional circumstances of the case, be regarded as a question which can be determined by no standard save that of the conduct of a reasonable man of ordinary prudence under like circumstances; that is to say, the law can apply no precise measure or rule, and therefore the inquiry is one of fact, in regard to which the determination of the trial court is conclusive. Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co. 60 Conn. 289; Fritts v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 62 Conn. 503; O'Neil v. East Windsor, 63 Conn. 154.

The remaining reason of appeal alleges error in overruling the plaintiff's claims of law 29 L. R. A.

upon the facts found; restating thus, in effect, the ground of the previous reason, adding, however, the claim that, it being found that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, the proof of the accident was prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, which was not rebutted by the facts of the case. We think the law is otherwise. Button v. Frink, 51 Conn. 842, 851, 50 Am. Rep. 24; Lennon v. Rawitzer, 57 Conn. 583, 587.

There is no error in the judgment complained of.

The other Judges concurred, except Hamersley, J., who dissented.

Hamersley, J., dissenting:

I cannot concur in the conclusion reached by a majority of the court.

1. The complaint, as originally drawn, alleged that the defendant was at the time of the accident a common carrier of passengers by horse railroad, and that the plaintiff had then occasion to take passage on one of the cars of the defendant, of the color and kind usually run on said line westward at said Ford street; that the plaintiff at said time was at the corner of Asylum and Ford streets, when a car of the defendant, westward bound, approached the place where the plaintiff was awaiting the same; that she gave to the servants of the defendant in charge of said car the usual and customary signal that she wished to board the car; that the plaintiff was then at a distance from the tracks of the defendant on which said car should go, such as to render it safe for the plaintiff, and convenient for her, to get on board the same, had it not been for the carelessness and negligence of the defendant and its said servants; that said servants so carelessly and negligently managed and directed said car that it turned from the track where it should have gone, and ran against the plaintiff with great force and violence; that by means thereof the plaintiff was injured, etc. Upon motion of the defendant the court ordered the allegation that "the defendant, at the time of the accident, was a common carrier of passengers by horse railroad, and that the plaintiff had then occasion to take passage on one of the cars of the defendant of the color and kind usually run on said line westward at Ford street," to be stricken from the complaint. This was error. It is evident the allegations expunged relate to the very gist of the plaintiff's special cause of action. She was not seeking redress on account of negligence in the driver of a private carriage or of an express cart. The negligence relied on was not such as might arise where two persons are using the public street, each independent of, and under no special duty towards, the other. It was the negligence involved in the performance of the duty imposed by law upon a common carrier of passengers, being a street-railroad corporation, towards a person having occasion to use a car of that company, and having duly signified a desire to use that car, and approaching the car, with the knowledge of its driver, for the purpose of entering the same. The fact that the defendant was running the car in question as a common carrier of passengers, and that the plaintiff was exercising her legal right to approach and enter this car as a passenger, with the knowledge of the defendant, constituted material facts, on which the pleader relied. The conditions of an injury, the special relations of the persons at the time of the injury, and their special rights and duties towards each other, are material facts, on which the pleader has a right to rely in an action based on injury from negligence. In granting the motion to expunge, the court necessarily ruled that the fact that the injury was caused while the plaintiff was in the exercise of her legal right to approach and enter the car, and while the defendant was under a special duty, imposed upon it by law, to stop its car so as safely to receive the plaintiff as a passenger, could not be treated as a part of the transaction proper to be considered in determining what care was actually exercised by the defendant, but was wholly immaterial to the plaintiff's cause of action. I think such ruling was material error. It was suggested in argument that the allegation was immaterial, because the complaint did not directly allege that "the relation of carrier and passenger existed between the parties, and that the contract relation of carrier and passenger could not be inferred from the other facts alleged." This assumes that the allegation was material only as introductory to an allegation of the contract relation of carrier and passenger. This assumption is not true. The allegation was material, as supporting the duty implied by law from the fact alleged, viz., the duty to stop its car at the place mentioned, and with the care proper to enable a person who had started to board the car in the manner alleged to do so safely. That such duty is imposed on the corporation, as a corollary to the special privileges granted it, seems clear. Whether the obligations of that duty are analogous to, or the same as, the obligations involved in the contract relation of carrier and passenger, is immaterial to the question in hand; and it is therefore immaterial whether such contract relation may begin when a waiting passenger demands passage, and his demand is acquiesced in by the defendant, or must be postponed a few seconds, until the passenger's hand or foot is brought in actual contact with the car. It was also claimed that such error is not material because the court did in fact take judicial notice of the defendant's being a common carrier of passengers, and did receive all the evidence which the plaintiff could introduce under the allegations expunged. It seems to me that the same erroneous view of the law that induced the court to strike out the allegation entered into the finding of the court on the question of negligence, and injuriously affected the interests of the plaintiff, and is therefore sufficient ground for a new trial.

2. The conclusion drawn by the court from the facts found is an erroneous conclusion of law, which this court can properly review. If the fact of negligence hinged only on the prudence shown by this particular driver in the performance of an individual duty, definable only in connection with the special emergency of this one case, the finding by the trial court of no negligence might be conclusive, but the fact of negligence hinges wholly upon a ruling on two questions presented by the ascertained and admitted facts spread upon the record: (1) Was it the duty of the defendant corporation to adopt the precaution mentioned, and bring its cars to a stop at the place specified, in order to take on passengers who are there standing for the purpose of boarding the cars in pursuance of demand for passage made by the passengers, and accepted by the conductors of the cars? (2) Was it the duty of the defendant corporation to adopt such precaution for the purpose of preventing the unexpected deflection of its cars from their proper and apparent course at a crosswalk on a crowded street, and accident always involving danger, which occasionally happens at this place? The court below ruled that such was not the duty of the defendant, because, in the opinion of the court, the adoption of such precaution was not required by ordinary prudence. In this ruling I think the court erred, and fail to see how there can be any doubt but that ordinary prudence does require the taking of such precaution. The opinion of the majority of the court, however, rests on the assumption that, no matter how clear it may be that the court below erred, its action cannot be reviewed, because the wrong conclusion is an erroneous inference of fact, and not an erroneous ruling or "decision upon a question of law arising in the trial." I cannot come to such conclusion. It is unnecessary to attempt a reconciliation of the apparently conflicting results, and more conflicting dicta, to be found in our decisions on the question of negligence as one of fact or law. I doubt if consistency is possible until we recognize the fact that the arbitrary rule—which is the rule of ancient practice, changed into an absolute mandate by the constitutional provision that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate—which protects the province of the jury from the interference of a judge in a jury trial, is inherently incapable of full application to court trials, and ought not to be conclusive in distinguishing those inferences of the court which are produced in whole or in part by weighing evidence and the credit to be given witnesses, and so are inferences of fact, from the evidence to be finally settled by the trial court from those inferences which are drawn solely from the facts specifically found, in producing which facts the evidence has exhausted itself, and left nothing for the court but to draw its inference in the exercise of its legal judgment from the facts it has found, and so are inferences of law which can be reviewed by a court of errors. Hayden v. Allyn, 55 Conn. 289. This attempt is unnecessary, because the inference of the court below which determined its judgment is wholly based on the court's definition of a legal public duty arising from ascertained conditions affecting the general public, and such definition, in trials to the court, has repeatedly been held by this court to be a question of law. Negligence, as a fact, may depend on the degree of prudence exercised by an individual in a special emergency, or it may depend on the existence of a duty to the public assumed by a corporation in accepting its charter and exercising the privileges granted thereby. In the latter case, where the facts are admitted, we have uniformly regarded the question of negligence as one of law. The right to occupy the streets of a city, given to a railroad corporation, clearly involves a legal duty to use such simple and appropriate precautions as will minimize the danger to the public caused by such occupation; and whether a particular precaution comes within that duty may be a question of law. And so, in this case, when the ascertained facts clearly established the danger (that of a car suddenly diverted from its course, without notice to the occupants of a crowded street, and in such manner as to so deceive a careful person that he cannot avoid collision), the remedy (a simple and appropriate precaution, in no way onerous, involving for the defendant no delay or trouble that is not a necessary incident to the use of its appliances), and the failure to adopt that precaution, the inference of a trial judge that such failure was not a violation of legal duty is a ruling or "decision upon a question of law," which this court should review. In Farrell v. Waterbury Horse R. Co., 60 Conn. 255, we held that no general rule has yet been formulated, the application of which will determine with certainty, in every case, whether the inference as to negligence to be drawn from ascertained facts is one of fact or law. But the instances are many where a particular rule has been laid down, when the inference of negligence depends on the question of legal duty, and in that case the following cases in support of such particular rule were cited: Gallagher v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 57 Conn. 446, 5 L. R. A. 787; Dyson v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 57 Conn. 9; Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. 58 Conn. 461; Beardsley v. Hartford, 50 Conn. 529, 47 Am. Rep. 677. In Gallagher v. New York & N. E. R. Co. the duty of a railroad company to build a fence in a particular place was held to be a question of law, and the court says: "For these reasons we conclude that the defendant was under no duty to fence the road at the place in question, and so the entire foundation on which the trial court predicated the finding of negligence fails, and the judgment was erroneous." In Dyson v. New York & N. E. R. Co. the duty of a railroad to slacken speed at a particular place is held to be a question of law. In Nolan v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. the duty to slacken speed is held to be a question of law, as also the duty to build a fence in a particular place under particular circumstances; and the right of this court, in a case of negligence, to determine as a question of law, whether the facts stated disclose any duty which the defendant owed to the plaintiff, and which was neglected, is distinctly affirmed. In Beardsley v. Hartford a finding of negligence by Judge Beardsley was overruled, because the finding involved an erroneous view of the duty of the city to take a certain precaution against danger in a highway at the place and under the circumstances stated in the finding. To treat the determination, under fixed conditions, of the legal duty of individuals or corporations,—especially a duty that arises from considerations of public policy,—as a question of fact, to be finally settled in each case by a trial court, involves the surrender by this court of a most important jurisdiction, vital alike to the protection of individual rights and corporate interests. The refusal to review this judgment involves such a surrender. The record is conclusive that the judgment is based on an erroneous view of the defendant's duty under the conditions found and stated. There was no question of adequacy of performance. There was no question of the exercise of ordinary prudence in the face of sudden and peculiar emergency, and of conflicting considerations that might affect one in such emergency. The conclusive and sole inference on which the judgment is based is one that decides whether, under the ascertained and constantly recurring conditions found, the legal duty of the defendant requires it to take the precaution specified. This plainly appears from the finding. The injury occurred from the sudden swinging of a car from its proper track in a manner so unexpected as to strike and seriously injure the plaintiff, lawfully in the street, and exercising all due caution, and also in the exercise of a legal right to enter the car, in pursuance of an agreement between her and the conductor. This deflection of the car was caused by the defendant, in the use of its own appliances. The court finds that such accident "occasionally, but not frequently, happens," and that the only way to prevent the accident is for the driver of a car approaching the switch to "come to a full stop or slow walk, and examine the switch after the hind feet of the team have passed." Upon these facts, the plaintiff claimed, as a matter of law, that it was the duty of the defendant to instruct its servants "to approach such switches at a walk, or to come to a full stop, if necessary, so as to avoid such an accident," and that it was the duty of the defendant's servant, in this case, "to have looked and seen whether the switch was properly placed, or not, when the car struck it." Upon this claim of law the court held that the legal duty of the defendant did not require it to take such precaution, and, after finding that this precaution is not usually taken by drivers, said, "nor do I think ordinary prudence requires it." Whether ordinary prudence requires the defendant to use such a precaution, in the fulfillment of its duty to use its appliances in the public street so as to avoid all unnecessary danger to the public, is not a question of fact, for a car driver to pass upon in the first instance, and a trial court to finally determine, but a question of legal duty, involving grave considerations of public policy, whose determination by a trial court can be reviewed by this court. The precaution was a reasonable and simple one, necessary to avoid occasional accidents which might prove dangerous. It was the legal duty of the defendant to adopt such a precaution.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

Mayor, etc., of SAVANNAH, Piffs. in Err.,
v.

Thomas MULLIGAN.

(.....Ga.....)

*1. The municipal authorities of a city have no right to destroy the private property of a citizen for the public good without compensating him for the loss thus occasioned, unless the property is itself a nuisance endangering the public health or safety. In that event it may be destroyed by such municipal authorities, without paying the owner its value, if the charter of the city confers upon them the power to abate such nuisances; but even then, unless the property is first condemned as a nuisance by appropriate proceedings, its destruction will be at the peril of the municipal authorities; and, when sued for its value, the burden is on them of showing that it was in fact a nuisance, and that its destruction was really necessary to the public health or safety. In cases of emergency the destruction may properly be ordered without a preliminary condemnation, but the municipal authorities will in that event carry the same burden.

2. In the present case the evidence showed conclusively and beyond question that the property destroyed was in fact a nuisance, endangering the public health, and that the mayor and aldermen of Savannah had due authority to abate it. Consequently the destruction of the property was lawful, and the owner was not entitled to recover its value from the city.

(January 23, 1895.)

ERROR to the Superior Court for Chatham County to review a judgment holding the City of Savannah liable for the value of certain property destroyed by its officers for the alleged prevention of the spread of a contagious disease. Reversed.

The case sufficiently appears in the opinion.

Mr. Samuel B. Adams, for plaintiff in error:

A city is not, generally, liable for the acts of its officers.

Attaway v. Cartersville, 68 Ga. 740; Doster v. Atlanta, 72 Ga. 233; Hammond v. Richmond County, Id. 188; Wright v. Augusta, 78 Ga. 241; Ogg v. Lansing, 35 Iowa, 495, 14 Am. Rep. 499; Mead v. New Haven, 40 Conn. 72, 16 Am. Rep. 14; Brown v. Vinahaven, 65 Me. 402, 20 Am. Rep. 709; Mechem, Pub. Off. §§ 850, 851; Ga. Code, § 4875; MacDonnell's City Code, §§ 643 et seq.

Section 2226 of the Code does not cover this case.

There can be no liability unless this is "declared by express enactment."

There was no liability at common law in the cases mentioned in this section, or in similar cases.

*Headnotes by SIMMONS, CH. J.

NORM.—On the question as to the right to compensation for property destroyed in abating a public nuisance, see note to Orlando v. Pragg (Fla.) 19 L. R. A. 192.
29 L. R. A.

See also 35 L. R. A. 281; 36 L. R. A. 554; 41 L. R. A. 566.

Bowditch v. Boston, 101 U. S. 16, 25 L. ed. 980; Keller v. Corpus Christi, 50 Tex. 614, 83 Am. Rep. 614; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 956; Dunbar v. Augusta, 90 Ga. 890; Parham v. Decatur County Justices of Inferior Ct. 9 Ga. 348; Mills, Em. Don. § 7.

Messrs. Gignillias & Stubbs, for defendant in error:

In the Constitution of the United States the language is, "nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation."

In the constitution of Georgia, "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid." It is begging the question to say that the case at bar does not come within these constitutional provisions.

The loss should be made good.

Bishop v. Macon, 7 Ga. 200; Young v. McKensie, 8 Ga. 81; 1 Bl. Com. 139.

The paraphernalia of a scarlet-fever patient is not a nuisance at common law.

If section 2226 means anything, it means that the property to which it refers should not be considered a nuisance to which the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas" should apply.

If this was a nuisance, it was a public nuisance.

Bouvier's definition of a public nuisance is, "such an inconvenience or troublesome offense as annoys the whole community in general."

In order to create a legal nuisance, the act of man must have contributed to its existence. Wood, Nuisances, pp. 118-120.

The subject of contagious and infectious diseases, where treated, is classified under an entirely different head of nuisances.

Ga. Code, Index, p. 1442, pt. 1, title 16, chap. 1.

In the case at bar and all similar cases, the maxim, "sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas" does not apply, because the state of things "exists or arises from purely natural causes."

Wood, Nuisances, p. 118.

Blackstone says "the absolute rights" or "civil liberties" are principally three: viz.: the right of personal security, personal liberty, and private property.

In a case of actual necessity to prevent the spreading of a fire, the ravages of a pestilence, the advance of a hostile army, or any other great public calamity, the private property of an individual may be lawfully taken and used or destroyed for the relief, protection, or safety of the many. In all such cases while agents of the public who officiate are protected from individual liability, the sufferers are nevertheless entitled under the constitution to just compensation from the public for the loss.

Bishop v. Macon, 7 Ga. 200.

It is equally evident on the other hand, that if the private property of an individual, the whole or a part of which might otherwise have been saved to the owner, is taken or destroyed for the benefit of the public, or of the inhabitants of a particular county, town, city, or other smaller section of the community, those for whose supposed benefit the sacrifice is made, ought in equity and justice, to make good the loss which the individual has sustained for the common advantage of all.

Ibid.; Dawson v. Kuttner, 48 Ga. 188.

In all cases where a statute creates a right of action in individuals or a class of individuals, it is remedial.

Neal v. Moultrie, 12 Ga. 104.

Remedial statutes should be liberally construed when enlarging common-law rights and privileges.

Price v. Bradford, 5 Ga. 368; Henderson v. Alexander, 2 Ga. 85.

The term "property" in section 2226 includes both real and personal property.

Code §, § 5; Dawson v. Kuttner, supra.

Simmons, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action against the municipal corporation of the city of Savannah for the value of a feather bed, pillows, and mattress destroyed by a sanitary inspector of that city, under orders of its health officer. On certiorari the superior court ruled that the city was liable to the plaintiff, under section 2226 of the Code; and to this ruling the city excepted. The section referred to is as follows: "Analogous to the right of eminent domain is the power from necessity vested in corporate authorities of cities, towns, and counties, to interfere with and sometimes destroy the private property of the citizen for the public good, such as the destruction of houses to prevent the extension of a conflagration, or the taking possession of buildings to prevent the spreading of contagious diseases. In all such cases, any damages accruing to the owner from such acts, and which would not otherwise have been sustained, must be paid by such corporation."

We do not think the section above quoted is applicable to this case. Under the ruling of this court in Dunbar v. Augusta, 90 Ga. 390, a city having the power, under its charter, to abate nuisances endangering the public health and safety, may destroy property without making compensation to the owner, where the property constitutes a nuisance of that kind; and we think the decision in that case controls the present case. There the city authorities destroyed grain which had become wet and damaged by a flood while stored in the plaintiffs' warehouse. The plaintiffs sued the city for the value of the grain, and it was held by this court that, "it not being alleged in the declaration that the damaged grain condemned and destroyed by the municipal authorities was not a nuisance or was not dangerous to the public health (that being the ground on which it was condemned and destroyed), no cause of action against the municipality was set out in the declaration." Bleckley, Ch. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "To destroy property because it is a dangerous nuisance is not to appropriate it to a public use, but to prevent any use of it by the owner, and put an end to its existence because it could not be used consistently with the maxim, 'sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas.'" Section 2226 of the Code, though not referred to in the opinion, was cited and relied on by counsel for the plaintiff in error in that case, and was not overlooked by the court in the consideration of the case. An illustration of the class of cases to which this section applies will be found in the case of Dawson v. Kuttner, 48 Ga. 183, the only case we know of in which the section referred to has been construed. In that case the plaintiff was held entitled to recover from the municipal corporation for property destroyed by the authorities thereof in attempting to prevent the spread of a fire, but the fire did not originate in and had not extended to the property in question at the time of its destruction. In cases of emergency the municipal authorities, if authorized by their charter to abate nuisances, are not bound, before ordering the destruction of property as a nuisance, to wait until the fact that the property is a nuisance is judicially determined. In such cases the destruction may be ordered without a preliminary condemnation. See Americus v. Mitchell, 79 Ga. 807; Dunbar v. Augusta, supra, and cases cited.

Unless, however, the property is first condemned as a nuisance by appropriate proceedings, its destruction will be at the peril of the municipal authorities; and, when sued for its value, the burden is upon them of showing that it was in fact a nuisance, and that its destruction was really necessary to the public health and safety. In the present case the evidence showed conclusively and beyond question that the property destroyed was in fact a nuisance endangering the public health, having been used as bedding by a person who had scarlet fever, a highly contagious disease; and the mayor and aldermen of the city, under its charter, had ample authority to abate the nuisance. Code, § 4875. Consequently the destruction of the property was lawful, and the owner was not entitled to recover its value from the city.

Judgment reversed.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

SEBREE DEPOSIT BANK, Appt.,

v.

J. P. MORELAND et al.

(.....Ky.....)

1. Averments that notice of dishonor was received in due time by the acceptor and at once delivered to the drawer and indorser by him are mere conclusions of the pleader and do not sufficiently state due diligence.

2. A subsequent promise to pay will not bind an indorser who has been released by lack of notice, unless supported by a consideration.

(November 17, 1894.)

NOTE.—Necessity of new consideration to support waiver of failure to give notice of dishonor or subsequent promise by indorser.

The question of consideration has seldom been discussed in connection with this question but the overwhelming weight of authority is to the effect that an indorser released by the laches of the holder of negotiable paper from liability thereon may again assume such liability by voluntary action on his part; and this has been permitted from the beginning to the present time in case after case without anything to show that there was any new consideration, and without any intimation by the courts that they considered such consideration necessary or that the question of liability was affected by its absence.

Waiver of laches and presumption of diligence.

The indorser's liability has been fixed in two ways: First, when the fact was shown that he recognized his continued liability either by a promise to pay or by payment the presumption was raised that there had been no laches and that he had been duly charged on the paper. This rule obtains even in jurisdictions where a new consideration is required to restore liability when the fact of laches is made to appear. Second, when there was no chance for the operation of the presumption because the fact of laches appeared then it was held that a distinct admission of liability operated as a waiver of the laches.

The whole body of case law was fully examined in 1840, by Judge Cowen in Tebbetts v. Dowd, 23 Wend. 379, and he pointed out distinctly the difference which should exist between cases in which it was sought to hold the indorser because of waiver of the laches and those in which his promise was taken as prima facie evidence that due diligence had been observed. In the latter case he held that no proof of knowledge of laches was required, and in the former he said that there were three rules: The first requiring the clearest proof of knowledge of laches, the second going to the opposite extreme, and the third, which Chancellor Kent states was supported by the weight of authority, was that the knowledge may be inferred as a fact from the promise under the attending circumstances without requiring clear and affirmative proof of it.

The doctrines of presumption and of waiver rest upon wholly different grounds, although in many of the adjudged cases the distinction between them has not been clearly drawn or adverted to. The former rests upon our common experience, that men will not promise to do what they are under no obligation to perform, and what they receive no consideration for doing, and therefore the promise is held to be presumptive evidence that the indorser knows that all things have been rightly done

20 L. R. A.

APPPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Davies County in favor of defendants in an action brought to enforce the liability of the maker and indorser upon an accommodation bill of exchange.

Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Reuben A. Miller and Yeaman & Lockett for appellant.

Mr. C. S. Walker for appellees.

Pryor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case went off on the pleadings, the court below sustaining a demurrer to the reply of the plaintiff, and, the latter failing to hold him. Waiver is the opposite of this. The indorser is held upon the ground that he expressly waives the defense which he might have set up. But no one can waive anything, of the existence of which he has no notice, and therefore he must be conscious, at the time of the new promise, of all the facts which in law are essential to discharge him from liability. If the doctrine of presumption prevails, its only effect is to shift the burden of proof. The plaintiff may rest upon proof of the new promise, and thus throw upon the indorser the double burden of showing laches and his want of knowledge of such laches. Glassford v. Davis, 36 N. J. L. 348.

In McFatrige v. Williston (1894) 25 N. S. 11, the court divided on the question whether or not the promise was made with a knowledge of the facts, but the first opinion states that a promise to pay is only prima facie evidence of notice, and if it is found as a fact that there was a neglect to present and to give notice of dishonor, a waiver must be shown to enable the plaintiff to succeed.

If the proof shows that the demand was not made and notice given the case does not stand on the presumption but upon the waiver, and this cannot avail unless the defendant is shown to have knowledge of the laches at the time he made his promise. Bruce v. Lytle, 13 Barb. 163.

Without knowledge of the facts the promise will not amount to a waiver but only to prima facie evidence that all the necessary acts have been duly performed. Harvey v. Troupe, 23 Miss. 590.

Promise as evidence of notice.

In an action against the drawer of a dishonored bill of exchange in which notice of dishonor to the defendant was not proved but an agreement was proved by the drawer after the bill was dishonored to pay it and several others by installments if suit was not brought on them, the court held that this agreement was evidence that notice of dishonor was given to defendant "for if notice had not been given nothing would become due upon the bill from defendant; the latter would not therefore have agreed to pay (indorsee) whatever was due upon this particular bill but would have insisted upon a discharge." Gunsow v. Metz (1823) 1 Barn. & C. 193.

A promise to pay is evidence that due notice of dishonor was given or that it was waived. Cordery v. Colvin (1863) 14 C. B. N. S. 374, 32 L. J. C. P. 210, 9 Jur. N. S. 1200, 8 L. T. N. S. 245. One of the judges states that it amounts to an acceptance of the notice nunc pro tunc.

When the bill was payable on December 24, and no notice of dishonor reached defendant until January 7, following, when he promised to pay it, Lord Ellenborough said although the promise to amend, or plead further, a judgment was rendered for the defendant. The action is based on a negotiable note for $4,000, drawn by the appellee J. P. Moreland on S. P. Walden, in favor of I. H. Hickman (another appellee), and made payable at the Seabree Deposit Bank. The paper was indorsed by Hickman, and discounted by the bank and the proceeds placed to the credit of the acceptor, Walden, the paper having been made, as is alleged, for his benefit. The note was protested for nonpayment, and the defense made by Moreland, the drawer, and Hickman, the indorser, is the failure of the bank (the holder) to give them notice of the paper's dishonor, and other defenses not necessary to be considered. It is insisted by counsel for the bank that the averments of the answer made on information and belief of facts that must, if they exist, be within the personal knowledge of the defendants, is bad pleading, and the demurrer to the reply should have been carried back to the answer, and sustained to that pleading. There was no demurrer to the answer, and the reply of the plaintiff placed directly in issue the fact of the want of notice to the defendants of the dishonor of the paper, and covered the defect, if any existed.

It is alleged in the reply that the notary, in behalf of the holder (the bank), "mailed notices of the nonpayment and protest of the bill to each of the defendants on the 12th of July, 1892, to the acceptor, drawer, and in-

was made to the then holder of the bill and not to plaintiff yet it was evidence that the defendant was conscious of his liability to pay the note which must be because he had had due notice of the dishonor. And Bailey, J., considered the promise of the defendant either as an acknowledgment that he had had due notice of the dishonor or that without such notice he was the proper person to pay the note as the party for whose use it was drawn. Porter v. Rayworth, 13 East, 417.

If a person who has not had due notice of the dishonor of a bill of exchange thinks fit to acknowledge his liability though he does so to a person other than the person who afterwards sues upon the bill, the acknowledgment is sufficient to enable the latter to maintain an action on the bill. Rabey v. Gilbert, 6 Hurlst. & N. 538, 30 L. J. Exch. 171. In that case, however, the admission seems to have been made to plaintiff himself.

Evidence of a promise by the party sought to be charged that the bill will be satisfied either by himself or the acceptor supercedes the necessity of proving the dishonor of the bill and notice. Wood v. Brown (1816) 1 Stark. 217.

In Tobey v. Berly, 26 Ill. 426, the rule is stated that from a subsequent promise to pay with a knowledge of the facts the law will presume that the party making such promise was liable and that the conditions requisite to fix his liability had been complied with.

Part payment or a promise to pay must be taken either as an admission that the notice was sufficient or as a waiver of it. Union Bank v. Grimshaw, 15 La. 321; Oglesby v. Steamboat D. S. Stacy, 10 La. Ann. 117.

In the absence of anything to show that the proper steps to charge the indorser were not taken, his subsequent promise to pay is prima facie evidence that they were and dispenses with other proof. Tebbetts v. Dowd, 23 Wend. 379, reversing Trimble v. Thorne, 16 Johns. 152, 8 Am. Dec. 302, in which it was held that it will not be inferred from the mere fact that a subsequent promise is made that regular notice has been given or was intended to be waived. If the promise is made under a mistaken belief that due notice was given it is not binding.

Evidence of a promise to pay is admissible as tending to show that due notice had actually been received. Myers v. Standart, 11 Ohio St. 29.

After a promise has been made it is equally repugnant to reason and to law that the promisor should claim to be discharged for want of notice and call on the other party to prove that he proceeded in strict conformity with all the necessities of the law-merchant. Pate v. McClure, 4 Rand. (Va.) 164.

A count by indorsee against drawer of a bill of exchange alleging presentment and dishonor and due notice thereof to defendant is sustained by proof of a subsequent promise to pay notwithstanding it is proved or admitted that due notice of dishonor was not given. Killby v. Rochusen (1865) 18 C. B. N. S. 387. In that case Williams, J., said that the promise to pay upon being informed of the nonpayment operates as an acceptance of the notice given as due notice.

In Campbell v. Webster (1845) 2 C. B. 255, 15 L. J. C. P. 4, 9 Jur. 302, one of the judges says, if when payment is demanded the party omits to avail himself of the preliminary objection of want of protest or want of notice, it is a question for the jury, whether he does not thereby admit that all the steps that are essential to create liability in him have been duly taken. In that case certain letters were relied on for such proof, and the court says: "They show that defendant was conscious that there had been a protest and that he had had notice, otherwise he would not have put his nonliability to pay upon the ground he did. He is evidently struggling to avoid payment of the bill. If instead of mentioning that which would have been a good answer he sets up something foreign, the good ground of defense does not exist. The letters are altogether silent as to want of protest or notice. The answer now attempted to be set up is that the letters contained a mere conditional promise to pay. But when we are determining the point by reference to what is supposed to have been passing in the mind of the defendant it is quite immaterial whether the promise is conditional or not."

Where the indorser of a bill when applied to for payment said, if the holder would call again and bring the account with him he would pay it, the court said: "When a man against whom there is a demand promises to pay it for the necessary facilitating of business in transactions between man and man everything must be presumed against him." It was therefore to be presumed prima facie from the promise so made that the bill had been presented for payment in due time and dishonored, and that due notice had been given to the defendant. Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 321.

And the above principles have been applied to nearly all the steps which are necessary to bind the indorser.

A promise to pay furnishes presumptive evidence that the proper steps were taken to bind the one making the promise. Brennan v. Lowry, 4 Daly, 253; Stix v. Mathews, 63 Mo. 371; Clayton v. Phipps, 14 Mo. 309; Dorsey v. Watson, 14 Mo. 59; Walker v. Laverty, 6 Munf. 437; Mense v. Osborn, 5 Mo. 544; Croxon v. Worthen, 5 Mea. & W. 5, 2 Horn & H. 12, 3 Jur. 290.

A promise after knowledge of discharge is an admission of notice—an admission of the sufficiency of the notice received. People's Nat. Bank v. Dibrrell, 91 Tenn. 301.

dorser of the bill, in an envelope addressed to S. P. Walden, at Owensboro, Kentucky, which was his postoffice, and believes and charges that the said Walden at once duly notified said drawer and indorser, Moreland and Hickman, of the dishonor of the bill, and that the defendants knew before the maturity of the paper it would not be paid, and knew that it had not been paid, and with full knowledge of these facts did repeatedly promise to pay the bill, and relying on these promises forbore to sue for several months."

It appears from this pleading the party not entitled to the notice of dishonor, and without a request even to do so, had been intrusted with the duty of giving this notice to the drawer and indorser, so as to continue their liability; and, with that view, it is alleged in the reply that when notices of the protest were received by the acceptor he at once delivered them to the drawer and indorser. When the notice of protest was received by Walden is not alleged, and while it must be inferred, as a matter of law, that he received the notices in due time, as the notice was placed in the postoffice as soon as it could be done, if it had been necessary to hold him bound, no such inference will be indulged as to the drawer and indorser of the paper. As they were each entitled to notice, the time it was received by the acceptor, as well as the time it was handed them by him, should have been distinctly alleged, and the averments that it was received in due Notice.

A promise to pay or admission of liability dispenses with proof of notice. Durham v. Price, 5 Yerr. 300, 23 Am. Dec. 287; Dickerson v. Turner, 12 Ind. 228; McPhetres v. Halley, 32 Me. 72; Higgins v. Morrison, 4 Dana, 100; Sherman v. Clark, 3 McLean, 91; Bartholomew v. Hill, 5 L. T. N. S. 756, 10 Week. Rep. 273.

But in Chapman v. Annett, 1 Car. & K. 552, it is stated by the chief baron that a promise to pay after failure to give notice of dishonor does not necessarily admit the notice although it may waive it.

Demand.

The promise amounts to an admission that the bill had been duly presented, dishonored, and due notice thereof given. Martin v. Ewing, 2 Humph. 539.

A promise to pay with knowledge of a lack of notice will raise the presumption that a proper demand had been made. Hall v. Freeman, 2 Nott & McC. 479, 10 Am. Dec. 621.

A promise to pay by a person knowing the bill to be due, and knowing that he was entitled to have it presented when due to the acceptor or maker and to receive notice of its dishonor, furnishes presumptive evidence of the presentment and notice. Taylor v. Jones (1809) 2 Campb. 108; Gibbon v. Coggon, Id. 188; Greenway v. Hindley, 4 Campb. 52; Frost v. Harrison, 8 La. Ann. 123; Walker v. Walker, 7 Ark. 552.

Proof of payment of part of the amount by the indorser will dispense with the proving of a demand upon the maker. Vaughan v. Fuller (1746) 2 Strange, 1246.

The cases are not quite agreed, however, as to how far a demand will be presumed. In one case it was held that, in order to have the new promise effective to charge the indorser, it must be shown that a demand for the amount was made upon the acceptor and that he refused to pay it, since the indorsee's liability only arises in case of the acceptor's default. Brown v. McDermot, 5 Esp. 265.

So it has been held that a promise to pay without knowledge that a demand of payment has not been made upon the maker will not bind the indorser. Good v. Sprigg (1819) 2 Cranch, C. C. 172.

An admission by the indorser of a note, when applied to for payment, that the debt was his, does not admit the right of the holder to resort to him on the note and that he has received no damage from the want of notice unless he was also apprised of the laches of the holder in not making a regular demand of payment of the note by which he was discharged from his responsibility to pay it. That due notice was not given defendant could not fail to know; but a regular demand of a maker of the note would not be inferred from mere admissions of regular notice. Thornton v. Wynn, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 183, 5 L. ed. 595.

29 L. R. A.

Knowledge on the part of the indorser that the demand upon the maker has not been made is material, and must be proved notwithstanding the fact that he knew that the note had not been paid and that notice of nonpayment had not been given and was aware that he was discharged from liability. Parks v. Smith, 155 Mass. 26.

A promise to pay without knowledge that the bill had not been presented will not be binding. Kelley v. Brown, 5 Gray, 108.

Nonacceptance.

In regard to notice of nonacceptance there seems to be a strong tendency not to give the promise its usual effect.

In Biesard v. Hirst (1770) 5 Burr. 2870, in which notice of refusal to accept was not given but notice of nonpayment was duly given, upon which the drawer promised to take up the bill, but on learning that notice of nonacceptance was not given refused to do so, the court held that he was discharged.

A promise to pay, made after the bill becomes due, is considered as an admission of regular presentment for payment and of due notice, or at least waives the objection that it has not been done. But if the bill has been presented for acceptance before it falls due, and dishonored, there is no inference that the party who promised to pay after the bill falls due knew of such refusal to accept or of the neglect to give notice of such nonacceptance. Such promise does not furnish presumptive evidence even of the presentment and notice. A promise to pay after a bill becomes due which had been presented for acceptance before it fell due, and dishonored, cannot be relied upon as an independent cause of action in the absence of due notice of such dishonor, there being no consideration to uphold the promise. Landrum v. Trowbridge, 2 Met. (Ky.) 238; Bank of Tennessee v. Smith, 9 B. Mon. 609.

As evidence of waiver.

If an indorser with full knowledge of the facts by which he is released by law unconditionally promises to pay, it is an implied waiver of demand and notice, and a promise by the indorser of a promissory note to pay it after due is at least prima facie evidence of demand and notice. Hasard v. White, 26 Ark. 155.

A promise to pay is evidence of an agreement to waive protest. Cardwell v. Allan, 33 Gratt. 160.

In Woods v. Dean (1832) 3 Best & S. 101, 32 L. J. Q. B. 1, 7 L. T. N. S. 561, 11 Week. Rep. 22, all the judges agreed that admission of liability is evidence of a waiver of a right to notice, and one of them stated that promise to pay when aware that there has been no notice is equivalent to agreeing that he will not take advantage of a want of notice, in other words is a waiver of a right to notice.

time by the acceptor, and at once delivered to the drawer and indorser by him, are mere conclusions of the pleader, and will not authorize the court to say that such diligence had been exercised by the holder of the paper as to continue the liability of the drawer and indorser.

It was a matter of doubt for a long time whether the acceptor of a bill, who had permitted his paper to go to protest, could give a valid notice, but Mr. Daniel, in his treatise on Negotiable Instruments, says it is now "a principle of the law-merchant, however unphilosophical it may seem." 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 990. When a notice is delivered by a special messenger, other than through the regular mail, it must distinctly appear when it was delivered, so as to enable the court to say that it was delivered as soon as it could have reached the party sought to be charged by due course of mail. In this case the bank made the acceptor its agent to deliver the notice of protest, and inclosed the notices to the acceptor by mail. They were not sent directly to either the indorser or drawer, and it is therefore manifest the averments of the reply should present a state of facts showing that the appellees received this notice as soon as it could have reached them by the regular mail. That they were sent by due course of mail to the payer, and when received delivered at once to the drawer and indorser, are not such facts as would authorize the inference that due diligence had been exercised

As a waiver.

Excepting the few cases which require a consideration to support a new promise to pay, the cases agree that the laches may be waived.

In Hicks v. Beaufort, 5 Scott, 598, 4 Bing. N. C. 229, 1 Arn. 55, 2 Jur. 255, it is said: "The cases go to this point only that if after the dishonor of a bill the drawer distinctly promises to pay, that is evidence from which it may be inferred he has received notice of the dishonor; because men are not prone to make admissions against themselves, and therefore when the drawer promises to pay it is to be presumed he does so because he knows the acceptor has refused."

But that does not state the law as it became established on the subject of waiver.

If an indorser with full knowledge of the laches of the holder in neglecting to protest the note or bill unequivocally assents to continue his liability or to be responsible as though due protest had been made, he is held to have waived the right to object and will stand in the same position as if he had been regularly charged by presentment, demand, and notice. This assent must be clearly established and will not be inferred from doubtful or equivocal acts or language. A promise made with full notice affords the clearest evidence that the indorser does not intend to take advantage of the laches of the holder, and the law without any new consideration moving between the parties gives effect to the promise. The assent of the indorser to be bound notwithstanding he has not been duly charged, may be established by any transaction between him and the holder which clearly indicates this purpose and intent. Ross v. Hurd, 71 N. Y. 14, 21 Am. Rep. 1.

The right to insist on a discharge may be waived. Curtis v. Martin, 20 Ill. 557.

After the maturity of the note the indorser may waive proof of demand and notice. Hoadley v. Bliss, 9 Ga. 303.

There may be a waiver of notice. Long v. Crawford, 18 Md. 220.

The waiver is as effectual after as before the maturity of the note. Ringe v. Kimball, 124 Mass. 300.

The indorser can dispense with the conditions for his benefit as well after as before the paper matures. Yeager v. Farwell, 80 U. S. 12 Wall. 6, 20 L. ed. 476.

If when called upon to pay a bill of exchange the indorser says he has not had due notice of dishonor, but at the same time states that since the debt is justly due he will pay it, he thereby waives the defense of want of notice. Lundie v. Robertson, 7 East, 221.

In a case in which the waiver was made before the maturity of the note the court said satisfactory proof of a waiver is in all respects equivalent in 29 L. R. A.

law to a compliance with the requirements as to giving notice. Pugh v. McCormick, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 361, 20 L. ed. 789.

A promise with knowledge of neglect of notice will be a waiver of notice and render the indorser liable. Perry v. Rhodes, 2 Cranch, C. C. 37.

Where the plaintiff's conduct had discharged the indorser but after notice of the laches he promised to pay the note Wilmut, J., said: "By his conduct he has waived the negligence and acquitted the plaintiff." Whitaker v. Morris, 1 Esp. Dig. 68.

A promise by the indorser of a promissory note to pay it with full knowledge of the laches of the holder, waives the laches and renders him liable on the note. Wilkes v. Jacks, Peake, N. P. 202; Patterson v. Becher, 6 J. B. Moore, 319; Strong v. King, 35 Ill. 9, 85 Am. Dec. 335; Davis v. Miller, 88 Iowa, 114; Cheshire v. Taylor, 29 Iowa, 492; Allen v. Harrah, 80 Iowa, 333; Debuys v. Mollere, 3 Mart. N. S. 318, 15 Am. Dec. 159; Bank of United States v. Ellis, 13 La. 393; Byram v. Hunter, 36 Me. 217; Turnbull v. Mad-dux, 68 Md. 579; Hobbs v. Straine, 149 Mass. 212; Hopkins v. Liswell, 12 Mass. 62; Armstrong v. Chadwick, 127 Mass. 156; Robbins v. Pinckard, 5 Smedes & M. 51; State Bank of St. Louis v. Bartle, 114 Mo. 276; Pratte v. Hanly, 1 Mo. 35; Wilson v. Huston, 13 Mo. 146, 53 Am. Dec. 128; Salsbury v. Benick, 44 Mo. 554; Harnes v. Davies County Sav. Assn., 46 Mo. 387; Ladd v. Kenney, 2 N. H. 340, 9 Am. Dec. 77; Workingmen's Bkg. Co. of East St. Louis v. Biell, 57 Mo. App. 410; Faulkner v. Faulkner, 73 Mo. 327; Caldwell v. Porter, 17 N. H. 27; Rogers v. Hackett, 21 N. H. 100; Duryee v. Dennison, 5 Johns. 248; Meyer v. Hieher, 47 N. Y. 255; De Wolf v. Murray, 2 Sandf. 166; Patterson v. Stettauer, 8 Jones & S. 54; Gardiner v. Jones, 6 N. C. 429; Ashford v. Robinson, 30 N. C. 114; Moore v. Tucker, 25 N. C. 347; Oxnard v. Varnum, 111 Pa. 193, 56 Am. Rep. 255; Smith v. Lownsdale, 6 Or. 78; Johnson v. Arrington, 5 Or. 455; Stone v. Smith, 30 Tex. 133, 94 Am. Dec. 299; Blodgett v. Durgin, 32 Vt. 361. And the same is true of the drawer of a bill of exchange. Kupfer v. Bank of Galeno, 34 Ill. 323.

In Borradale v. Lowe (1811) 4 Taunt. 93, where due notice was not given to an indorser, and the plaintiff relied for recovery on a letter which did not make an express promise, it was argued for defendant that there is a difference between a drawer and indorser of a bill of exchange; the drawer may always look to the acceptor but the indorser after prior indorsers have been discharged must lose the bill if he pays it. There is then no consideration for such promise; it is a nudum pactum and will not bind. But Mansfield, Ch. J., said: "I do not find any case in which the indorser after being discharged by the laches of the holder has been held liable upon his indorsement except where an express promise to pay the bill has been proved. In most of the cases where the defendants have been held liable they have either made an

by the holder, or that the drawer and indorser received the notices as soon as they would have received them if the notices had been deposited in the regular mail in due time, addressed to each of the appellees. The envelope in which the notices were inclosed, addressed to the acceptor, might have remained in the postoffice for days before its reception by him, and, while the personal service or delivery of the notice by the acceptor to the appellees would have been good if delivered in due time, it must appear, when the postoffice may be used as a means of giving the notice, that a deposit of the notice in the post office within due time was made, addressed to the party affected by the dishonor of the paper, or that notice was given by the holder, or his agent, to the party sought to be made liable, by delivery made as soon as it could have been received by due course of mail. There is no pretense that any notice was inclosed to the address of those parties, and sent by mail, and no state of fact alleged showing that diligence on the part of the holder, so as to hold these appellees liable on the paper, unless it arises from the promise to pay alleged to have been made after they had known of the protest, and the failure of the acceptor to pay, and his inability, long before the note matured, to make payment.

It is insisted by counsel for the bank that the promises to pay by the drawer and indorser amounted to such an acknowledgment express promise to pay, or a promise when they have full knowledge at the time that they were discharged; or where there was a real debt binding on their conscience."

A promise to pay will amount to a waiver. Cordery v. Colville, 33 L. J. C. P. 210, 9 Jur. N. S. 1200, 8 L. T. N. S. 245, 14 C. B. N. S. 374. If made with knowledge of the law and facts applicable to the case. Woods v. Dean, 32 L. J. Q. B. 1, 8 Best & S. 101, 7 L. T. N. S. 561, 11 Week. Rep. 22.

Where there was evidence that an indorser who was not shown to have received due notice of dishonor, offered to pay down part of the amount and costs, and to secure the residue by a warrant of attorney, the court said that this was not enough to dispense with proof of notice of dishonor, saying that "defendant might, if time had been given him, have been willing to have waived any objection with respect to notice of dishonor." Standage v. Creighton (1883) 5 Car. & P. 403. The ground of this ruling is a little difficult to understand but the implication is that the absence of notice could not be waived. But even if it could not, other cases have admitted the proof of promise to pay for the purpose of dispensing with proof of giving of notice.

Clear and unequivocal evidence of waiver is necessary. Gregory v. Allen, Mart. & Y. 76.

What knowledge necessary to effect waiver.

To effect a waiver it is unanimously agreed that the promisor must have had knowledge of the facts affecting the question of his liability.

In Goodall v. Dolley, 1 T. R. 712, where without knowledge of the fact that notice of nonacceptance had not been given the indorser promised to pay the bill by installments, the court held that having made the promise without notice of the circumstances the promisor was not bound by it.

Where, at a conversation which took place before notice of dishonor could have been received, the indorser made a conditional promise to pay it, and there was no regular notice afterwards, the court said: "Does the admission or promise suffice? I think clearly not; if the conversation took place before the dishonor could be known and the promise was not an express, absolute, and unconditional promise and did not dispense with the want of notice of dishonor." Pickin v. Graham, 1 Crompt. & M. 725, 8 Tyrw. 223.

If the promise to pay is made in ignorance of the fact that protest for nonpayment was not made in proper time, or, if it is made under a mistake of fact, it is of no effect. Fotheringham v. Price, 1 Bay. 291, 1 Am. Dec. 618.

The neglect to demand payment of the maker ought to be disclosed to the indorser at the time he makes his promise in order to make the promise binding. Myers v. Coleman, Anthon, N. P. 150.

Where the notarial certificate was excluded from evidence because it did not have a proper seal, the 39 L. R. A.

court says the evidence shows that defendant had no knowledge of the failure of plaintiffs to make a demand but on the contrary thereof the promise was made at a time when he supposed that a proper demand and protest had been made and that a proper notice thereof was being given him. It is clear, therefore, that defendant had not full knowledge of the facts at the time of making the demand and the same was not binding upon him. Richard v. Boller, 51 How. Pr. 371. It may be questioned, however, whether the mistake as to the sufficiency of the certificate in that case was not a mistake of law rather than of fact, and so not available to the one making the promise.

A promise to pay in ignorance of facts material to a full understanding of the indorser's rights and obligations will not constitute a waiver although he then knows that payment was not demanded of the maker. Low v. Howard, 10 Cush. 159.

A promise made in absence of knowledge of the fact that no demand for payment was made will not be binding. Low v. Howard, 11 Cush. 233; Arnold v. Dresser, 8 Allen, 425.

Subsequent acknowledgment and promises made under ignorance of the fact of neglect of due demand of the law arising from such negligence was not obligatory. Thornton v. Stoddert, 1 Cranch, C. C. 334.

To bind the indorser he must either have promised to pay or acknowledged that he was liable with a knowledge of the facts as they really existed. Kennon v. McRea, 7 Port. (Ala.) 175.

Rights will not be waived by a promise made in ignorance of material facts affecting them. Martin v. Winslow, 2 Mason, 241.

A promise to pay in ignorance of the facts which discharge is of no effect. Tickner v. Roberts, 11 La. 14, 30 Am. Dec. 703; Hazelton v. Colburn, 1 Robt. 345; Commercial Bank of Natchez v. Perry, 10 Rob. (La.) 61, 43 Am. Dec. 168; New Orleans Sav. Bank v. Harper, 13 Rob. (La.) 331, 43 Am. Dec. 223; Groton v. Dallheim, 6 Me. 473; Hunt v. Wadeigh, 23 Me. 371, 45 Am. Dec. 108; Oft v. Vick, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 69; Baskerville v. Harris, 41 Miss. 535; Norris v. Ward, 59 N. H. 437; Crain v. Colwell, 8 Johns. 384; Griffin v. Goff, 12 Johns. 423; Beekman v. Connelly, cited in 16 Johns. 154; Jones v. Savage, 6 Wend. 555; Hunter v. Hook, 64 Barb. 490; First Nat. Bank of Groton v. Crittenden, 2 Thomp. & C. 119; Richard v. Boller, 6 Daly, 460; Moore v. Coffield, 12 N. C. 247; Lilly v. Petteway, 73 N. C. 353; City Nat. Bank of Dayton v. Clinton County Nat. Bank of Wilmington, 49 Ohio St. 351; Brown v. Lusk, 4 Yerg. 210.

There is not so much unanimity upon the question whether or not a knowledge of the law applicable to the facts is also necessary to effect a waiver. In the cases cited above upon the question of the effect of ignorance of facts it has been assumed that ignorance of law would not excuse.

of continued liability by the drawer and indorser as absolutely fixed their liability; that the promises were made with a full knowledge of all the facts; and the purpose of the notice to the parties to the bill being to prevent any loss by those who are not primarily liable, or liable upon certain conditions, and intended for their protection, they may affirm their liability by a recognition of their obligation to pay, and dispense with the conditions upon which the indorsement was made, the obligation of the indorser being voidable only,—therefore the demurrer to the reply should have been overruled.

This view of the question is sustained by the decided preponderance of authority, both in the text-books and the reported cases. Mr. Daniel says that "the conditions upon which the indorser becomes liable is not a strict and absolute condition precedent, as conditions in contracts construed by the common law; the obligation of the indorser is regarded rather as voidable by nonfulfillment of these conditions, than as actually avoided. If he chooses to affirm rather than disaffirm his liability, it can injure no one to leave him to the exercise of his discretion. Section 1147.

Again, "It makes no difference, when the promise to pay is made with knowledge of the laches, that the party making it did not know of its legal effect as a waiver, or that he had a legal defense to the bill or note, for it is a maxim that ignorance of the law excuses no one," etc. Section 1148. In Yeager v. Farwell, 13 Wall. 6.

And the weight of authority is in favor of that rule although perhaps more cases have actually decided that the law as well as the facts must be known than have decided the contrary.

In Warder v. Tucker, 7 Mass. 449, it is said although defendant when he first received notice of the protest of a bill considered himself as liable by law to pay the amount of it, yet his ignorance of the law will not bind him to fulfill an engagement made through a mistake of the law.

But in later Massachusetts cases it was held that ignorance of the law will not excuse. Matthews v. Allen, 16 Gray, 594, 77 Am. Dec. 430.

Ignorance of the legal effect of the failure to make demand and give notice will not affect the validity of the promise to pay as a waiver. Third Nat. Bank of Boston v. Ashworth, 105 Mass. 508.

Whether the promisor knew that he was discharged by the rules of law is immaterial. Morgan v. Feet, 41 Ill. 847.

It is not required to show that the defendant knew that, as matter of law, he was discharged. It is sufficient to show that he knew the facts and the knowledge may be inferred from a variety of circumstances without requiring clear and affirmative proof. Knowledge may be proved in the same way as knowledge of any other fact can be. Hughes v. Bowen, 15 Iowa, 446.

But in other Iowa cases it has been held that the indorser must have known that he was released from the legal obligation to pay. Ballin v. Betcke, 11 Iowa, 204; Freeman v. O'Brien, 38 Iowa, 407; Abbott v. Striblen, 6 Iowa, 197.

So other cases have held that—

To make the promise binding it must be made with full knowledge that the promisor had been legally discharged. Glenn v. Thistle, 1 Rob. (La.) 572.

A promise to pay, made in ignorance of the legal effect of the laches, will not revive the liability of the indorser discharged by laches. Fleming v. McClure, 1 Brev. 423, 2 Am. Dec. 671.

The defendant must know the law as well as the facts at the time of making his promise in order to be bound by it. Spurlock v. Union Bank, 4 Humph. 336; Williams v. Union Bank of Tennessee, 9 Heisk. 441; Seay v. Ferguson, 1 Tenn. Ch. 236.

Sufficiency of promise.

The character of promise or admission which has been held sufficient to revive or continue the liability is shown by the following:

To amount to a waiver of the defense of want of notice and to entitle the holder to recover, notwithstanding the requisite notice has not been given, the promise to pay must be unequivocal and unconditional, or, if conditional, it must be accepted on the conditions and in terms which it involves. And so with an admission or acknowledgment of continued liability, it must appear that the admission or acknowledgment was without equivocation and unlogged by reservations. A promise to secure one half of the note if certain credits were made on it, or to pay one half if liability for the rest was remitted, at the same time stating that there was no legal liability to pay it but that some moral obligation was recognized, which offer is refused, will not suffice to continue liability thereon. Isbell v. Lewis, 98 Ala. 560.
29 L. R. A.

A promise that when the indorsee comes to town he will "set the matter to rights" is sufficient to hold him liable on the note. Anson v. Bailey, Bull. N. P. 276.

If the drawer of a bill for $200 not having received due notice of dishonor states that he does not intend to insist on the want of notice but that he is only bound to pay $70, the whole statement must be taken together and $70 is all that can be recovered. Fletcher v. Froggatt, 2 Car. & P. 569.

A statement by the drawer of a bill of exchange, upon being told that it had not been paid, that "it must be paid," will charge him on the bill. Rogers v. Stevens, 2 T. R. 713.

The promise of payment need not be express in order to bind the indorser in case he knows at the time it is made that he has been discharged by the laches of the holder. Reynolds v. Douglass, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 497, 9 L. ed. 1171.

If when called upon for payment the indorser said that in a few days he would arrange it, this amounts to an unconditional promise to pay the note which cannot be repudiated at any subsequent period. Sigerson v. Mathews, 61 U. S. 20 How. 496, 15 L. ed. 939.

A statement by the indorser after the maturity of the note that "I am responsible for that note" dispenses with the necessity of proving demand and notice. Curtis v. Sprague, 51 Cal. 239.

Where the indorser with full knowledge of the fact that there has been no demand for payment or notice of nonpayment enters into negotiations for the settlement of the claims, and finally executes a note for the amount, this will constitute a waiver. Lomax v. Smyth, 50 Iowa, 238.

An express promise is not necessary. It is sufficient if by reasonable intendment the language imports or implies a promise to pay. Zacharie v. Kirk, 14 La. Ann. 436.

If after sufficient opportunity to ascertain the regularity of the notice an indorser promises to pay an indorsee who has taken up the bill, subsequently receives, and proves it against the insolvent estate of the maker, and receives a dividend on it he will be bound by his promise unless he can show that it was made under a mistake of fact. Martin v. Ingersoll, 8 Pick. 1.

A statement by the indorser that he expects to have to pay the note but requests the holder to try to collect it from the maker will be a waiver. Parsons v. Dickinson, 28 Mich. 55.

The Supreme Court of the United States, following the doctrine of the text-books, held the indorsers liable upon their promise to pay where neither protest nor demand of payment had been made. Yeager & Co., of St. Louis, had indorsed the paper of Kerchoff for $15,000, and the paper was held by Farwell & Co., of Boston, who had advanced the money and were the payees. On the 18th of October, 1867, the last day of grace, Yeager & Co. wrote a letter to Farwell & Co. to the effect that Kerchoff would be unable to meet the paper at its maturity but they (Yeager & Co.) would hold themselves "responsible for the payment of the note, and will see that it is done at an early day." This letter was not received in Boston by the payees until after the time for protest had passed, and Yeager & Co., refusing to pay, were sued as indorsers by Farwell & Co., and the court, through Mr. Justice Davis, held that Yeager & Co. were estopped from alleging a want of demand and notice of nonpayment.

That case could be distinguished from the one before us in many of its features, but the court in its opinion referred to the case of Sigerson v. Mathews, 61 U. S. 20 How. 496, 15 L. ed. 989, in which it is said: "If the indorser, with full knowledge of the fact that no demand has been made, or notice given, makes a subsequent promise, he is liable, and cannot, when sued, set up as a defense the want of such demand and notice, and to the same effect are the decisions of the Actively procuring a third person to purchase the note while concealing the fact of discharge by laches will be a waiver of the laches in favor of the purchaser. Libbey v. Pierce, 47 N. H. 309.

In Keeler v. Bartine, 12 Wend. 110, it is said that this (the New York) court is perhaps more strict in regard to the effect given to the promise to pay the note operating as a waiver of proof of notice of dishonor or laying the foundation for the presumption that notice has been given than many of the cases in England would seem to require. But in that case it was held that where the promise to pay was after judgment after contestation of the suit the jury would be warranted in finding a demand and notice, or that the acknowledgment was made with full knowledge of laches if any existed.

Suffering judgment by default will bind the indorser. Winn v. Levy, 2 How. (Miss.) 903.

Confession of judgment is prima facie evidence that the legal steps were taken to charge the judgment debtor, or that there was a waiver; but this may be explained or rebutted by the circumstances of the case. Richter v. Sellin, 8 Serg. & R. 425.

There must be an express promise on the part of indorser to pay or some unequivocal concession of liability from which a promise may be inferred. Beer v. Leppert, 12 Hun, 515.

Giving a note for the amount of the bill with full knowledge of the circumstances which might affect liability will be a waiver of the laches. Bank of Hamburg v. Wray, 4 Strobb. L. 57, 51 Am. Dec. 959.

A promise to furnish a bottle in part payment and to pay every cent binds the indorser, also a promise to give a new note for the amount, although the indorser afterwards refuses to do so. Fell v. Dial, 14 S. C. 247.

A formal acknowledgment of liability need not be added to the promise to pay to constitute a waiver of notice when the proof shows full knowledge of discharge at the time the promise is made. Bogart v. McClung, 11 Heisk. 105, 37 Am. Rep. 337.

Conduct from which notice may be inferred.

Where after the dishonor of a note the indorser requested that the account of it might be kept in a particular way, and subsequently, when a statement of the account was sent him, he made no objection except that a certain credit had not been given, the court held that this was an acknowledgment of liability to pay the note and thereby an admission that notice had been given. Bank of United States v. Lyman, 1 Blatchf. 208, 20 Vt. 666.

Proof of a direct or conditional promise to pay after a bill has become due, or of a partial payment or of an offer of a composition, or of an acknowledgment of liability to pay, has been held to be competent evidence to go to the jury of a regular notice of the dishonor of the bill, and to warrant the jury in presuming that a regular notice had been given. Hyde v. Stone, 61 U. S. 20 How. 170, 15 L. ed. 374.

Where there is no proof that the notice was received the jury may be permitted to infer notice from the fact that a payment was made upon the bill and that in a conversation as to the liability upon it no objection was made that the notice was not sufficient. Horford v. Wilson (1807) 1 Taunt. 12.

Defendant's admission that he has received a notice of dishonor will dispense with the proof of the giving of a regular notice. Norris v. Salomonson, 4 Scott, 267, 3 Hodges, 3, 1 Jur. 55.

Putting a refusal to pay on other grounds than that of failure to give notice may go to the jury as evidence that the notice was sufficient. Curleux v. Corfield, 1 Q. B. 514.

So objection to paying the bill on the ground of fraud will be sufficient to go to the jury as evidence of the giving of due notice. Wilkins v. Jada, 1 Moody & R. 41, 2 Barn. & Ad. 188.

In Booth v. Jacob (1894) 3 Nev. & M. 851, the court held that a letter containing some ambiguous statements as to the bill was properly submitted to the jury as evidence upon the question whether or not due notice had been given.

If after the declaration was filed the defendant applied for further time to pay the bill the court held that it should have been left to the jury to say whether under all the circumstances of the case defendant had notice, at the time of application for indulgence, that there had been no due presentation. Hopley v. Dufresne, 15 East, 275.

If the acceptor sends the money to the drawer to take up the bill, and the latter after the dishonor of the note says he is going to keep it, that the acceptor owes him more, and directs the holder to insure the acceptor on the bill, this may be evidence of due notice having been given. Jackson v. Collins, 17 L. J. Q. B. 142.

A statement in a letter, "You know I meant to call on you immediately with the money,"—is sufficient evidence from which a presentment and notice of dishonor may be inferred. Mills v. Gibson, 16 L. J. C. P. 249.

A declaration by a person sought to be charged on a bill of exchange to a person not the holder, that he should pay the bill and should not avail himself of the informality of notice, is evidence from which a jury may infer that the defendant had due notice. Brownell v. Bonney (1841) 1 Q. B. 39, 4 Perry & D. 523, 5 Jur. 6.

Insufficient promise or conduct.

A mere admission that the note would have to be paid, not shown to have been made with full knowledge of the discharge, is not sufficient to charge a discharged indorser. Rosson v. Carrol, 12 L. R. A. 727, 90 Tenn. 90.

The promise is not sufficient unless made to the holder or his agent and the one making it knows courts in this country generally. Applying the principles of these decisions to the admitted facts of this case, there is no difficulty in charging the indorsers."

While this court recognizes the importance of uniformity in judicial utterances affecting the liability of parties to commercial paper, we are not disposed to follow those authorities on the question before us. The tendency of legislation in this state, as well as the decisions of this court, is to relieve parties who stand in the light of mere sureties on written obligations, and are released from continued liability based upon verbal promises subsequently made.

There is no doctrine more firmly established than that negotiable paper, when dishonored, requires actual protest and notice to those who are the mere accommodation indorsers or drawers in order to hold them responsible. This is the rule of the law-merchant, and applicable to notes discounted in bank and placed on the footing of foreign bills by our statute. And to recognize a doctrine that in effect dispenses with the performance of conditions by the holder upon which the indorser agrees to become bound, and hold him liable upon a subsequent promise to pay, although released, destroys the virtue of commercial paper, and places the indorser at the mercy of those who, in great commercial transactions, are seeking to hold those liable who have been once released, upon the plea that the laches of the holder that by law he is discharged from all liability. Allwood v. Haseldon, 2 Ball. L. 457.

A mere request not to press the maker of the note will not amount to a waiver of neglect to make the proper demand and give the proper notice. Whittier v. Collins, 15 R. I. 90.

The indorser's consent to the application upon the note of a demand which he has against the holder without notice of the fact of laches is not sufficient to bind him to the payment of the note. Buckley v. Bentley, 42 Barb. 650.

If security is taken after the laches it will not amount to a waiver. Otego County Bank v. Warren, 18 Barb. 200; Gawtry v. Doane, 48 Barb. 148.

A statement by the indorser to a third person in speaking of the bill, on which he is sought to be held, and others, that he would take care of the bills and see them paid, is not sufficient to charge him as upon a new promise. Miller v. Hackley, 5 Johns. 375, 4 Am. Dec. 572, reversing Anthony, N. P. 68.

A conditional promise not shown to have been made with a full knowledge of the facts is not sufficient to constitute a waiver. Craig v. Brown, 3 Wash. C. C. 508.

An offer to substitute a new note for the dishonored one not shown to have been made with full knowledge of the laches is not sufficient to charge the indorser on the note. Sussex Bank v. Baldwin, 17 N. J. L. 487.

A promise to give collateral security for the promisor's liability as indorser is not sufficient to raise a presumption of due demand and notice. Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 558.

A mere statement that the note would be paid is not sufficient to charge the indorser. Creamer v. Perry, 17 Pick. 332, 27 Am. Dec. 297.

That an indorser who, supposing a regular demand and notice to have been made and given, and believing himself chargeable, takes measures for his indemnity against his supposed liability, will not be sufficient to charge him if he had been discharged by failure to make demand and give the notice. Tower v. Durell, 9 Mass. 323.

The mere statement that the indorser had been very unfortunate in indorsing the note, that the estate of the maker owed him money and that he had no means of paying it but that source, will not be considered as a promise to pay which will be binding on him. Vance v. Depass, 2 La. Ann. 16.

A promise to pay, by one partner after the dissolution of the firm, will not bind the other. Hart v. Long, 1 Rob. (La.) 88.

An offer to indorse a note of the maker for the same amount is not a waiver of notice. Laporte v. Landry, 5 Mart. N. S. 350.

Proof of statements by the indorser to the effect that "he had dried fruit with him and would pay the notes when he sold it," and that "he felt himself bound for the payment,"—do not show such an unqualified promise as the law requires to render him liable. Campbell v. Varney, 12 Iowa, 43.

A discharged indorser does not revive his liability by simply advising the holder not to commit the maker to prison. Prentiss v. Danielson, 5 Conn. 175, 18 Am. Dec. 52.

A mere statement of the party sought to be charged, that he would rather pay the note than be sued, will not be sufficient to make him liable in the absence of due demand and notice. Keyes v. Fenstermaker, 24 Cal. 320.

That the indorser said to a third person after the maturity of the note that the fact of notice not having been given at the proper time would make no defense with him, that he would do what was right, is not a sufficient waiver of demand and notice to fix the liability of the indorser. Olendorf v. Swartz, 5 Cal. 480, 68 Am. Dec. 141.

A letter giving an account of the writer's circumstances and containing the statement that under such circumstances he cannot give a bill for the amount, will not amount to a waiver of a want of notice. Sherrod v. Rhodes, 5 Ala. 683.

A statement by an indorser to a third person after suit has been brought that he is ready and willing to pay the debt if he knew the amount of the costs does not dispense with evidence of due demand and notice or of knowledge of dishonor and the want of demand and notice at the time the statement was made. Gassaway v. Jones, 2 Cranch, C. C. 334.

Statements by the indorser that he would see the maker and subsequently that he had seen the maker who said he would pay, accompanied by a request not to crowd him, do not constitute either a promise by the indorser to pay or evidence of waiver of notice or admission that notice had been duly given. Britton v. Milsom (1822) 19 Ont. App. Rep. 96.

Proof that the drawer of a bill of exchange advanced money to the indorser to take up the bill when sued by the second indorsee is not sufficient to charge the drawer with the payment of the note. Holmes v. Staines, 3 Car. & K. 19.

When due notice had not been given but the party sought to be charged was arrested for the debt and while under arrest said to the bailiff that "it was true the note had his name on it" though he wished for time to pay it, Lord Kenyon ruled that when a person is arrested and at the time ignorant of his rights, or whether he is by law bound to pay the demand or not, and under such circumstances makes any confession and seemingly admits the demand, such admission should not be allowed to be given in evidence against him. Rouse v. Redwood (1794) 1 Esp. 155.

A mere statement of inability to pay, with the addition, "had circumstances been different you may rest assured that no application would have been needed," is not sufficient to establish a waiver.

redounds at last to his benefit, if he can establish a promise on the part of the indorser, although released from the payment of the dishonored paper.

There is no rule of commercial law more rigidly applied than that requiring notice of protest to those who are the mere indorsers of negotiable paper, and there is but little reason, it seems to us, for dispensing with this rule, or nullifying the conditions upon which the indorser becomes and is to remain bound, for the purpose of releasing the holder from the effect of his own laches. When the question of a want of notice is in issue, it would be competent to show a subsequent promise to pay, as a circumstance showing that the party had received notice, but to make such a promise conclusive, or a waiver of the right to a notice, is a doctrine in which we cannot concur.

In this case the reply alleges the manner in which the notice was given, and, conceding the doctrine to be that the general averment of due demand, protest, and notice is sufficient when the pleader attempts to set forth the mode in which notice was given, and the facts stated are not sufficient to charge the indorser, the pleading should be held bad on demurrer, and the averment of a subsequent promise to pay, being a mere matter of evidence, will be considered only to the extent that it revives the original obligation to pay, and to this doctrine we cannot assent. If the promise had been made upon the considera-

Lecan v. Kirkman (1859) 6 C. B. N. S. 329, 6 Jur. N. S. 17.

A promise to pay a bill if duly presented is not a promise to pay if afterwards presented. Penn v. Pomeirrat, 2 Mart. N. S. 544.

Conditional promise.

There seems to be a distinction as to the effect of a conditional promise between cases of waiver and cases of presumption of presentment and notice of dishonor. To constitute a waiver and hold the promisor liable on his promise the condition must be accepted.

An offer of part of the face of the note which is unaccepted, accompanied with a refusal to state whether or not there is an intention of taking advantage of the discharge, will not operate to bind the indorser. Long v. Dimer, 71 Mo. 452.

An unaccepted offer to take up the old note and give a new one in place of it will not constitute such a promise as to render the indorser liable upon it. Agran v. Manus, 11 Johns. 180.

An offer to give a new note is not sufficient unless accepted. Sioe v. Cunningham, 1 Cow. 397.

An offer, after arrest, to give a note for the amount, if rejected, will not be sufficient. Cumming v. French, 2 Campb. 103, note.

The acceptance of a conditional offer makes it absolute. Holdsworth v. Dimedale, 24 L. T. N. S. 880, 19 Week. Rep. 798.

An unaccepted offer to pay in confederate money will not be binding on the promisor. Tardy v. Boyd, 25 Gratt. 631.

Payment of part of the claim in depreciated paper is not such an acknowledgment and promise to pay as will waive failure to give the proper notice. Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 279.

In one case it was held that an offer to pay a part of the amount due will amount to a waiver. Shaw v. McNeill, 95 N. C. 535.

And in Margetson v. Aitken, 3 Car. & P. 338, where to dispense with proof of notice of dishonor proof was offered that the indorser offered to pay a certain percentage of the face of the bill, Lord Tenterden said that he was of opinion that it was enough to dispense with absence of notice of dishonor.

But in most cases of conditional offers which were not accepted the offer was treated simply as evidence that due demand and notice occurred so that the indorser was not discharged.

In Dixon v. Elliott, 5 Car. & P. 437, where to dispense with proof of notice of dishonor it was proved that the person sought to be charged had said that if the defendants would take ten shillings in the pound upon the bills he would secure them, the court held that this was sufficient.

If the offer to compromise is accepted but afterwards fails because of defendant's failure to carry out his part of it the offer may be evidence of continued liability on the note. Brush v. Hayes, 1 Fr. L. Rep. 327.

Effect of waiver.

If the proof is satisfactory that the defendant under a knowledge of all of the circumstances absolutely promised to pay, he is incontestably bound by his promise. But if his engagement was of a conditional nature that he would pay when the protest was transmitted; or if any material fact was unknown to him at the time of making the promise,—the verdict should certainly be in his favor. Donaldson v. Means (1791) 4 Dall. 101.

The admission by the indorser of liability to pay after knowing of his discharge will make him liable. Morris v. Gardner, 1 Cranch, C. C. 313.

An express waiver of notice of nonpayment is equivalent to an admission that the note has been presented or need not be presented. Matthey v. Gally, 4 Cal. 62, 60 Am. Dec. 565.

A recovery can be had as upon an account stated where the indorser after discharge, and the holder, meet to compute the amount due, after which he promises to pay it on a certain day or give his note for the amount. Smith v. Curlee, 59 Ill. 221.

A promise by the drawer to pay with notice that payment was not demanded of the indorsee at maturity will bind him. Cram v. Sherburne, 14 Me. 48.

A promise to pay a check with knowledge that it was lost and had not been presented at bank for payment will render the maker liable for the amount. Scott v. Meeker, 20 Hun, 161.

A promise with knowledge of discharge is binding. Golladay v. Bank of the Union, 3 Head, 57; Ford v. Dallam, 2 Coldw. 67.

In Hopes v. Alder, 6 East, 16, note, where the report of the case shows that notice of the dishonor had been given by the indorsee but had not been given by the holder, the indorsee at a subsequent meeting between the parties, the drawer said he would see the bill paid; counsel argued that the subsequent promise to pay for which there was certainly an equitable consideration put an end to any doubt as to the right to recover and the court ruled that the subsequent promise was decisive and a rule to set aside the verdict for plaintiff must be discharged.

If an indorser has neglected to demand of the drawer in a convenient time a subsequent promise to pay by the indorser will cure these laches. Lord Raymond, Ch. J., in Haddock v. Bury, 7 East, 238, note.

Effect of payment or part payment.

Part payment of the note by the indorser will bind him to full liability on the note. Knapp v. Runals, 37 Wis. 135.

Part payment by the indorser, not explained or qualified by any accompanying circumstances, is a sufficient waiver of notice of dishonor, but if it is tion that no suit would be instituted against the parties to the bill, the promise would be binding, and upon this promise an independent action could be maintained. No such fact is alleged even in the reply, or any facts connected with the promise that would work an estoppel. It is alleged only that, the promise having been made, the plaintiff forbore to sue. No loss or injury is alleged by reason of the promise. There is no allegation that the promise was made on condition that no suit would be brought on the paper. The payor, Walden, was insolvent, and the appellant has a judgment against him for the debt. A promise to pay after the maturity of the paper is presumptive evidence that demand was made and notice duly given, and would support a recovery, if there was no evidence to the contrary, or, rather, the question would go to the jury upon the issue made; but in this case the notice was not duly given, as appears from the reply of the plaintiff.

This court, in the case Lawrence v. Ralston, reported in 8 Bibb, 104, decided the question involved here. In that case it appeared that Aaron Burr, while on a visit to the present capital of the state, on the 19th of December in the year 1806, drew a bill of exchange on George M. Ogden, a merchant shown that the payment was made as agent of the maker although it was credited on the note as payment by the indorser there will be no waiver. Whitaker v. Morrison, 1 Fla. 29, 44 Am. Dec. 627.

The payment of the interest in arrear upon the notes by the indorser will revive liability although at the time the person making the payment did so he protested that he was not liable and the payment was made under threats of suits upon other claims against him in case he did not pay. Sigourney v. Wetherell, 6 Met. 555.

Partial payments after maturity will be presumptive proof that proper demand was made and notice given. Bibb v. Peyton, 11 Smedes & M. 275.

Payment of part of the amount by one of two indorsers where the other has received notice is a waiver of want of notice as to himself. Sherer v. Easton Bank, 38 Pa. 134.

In Levy v. Peters, 9 Serg. & R. 125, 11 Am. Dec. 679, in which the suit was against the drawer of a check on which there was a credit of a part of the amount due and demand made only for the balance, the court held that it would not be sufficient for the plaintiff to give credit for part; he should prove the payment. For if the bare giving of credit was sufficient the holder of the bill who had been guilty of laches might always get over it by giving credit for a small payment. In general there cannot be a recovery without proof of a demand and notice to the drawer that payment had been refused, but there are exceptions to this general rule. Whenever the drawer acknowledges himself to be liable to pay, the necessity of proving a demand on the drawee and his refusal to pay and notice to the drawer is dispensed with, because such acknowledgment carries with it internal evidence that the drawer knew that due diligence had been used by the holder; or even if it had not that still the drawer confessed he was under an obligation to pay. And it is immaterial whether there be proof of an express promise to pay or of other circumstances from which it may be inferred that the drawer acknowledged himself liable. And I take it that payment of part is such a circumstance. Citing Reed v. Wilkinson, MSS. Whart. Dig. 87.

Without considering here the general question of the right to recover back money paid under mistake, attention is called to the fact that in Chatfield v. Paxton, 2 East, 471, note, it seems to be considered that even payment of the bill in ignorance of the fact of the laches is not sufficient to bind the drawer, but he may recover back the amount paid upon discovering the facts.

And it has been decided that if the note is paid under the mistaken belief that notice had been properly given the payment may be recovered back. Lake v. Artisans Bank, 8 Keyes, 278.

If in ignorance that a demand has not been made and notice given the indorser pays the amount to a bank holding the note for collection, he can upon discovering the fact reclaim the money from it. Garland v. Salem Bank, 9 Mass. 408, 6 Am. Dec. 86. 29 L. R. A.

But if the payment of the note is made with a full knowledge of the facts the payment cannot be recovered. Evans v. Gale, 17 N. H. 573, 43 Am. Dec. 614.

Right to contradict presumption of notice.

The presumption of notice may be rebutted. Lewis v. Brehme, 38 Md. 413, 8 Am. Rep. 190.

The defendant may contradict the fact of notice which is presumed from the admission of liability, but the jury is at liberty to disbelieve him and find that the notice was in fact given. Jones v. O'Brien, 26 Eng. L. & Eq. 283.

A promise to pay or part payment cannot be used as presumptive evidence of regular notice where the evidence distinctly shows that notice was not given. Cayuga County Bank v. Bennett, 5 Hill, 236.

Burden of proof.

There are two distinct theories taken in reference to the burden of proof in cases where a waiver is relied on.

On one side it is held that the burden is on the holder to show that the indorser not only waived notice and promised to pay the note but it is also incumbent on him to prove that the indorser made the promise with full knowledge of the fact that he was released from legal obligation to pay it. Balin v. Betske, 11 Iowa, 204; Freeman v. O'Brien, 38 Iowa, 407; Abbott v. Scribren, 6 Iowa, 197.

If the promise is made under the belief that the promisor is liable the plaintiff must show that he had knowledge of the facts. Morgan v. Peet, 33 Ill. 281.

The burden of showing that the new promise was with the knowledge of all the facts is on the party seeking to charge the indorser on the bill. Walker v. Rogers, 40 Ill. 278, 39 Am. Dec. 343.

The plaintiff must show that at the time the promise was made the promisor had notice that he was discharged. Harris v. Allnutt, 13 La. 465.

Plaintiff must show knowledge by the indorser that at the time he made the promise no notice had been given to him in order to establish a waiver. Glassford v. Davis, 46 N. J. L. 848.

If laches appears there must be clear proof that defendant knew of it at the time he made his promise in order to hold him liable. Glaser v. Rounds, 16 R. L. 236.

The burden is on the plaintiffs to show that the promise was made with full knowledge of the laches. Sloe v. Cunningham, 1 Cow. 397; Baer v. Leppert, 5 Hun. 453; Edwards v. Tandy, 36 N. H. 540; Otis v. Russey, 8 N. H. 848; Farrington v. Brown, 7 N. H. 271; Newberry v. Trowbridge, 13 Mich. 279; Vanwickle v. Downing, 19 La. Ann. 38; Butler v. Murison, 18 La. Ann. 363; New Orleans & C. R. Co. v. Milla, 2 La. Ann. 824; Blum v. Bidwell, 20 La. Ann. 43; Louisiana State Bank v. Buhler, 23 La. Ann. 83; Mitchell v. Young, 21 La. Ann. 274; James v. Wade, 14 S. 448; Hunt v. Wadleigh, 26 Me. 271, 45 Am. Dec. 108; Spurlock v. Union Bank, 4 Humph. 333.

of New York, requesting him at 120 days to pay Charles Lynch, or order, $700. That paper was indorsed by Ralston to Sebastian, and by Sebastian to Lawrence, the plaintiff in the action. Ralston, after the bill was drawn, and before maturity, descended the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and before his return the bill was protested. After Ralston's return he was sought to be made liable as indorser of the paper, and defended on the ground that notice had not been given him of the protest or nonpayment. There being no sufficient evidence of notice, it was then attempted to fasten liability upon him on the ground of his promise to pay. This court, in reference to that issue, said: "We think a promise made under such circumstances, not being founded on any valid consideration, induces no legal obligation, and cannot therefore form a sufficient cause of action. It is not denied but that a promise to pay a bill by an indorser, unless accompanied by circumstances repelling the presumption, is an implied admission of due notice having been given." 8 Bibb, 104. This is the extent to which the authorities in this state go, and we think the correct rule on the subject.

In the cases of Bank of Tennessee v. Smith, reported in 9 B. Mon. 609, and Landrum v.

The person sought to be charged must be shown to have had knowledge that presentment was not made at the time he made his promise. Barkalow v. Johnson, 16 N. J. L. 397; United States Bank v. Southard, 17 N. J. L. 473, 35 Am. Dec. 521.

On the other side it is held that an admission of having received due notice must be shown to have been made under a mistake of fact to relieve from liability. Commercial Bank of Albany v. Clark, 23 Vt. 335.

Defendant must show that he was ignorant at the time he made his promise to relieve himself from liability. Nash v. Harrington, 1 Ark. 30.

A promise to pay throws on defendant the burden of showing that proper demand and notice were not made and given. Schmidt v. Radcliffe, 4 Strobb. L. 203, 53 Am. Dec. 573.

The promise throws on defendant the double burden of showing laches and that he was ignorant of it. Loose v. Loose, 36 Pa. 538; Oxnard v. Varnum, 111 Pa. 193, 55 Am. Rep. 255.

If after an avowal that he is discharged the indorser states that he does not intend to take advantage of the default and will pay the note, the burden is upon him to show that he was acting under a mistake of fact. Leonard v. Gary, 10 Wend. 504.

How far knowledge may be inferred.

Affirmative proof of knowledge need not be made. It may be inferred from circumstances. Williams v. Robinson, 13 La. 419.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary the promise will be presumed to have been made with the knowledge that the note had not been protested for nonpayment. Davis v. Miller, 38 Iowa, 114.

Knowledge of the facts may be inferred from the circumstances. Given v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 35 Ill. 442; Hughes v. Bowen, 15 Iowa, 446.

The jury may presume knowledge from the circumstances in evidence. Hopkins v. Liswell, 12 Mass. 52.

But knowledge that the promisor was released will not be inferred from the mere fact of promise to pay. Davis v. Gowen, 17 Me. 387.

Is question for court or jury.

The question of the conclusion to be drawn from defendant's conduct is for the jury. Ricketts v. Toulmin, 7 L. J. 108.

The question whether certain transactions amount to a waiver or want of demand and notice is for the jury. Union Bank of Georgetown v. Magruder, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 337, 8 L. ed. 687.

Whether a conversation amounts to a waiver is a question for the jury. Carmichael v. Bank of Pennsylvania, 4 How. (Miss.) 567, 35 Am. Dec. 408.

It is for the jury to say whether or not the words, "You hold the note two or three days and I will make it all right with the bank," were intended as an absolute promise of payment. Glendening v. Canary, 5 Daly, 499.

On the other hand it was held in Massachusetts 29 L. R. A.

that though the questions of waiver were originally questions of fact yet having been reduced to a good degree of certainty by practical usage and a long course of judicial decisions they assume the character of questions of law and it is highly important that they should be so made and applied in order that rules affecting so extensive and important a department in the transactions of the mercantile community may become practical and uniform as well as reasonably equitable and intelligible. Creamer v. Perry, 17 Pick. 332, 27 Am. Dec. 297.

So in Missouri it has been said that the question of what will constitute a waiver is for the court. Wilson v. Huston, 13 Mo. 146, 53 Am. Dec. 133.

Effect of statute.

In 1868 a statute was passed in Maine providing that waiver of demand and notice by the indorser must afterwards be in writing to be binding upon him. Thomas v. Mayo, 56 Me. 40; Parshley v. Heath, 69 Me. 90, 31 Am. Rep. 246.

Writing waiver on note.

If the waiver is in express terms made upon the note it will be given effect without proof of extrinsic facts in respect to knowledge of the absence of previous demand and notice. Lockwood v. Bock, 50 Minn. 142.

Promise secondary evidence of a notice actually given.

The admission of liability may not be available if the plaintiff fails to produce the notice of dishonor which it is within his power to do. Bell v. Frankia, 4 Mann. & G. 446, 11 L. J. C. P. 300, 5 Scott, N. R. 490.

Necessity of consideration or writing.

The question was raised at an early period as to how far the new promise required a new consideration or needed to be in writing under the statute of frauds.

Some few cases have held that both were necessary, but the question has been generally either ignored or decided the other way.

In Connecticut it was decided that a promise to pay, made after release and without consideration, has no legal efficacy. Huntington v. Harvey, 4 Conn. 124.

And that a promise by an indorser discharged by laches to pay the note must, under the statute of frauds, be in writing. Peabody v. Harvey, 4 Conn. 110, 10 Am. Dec. 108.

But in Breed v. Hillhouse, 7 Conn. 623, it is stated that a promise to pay is sufficient evidence that the proper notice was given, and that if a party entitled to notice has knowledge of the want of due diligence on the part of the holder of the note and promises to pay the debt, this is a waiver of the want of notice.

In Kentucky it has been held that a bond for the amount given after the discharge may be impeached for the want of consideration. Ralston v. Bullitta, 3 Bibb, 261.

Trowbridge, reported in 3 Met. (Ky.) 281, a distinction is attempted to be drawn between a promise made after protest for nonacceptance and a protest made for nonpayment after maturity. In the case of Landrum v. Trowbridge, Id., there was a protest for nonpayment, as well as nonacceptance, and while the distinction between the character of the two cases may exist, in so far as it affects the liability of the indorser, we think, and so adjudge, that the subsequent promise to pay is not binding on the indorsers unless supported by a consideration, but that on the issue as to whether notice of protest had been given it is competent to go to the jury to establish that fact, and to this extent only we are disposed to go; but, as the pleadings in this case show that due notice was not given, the promise, if proven, would not avail the appellant. The obligation of the indorser is known to the holder of the bill. His relation to the bill requires the highest degree of diligence on the part of the holder for the protection of the indorser, and when released from liability, having occupied the position of a mere surety, something more than a verbal promise, so easily established when large commercial interests are involved, should be established before that which is dead is brought to life, and the liability continued without any consideration whatever.

The judgment below must be affirmed.

Rehearing denied.

A promise by the indorsers in ignorance of the fact that they are not liable is without consideration and is not binding. Bank of United States v. Leathers, 10 B. Mon. 64.

But it was also held that a promise to pay the bill by an indorser may be an implied admission that he had received due notice of protest, but where it is evident such notice was not given, a promise by the indorser to pay the bill after he was discharged and without any consideration will not sustain an action against him. Lawrence v. Ralston (1818) 3 Bibb, 103.

In the case of a guarantor discharged by laches in which there was no express promise the court said: "Had he made an express promise, I am inclined to the opinion that the result would have been the same,"—that is that there would have been no binding obligation. A moral obligation will support an express promise but here there is no moral obligation. It is not like a waiver of a forfeiture or laches. Vanderveer v. Wright, 6 Barb. 547.

In New Jersey it was held that a promise to pay the bill after the promisor had been discharged by laches is not binding. Phillips v. McCurdy, 1 Harr. & J. 187.

But in Patton v. Wilmut, 1 Harr. & J. 477, the court says that the indorser is not liable where due diligence has not been used unless it appears that he subsequently promised to pay the amount of the note to the indorsee.

And in Beck v. Thompson, 4 Harr. & J. 531, it was held that a promise with knowledge of laches will waive it and that rule was followed in Tate v. Sullivan, 30 Md. 473, 36 Am. Dec. 597; Staylor v. Balls, 24 Md. 201.

So in New Hampshire it has been said that a promise to pay after discharge is not binding unless there is a new consideration or knowledge of the fact of the discharge appears. Merrimack County Bank v. Brown, 12 N. H. 320.

Then there are some decisions which while not directly asserting the necessity of consideration may perhaps be regarded as looking in that direction.

If in consideration of money received from the maker the indorser promises to pay the amount of the bill he will be liable whether the promise was made before or after the bill became due since it is made upon an adequate consideration. Cookrill v. Hobson, 16 Ala. 391.

Certain it is that waiver of protest and notice after the paper has been dishonored will not suffice to bind the indorser, and he will be discharged unless a new valid promise to pay is made by him. White v. Keith, 97 Ala. 668.

It will be observed that even in those states which have held a consideration necessary there is divided opinion, and those which have not repudiated the doctrine after once asserting it generally 39 L. R. A.

apply the rule of presumption of notice from the promise. The majority of the cases have, however, decided the other way.

The promise is not void for want of consideration or under the statute of frauds for not being in writing. United States Bank v. Southard, 17 N. J. L. 473, 35 Am. Dec. 531.

In Worden v. Mitchell, 7 Wis. 161, in which the agreement to extend the time for demand and notice was made before the note became due, the court, after stating that the waiver could be made before as well as after maturity, says a waiver of demand and notice made by an indorser is not a new contract which must be in writing under the statute of frauds, or which must be supported by a new consideration, but is only a waiver of a condition precedent to his liability.

In Brooklyn Bank v. Waring, 3 Sandf. Ch. 1, 7 L. ed. 483, it is said, "whether upon the ground of waiver, or of a moral obligation which forms a consideration, the consequence is undeniable" that the new promise will sustain an action on the note.

There is no substantial consideration to support such new promise on the part of an indorser to pay a note for which he is neither legally nor equitably liable. The rule, however, is now so firmly established that it cannot be abrogated, although the contract it enforces is not only without consideration, but it is questionable whether it is not a parol agreement to pay the debt of another, and its enforcement therefore in contravention of the statute of frauds. Glassford v. Davis, 36 N. J. L. 343.

In Porter v. Hodenpuy, 9 Mich. 11, in which the release was claimed because of time given to the principal debtor, the court says that in every case where with knowledge of the facts a surety recognizes his liability and promises to pay the debt such promise is applied to the original debt and requires no new consideration.

In Harrison v. Bailey, 39 Mass. 620, 97 Am. Dec. 63, the court says that a subsequent promise is a waiver, and since in that case evidence of it was admitted only to show a waiver it was unnecessary to consider what validity it would have as a new promise; or whether it would have been sufficient to sustain the action for want of consideration or under the statute of frauds.

No consideration is necessary in order to make a waiver binding. Matthews v. Allen, 16 Gray, 594, 77 Am. Dec. 430; Morgan v. Peet, 33 Ill. 231; Lockwood v. Book, 80 Minn. 143; Woodman v. Eastman, 10 N. H. 359; Ross v. Hurd, 71 N. Y. 14, 37 Am. Rep. 1.

The payee indorser does not make a new promise within the statute of frauds when he promises to pay after laches on the part of the holder because the debt is his own as well as that of the maker. Uhler v. Farmers Nat. Bank of Bucks County, 64 Pa. 403.

H. P. F.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

Robert KERNOHAN, Ply. in Err.,John MANSS et al.

(33 Ohio St. —)

M. executed to eight persons a mortgage to secure eight promissory notes, made to them respectively. The notes were delivered to the several mortgagees, and the mortgage to McG., one of the mortgagees. It was then duly recorded. After record, without objection by the others, McG. took possession of the mortgage and of three of the notes belonging to other mortgagees, for safe keeping. Afterward, and before maturity of any of the notes, McG., claiming to be the owner of the mortgage and of all the notes, for a valuable consideration, received of K., assigned and delivered to him the mortgage and forged copies of all of the notes, with forged indorsements on each, except that on the note purporting to be made to him the indorsement was genuine. The assignment purported, also, to transfer the notes secured by the mortgage. McG. retained in his own possession the genuine notes. Afterward, but before the maturity of the note made to McG., he, for a valuable consideration, indorsed and delivered the genuine note to M., and M., informing them that the note, with others, was secured by mortgage on certain real estate. Before taking the note, M. and M. had the records examined and found that the statements of McG. respecting the mortgage security were correct. He also stated that he, with the consent of the other mortgagees, was holding the original mortgage for himself, and as custodian for the others. They did not ask to see the original mortgage, and did not see it. K. and M. and M. acted in entire good faith, neither having a suspicion that a fraud was contemplated by McG.

Held: On foreclosure of the mortgage, the debt to M. and M. is entitled to preference over that of K.

(June 11, 1895.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Hamilton County to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas establishing the priority of defendants in error in a mortgage upon the estate of Gano Martin, deceased, in which mortgage the plaintiff in error claimed to be entitled to a prior lien. Affirmed.

Statement by Spear, J.

The action below was a proceeding in the probate court of Hamilton county for the sale of lands of Gano Martin, deceased, to pay debts, in which the plaintiff in error and the defendants in error were cross-petitioners, each claiming to hold a lien prior to

*Readnote by the COURT.

NOTE.—The general subject of the priority of notes falling due at different times and secured by the same mortgage is treated in a note to Horn v. Bennett (Ind.) 24 L. R. A. 800, also in Nashville Trust Co. v. Smythe (Tenn.) 27 L. R. A. 632.

The present case sharply illustrates the relation of negotiable notes to a mortgage securing them, on which see also note to Lime Rock Nat. Bank v. Mowry (N. H.) 18 L. R. A. 264.

29 L. R. A.

that of the other upon the lands in question. That court found in favor of John and Louis Manass, from which Kernohan appealed. On the trial in the common pleas the following undisputed facts appeared, viz.:

On January 1, 1879, Gano Martin, the then owner of the real estate sold in this action, being in feeble health, and desiring to make some sort of settlement of his estate before he died, providing as well for his children and widow as for certain creditors (amongst whom was one William R. McGill, to whom he was then indebted in the amount of $7,602.72), executed a mortgage deed covering his said real estate; the consideration named was $16, 112.69; the grantees were said McGill and seven others. The mortgage was conditioned to secure the payment of eight promissory notes, each dated January 1, 1879, payable five years after date, with 8 per cent interest, payable annually, except one on which no interest was payable until after Gano Martin's death.

The mortgage deed was then delivered to McGill, with the consent of the other mortgagees, he (McGill) stating he would put it in his safe for safe keeping. It was left for record January 20, 1879, with the recorder of Hamilton county, and duly recorded, and thereafter without objection by the other mortgagees, remained in the possession of said McGill until delivered to said Kernohan as hereinafter stated. The note for $7,602.72 was also delivered to McGill at the same time, and the notes to order of three other mortgagees were also delivered, undorsed, to McGill, at the same time, for safe keeping. Some time afterwards one of the mortgagees (George Martin) sold his note to William R. McGill, and, so far as appears, McGill never owned, or had any interest in, any of the other notes. The note for $7,602.72 remained in the possession of McGill until delivered to John and Louis Manass as hereinafter stated.

On the 8th day of February, 1879, being prior to the maturity of the notes secured by said mortgage, Robert Kernohan made a loan of $11,000 to McGill, who, amongst other collateral, transferred and assigned to Kernohan the said mortgage, and what purported to be all the notes secured thereby. At the time of the transfer McGill was the owner and holder of the genuine note for $7,602.72 secured by said mortgage. This transfer was made in the following manner: before the payment of the $11,000, McGill produced to Kernohan, and his attorney, the original mortgage deed from Gano Martin, and the following assignment was indorsed thereon:

"For value received I hereby assign and transfer to Robert Kernohan, his representatives and assigns, the within mortgage and the notes secured thereby.

"February 8, 1879. William R. McGill."

The assignment was then and there signed by William R. McGill. At the same time eight certain papers answering in form to the eight notes described in the mortgage, including one for $7,602.72, were produced by said McGill as the original genuine notes secured by said mortgage; the said papers were at the time they were produced, indorsed in blank with the name of the payees thereof, except that for $7,602.72, which was indorsed as hereafter stated. At the same time he signed the said assignment on the back of the mortgage. McGill indorsed each of said papers (including that for $7,602.72 drawn to his own order, which hitherto had been unindorsed), with his own signature, and the words "protest waived," as appears thereon; and thereupon the said papers and mortgage were delivered to Kernohan, with the other collateral, and said sum of $11,000 paid. The mortgage so assigned and delivered was the genuine mortgage deed executed by Gano Martin and wife; but the papers purporting to be the notes secured thereby, and so delivered and indorsed by said McGill, are each and every one of them forgeries (except the indorsements of McGill thereon), though they were delivered to Kernohan by McGill as genuine.

Kernohan received the mortgage, and what purported to be the real notes, as above, duly indorsed and delivered to him, in good faith and for value, supposing said notes to be genuine, and they remained in his possession until after the death of McGill, which took place July 2, 1884, and until this action was begun. Kernohan did not know, or have any cause to know, of such forgery, and that said notes were not genuine, until after the death of McGill.

Interest on said loan of $11,000 was paid by McGill up to his death. The amounts realized from the other collateral, together with any amount that has been, or may be ordered, paid to him in this case, will not discharge said debt of $11,000. The estate of said Gano Martin is insolvent. The assignment on the mortgage was not left for record or entered until April 25, 1884.

On or about April 1, 1879, being after the transaction with Kernohan, but prior to the maturity of said note for $7,602.72, the defendants John and Louis Manas loaned William R. McGill the sum of $4,000, taking his note dated May 8, 1879, for same, McGill at that time transferring to them by indorsement and delivery, as collateral for said loan, the original genuine note for $7,602.72, made by Gano Martin, which, notwithstanding his transaction with Kernohan, he had retained possession of. John and Louis Manas did not learn until a week or ten days after McGill's death of any other note purporting to be of the amount of the note so indorsed and delivered as collateral. At the time of the transaction between McGill and the Manas brothers, McGill stated that the note was secured by a mortgage; that it was given to secure other notes, to other payees, and that he, by and with the consent of all the other mortgagees, was holding the mortgage, for himself and as custodian for the other holders of notes secured by the mortgage, and also told them that he thought the mortgage notes safe. Before loaning the money they had an examination made of the records which showed that the mortgage was as represented, and that there was no other mortgage against the property; they did not ask McGill to let them see the mortgage deed, nor did they at any time see it, but relied upon McGill's statement that he had it.

They, before and after the maturity of the note, made other advances to McGill to the extent of $11,800 additional to said sum of $4,000, and also received other collateral, it being agreed with McGill at the time said other advances were made, that the note for $7,602.72, together with the other collateral, should stand as security for all the advances. Some of the other collateral were known by Manas Bros. to be mortgage notes; but in no instance did they require the production of the mortgage deed securing the same, again relying upon McGill's statements to them. They have not been able to realize upon any of the said other collateral, as in each case the mortgage notes, and other instruments, are claimed to be forgeries.

There is no question as to the good faith of either Kernohan or the brothers Manas.

Upon these facts the court held that John and Louis Manas were the owners and holders of the genuine note for $7,602.72, given by Martin to McGill, that it was secured by the mortgage, and was the first lien, and decreed accordingly. On error the circuit court affirmed this judgment, and Kernohan now asks that those judgments be reversed.

Messrs. Drausin Wulgin and Frank O'Suire, for plaintiff in error:

A mortgage does not secure the note, or other evidence of indebtedness named in it, as such, but secures the debt or promise to repay, of which the mortgage equally with the note is in evidence.

Fisher v. Mosseman, 11 Ohio St. 42; Nichols v. Briggs, 18 S. C. 484; Nesbit v. Worts, 37 Ohio St. 378; Kuhns v. McGeah, 38 Ohio St. 468; Choteau v. Thompson, 8 Ohio St. 427; Patterson v. Johnson, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, p. 227; Baily v. Smith, 14 Ohio St. 410, 84 Am. Dec. 385; Richardson v. Wright, 58 Vt. 367; Kimberly's App. (Pa.) 5 Cent. Rep. 460; Trader's Nat. Bank of Charlotte v. Lawrence Mfg. Co. 96 N. C. 298; Hoffman v. Wilhelm, 68 Iowa, 510; Raguet v. Roll, 7 Ohio, pt. 2, p. 70; Williams v. Englebrecht, 37 Ohio St. 883; Smith v. Smith, 27 S. C. 166; Plyler v. Elliott, 19 S. C. 257; McLaurin v. Wilson, 16 S. C. 405; Childs v. Childs, 10 Ohio St. 339, 75 Am. Dec. 512; Stewart v. Anderson, 10 Ala. 504; Stedman v. Gassett, 18 Vt. 346.

Kernohan, by the transaction of February 8, 1879, became the owner of the note, the mortgage debt and the mortgage security.

Kernohan v. Durham, 12 L. R. A. 41, 48 Ohio St. 1; Dan. Neg. Inst. §§ 748, 748a; Jones, Mortg. §§ 805, 834.

Kernohan, had he discovered the fraud, could have filed a bill in equity to enforce the transfer by indorsement.

1 Chitty, Bills, 10th ed. 167; Smith v. Pickering, Peake, N. P. 50; Arden v. Watkins, 3 East, 317; Ex parte Greening, 13 Ves. Jr. 206; Ex parte Mowbray, 1 Jac. & W. 428; Ex parte Hall, 1 Rose, Bankr. Cas. 14, note a.

And such indorsement, when made, would have related back to and taken effect as of the time when the actual transfer took place.

Smith v. Pickering, Peake, N. P. 50; Anonymous, 1 Campb. 492.

Not only by subsequent indorsement does the indorsee take as of the time when the original transfer took place, but he takes free from equities attaching either prior or subsequent to such transfer.

Watkins v. Maule, 2 Jac. & W. 287; Baggery v. Gaither, 55 N. C. 80; Bulkley v. Chapman, 9 Conn. 5; Philips v. Bank of Lexington, 18 Pa. 408; Selfridge v. Northampton Bank, 8 Watts & S. 820; Burrows v. Keays, 37 Mich. 481.

The written assignment of February 8, 1879, transferred to Kernohan the legal title to the land described in the mortgage.

Raquet v. Roll, 7 Ohio, pt. 2, p. 78; Rands v. Kendall, 15 Ohio, 671; Highway v. Pendleton, 15 Ohio, 738; Frische v. Kramer, 16 Ohio, 124; Nolan v. Urmon, 18 Ohio, 277; Childs v. Childs, 10 Ohio St. 844, 75 Am. Dec. 512; Allen v. Boerly, 24 Ohio St. 97; Ely v. McGuire, 3 Ohio, 233; Williams v. Englebrecht, 37 Ohio St. 386; McGuffey v. Finley, 20 Ohio St. 474; Grant v. Ludlow, 8 Ohio St. 1.

Kernohan paid value, had no notice, is not estopped, was honest, and was guilty of no laches.

Holliger v. Bates, 43 Ohio St. 437; Walker v. Dement, 43 Ill. 281.

It cannot be claimed Manss Bros. have any interest at all in the mortgage debt, as distinguished from the note.

Daries v. Austen, 1 Ves. Jr. 247; Kernohan v. Durham, 12 L. R. A. 41, 48 Ohio St. 1.

Nor can it be claimed Manss Bros. got any legal title to the mortgage security, or, what is the same thing, the land covered by the mortgage.

Stuarts v. Leist, 13 Ohio St. 419.

A mortgage does not, by reason of its securing a negotiable note, partake of the qualities of said note, and become negotiable.

Ranney v. Hardy, 43 Ohio St. 157; Osborn v. McClelland, Id. 284; Heller v. Meiss, 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 477, 2 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep. 287; Timberman v. Hawley, 2 Ohio C. Ct. Rep. 27; Johnson v. Carpenter, 7 Minn. 176; Hostetter v. Alexander, 22 Minn. 559; Scott v. Austin, 36 Minn. 460; Oster v. Mickle, 35 Minn. 245; Schmidt v. Frey, 8 Rob. (La.) 435; Boulogny v. Fortier, 17 La. Ann. 121; Morris v. White, 28 La. Ann. 555; Butler v. Slocumb, 33 La. Ann. 170, 39 Am. Rep. 265; Grassly v. Reinback, 4 Ill. App. 341; Walker v. Dement, 43 Ill. 272; Kleiman v. Friebis, 63 Ill. 482; White v. Sutherland, 64 Ill. 181; Haskell v. Brown, 65 Ill. 29; Bryant v. Viz, 83 Ill. 11; Towner v. McClelland, 110 Ill. 542; Scott v. Magloughlin, 133 Ill. 38; Shippen v. Whittier, 117 Ill. 282; Tabor v. Foy, 56 Iowa, 539; First Nat. Bank of Nevada v. Bryan, 62 Iowa, 42.

The assignee, though without notice of the defect, takes subject to all equities existing against the assignor.

Pom. Eq. Jur. § 708.

Such defenses can be set up in Ohio.

Osborn v. McClelland, 43 Ohio St. 284; Re European Bank, L. R. 5 Ch. 359.

As between Kernohan and Manss Bros., whose title or right to the mortgage security is the stronger, admitting Kernohan got nothing but an equity in the mortgage security, whose equity is superior?

Kernohan's equity arose by reason of his being the owner of the real consideration for the mortgage.

Manss Bros.' equity, if any, arose simply and solely from their ownership of one of the evidences of the debt.

Kernohan's rights are prior in point of time. Kernohan was not negligent; Manss Bros. were. Kernohan is not estopped; Manss Bros. should be. Kernohan had no notice; Manss Bros. were so put on their guard that they could have known of Kernohan's rights, had they inquired.

McGill after the transfer had no longer any interest in the note or mortgage, and was at most only a trustee for Kernohan.

Kernohan v. Durham, 12 L. R. A. 41, 48 Ohio St. 1.

By not getting the mortgage, Manss Bros. left it in McGill's power to enter a cancellation of it of record, that would undoubtedly bind them, as against subsequent purchasers of the land.

Stuarts v. Leist, 13 Ohio St. 419; Anderson v. Sharp, 44 Ohio St. 260; Walker v. Dement, 43 Ill. 272.

Relying upon McGill's promises they must take the consequences.

Kellogg v. Smith, 26 N. Y. 18.

If Gano Martin could have pleaded Kernohan's equity, we see no reason why Kernohan himself could not come in and set it up.

Osborn v. McClelland, 43 Ohio St. 284; Kernohan v. Durham, 12 L. R. A. 41, 48 Ohio St. 1.

Manss Bros. are not bona fide holders without notice, of the note itself.

Strong v. Jackson, 133 Mass. 60, 25 Am. Rep. 19; Taylor v. Page, 6 Allen, 86; Crane v. March, 4 Pick. 131, 16 Am. Dec. 329; Abele v. McGuigan, 78 Mich. 415.

Messrs. William E. Jones and J. J. Glidden for defendants in error, John Manss et al.

Messrs. T. A. Griffiths and O. P. Griffiths for Rachel Martin, admrx., etc.

Spear, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The question presented by the record is whether, both parties acting in good faith, one who obtains title to a mortgage given to secure several notes to several persons, by assignment for value by one of the mortgagees, with delivery of the same and a forged copy of one of several notes secured thereby, indorsed by the payee who was then the owner of the genuine note, obtains a lien for money thus advanced on the faith of the security, in preference to the bona fide indorsee for value of the genuine note obtained afterwards, both transactions occurring before the maturity of the note?

It seems to us that the question will be solved by the application of simple and well-established principles. The concession that each party acted in entire good faith removes any necessity for considering equities, and leaves the case to be determined on purely legal grounds.

The following propositions we consider are settled in Ohio:

1. Where a promissory note is secured by mortgage, the note, not the mortgage, represents the debt. The mortgage is, therefore, a mere incident, and an assignment of such incident will not, in law, carry with it a transfer of the debt; on the other hand a transfer of the note by the owner so as to vest legal title in the indorsee will carry with it equitable ownership of the mortgage. And so, if the debt be evidenced by several promissory notes the legal transfer of a portion of the notes carries with it such proportional interest in the security as the notes transferred bear to the whole. Harkrader v. Leiby, 4 Ohio St. 603; Swarts v. Leist, 13 Ohio St. 419; Fithian v. Corwin, 17 Ohio St. 118; Allen v. First Nat. Bank of Xenia, 28 Ohio St. 97; Holmes v. Gardner, 50 Ohio St. 167, 20 L. R. A. 829.

2. Being but an incident of the debt, the mortgage remains, until foreclosure or possession taken, in the nature of a chose in action. Where given to secure notes it has no determinate value apart from the notes, and, as distinct from them, is not a fit subject of assignment. And where the notes are legally transferred, the mortgagee, and all claiming under him, will hold the mortgaged property in trust for the holder of the notes. Jordon v. Cheney, 74 Me. 359; Jones, Mortg. 818; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1210.

3. All notes payable to any person or order are negotiable by indorsement thereon so as absolutely to transfer and vest the property thereof in each and every indorsee or holder successively. Such indorsee, or holder, may, in his own name, institute and maintain an action thereon against the maker. Rev. Stat. §§ 8171, 8172.

4. A holder of negotiable paper who takes it before maturity for a valuable consideration in the usual course of trade, without knowledge of facts which impeach its validity, holds it by a good title. To defeat a recovery it is not sufficient to show that he took it under circumstances which ought to excite suspicion in the mind of a prudent man. To have that effect, it must be shown that he took the paper under circumstances showing bad faith or want of honesty on his part. Nor does the note lose its commercial character when secured by mortgage. Johnson v. Way, 27 Ohio St. 874; Kitchen v. Loudenback, 48 Ohio St. 177.

Applying these rules to the facts, the following conclusions seem to result, viz.:
29 L. R. A.

Kernohan, by the assignment of the mortgage, took the legal title to it so far as the same was owned by McGill, and an equitable right in the $7,602.72 note. He did not take, nor did McGill intend to transfer to him, any legal title to the note, for McGill kept, and intended to keep, that in his own possession, unindorsed, and subject to his continued control. Such rights as Kernohan took he might assert as against McGill, but John and Louis Manas alone can recover on the note. They, by their purchase and the indorsement to them by McGill, took a full title to it as against the world, together with the equitable title to the mortgage in whosesoever hands it might be. The one has the legal title to the incident, with an equitable right in the debt; the other the legal title to the debt, together with an equitable title to the incident. As both cannot have precedence the weaker must give way to the stronger. The legal title to the incident must be subordinated to that which is superior, viz.: the legal title to the debt, although the holder of the incident acquired his right first. John and Louis Manas were, therefore, entitled to the proceeds of the mortgaged lands.

The case of Kernohan v. Durham, 48 Ohio St. 1, 13 L. R. A. 41, is relied upon by plaintiff in error. We think it does not support his contention. In that case Coddington took by indorsement the genuine note after due. Kernohan took an assignment of the mortgage, which assignment also purported to transfer the note. This was not only before the transfer of the note to Coddington, but before the note was due. The holding is that, as between Kernohan and McGill (the payee), the former took an equitable title to the genuine note, and hence, as Coddington's title was acquired after the note had been dishonored, he could take no better right than his indorser had. The note being past due he was put upon inquiry, and was chargeable with whatever knowledge due inquiry would have elicited. The vital difference between the position of the holder of the note in that case and in this is, that, while Coddington took his title after due and hence was charged with all infirmities, John and Louis Manas being indorsees and purchasers for value in the ordinary course of trade, before due, took good title as against the world.

Judgment affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Carl SCHROEDER

FLINT & PERE MARQUETTE R. CO., Impleaded, etc., Piff. in Err.

(.....Mich.....)

The boss or foreman of a gang of men unloading and leveling dirt on a railroad, who is under the immediate control of a railroad official who is often present, sometimes daily, directing the work, is a fellow servant of a member of the gang who is injured by the foreman's failure to give notice that the train is about to move, whether he had authority to hire and discharge the men under him or not.

(December 22, 1894.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for St. Clair County to review a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action brought to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of defendant's servants for which it was alleged to be responsible. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Hanchett, Stark & Hanchett, for plaintiff in error:

The plaintiff should have exercised care to avoid getting upon the cars, or attempting to get upon the cars, while they were being moved, or while they were likely to be moved, so as to endanger his safety in getting upon them.

Cousins v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 96 Mich. 386; Blair v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. 60 Mich. 125; McCaslin v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 98 Mich. 553; French v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 537; Werbovolsky v. Fort Wayne & E. R. Co. 86 Mich. 236; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bangs, 47 Mich. 470.

It was the plaintiff's duty to exercise care in informing himself of the circumstances, and in doing that he was bound to exercise the care of a reasonable, prudent, and cautious man, and if he neglected to inform himself and to take into account the circumstances as they were, so that by such omission he was negligent or careless, that fact itself would be contributory negligence.

Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bangs, supra; Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Miller, 25 Mich. 274; Hawmeyer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 48 Mich. 205, 43 Am. Rep. 470; Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99.

In the position occupied by Mehalski he is a fellow servant in respect to all acts done by him which do not come within the class of acts which the law imposes upon the railroad company itself to do as the principals

He is a fellow servant unless the act done by him, which caused the plaintiff's injury, was an act which properly belonged to the master to do, and for which the law makes the master personally responsible.

The fact that he was foreman of a crew of men does not change the rule.

McKinney, Fellow Servants, p. 5354; Wood, Mast. & S. § 438; 7 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 884; 24 Am. L. Rev. 157; Criterion of Fellow-Service, by George W. Easley (N. C.) 25 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 513, 520-523; Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 550, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Ross v. Boston & A. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 217; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 88, 29 Am. Rep. 97; Fuller v. Jewett, 80 N. Y. 46, 36 Am. Rep. 515; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521; Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 39 Am. Rep. 627; Brick v. Rochester, N. Y. & P. R. Co. 98 N. Y. 211; Loughlin v. State, 105 N. Y. 159; Hussey v. Coger, 3 L. R. A. 559, 112 N. Y. 614; Lindvall v. Woods, 4 L. R. A. 793, 41 Minn. 212; Dwyer v. American Exp. Co. 82 Wis. 807; Heine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 525; Indiana Car Co. v. Parker, 100 Ind. 181; Copper v. Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. 103 Ind. 305; Ell v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 97, 1 N. Dak. 336; Lewis v. Seifert, 116 Pa. 628; Holden v. Fitchburg R. Co. 129 Mass. 278, 37 Am. Rep. 343; O'Connor v. Roberts, 120 Mass. 237; Zeigler v. Day, 123 Mass. 152; Blake v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 70 Me. 60, 35 Am. Rep. 297; Conley v. Portland, 78 Me. 217; Doughty v. Penobscot Log Driving Co. 76 Me. 143; Cassidy v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 76 Me. 488; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Leahy, 10 Mich. 199; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 Mich. 511; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Austin, 40 Mich. 247; Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitta, 42 Mich. 34; Gardner v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 58 Mich. 584; Hoar v. Merrill, 63 Mich. 386; Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 102; Van Dusen v. Le Tellier, 78 Mich. 504; Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 500, 73 Mich. 515; Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co. 78 Mich. 288; Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 623, 79 Mich. 415; Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co. 89 Mich. 387; Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 423; Rouz v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co. 13 L. R. A. 728, 85 Mich. 519; Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 416; Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 16 L. R. A. 342, 97 Mich. 343.

A true test is, whether the person whose status is in question is charged with the performance of a duty which properly belongs to the master.

McKinney, Fellow Servants, p. 54; Van Dusen v. Le Tellier, 78 Mich. 492; Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co., Rouz v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co., Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. and Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. supra.

The fact that an employé represents the master as to certain acts, does not render the master liable for his negligence as to other acts wherein he does not stand in the master's place, but does stand and act in the place of a fellow servant.

NOTE.—The above case adds another important discussion to the vexed fellow-servant question. It is not deemed necessary to collate here the references to the very numerous other cases in this series on the subject. But attention is called to the notes to Dixon v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 792; Relyea v. Kansas City, Ft. S. & G. R. Co. (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 517; Russ v. Wabash Western R. Co. (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 823; and Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. (Mo.) 18 L. R. A. 827.

McKinney, Fellow Servants, p. 109; Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 520, 37 Am. Rep. 521; Loughlin v. State, 105 N. Y. 159; Hussey v. Coger, 3 L. R. A. 559, 112 N. Y. 614; Ell v. Northern Pac. R. Co. 13 L. R. A. 97, 1 N. Dak. 336; Van Dusen v. Letellier, and Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co. supra; Lindvall v. Woods, 4 L. R. A. 793, 41 Minn. 212.

The act done by Mehalski, of which complaint is made, viz., causing the train to be moved without giving a proper signal, does not come within the class of acts for whose proper performance the master is responsible.

Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 623, 79 Mich. 409; Greenwald v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 197; Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co. 78 Mich. 271; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Leahy, 10 Mich. 193; Michigan Cent. R. Co. v. Dolan, 32 Mich. 510; Slater v. Jewett, 85 N. Y. 61, 39 Am. Rep. 627; Heine v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 58 Wis. 525; Toner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 69 Wis. 188.

The decisions of this court do not recognize an employé as vice-principal or alter ego of the principal in any case where he is a simple foreman of a gang of workmen acting under the direction and control of an agent of the principal, as was the case with Mehalski.

Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. and Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. supra; Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 35; Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 102; Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co. 78 Mich. 271. See also Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5, 21 Am. Rep. 573; Conley v. Portland, 78 Me. 217; Zeigler v. Day, 123 Mass. 152; O'Connor v. Roberts, 120 Mass. 227; Albro v. Agawam Canal Co. 6 Cush. 75; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 877, 28 L. ed. 787; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Baugh, 149 U. S. 368, 37 L. ed. 772.

Messrs. Northup & O'Donnell and James A. Muir, for defendant in error:

Defendant owed plaintiff the duty to warn him of the danger to which he was about to be subject.

Henry v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 49 Mich. 499; Beauchamp v. Saginaw Min. Co. 50 Mich. 170, 45 Am. Rep. 30; Town v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 84 Mich. 214; Parkhurst v. Johnson, 50 Mich. 70, 45 Am. Rep. 28; Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1; Sadowski v. Michigan Car Co. 84 Mich. 100; James v. Emmet Min. Co. 55 Mich. 346; Luke v. Wheat Min. Co. 71 Mich. 364.

It was held negligent to throw bales of hay upon the sidewalk from the loft of a barn facing the street, without first looking upon the sidewalk and giving sufficient warning to persons approaching.

Dehring v. Comstock, 78 Mich. 156; Chicago & N. E. R. Co. v. Miller, 46 Mich. 532; Malmsten v. Marquette, H. & O. R. Co. 49 Mich. 94; Barnes v. Brown, 95 Mich. 576.

In Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 7 L. R. A. 623, 79 Mich. 409, it was maintained by the court that if the master directs the servant to do some act which is dangerous, but which could be made safe by some special care on the master's part, the servant has the right to assume that such special care will be taken. In all cases where the injury can readily be guarded against the employer is in duty bound to protect the employé at its peril.

29 L. R. A.

Palmer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 87 Mich. 281.

The failure to warn plaintiff of this intention to move the train was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury.

Selleck v. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. 18 L. R. A. 154, 93 Mich. 375, 58 Mich. 195; McKeller v. Monitor Twp. 78 Mich. 485; Sanborn v. Detroit, B. O. & A. R. Co. 16 L. R. A. 119, 91 Mich. 588; Keating v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 97 Mich. 154; Southwestern Teleg. & Teleph. Co. v. Robinson, 16 L. R. A. 545, 50 Fed. Rep. 810; Cooley v. Torts, 70, 71; 2 Thomp. Neg. 1084; Young v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 56 Mich. 438; Rajnowski v. Detroit, B. O. & A. R. Co. 78 Mich. 681.

Plaintiff had no warning nor any reason to apprehend danger. It is a sound rule of law that it is not contributory negligence not to look out for danger when there is no reason to apprehend any.

Engel v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 41; Sadowski v. Michigan Car Co. 84 Mich. 100; Schlacker v. Ashland Iron Min. Co. 89 Mich. 258.

Defendant cannot so delegate the authority to move and place trains as to free it from the results of negligence of those into whose hands it placed such authority.

Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 500, 78 Mich. 515; Town v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 84 Mich. 214; Bishop, Cont. L. 644-647; 1 Shearm. & Redf. Neg. § 228; Taylor v. Evansville & T. H. R. Co. 6 L. R. A. 584, 121 Ind. 124.

Mehalski was not a fellow servant with plaintiff.

Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 35; Beach, Contrib. Neg. 333; Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. supra; Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 109 U. S. 483, 27 L. ed. 1005; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 387, 28 L. ed. 791; Hough v. Texas & P. R. Co. 100 U. S. 216, 25 L. ed. 615; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Andrews, 50 Fed. Rep. 728; Anderson v. Bennett, 16 Or. 515; Darrigan v. New York & N. E. R. Co. 52 Conn. 285, 52 Am. Rep. 590; Schroeder v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 106 Mo. 322; Miller v. Missouri Pac. R. Co. 109 Mo. 350; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. May, 108 Ill. 288; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Bayfield, 87 Mich. 212; Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545; Booth v. Boston & A. R. Co. 73 N. Y. 88, 29 Am. Rep. 97; Stevenson v. Jewett, 16 Hun. 210; Beal v. New York Cent. & H. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 171; Weger v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 55 Pa. 460; Wood, Mast. & S. 356; Borman v. Omaha & St. L. R. Co. 41 Fed. Rep. 667; Shumway v. Walworth & N. Mfg. Co. 98 Mich. 411; Slater v. Chapman, 67 Mich. 523; Palmer v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 17 L. R. A. 636, 93 Mich. 383; Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 7 L. R. A. 623, 79 Mich. 409; Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 83 Mich. 281.

Grant, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The liability of the defendant the Flint & Pere Marquette Railroad Company, under the instructions of the court, depends upon the position occupied by Mehalski, the boss or foreman of the gang of ten men who were occupied in unloading and leveling the dirt hauled upon its premises by the defendant the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railroad Company. The sole allegation of negligence alleged as ground for recovery against the Flint & Pere Marquette road is that Mehalski failed to give notice to his coemployees that the train was about to move. Before discussing this question, I desire to state that in my judgment this accident could not possibly have happened without the negligence of the plaintiff himself, if the trainmen of the Chicago & Grand Trunk road had performed their duty. It was established beyond controversy, by the testimony of witnesses and by the rules of the company, that it was the duty of the trainmen to give warning of the moving of the train, and to see that both the "track and the train were clear," and that it was the duty of the rear brakeman to be in his place on the rear car when the train moved. The case against the Grand Trunk Company was withdrawn by the plaintiff before it was submitted to the jury, and he was permitted to recover on the ground of the negligence of the Flint & Pere Marquette Company. If Mehalski was not the defendant's alter ego, then it is not liable. He occupied the usual position of boss or foreman of a gang of men. His duties were no other, or different, or greater than those of the foreman of the ordinary section gang upon a railroad. In all such cases some one of the men employed must be invested with authority to direct the work. He kept the time, counted the number of cars, directed the men where and how to work, saw that they did their work properly, directed the place where the train should stop for unloading, notified the men when to cease leveling and go to unloading, and then assisted in doing the work. He was under the immediate and direct control of Mr. Cole, a higher official of the defendant, who was often present, sometimes daily, superintending and directing the work. I do not think there was any legitimate evidence tending to show that he was invested with authority to hire and discharge men. He certainly had not done it before the accident, and was not given express authority until long afterwards. But whether he did or not have such authority I consider of little consequence. The power to hire and discharge is not conclusive, and is in many cases of little moment. Too much prominence has often been given to this authority. One may possess it and still not be the alter ego, or he may not possess it and still be the alter ego. The doctrine of nonliability for the negligence of a fellow servant is so firmly established, and has been so frequently affirmed, in this state, that I deem it unnecessary to cite the authorities. The difficulty has always been in determining whether the servant whose negligence caused the injury was, under the facts of each case, the alter ego or a fellow servant. The perplexity and difficulty of the question have been recognized in the decisions of this court, and it is quite possible that there may be some difficulty in harmonizing them all, but the rule recognized in nearly if not all of them is thus 29 L. R. A.

stated by McKinney on Fellow Servants: "The true test it is believed, whether an employé occupies the position of a fellow servant to another employé, or is the representative of the master, is to be found, not from the grade or rank of the offending or injured servant, but it is to be determined by the character of the act being performed by the offending servant, by which another employé is injured; or, in other words, whether the person whose status is in question is charged with the performance of a duty which properly belongs to the master." This principle is so exhaustively and carefully discussed by my brother Hooker in Beesley v. F. W. Wheeler & Co. (Mich.) 37 L. R. A. 266, that further discussion here is unnecessary. The authorities are there cited and commented on. I concur in his reasoning and the conclusions reached.

One of the principal cases relied upon by the plaintiff is Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., 79 Mich. 409, 7 L. R. A. 623. In that case my brother Long, speaking for the court, expressly recognized this rule in the following language: "It is not to be determined solely by the grade or rank of the offending or injured servant, but is to be determined by the character of the act being performed by the offending servant. If it is an act that the law imposes the duty upon the part of the master to perform, then the offending employé is not a fellow servant, but a superior or agent, for whose acts the master is held liable. Again, if the master has delegated to a servant or employé the care and management of the entire business, or a distinct department of it, the situation being that the superior servant is charged with the performance of duties towards the inferior servant which the law imposes upon the master, then such superior servant stands in the place of the master, and the rule of respondet superior applies." To hold Mehalski the alter ego would result, in my judgment, in the virtual abrogation of the rule. It would establish the doctrine that where a farmer employs a competent ditcher to construct a drain upon his farm, or a foreman to harvest his crops, or a carpenter to build him a barn or other building, he is responsible for their negligent acts notwithstanding that he has employed competent men and furnished proper tools, material, and machinery; and that every foreman in a manufacturing plant, and every boss of a railroad gang, is a vice-principal. It would result in overruling the following cases: Quincy Min. Co. v. Kitts, 42 Mich. 84; Hoar v. Merritt, 63 Mich. 386; Peterson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 67 Mich. 102; Adams v. Iron Cliffs Co. 78 Mich. 271, —and the many other cases in which this rule has been recognized and affirmed.

Plaintiff relies upon the following authorities to support his right of recovery: Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. supra; Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 85; Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 83 Mich. 281, Id., 93 Mich. 414; Shumway v. Walworth & N. Mfg. Co. 98 Mich. 411; Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 78 Mich. 513, 7 L. R. A. 500. In Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co., which, as already shown, approves the rule as above stated, a division superintendent, who had the entire charge and control of a division of the road 150 miles in length, was held to be the alter ego. In Ryan v. Bagaley the defendant, the owner of the mine, lived in another state, and the entire management, control, and conduct of the mine in its operation was delegated to the mining captain. That case was tried before the writer of this opinion as the circuit judge, and the charge to the jury upon this point was as follows: "It appears from the testimony that he had the entire charge and control of the underground work, and all the work generally, of the mine, and that he employed and discharged men. Now, I charge you that Captain Whitesides, if he had this power delegated to him to manage and control the mine, negligence on his part would be the negligence of the owners or managers of the mine. So, if he directed the hoisting of this pipe, and the act alone of hoisting it was negligence, then the owners of the mine would be liable. If he did not direct how it should be done, but simply instructed Mr. Tyler to hoist the pipe, and Tyler, in his trying it, did it negligently and carelessly, that would not be the act of the defendants or Mr. Whitesides." In Skumway v. Walworth & N. Mfg. Co. it was conceded by the defendant that the relations of the agent to the defendant were such that he might in law, for some purposes, be regarded as the representative of the master, but it was insisted that in the particular act of starting the machine he was acting as a fellow servant. The officer of the defendant had the entire charge of the factory, as well as the employment and discharge of men. This was evidently a case of the delegation of the entire control to the agent, who was held to be a vice-principal. In Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. stress was laid upon the fact that the foreman, Moleski, who had full charge of the gravel train, and complete control over employes working under him, with full power to hire all laborers and to discharge them, and to whom alone complaint could be made, placed the plaintiff in a position of danger, to which he was not accustomed, and for which he was not hired. Both the opinions in that case were also written by Mr. Justice Long, and the superior servant was held to be the alter ego under peculiar facts which showed an extensive authority conferred by the principal upon his servant. I assented to that opinion without any thought of abrogating or infringing upon the above rule so firmly established by a long line of decisions in this and other courts, and so well grounded in reason. In Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. the train dispatcher had absolute control over the running and operating of trains from Rives Junction to Mackinac. This case also recognizes the general rule above stated, and the difficulty inherent in determining whether the facts of any case bring it within the rule. Whatever criticisms may be made upon the soundness of these decisions, it cannot be said that the court intended to abrogate the rule of non-liability for the negligence of a fellow servant in every case of superior authority, nor that they apply to or govern the facts of the case at bar. This rule is well settled, and in every case the question must be, Do the facts shown by the plaintiff bring his case within the rule? See Peschel v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 62 Wis. 349.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the judgment should be reversed, and no new trial ordered.

Ordered accordingly.

Long and Hooker, JJ., concurred with Grant, J.

Montgomery, J., concurring:

The plaintiff sues to recover for negligent injury. The defendant railroad company employed the Chicago & Grand Trunk Railway Company to deliver, upon its yard at Port Huron, dirt taken from the tunnel which the Chicago & Grand Trunk road was excavating for, which dirt was to be used by defendant in leveling its own yard. The defendant had nothing to do with the train except to indicate to the conductor of the train where to place the cars for unloading. The plaintiff was engaged with a gang of men in the work of unloading the cars as they were placed in the yard. The gang of men was under the immediate charge of one Mehalski as foreman. Mehalski's authority consisted of directing the manner of unloading, and he also had authority, when given direction by his superior, Mr. Cole, to hire and discharge men. The testimony shows that Mr. Cole was the division road master of the defendant road, and he had general charge and direction of the work of filling the yard. He gave instructions to Mehalski to keep the time and number of cars, and he gave directions in relation to the work. Mehalski, before increasing his force of men, consulted and obtained the consent of Mr. Cole. With this consent, he had authority to keep up the number of the force by hiring men to take the place of those who left. While he did not exercise the power of discharging men at any time prior to the injury to plaintiff, he testifies that he supposed that he had the power to discharge men if they were not doing the work satisfactorily. He testifies that he was under Mr. Cole's direction and charge; that Mr. Cole was there on the spot, sometimes twice a day, and sometimes only twice a week. "If he saw that the work was going on as he wanted it, he would say, 'All right.' If it was something that did not satisfy him, he gave me instructions." The injury was caused, as is claimed by the plaintiff, in the following manner: In the conduct of the business, when the men were leveling dirt in the yard, the signal for them to leave the work, and go at once to the cars and commence the work of unloading, was a call from Mehalski in the words, "Come on, boys." When the train was placed, the engine would be uncoupled and moved away. This custom was known to all the men. They came to unload whenever Mehalski called them, and not before. When he saw the train come, he went on, and placed it where he wanted it to be unloaded, and then called the men. On the day in question, after the train which caused plaintiff's injury came into the yard, Mehalski, following the usual custom, called to the men by hallooing, "Come on, boys," and waved his hands. The men had previously been assigned in pairs to the cars on the train. Each knew his own car. The plaintiff was at work on the car furthest from the engine,—the fifth car. The men had been working to the south of the train. The engine was on the north end of the train, and plaintiff's car would therefore be the first one reached by the laborers. Each of the men carried a pail of water, in which he dipped his shovel when the wet clay, which was very sticky, adhered to it. The train came. The conductor, under the order of Mehalski, placed it. In coming to the train from the south, plaintiff, who was assigned to the last car, went to the west side, that he might fill his pail with water from the pond. He got his water, and put it upon the car. At the time Mehalski hallooed and motioned to the men, the cars had stopped. Plaintiff saw the engine uncoupled and standing at a distance. When he got to the car, it stood about thirty feet away. It was there when he went for the water. It was standing in the same place when he started to climb up. It appears that Mehalski had been notified that the train was blocking the yard engine of the Flint & Pere Marquette Railroad on another track, and was requested to have the mud train moved. Mehalski was then at the south end of the train, and, in answer to the request to move the train, he went up to the engine. As Mehalski went to the north end of the train to instruct the conductor to pull it ahead, the men were coming up to unload the train. The engine backed down and against the train, and the plaintiff received the injuries complained of. No warning was given by Mehalski. The plaintiff recovered, and the defendant brings the case to this court.

1. The most important question arises upon the instruction of the court upon the subject of whether the plaintiff and Mehalski were fellow servants. Upon that question the circuit judge instructed the jury as follows: "If you find from all the evidence in the case that Jacob Mehalski had full power to hire and discharge men that were engaged in unloading this car, and that he had full control over these men in directing and managing their work in and about the entire business for which they were employed,—that is, in receiving the train into the yard and placing the train, the unloading of the dirt and leveling of it down, and the general direction of the work,—then I instruct you, as a matter of law, that Jacob Mehalski was not a fellow servant of the plaintiff." It has been found difficult to lay down general rules for determining whether one who has some direction of a branch of business of the principal is to be deemed his representative or a fellow servant, and much confusion has arisen from a misapplication of well-understood rules; and it may be said, also, that the confusion has most often arisen in determining the question with reference to the rank of the offending servant. In general, we think the true test is whether the person alleged to be a representative of the master is engaged in the performance of an act which it is the duty of the master to perform for the protection of his employes,—such a duty as that of providing a safe place to work, and safe machinery and appliances; exercising due care in the selection of servants engaged in the same employment; giving proper direction as to use of dangerous machinery by inexperienced employes; and the establishment of proper rules and regulations for the conduct of the business. Where there has been neglect of any of these duties, whether the neglect is the personal neglect of the master or that of one intrusted by him with the performance of the duty, such neglect is attributable to the master; and this is generally true, without reference to the rank of the offending servant. In Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co., 89 Mich. 387, the rule as stated by Chief Justice Church in Flicks v. Boston & A. R. Co., 53 N. Y. 549, 13 Am. Rep. 545, is cited with approval. The rule as cited is as follows: "The true rule, I apprehend, is to hold the corporation liable for negligence or want of proper care in respect to such acts and duties as it is required to perform and discharge as master or principal, without regard to the rank or title of the agent intrusted with their performance. As to such acts, the agent occupies the place of the corporation, and the latter . . . is liable for the manner in which they are performed." See also, Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 521; Van Dusen v. Letellier, 78 Mich. 492; Morton v. Detroit, B. C. & A. R. Co. 81 Mich. 423; Roux v. Blodgett & Davis Lumber Co. 85 Mich. 519, 13 L. R. A. 728; Irvine v. Flint & P. M. R. Co. 89 Mich. 416; Dewey v. Detroit, G. H. & M. R. Co. 97 Mich. 329, 23 L. R. A. 292. In some jurisdictions, this is the limit of the liability of the master in all cases; and it is held that an employé or servant may occupy a dual position,—that he may represent the master and stand in his place as to certain acts, and in other acts be simply a fellow servant. See McKinney, Fellow Servants, p. 109. And, within certain limits, this rule has been applied in this state. See Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. 78 Mich. 513, 7 L. R. A. 500; Fox v. Spring Lake Iron Co. supra. But it has also been held by this court that where the master places the entire charge of the business in the hands of an agent, exercising no authority therein, he may be liable for the negligence of such agent to a subordinate employé. This rule is recognized in Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. 79 Mich. 409, 7 L. R. A. 633; Ryan v. Bagaley, 50 Mich. 179, 45 Am. Rep. 35; Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 83 Mich. 281; and Shumway v. Walworth & N. Mfg. Co. 98 Mich. 411. See also, Bailey, Mast. Liab. 270; Cooley, Torts, 665; Sell v. Riets & Bros. Lumber Co. 70 Mich. 479; Erickson v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 98 Mich. 414; Lytle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 84 Mich. 289.

It remains to be considered, then, whether the negligence of Mehalski in the present case was the neglect of a duty which the master owed to the servant, and could not delegate to a fellow servant, and, if this be answered in the negative, whether, within the rule established in this state, the entire management of the business, or a particular branch thereof, had been delegated to Mehalski in such sense as to make him the alter ego, or vice-principal, of the defendant. We think it very clear that the act which Mehalski was performing was not one which the master owed the duty of performing in such sense that he could not delegate it to a fellow servant of the plaintiff. The act which he performed or neglected—that of giving notice of the intention to move the engine—was such a one as might be, and generally is, intrusted to subordinates, and related to the mere operation of the business in its details. There was no defect in machinery. There was no negligence in the employment of servants. The injury did not result from the failure to properly instruct an inexperienced servant, nor did the injury result from a want of general rules for the management and conduct of the business. It was plainly, therefore, the neglect of a fellow servant, unless it can be said that Mehalski was the vice-principal, or alter ego, of the defendant. If the superior servant has complete control of the business of the master, or a disconnected branch thereof, the master is liable for the negligence of the superior servant,—in that case called the “vice-principal;” and this, without regard to whether the negligence is a failure to perform a duty which, upon other grounds, the law casts upon the master. This liability is apparently based upon the ground that the risk of personal negligence of one standing in such relation to the master that he can be called the master’s other self is not undertaken by the servant. See cases above cited. Mere superiority in grade does not constitute a foreman the vice-principal, unless his authority is exclusive in his department. Did Mehalski occupy that relation to the defendant’s business? In the case of Harrison v. Detroit, L. & N. R. Co. Light, an assistant road-master, was held to be the vice-principal, on the ground that the entire charge of a distinct branch of the business was, for the time being, in his hands as agent, the master exercising no discretion and no oversight. It was said: “He in fact controlled that entire division absolutely, as far as employing and discharging the men was concerned. Doyle [his superior] was not present at the time of the injury, and the fair inference is that whatever power Doyle would have had, if present, Light had like power, and represented the defendant company as fully as Doyle would have done. He did no manual labor himself, but had the full oversight, care, and management of it.” In Hunn v. Michigan Cent. R. Co. It was said: “The master may not choose to give his personal attention to his business, and may desire to put another in his place, to manage and control it for him as fully as he might do if personally present. Such a person is his alter ego, and the master is as responsible for his acts of omission and commission, while engaged in the business intrusted to him, as if he did such acts himself. . . . Whenever the business conducted by the person selected by the master is such that the person selected is vested with full control (subject to no one’s supervision except the master’s) over the action of the employes engaged in carrying on a particular branch of the master’s business, and acting upon his own discretion, according to general instructions laid down for his guidance, it is his province to direct, and the duty of the employes to obey, then he stands in the place of the master, and is not a fellow servant with those whom he controls.” See also Lytle v. Chicago & W. M. R. Co. 84 Mich. 295. In the present case, while Mehalski was acting under the general instructions of Cole, the jury has found that he (Mehalski) had full control of the men employed, and directed and managed the entire work in and about the entire business in which they were engaged, with full power to hire and discharge men engaged in the work. If the facts were so, the plaintiff and Mehalski were not fellow servants. The fact that Mehalski was subject to general directions by another cannot be held conclusive. For the time being, every power and all authority which the master could exercise were vested in Mehalski, including the power of enforcing his authority by a discharge of the men employed. We think, within the rule established in this state, the instructions of the circuit judge, if supported by the evidence, must be upheld.

But it is said that there was no evidence that Mehalski had the power to discharge men. On cross-examination Mehalski testified: “It was my duty to see that the men did their work properly. If they did not, I would discharge them.” On redirect he testified: “Mr. Cole had given me authority to discharge men. He said, if the men were no good, to discharge them. That was about two months after we commenced work there.” As this date was later than the date of the injury to plaintiff, it is contended that there was no authority at the time of the injury. But the witness further testified on redirect: “I had talked with him many times before that about discharging men, and was acting under his direction about that.” On recross-examination he testified: “. . . If any left, I had authority to hire men in their places, but would not have authority to take any greater number than ten without getting authority from Mr. Cole. He told me, if they would not work, to let them go. I considered I had a right to discharge a man if he was not doing good work.” We are satisfied that it was properly left to the jury to say whether, at the time of the injury to the plaintiff, Mehalski had authority to hire and discharge men.

2. There was testimony from which the jury would be justified in inferring that the plaintiff attempted to get upon the car after it was in motion. While the testimony upon this point was meager, yet it was such that the jury might have been justified in acting upon it. One Reynolds, a witness for defendant, testified: “Van Patton gave the signal to back up and couple on, and pull the train ahead. There was no jerking of the train. Just as they started, I saw plaintiff step between the cars. He put his pick and shovel and pail onto the car, and then put his hands, come on each car, and tried to step on the brake beam. There would not be much slack in the train that a person would notice, because they started so slow. I watched the man, and the next I saw of him his foot was run over. I did not see him when he fell." In view of this testimony, defendant asked an instruction as follows: "In order to recover, the plaintiff was required by law to exercise care to avoid getting upon the cars, or to attempt to get upon the cars, while they were being moved, or while they were likely to be moved, so as to endanger his safety in getting upon them; and if, by his own want of care, he contributed to receiving the injury of which he complains, he cannot recover against the defendant." We think this instruction should have been given. It was peculiarly proper in this case, for the reason that the injury is alleged to have occurred through a failure to notify the plaintiff of the fact that the train was about to move. If, then, the plaintiff's attempt to get aboard the car was made after the train was in motion, it cannot be said that the neglect of the duty to notify him that the train was about to move was the proximate cause of the injury; nor are we able to say that the charge of the circuit judge, given on his own motion, cured the error. It is true, the court laid down correctly the general rule that the plaintiff must show that he in no way contributed to the injury complained of; but the instructions did not touch the precise point covered by the request to charge, and the defendant was entitled to an instruction upon this specific point. Wilsey v. Crans, 69 Mich. 17; Miller v. Miller, 97 Mich. 151; Babbitt v. Bumpus, 78 Mich. 381.

8. The circuit judge further charged the jury that if they should find that Mehalski, after he had given the order to the men to come on and get upon the cars, and, while the plaintiff was about to climb upon the cars, ordered the engine coupled onto the train to move it, and did not warn the plaintiff, or notify him in some way, that the train was about to be moved, and the engine was backed down and coupled onto the train and moved in obedience to the orders of Mehalski, and in the moving of the train the plaintiff was thrown down and run over, and received the injuries complained of, and if the jury should find that the proximate cause of the injury was the failure of Mehalski to notify the plaintiff that the train was about to be moved, then the plaintiff would be entitled to recover. This instruction implies that the failure of Mehalski to notify plaintiff of the intended movement of the train was negligence as matter of law. While it was clearly a fact from which the jury might have inferred negligence, yet we think it should have been left to the jury to determine whether, in view of the custom of giving notice by Mehalski, and the custom of ringing a bell and blowing a whistle by those in charge of the train, the failure of Mehalski to give notice on the occasion in question was or was not negligence. There are no other questions presented which are likely to arise upon another trial. The judgment should be reversed, with costs, and a new trial ordered.

McGrath, Ch. J., concurred with Montgomery, J.

Rehearing denied.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

City of SAN BERNARDINO, Appt.,

SOUTHERN PACIFIC CO., Resp.

(.....Cal.....)

A license tax on the right to operate a branch railroad in a city cannot be imposed by the city where this branch is part of an interstate line of railroad.

(June 27, 1895.)

APPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Superior Court for San Bernardino County in favor of defendant in an action brought to enforce payment of a license tax for the privilege of engaging in the business of carrier within the city. Affirmed.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion.

Messrs. Rolfe & Rolfe, for appellant:

A city may impose a license tax on a railroad company having a depot or operating its railroad therein.

Los Angeles v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 61 Cal. 59; San José v. San José & S. O. R. Co. 58 Cal. 476.

A common carrier is not an entirety so as to exonerate it from paying a license on each of its branch offices in the different counties of the state.

People v. Wells, Fargo & Co. 19 Cal. 298; Sacramento v. California Stage Co. 12 Cal. 184.

A state or municipality may, by imposing a license or other tax on internal business, indirectly affect commerce or business carried on between different states.

Ficklen v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 145 U. S. 1, 36 L. ed. 601, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 79.

A state may tax its own internal commerce.

Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 499, 30 L. ed. 698; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. East St. Louis, 107 U. S. 865, 27 L. ed. 419; Maine v. Grand Trunk R. Co. of Canada, 143 U. S. 217, 35 L. ed. 994; Ficklen v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 145 U. S. 23, 36 L. ed. 607, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 79.

Any doubt as to a restriction of a state to tax is to be decided in favor of the right.

Bank of Commerce v. Tennessee, 104 U. S. 495, 26 L. ed. 811.

NOTE.—For a collection of authorities upon the question of the right of a state to impose a license tax which affects interstate commerce, see note to Bothermel v. Meyerle (Pa.) 9 L. R. A. 383.

As to power to impose local license tax upon vessels licensed by the United States, see Frere v. Von Schoeler (La.) 27 L. R. A. 414, and note.

29 L. R. A.

The taxing power is an incident of sovereignty and co-extensive with it.
Burroughs, Tenn. § 6.

Messrs. W. J. Hunsaker and William F. Herrin, with Messrs. Bicknell & Trask, for respondent:

By the Constitution of the United States the power of regulating interstate commerce is vested in congress.

See U. S. Const. art. 1, § 8, pt. 3.

Of course the exaction of a license tax as a condition of doing any particular business is a tax on the occupation, and a tax on the occupation of doing a business is surely a tax on the business.

Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 311, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 184; Brennan v. Titusville, 158 U. S. 280, 38 L. ed. 719; McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 891, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 181; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 868, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241; Harmon v. Chicago, 147 U. S. 896, 37 L. ed. 216.

All railroads and parts of railroads which are now or may hereafter be in operation are post-roads.

U. S. Rev. Stat. § 8964.

A railroad which is a link in a through line of railroad by which passengers and freight are transported into a state from other states, and from that state into other states, is engaged in the business of interstate commerce.

Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 34 L. ed. 894, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178; California v. Central Pac. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 150.

The fact that local business is done between the city of San Bernardino and other points within the state is wholly immaterial, there being no discrimination in the tax as between local business and interstate business.

Osborne v. Mobile, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 479, 21 L. ed. 470; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 647, 32 L. ed. 314, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 184; Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 566, 24 L. ed. 1015; Webber v. Virginia, 108 U. S. 344, 26 L. ed. 565; Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 69, 28 L. ed. 653; Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 455, 29 L. ed. 694; Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489, 30 L. ed. 694; Corson v. Maryland, 120 U. S. 502, 30 L. ed. 699; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 868, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241; Leisy v. Hardin, 135 U. S. 100, 34 L. ed. 128, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 36; Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 34 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 143; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 34 L. ed. 455, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 185; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 34 L. ed. 862, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 485; Brennan v. Titusville, 158 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 84, 29 L. ed. 785; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196, 29 L. ed. 158; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 30 L. ed. 244.

A state tax upon the business of carrying freight or passengers into and out of the state is void, as being a tax upon commerce.

Fargo v. Stevens, 121 U. S. 230, 30 L. ed. 889; Philadelphia & S. Mail S. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 826, 30 L. ed. 1200, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 308; California v. Central Pac. R. Co. 127 U. S. 1, 32 L. ed. 150; Lyng 20 L. R. A.

v. Michigan, supra; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 136 U. S. 114, 34 L. ed. 894, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 178; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649; United States Express Co. v. Hemmingway, 39 Fed. Rep. 60; Com. v. Smith, 92 Ky. 38.

A license tax which is a tax on the privilege of doing business involving interstate commerce is void, and cannot be enforced.

San Benito County v. Southern Pac. R. Co. 77 Cal. 518; Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 84, 29 L. ed. 785; Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 640, 32 L. ed. 211, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 184; Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129, 32 L. ed. 868, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 241; McCall v. California, 136 U. S. 104, 34 L. ed. 891, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 181; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, and Crutcher v. Kentucky, supra; Harmon v. Chicago, 147 U. S. 896, 37 L. ed. 216; Brennan v. Titusville, 158 U. S. 289, 38 L. ed. 719; Ex parte Thomas, 71 Cal. 204; Re White, 11 L. R. A. 234, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 581, 43 Fed. Rep. 913; Re Nichols, 48 Fed. Rep. 164; McClellan v. Pettigrew, 44 La. Ann. 856; Re Spain, 14 L. R. A. 97, 47 Fed. Rep. 208; Com. v. Smith, supra; McLaughlin v. South Bend, 10 L. R. A. 357, 126 Ind. 471; Ex parte Murray, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 574, 93 Ala. 78; State v. Agee, 2 Inters. Com. Rep. 21, 83 Ala. 110; Wrought Iron Range Co. v. Johnson, 8 L. R. A. 273, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 146, 84 Ga. 754; Fort Scott v. Pelton, 39 Kan. 764; Re Flinn, 57 Fed. Rep. 496; Re Rozelle, 57 Fed. Rep. 155; Olements v. Casper, (Wyo.) 35 Pac. Rep. 472; Georgia Pkg. Co. v. Macon, 22 L. R. A. 775, 4 Inters. Com. Rep. 508, 60 Fed. Rep. 774; Farris v. Henderson, 1 Okla. 884; Hooper v. California, 155 U. S. 648, 39 L. ed. 297.

Garoutte, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action by the city of San Bernardino, a municipal corporation of the fifth class, to recover of the Southern Pacific Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Kentucky, the sum of $100 as license tax for carrying on the business of common carrier, under the provisions of a city ordinance imposing a license tax of $5 a month on any person or company carrying on such business in said city. The answer alleges that the defendant is engaged in interstate commerce in operating a railroad for the carriage of freight and passengers and United States mail from New Orleans, in the state of Louisiana, through the state of California, to Portland, in Oregon, and as part of said system operates a line of railroad to said city of San Bernardino, and that the sum sought to be recovered from defendant is a license tax for the privilege of engaging in interstate commerce, and its assessment and attempted enforcement, and collection is a violation of article 1, section 8, parts 3 and 7, of the Constitution of the United States. The case was tried on an agreed statement of facts, and judgment went for defendant in the court below, and plaintiff appeals.

In the agreed statement of facts we find the following: "That the defendant is now, and at all the times stated in plaintiff's complaint herein was, a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the state of Kentucky, and engaged in operating, as lessee of the Southern Pacific Company, a continuous line of steam railroad, for the carriage of freight, passengers, and United States mails, for hire as common carriers, from the city of New Orleans, in the state of Louisiana, through the states of Louisiana and Texas, the territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the states of California and Oregon, to the city of Portland, in the state of Oregon, and that as a part of its said transcontinental line of railroad, and connecting with its main line thereof, near Colton, in the county of San Bernardino, state of California, it operates a line of steam railroad to and into the city of San Bernardino, in said county and state, for the carriage of freight, passengers, and United States mails to and from points on its said main line of railroad outside the state of California; also between points in the state of California; and that it does now and at all times mentioned in said complaint did, under contracts with the government of the United States, regularly carry over its said line of railroad the mails of the United States to and from said city of San Bernardino, and to and from points outside of the state of California, and has at all times mentioned in the complaint herein maintained an office at said city of San Bernardino for the carrying on of its said business."

A license tax, which is a tax on the privilege of doing business involving interstate commerce, is void, and cannot be enforced. This doctrine cannot be questioned. In Lyng v. Michigan, 135 U. S. 161, 84 L. ed. 150, 3 Inters. Com. Rep. 148, the court said: "We have repeatedly held that no state has the right to lay a tax on interstate commerce in any form, whether by the way of duties laid on the transportation of the subjects of that commerce, or on the receipts derived from that transportation, or on the occupation or business of carrying it on, for the reason that taxation is a burden on that commerce, and amounts to a regulation of it, which solely belongs to congress." See also Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 35 L. ed. 649.

It would appear from appellant's brief that this proposition of law is not controverted, but its application to the facts of this case is denied, upon the ground, as it is claimed, that the line of railroad operated by the defendant in the city of San Bernardino is not its main trunk line, but is only a branch thereof. In other words, it is conceded that a similar license tax to the one here involved would not be a valid tax, and could not be collected, in any city located upon the main trunk line of road between New Orleans and Portland, Or., not even in the city of Colton, which is situated at the point of junction of the main and branch lines, and in the same county as the plaintiff itself. Under the agreed statement of facts, there is no sound foundation upon which to rest the application of a different principle of law in these two classes of cities. It is stipulated that this branch line is "a part of its said transcontinental line of railroad," and in the face of existence of such fact we do not perceive any force in plaintiff's contention that this particular part of the railroad is no part of its main trunk line. But the stipulation of facts even goes beyond this broad statement and declares that the line of road operating in the city of San Bernardino carries passengers, freight, and United States mails to and from points on its said main line of railroad, outside of the state of California; also between points in the state of California, and likewise conveys the United States mails to and from such points. Carrying passengers and freight from San Bernardino to a thousand places on the line of the road in other states, and likewise from those points to San Bernardino, is conducting an interstate commerce business pure and simple, and by the stipulation this is the business the defendant is carrying on in the city of San Bernardino. The question of power in the city to create such an ordinance is not to be tested by the fact as to whether or not the city is located upon any particular line of railroad, be it trunk or branch line, but rather by the character of the business in which the defendant is engaged in the city passing the ordinance.

In dealing with this question, we do not concern ourselves as to the character of the franchise under which either the trunk line or the branch line of defendant is doing business. The character of defendant's business, and not the character of its franchise, points the judgment. Again, as far as plaintiff is concerned, it is the terminus of the transcontinental line; but we think the question of direct line and terminal wholly immaterial.

If this question is to be determined by the character of the business done, and we are clear that by such rule the rights of defendant are to be measured, then plaintiff stands upon common ground with every other city situated in the state of California upon the main line proper, for in those cities the defendant conducts and carries on the same kind and character of business as is conducted and carried on in the city of San Bernardino. While defendant does business in the city of San Bernardino in carrying freight and passengers to and from other points in the state of California upon the trunk line, the same conditions are present as to every other city located upon the trunk line, and such circumstance, if controlling, would give them all power to levy the tax here assailed.

There is no attempt by the ordinance here under discussion to levy this tax upon the local business of the defendant, even if the power to take such course existed, but by its terms it includes both local and interstate business. The ordinance covers its entire business as common carriers, regardless of its nature, and therefore, of necessity, operates as a burden upon interstate commerce, if its business is of that character. As a condition attached to the conduct of its business in the city of San Bernardino, it is required by this ordinance to pay a tax to the city. In that city its business is not confined within the state lines of California. It is therefore engaged in interstate commerce, and, being so engaged, no statute or municipal law can burden or handicap its business, for the regulation thereof rests solely in the hands of congress. For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: Van Fleet, J., Harrison, J.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Albert M. TODD

v.

Board of ELECTION COMMISSIONERS of Kalamazoo, Calhoun, Branch, Eaton, and Hillsdale Counties.

(.....Mich.....)

1. A statute requiring a person nominated for the same office by different parties at the same election to notify the election commissioners within a limited time upon the column of which party his name shall appear and forbidding its appearance in more than one place will not apply to cases in which the specified time has elapsed before the act takes effect.
2. A ballot law which permits the name of a candidate to appear on the official ballot but once, although he may be nominated by different parties, is not unconstitutional although some voters may be unable to vote as voters of other parties can for all the candidates of their party without marking the ballot more than once, or to have all the candidates of their party appear on the party ballot.

(March 25, 1895.)

APPPLICATION for a writ of mandamus to compel defendants to put relator's name in the columns belonging to three different parties on the ballot of an approaching election as candidate for representative in congress. Allowed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Myron H. Walker, for relator:

The law is unconstitutional:

- (1) Because it is destructive of rights inherent in every qualified elector and fundamental in a representative government, the preservation of which is essential to a free people and a republican form of government.
- (2) Because it requires a test for an office or public trust expressly forbidden by the Constitution.

Const. art. 18, § 1.

- (3) Because it is retrospective in operation, and renders illegal that which was legal and valid when done, and affords no opportunity to conform to its requirements in the pending election to which it is made applicable.

Constitutions measure the powers of the rulers, but they do not measure the rights of the governed.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 47; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 107, 9 Am. Rep. 103; Story, Miscellaneous Writings, 620.

From the foundation of our national as well as our state government, it has been a guaranteed and assured right of the qualified elector, freely and without coercion, to vote for the person of his choice for every elective office, providing only that such person possessed the legal qualifications for that office.

The act in effect is an attempt to prevent the free choice by the people of their candidates for office; and in this manner their free choice of the officers themselves.

It is no answer to say that such candidate will appear upon the official ballot upon some other party ticket, for to vote for him, they must make no nomination or antagonize the one they do make, and thus endanger and abandon their party nomination and organization, when to them its success is of great importance and the voters are necessarily discriminated against.

The Constitution, art. 7, § 2, provides that "all votes shall be given by ballot."

The system of ballot voting rests upon the idea that every elector is to be entirely at liberty to vote for whom he pleases, and with what party he pleases, and that no one is to have the right or be in the position to question his independent action, either then or at any subsequent time.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 762; 6 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, p. 343.

All regulations of the elective franchise must be reasonable, uniform, and impartial; they must not have for their purpose directly or indirectly to deny or to abridge the constitutional right of citizens to vote, or unnecessarily to impede its exercise; if they do they must be declared void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 758; Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 485, 23 Am. Dec. 632; Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 7 L. R. A. 99, 78 Mich. 558.

It cannot be for a moment contended that by section 6 of article 7, the framers of the constitution intended to give the legislature the power to arbitrarily disfranchise any elector who is such under section 1 of the same article, or to make any difference between the rights of any of the classes of electors therein specified, or to put obstacles in the way of the ballot box for one class while the road is left open to another.

Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, supra; Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 338, 98 Am. Dec. 272; Dells v. Kennedy, 49 Wis. 1555, 35 Am. Rep. 786; Edmonds v. Banbury, 28 Iowa, 267, 4 Am. Rep. 177; Monroe v. Collins, 17 Ohio St. 685; Daggett v. Hudson, 43 Ohio St. 561, 54 Am. Rep. 832; State v. Baker, 88 Wis. 71; State v. Butts, 31 Kan. 554.

This act is not uniform. It is aimed at minority parties. It is not impartial. "It put obstacles in the way of the ballot box for one class or party while the road is left open to another." It is partisan legislation. It might well be entitled "An act to perpetuate the supremacy of the party in power."

NOTE.—The above case adds to the rapidly growing list of valuable cases construing the Australian Ballot Law as adopted in the different states of the Union with various modifications.

For marks on ballots, see Rutledge v. Crawford (Cal.) 13 L. R. A. 761, and note, also later cases cited in footnote with Sego v. Stoddard (Ind.) 22 L. R. A. 468, and the cases of Ellis v. May (Mich.) 25 L. R. A. 29 L. R. A.

A. 325, and Taylor v. Bleakley (Kan.) 25 L. R. A. 683.

For irregularities in taking such ballots, see Bowers v. Smith (Mo.) 16 L. R. A. 754, and note. See also Re Contested Election of School Directors (Pa.) 27 L. R. A. 234, and cases cited in footnote.

As to nominations, see also Stackpole v. Hallahan (Mont.) 28 L. R. A. 502; Manston v. McIntosh (Minn.) 28 L. R. A. 605.

See also 34 L. R. A. 498, 845; 42 L. R. A. 239.

Where the constitution has prescribed the qualification of electors it is not in the power of the legislature to take from or add to such qualifications, or to injuriously, unreasonably, or unnecessarily restrain, impair, or impede the right of suffrage thus guaranteed by the constitution.

State v. Dillon, 23 L. R. A. 124, 83 Fla. 545.

If the time shall come when party headings are given up and the Australian system is adopted in its entirety, so that the names of the candidates for the same office appear together under the title of that office, without any party designation or heading, so far as the official ballot is concerned, there can be no discrimination between the candidates and voters of different parties.

Wigmore's Australian Ballot, p. 56, and note.

But in any event and under any circumstances, under our present system, the right to make free and untrammelled nominations of candidates for office is of vital and fundamental importance.

Maynard v. First Dist. of Kent County Board of Canvassers, 111 L. R. A. 332, 84 Mich. 242; Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 58 Mich. 216, 55 Am. Rep. 675; McCrary, Elections, § 8; Cooley, Const. Lim. 483, 484; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 92, 9 Am. Rep. 103.

The act in question is unconstitutional, because in effect it establishes a political test as a qualification for office or public trust contrary to article 18, § 1, of the Constitution.

People v. Hurlbut, supra; Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 58 Mich. 214, 55 Am. Rep. 675.

This act is invalid as applied to the pending election.

Pick Wo. v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 80 L. ed. 220.

Messrs. Howard & Roos and E. M. Irish, also for relator:

Laws passed to preserve the purity of elections, and to guard the elective franchise, must be impartial, and calculated to facilitate and secure rather than to subvert and impede the right to vote.

Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 488, 28 Am. Dec. 632; Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 7 L. R. A. 99, 78 Mich. 560, 58 Mich. 218, 55 Am. Rep. 675; People v. Hurlbut, 24 Mich. 44, 9 Am. Rep. 103.

The question raised by this relator involves the right to vote for a representative in congress. Article 9 of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides: "But when the right to vote at any elections for the choice of electors for president and vice-president of the United States, representatives in congress, the executive and judicial officers of a state, or the members of the legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such state, being twenty-one years of age and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the basis of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such state."

This statute of Michigan, while it does not deny the right to vote, abridges it, and raises a question not only for the federal court to settle finally, but one which might be taken to 39 L. R. A.

the house of representatives on a contested election.

The Constitution of the United States prohibits a state from passing any ex post facto law.

The amendment to section 10 in question is an ex post facto law.

Cummings v. Missouri, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 277, 18 L. ed. 356.

Mr. Fred. A. Maynard, Atty-Gen., for respondents:

The act in question is not only constitutional and therefore legal, but it is one of the wisest laws that could be placed upon the statute books, a law which must do much to prevent fraud at elections in this state, and to preserve the sacredness of the ballot box, upon which the welfare of this country depends.

The method which has prevailed in this state, of placing the name of a man in two or more columns on the official ballot, is now illegal, and if not unconstitutional, should be so; it is designed to accomplish by fraud and deception what could not be accomplished by legitimate methods.

If a man has a right to be voted for, and also an opportunity to be voted for, it must follow that every nominee shall have an equal chance upon the ballot, so far as its official arrangement is concerned. No candidate shall have an advantage over another, but each candidate must stand on a perfectly equal footing with the other.

How can this constitutional principle be carried out when it is permitted that one man shall have his name printed on two or more columns of the official ballot.

This act requires a little thoughtful consideration and care, and it requires evidence of the voter's desire to vote for the candidate by taking his pencil and making a cross opposite his name. The act does not prevent the man receiving the votes; but the act does prevent the name of the nominee of one party appearing in another column and thereby receiving votes of those who would never vote for him except from the fact of his name appearing in the column set aside for their party, whose principles they indorse and who they think the nominee stands for.

A court will not declare the statute unconstitutional and void solely on the ground of unjust and oppressive provisions, or because it is supposed to violate the natural social or political rights of the citizen.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 6th ed. p. 197.

Mr. Moses Taggart, also for respondents: Article 7, section 6, of the Constitution reads:

"Laws may be passed to preserve the purity of elections and guard against abuses of the elective franchise." That the laws which may be passed for such purpose, and the methods adopted by the legislature to accomplish it, are entirely a matter of discretion in the lawmaking power, under the decisions of this court, is too plain for argument. The limit is only drawn when the act is destructive of the right of franchise.

People v. Koppleskom, 16 Mich. 842; Detroit v. Rush, 10 L. R. A. 171, 83 Mich. 532; People v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 127; Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 58 Mich. 218, 55 Am. Rep. 675; Atty-

Gen. v. May, 25 L. R. A. 325, 99 Mich. 538; Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 7 L. R. A. 99, 73 Mich. 545; Shields v. Jacob, 13 L. R. A. 760, 88 Mich. 164; Chateau v. Jacob, 88 Mich. 170; Atty-Gen. v. Glaser, 102 Mich. 396 and 407; Cooley, Const. Lim. p. 753; Paine, Elections, § 301; Zeiler v. Chapman, 54 Mo. 502; Nefzger v. Detroit & St. P. R. Co. 36 Iowa, 642; State v. Hilmantel, 21 Wis. 567; Capen v. Foster, 12 Pick. 485, 23 Am. Dec. 632.

Whether such regulation be reasonable or unreasonable is for the determination of the legislature, and not for the courts, so long as such legislation does not become destructive.

Atty-Gen. v. McQuade, 94 Mich. 439; Atty-Gen. v. May, and Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, supra; State v. Black, 16 L. R. A. 769, 54 N. J. L. 446; Bowers v. Smith, 16 L. R. A. 754, 111 Mo. 45; De Walt v. Bartley, 15 L. R. A. 771, 146 Pa. 529.

The law itself may be regarded in the light of an attempt on the part of the people to secure a pure, free, and unintimidated ballot; every presumption is in favor of the law.

Detroit v. Rush, 10 L. R. A. 171, 82 Mich. 582; Shields v. Jacob, and Chateau v. Jacob, supra.

The discretionary power extends to the form of ballot as well as to the manner in which it shall be deposited, and the registration of voters.

Paine, Elections, § 454.

No inclination appears in the opinions of courts of other states, tending to restrict legislative power in the exercise of legislative discretion in the enactment of such laws.

Miner v. Olin, 159 Mass. 487; Atkeson v. Lay, 115 Mo. 539; Zeiler v. Chapman, supra; Simpson v. Osborn, 52 Kan. 328; Nefzger v. Detroit & St. P. R. Co. supra; Re Ballot Marks, 18 R. I. —; Page v. Allen, 58 Pa. 347, 98 Am. Dec. 272; Patterson v. Barlow, 60 Pa. 54; De Walt v. Bartley, 15 L. R. A. 771, 146 Pa. 529.

It is possible under present methods to find a Prohibitionist voting for men utterly opposed to taxation or prohibition of the liquor traffic, and the Democrat for prohibition, and so with the members of other parties professing directly opposing theories of government or policy.

State v. Barden, 10 L. R. A. 155, 77 Wis. 601; Coffey v. Edmonds, 58 Cal. 526; State v. Adams, 65 Ind. 393; State v. Wolf, 17 Or. 119; Kellogg v. Hickman, 12 Colo. 556; Druliner v. State, 29 Ind. 308; Stanley v. Manly, 85 Ind. 275; Milholland v. Bryant, 39 Ind. 363; People v. Kilduff, 15 Ill. 493, 60 Am. Dec. 769; Kirk v. Rhoads, 46 Cal. 393; Parvin v. Wimborg, 15 L. R. A. 775, 130 Ind. 561.

The law was given immediate effect by its terms, and apparently applies to all the actions of boards of election commissioners in the performance of their specific duties.

Bay City & E. S. R. Co. v. Austin, 21 Mich. 890; Van Fleet v. Van Fleet, 49 Mich. 610; Cooley, Const. Lim. pp. 334, 335, 470, 471; People v. Ingham County Supra, 20 Mich. 95; Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, 478.

The giving of the law in question immediate effect after the governor had called the election, and too late for the twenty days' election by relator, as to which column he desired to have his name placed upon, would not require 29 L. R. A.

the full twenty days. Statutory notice is held dispensed with where an office is to be filled at a regular election under a law passed so late that the full statutory notice could not be given.

Powell v. Jackson, 51 Mich. 129; Atty-Gen. v. Iron County Board of Canvassers, 64 Mich. 609; People v. Witherell, 14 Mich. 48; People v. Hartwell, 12 Mich. 508, 86 Am. Dec. 70.

Long, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The relator was nominated on February 28, 1895, as a candidate for representative in congress by the Prohibition party for the third congressional district of Michigan, and on March 7 he was nominated for the same office by the Free Silver party. On February 27 the People's party nominated one Robert McDougall for the same office. On March 8 Robert McDougall withdrew as a candidate upon the People's party ticket, and the relator was substituted in his stead by the congressional committee of the People's party, such committee certifying that they were authorized by the convention to fill any vacancy upon such ticket. Certificates were filed with the election commissioners, March 7, 8, and 9. The relator claims that he has the right, under Act No. 190 of the Public Acts of 1891 to have his name printed upon each of these three tickets. On March 14, 1895, an amendatory act was passed by the legislature to the election law, and given immediate effect, and respondents claim that under the terms of this amendatory act the relator is not entitled to have his name appear upon the official ballot more than once. This amendatory act provides that "it shall be unlawful for the said board of election commissioners to cause to be printed in more than one column on the ballot the name of any candidate who shall have received the nomination by two or more parties or political organizations for the same office." The act contains further provisions, relating to the manner in which a choice is to be made by the candidate as to the place which his name shall have on the ballot as follows: "Any person so receiving the nomination for the same office by two or more parties or political organizations shall, within five days after his name has been certified to said election commission as having been nominated by two or more political parties for the same office, give notice to the board of election commissioners of each county in the state, if said nomination be for a state office, and to the board of election commissioners of each county in the district, if said nomination be for a congressional, judicial, or legislative office, and to the board of election commissioners of the county, if such nomination be for a county office, specifying in such notice the column of which party or political organization on the ballot he wishes his name to be printed, and said board of election commissioners shall print the name of such candidate in such column on the ballot so specified by him, and in no other column. Such notice shall be given to said election commissioners by delivering the same either in person or by depositing the same in the post-office, in a sealed envelope, with postage prepaid, directed to the chairman of such board of election commissioners at the county seats of the respective counties: provided further, that in case any such candidate so nominated by two or more parties or political organizations for the same office, and whose names shall have been certified by the chairman and secretary of the committees of such parties or political organizations to said board of election commissioners, within the time and as above provided shall refuse or neglect to give notice to said board of election commissioners as above provided, and within the time above named, specifying in which column on the ballot he wishes his name to be printed, then in such case said board of election commissioners shall cause his name to be printed in the column of the party or political organization, from the chairman and secretary of whose committee said board of election commissioners shall have first received notice of such person's nomination for said office, and said board of election commissioners shall not cause the name of such person to be printed on the ballot as a candidate for the same office in any other column." The relator contends: (1) That this amended law is wholly unconstitutional, for the reason that it discriminates between political parties, and imposes a political test as a condition to one becoming a candidate for office. (2) That if the statute be upheld as constitutional as applied to future elections, in which the opportunity is given to parties and candidates to act under the law, it cannot be so far given retroactive effect as to make it applicable to a case like the present, where the nominations of the parties had been made, and the time within which, under the terms of the act, the candidate is required to make his election as to the place which his name is to have on the ballot has expired before the act took effect.

1. The constitutional question is one of unusual importance, and as the exigencies of the present case demand a prompt decision, in order that the rights of the relator may be protected, and as we have reached the conclusion that the act is valid, and within the power of the legislature, acting under the provisions of article 7, section 6, of the Constitution, which provides that "laws may be passed to preserve the purity of elections, and guard against abuses of the elective franchise," and as the relator in the present case is entitled to his remedy without delay, we have thought it best to direct the entry of the order, and withhold a written opinion upon the main point until we shall have the opportunity to formulate our views upon that question, and an opinion upon the full case covering that question will be handed down later.

2. We are of the opinion that the Amending Act of March 14 cannot be held applicable to the present case. The time within which the candidate is authorized by law to exercise his choice of tickets had in the present case expired before the law took effect. He, therefore, under the law, had no opportunity to exercise the right conferred. If it be attempted to apply the terms of this act to the present case, the election commissioners would be bound under the other provisions of the act to print the name of the candidate on the ticket first certified, thus excluding wholly the right of choice plainly intended to be conferred by the statute. The general rule is well settled in this state and elsewhere that all statutes are prospective in their operation, except when a contrary intent is clearly evidenced by the context. Heinemann v. Schloss, 88 Mich. 153; Stitt v. Casterline, 89 Mich. 239; Smith v. Pinch, 80 Mich. 332; Finn v. Haynes, 37 Mich. 63; Maxwell v. Bay City Bridge Co., 46 Mich. 278; Danville Stone & Mfg. Co. v. Adair, 88 Mich. 244. The rule to be derived from a comparison of a vast number of judicial utterances upon this subject seems to be that, even in the absence of constitutional obstacles to retroaction, a construction giving to a statute a prospective operation is always to be preferred, unless a purpose to give it a retrospective force is expressed by a clear and positive command, or to be inferred by necessary, unequivocal, and unavoidable implication from the words of the statute, taken by themselves and in connection with the subject-matter, and the occasion of the enactment, admitting of no reasonable doubt, but precluding all question as to such intention. Endlich, Interpretation of Statutes, § 271. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Limitations (2d ed., p. 370), referring to this subject, says: "Legislation of this character is exceedingly liable to abuse; and it is a sound rule of construction that a statute should have a prospective operation only, unless its terms show clearly a legislative intention that it should act retrospectively; and some of the states have deemed it just and wise to forbid such laws altogether by their constitutions." As is said in Potter's Dwarrris on Statutes and Constitutions, in a note on page 163: "Although the words of the statute are broad enough in their literal extent to comprehend existing cases, they must yet be construed as applicable only to cases that may thereafter arise, unless a contrary intention is unequivocally expressed therein." The act grants the right of choice of tickets, but compels the choice within a time which had already expired in the present case when the act took effect, and then in express terms provides that if the choice is not made by the candidate within that time the election commissioner shall print his name in the ticket first certified. There is no other alternative under the act but that, if the choice is not made by the candidate within the time, his name must be printed upon the ticket first certified, and if we hold that the relator may have further time beyond the time fixed by the act we must interpolate something into the statute. If this be done, what time shall be fixed when the relator must make his choice? What is to guide us in fixing that time? Certainly not the act itself, but an arbitrary rule which we must adopt, and which is not contained in the act. It cannot be presumed from the language of the statute that the legislature intended such a result as that one who could not conform to the provisions of the act, for the reason that the proceedings in his case had so far progressed as to render compliance by him with the terms of the act impossible, should be held within the act.

The writ must issue to the election boards of the counties named, directing such boards to print the relator's name upon all three tickets mentioned.

McGrath, Ch. J., did not sit. Grant and Hooker, JJ., concurred with Long, J.

Montgomery, J.: I concur in the foregoing opinion, so far as it holds that the right of the present relator cannot be affected by the provisions of the Act of March 14. As this holding disposes of the case, I do not deem it necessary to set forth my views upon the question of the constitutionality of the act.

Grant, J., delivered the following opinion on October 1, 1895:

A brief opinion was filed in this case upon the hearing and is found on page 332, ante. The provision of the constitution empowering the legislature to enact laws to preserve the purity of elections and the provisions of the statute are sufficiently stated in that opinion. For want of time a written opinion upon the constitutional question was then withheld.

If the effect of this act, as is strenuously argued by the learned counsel for the relator, is to "subvert or impede the right to vote," it is clearly unconstitutional. If, on the contrary, it neither subverts nor impedes, but only regulates that right it is constitutional. As experience has disclosed corruption, fraud, venality and assaults upon the purity of the ballot, the legislatures of the several states have enacted laws to prevent them. Few if any of these enactments have escaped attack in the courts and the charge against them has usually been that they are unconstitutional and infringe upon the sacred and constitutional rights of the citizen. The registry law of this state was attacked. So also were the laws providing for the present system, the quasi-Australian ballot. The effect of those laws has been to render voting more inconvenient, to require greater care on the part of the elector and to sometimes deprive him of his vote. The elector who has failed, through forgetfulness or other reason, to register on the days provided by the law, must lose his vote, unless he was sick or absent from the township on business and without intent to avoid registration. The elector may not desire to vote for any man upon the ballot and in that case he must erase the name of the objectionable candidate and write another name or mark some name for the same office upon another ticket, or lose his vote for that office. He may innocently make certain marks prohibited by law or he may innocently show his ticket, either of which will cause the loss of his vote.

These and other similar provisions designed to secure an honest election and to preserve "this most precious right to those who are entitled to enjoy it," have been sustained by the courts. The constitution does not guarantee that each voter shall have the same facilities with every other voter in expressing his will at the ballot box, or, to apply the rule to the present cases, it does not guarantee to each voter the right to express his will by a single mark. The constitutionality of the law is not to be tested by the fact that that one voter can cast his ballot by making one mark while another may be required to make two or more to express his will. When each has been afforded the opportunity and been provided with reasonable facilities to vote, the constitution has been complied with. All else is regulation and lies in the sound discretion of the legislature, to whom alone such regulation is committed. Courts cannot hold them unconstitutional because in their judgment they are harsh or unwise or have their origin in partisan purposes. Constitutional laws often have their origin in such purposes and unconstitutional laws are often based upon pure motives and honest intentions. Courts have nothing to do with the motives of legislators nor the reasons they have for passing the law. The polar star of interpretation to guide them is the language of the constitution itself, and the sole question always is. Does the law destroy or abridge the right?

It is well, perhaps, to refer to some of the decisions of this court as to the power of the legislature to pass acts to maintain the purity of elections, which is expressly conferred upon them by the Constitution. Article 7, section 6.

In Chateau v. Jacob, 88 Mich. 170, a candidate for alderman claimed the right to have his name appear upon the official ballot as a candidate on the citizens' committee independent ticket. He had the right to be a candidate, but it was held he had no right to have his name printed upon the official ballot because it did not appear that he was selected by any assemblage of electors of his ward, and that anybody could vote for him by writing his name upon the ballot.

In Detroit v. Rush, 82 Mich. 532, 10 L. R. A. 171, it was held that parties might place a county ticket upon the official ballot as the law then stood, and if they desired to vote for any state ticket they could erase the county ticket and place their own in its stead. In that case one voter would be put to more trouble in preparing his ballot than another.

In Atty-Gen. v. May, 99 Mich. 538, 25 L. R. A. 325, we said that every presumption is in favor of the constitutionality of the law, citing the authorities.

In Atty-Gen. v. Detroit, 78 Mich. 545, 7 L. R. A. 99, it was said: "In order to prevent fraud at the ballot box, it is proper and legal that all needful rules and regulations be made to that end; but it is not necessary that such rules and regulations shall be so unreasonable and restrictive as to exclude a large number of legal voters from exercising their franchise. . . . The power of the legislature in such cases is limited to laws regulating the enjoyment of the right, by facilitating its lawful exercise and by preventing its abuse. The right to vote must not be impaired by the regulation. It must be regulation, not destruction."

In Detroit v. Rush, supra, we held that it was "the exclusive province of the legislature to enact laws providing for the registration of voters, and the time, place, and manner of conducting elections. It may regulate, but cannot destroy, the enjoyment of the elective franchise. Whether such regulation be reasonable or unreasonable is for the determination of the legislature, and not for the courts, so long as such regulation does not become destructive. When power is conferred upon the legislature to provide instrumentalities by which certain objects are to be accomplished, the sole right to choose the means accompanies the power, in the absence of any constitutional provisions prescribing the means. The finding by this court that the law impeded, hampered, or restricted the right to vote, and is therefore void, would be a clear assumption of, and encroachment upon, legislative power,—a substitution of our judgment for that of the legislature. It can only be declared void when it destroys the right. Its unconstitutionality can be determined by no other rule.”

See also Atty-Gen. v. McQuade, 94 Mich. 439. Other decisions by this and other courts might be cited and quoted from, but the above are sufficient to establish the rule by which courts must be governed in determining the constitutionality of acts passed by the legislature for the purity of elections.

The rule is thus stated by Justices Cooley: “All such reasonable regulations of the constitutional right which seem to the legislature important to the preservation of order in elections, and guard against fraud, undue influence, and oppression, and to preserve the purity of the ballot box, are not only within the constitutional power of the legislature, but are commendable, and at least some of them absolutely essential. Cooley, Const. Lim. 753; Paine, Elections, § 301.

In the light of this well-established rule let us examine the official ballot to ascertain what the voter is required to do, in order to cast his vote under this law. When he enters the booth with his ballot he seeks that portion of it representing his political affiliations. We will assume that the law was in force at the election in question, that relator was first nominated by the Free Silver party, that he was also the nominee of all the other parties except the Republican, and that he elected to have his name appear upon the ballot on the Free Silver ticket. The ballot, aside from the vignettes and instructions, would be as shown in next column.

The voter, if he belonged to any other party than the Free Silver or Republican party, would see at a glance that there was no candidate for congress upon his ticket, and that there were only two candidates for that office upon the ballot. After having made the cross in the space at the head of his party ticket, if he desire to vote for either of the candidates appearing on the ballot he would then make another cross in the square opposite the name. If he desired to vote for neither of these, but for some other man, he would write the name in the blank space on his party ticket. Any voter able to read could in a few seconds prepare his ballot. Is this destructive of the elective franchise? Does
29 L. R. A.

NAME OF OFFICE VOTED FOR.	KALAMAZOO COUNTY OFFICIAL BALLOT.
	REPUBLICAN TICKET.	DEMOCRATIC TICKET.	PROHIBITION TICKET.	PEOPLE'S PARTY.	FREE SILVER PARTY-16 to 1.
STATE. Justice of the Supreme Court..... Regents of the University.....	<input type="checkbox"/> JOSEPH B. MOORE. <input type="checkbox"/> ROGER W. BUTTERFIELD. <input type="checkbox"/> CHARLES H. HACKLEY.	<input type="checkbox"/> JOHN W. MCGRATH. <input type="checkbox"/> CHARLES T. PAITTHORP. <input type="checkbox"/> STRATTON D. BROOKS.	<input type="checkbox"/> MYRON H. WALKER. <input type="checkbox"/> NOAH W. CHEEVER. <input type="checkbox"/> DELAVAN B. REED.	<input type="checkbox"/> ROBBINS B. TAYLOR. <input type="checkbox"/> GEORGE B. SMITH. <input type="checkbox"/> VARNUM J. BOWERS.	<input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/> <input type="checkbox"/>
CONGRESSIONAL. Representative in Congress..... (3d Congressional District) (To fill vacancy.)	<input type="checkbox"/> ALFRED MILNES.	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/>	<input type="checkbox"/> ALBERT M. TODD.
COUNTY. County Commissioner of Schools	<input type="checkbox"/> ASHLEY CLAPP.	<input type="checkbox"/> RUSSELL G. SMITH.	<input type="checkbox"/> SAMUEL MOORE.	<input type="checkbox"/> SAMUEL MOORE.	<input type="checkbox"/> it destroy the full, free, and intelligent exercise of that precious right which is essential to the perpetuity of our government? To so hold would be absurd, and further argument cannot make it clearer. To what extent is the voter impeded? If he belongs to the Democratic or Prohibition or People's party, and desires to vote for a congressional candidate, he is required to make two crosses or marks instead of one. If he cannot read, he is certainly not impeded, because the parties sworn to assist him in preparing his ballot will readily inform him upon the subject, and mark it according to his wishes. It would be much more difficult to prepare a ballot under the pure Australian system, where each name must be marked. It would be a serious reflection upon the intelligence of the voters of Michigan to hold that they could be deceived by such a ballot or impeded in the right to vote. Especially is this true in view of the means of disseminating intelligence through the newspapers, upon the hustings, by printed posters, and the importunities of candidates and their friends.

